This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at `http://books.google.com/`

Digitized by Google

Mus 13.11 *

THIS BOOK IS FOR USE
WITHIN THE LIBRARY ONLY

Harvard College Library

FROM THE

ELKAN NAUMBURG
FELLOWSHIP FUND

By the terms of the gift the income of this Fund in any year when the Fellowship is not assigned is to be used for the Library of the University for the purchase of works, preferably pertaining to Music.

MUSIC LIBRARY

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

THE

MUSICAL WORLD

VOL. XXXIX

LONDON
PUBLISHED BY BOOSEY AND SONS
24 & 28 OLLES STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE
1861

Digitized by Google

Mus 13.15*

Harvard College Library
Mar. 15, 1921
Naumburg Fellowship fund

PRINTED BY

SPOTTISWOODE & CO., NEW-STREET SQUARE, LONDON

MUSIC AND GENERAL PRINTERS

Digitized by Google

INDEX.

A Barbarous Compliment (Porcupine), 334
A Christian Drama, 477
A Fair Proposition, 407
A Glance at the Birmingham Festival, 491, 508
A Hint to Managers, 615
A Hint to Music-Publishers, 605
A Letter about Chopin, 485
A Letter from Glasgow, 525
A Literary Lion, 540
A Musical Phenomenon, 674
A New Invention (J. Towers), 171
A New Incident in Norma, 765
A New Prima Donna, 779
A Piece of Musical Statistics, 590
A Rival to Picco, 535
A Second Paganini, 334
A Work on the Voice (Phonation), 334
A Yankee Prima Donna, 730
An Actress with Five Husbands, 75
An Official Farceur, 171
Abt, Herr Franz, 299
Amateur Musical Society's Dissolution, 60
American Intelligence, 138
Arditi, Signor, 117
Arion, The (Morning Star), 589
Aste, Herr Dalle, 326
Auber's New Opera La Circassienne, 101
Auber, Honour to, 522

Bach's Mass in B minor, 645
Beale's (Mr. Willert) Tournées, 94, 282
Becker, Herr de, 90
Beethoven's Sonata in A Major (Sunday Times), 207
Beggar's Opera, The (Cornhill Magazine), 540
Bennett's (W. S.) Concerto in C Minor, 365
Bianco, Mlle. Elvira del, 254
Big Ben of Westminster, 159
Birmingham Musical Festival, 6, 188, 358, 423, 475, 548, 566
—— Financial Results, 604
—— List of the Band, 599
—— and the Athenæum, 599
Birmingham General Hospital, 603
Bishop, Madame Anna, 260
Bland (James), Death of, 457
Blondin at the Crystal Palace, 487
Blumner, Herr S., 285
Boudoir Opera Company, 457
Bowers, Mrs., 572
Broadwood and Son's "Harmonious Volunteers," 38
Bull, Ole, 188, 219, 222, 666, 701, 807
Bury, Mlle. Agnes, 378
Byers, Death of Mrs., 474

Card, Death of Mr. William, 666.
Chapel Royal, Windsor, 653
Chatterton, Mr. Frederick, 84
Chelard, Death of Capellmeister, 155
Cheri, Death of Mlle. Rose, 634
Chope, Rev. R. R., 730
Choral Festival at Norwich, 615
Christmas Entertainments, The, 794
Church of All Saints, Kensington, 334
Clapisson's New Opera, Madame Grégoire, 102
Clarke, Mr. F. Scotson, 714
Cocks' (Mr. Robert) Alms Houses, 605 CONCERTS:—
A Mesmeric Concert, 375. Alleyne (Miss Grace), 444. Anderson, Mrs., 412. Andrews, Mr. J. Holman, 375, 787. Angelo, Madame, 333. Aptommas, Mr., 433. Arion Choir, 189 Armstrong, Miss Eleanor, 300. Band of the M. Division of Police, 155. Barnard, Miss Louisa, 411. Barnett, G. F. 425. Barnsbury Literary Institution, 103. Baxter, Mad. Laura, 373. Beale, Mr. 698. Behrens, Elvira, 391. Benedict (Jules), 427. Berger, Francesco, 390. Blue Coat School, 111. Blumner (S.), 234, 317. Booth, The Brothers, 747. Busby, Miss Emma, 311. Camberwell Amateur Musical Union, 797. Campana, Signor, 391. Carter (Mr. William), 727, 807. Chelsea Vocal Association, 77. Choral Festival at Waltham Abbey, 429. Ciabatta (Signor), 523. Clark (F. Scotson), 502, 796. Corfield, (Miss Fanny), 343. Crystal Palace, 138. 155, 203, 634, 668, 714, 797. Crystal Palace, Creation, 282. Crystal Palace, Tonic Sol Fa Association, 587. Crystal Palace, Opera Concerts, 301, 316, 476. Crystal Palace, Mr. Manns's Benefit Concert, 490. Crystal Palace, Grisi's Farewell, 491. De Vaucheran, Madame, 441. Deacon, Mr. 412, 443. Dean, (Master Drew), 26. Diamond, Mrs. Butler, 407. Dundas, Mrs. 343. Egerton (Hon. Seymour), 506. Eyre Arms, 114. Ferrari, Signor and Madame, 323. Fraser, Clara, 390. Galitzin, Prince G., 91, 740, 759. Ganz, Wilhelm, 390, 443. Glover (Howard), 66, 364. Goldschmidt, Madame Jenny Lind, 428. Hallé, Charles, 308, 331, 350, 396, 411, 425. Hammond, G. W. 300. Hatton, Mr. 374. Haye's Madame Catherine, 423. Herring, Mr. Howard, 685. Horns Assembly Room, 327. Hullah Fund, 76, 91. Jackson (Mr. H. W.), 26. Jeffrey's Miss Theresa, 300. Kentish Town Church Choral Society, 333. Kingsbury, F. 327. Klindworth, Herr, and Blagrove, H. 171 Kuhe, 390. Leslie's (Mr. Henry) Choir, 92, 183, 223, 267, 332, 429. Lidel, Herr, 442. London Glee and Madrigal Union, 103, 107, 806. Luigi, (Madame Corinnede), 461. Macfarren, Walter, 268, 332, 374. McLeod, Miss Helen, 358. Mangold, Miss Alice, 251. Mark, Dr. and his little men, 76. Mellon's (Mr. Alfred), Promenade Concerts, 523, 539. 571, 586, 601, 619, 634, 650, 656. Messent, Miss, 375. Metropolitan School Choral Society, 412. Middlesex Volunteer, 37th Rifle Corps, 806. Molique, Herr, 251. Monday Popular, 43, 60, 76, 92, 109, 124, 140, 155, 187, 235, 250, 283, 316, 349, 373, 411, 747, 763, 778, 795, 811. Musard, M. 93. Musical Society of London, 134, 189, 235, 300, 363. Musical Art Union, 343, 363, 411. Nabich, Herr M., 442. National Choral Society, 85, 188, 333, 666, 779, 796, National Rifle Association, 407. New Philharmonic, 173, 267, 300, 327, 364, 394, Oberthur. Charles, 391. Oldfield, Miss, 327. Oxford Street Music Hall, 206. Palmer, Miss, 364. Paque, M., 358. Peckham Amateur Musical Union, 59, 103, 254. Penna, Mr. F., 203, 332. Petters, Mr. J. T., 254. Philharmonic Society, 187, 252, 282, 316, 348, 373, 410. Piatti, Signor, 428. Puzzi, Madame, 343. Ramsden and Morgan, Messrs., 413. Ransford, Mr., 207, 231. Regondi, Giulio, 443. Rieder, Madame, 365. Ries, Messrs. L. and A., 375. Royal Academy of Music, 206, 444, 772, 807. Royal Society of Musicians, 311. Russell, George, 812. Sacred Harmonic Society: Athalie, 773; Beethoven's Mass in D, 251, 282; Creation, 103, 138; Dettingen Te Deum, 773; Eli, 410; Elijah, 173, 350, 380, 681; Israel in Egypt, 299, 316, 350. Judas Maccabeus, 44; Messiah, 806. Sainton-Dolby, Madame, 412. Sainton, M., 268, 317, 350, 358, 375. Schlœsser, Herr A., 317. Sedlatzek, Mlle., 391. Silas, E., 428. Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts, 333. St. George's Rifles, 795. Stabbach, Miss, 284, 807. Steele, Miss, 332. Summers, James Lea, 425. Surrey Gardens, 365. Tennant, Mr., 331. Valentin, Miss C., 374. Van Noorden, M., 332. Villar, Mlle. de, 317. Vocal Association, 172, 222, 238, 247, 282, 327, 394. Warwick Street Schools, 461. Wellington, Duchess of, 461. Wilkinson, Miss Eleanora, 461. Willey, M., 206. Wilton's, Earl, 461. Winter, Melchor, 84. Wylde (Dr.), 796

Digitized by Google

Collins, Mr. George, 285
Conran, Miss Ellen, 679
Conservative Land Society, 647
Cooper, Mr. John, 90
Cooper, Mr. Wilbye, 679
CORRESPONDENCE:—
A Dog's Meat Vendor's Talent (C. E. Horsley), 93. A Lingering Memory (W. Staton), 279. A Manchester Cathedral Organ (E. G. Monk), 407. A Minor Scale (W. C. Filby), 30. A New Style of Music, &c. (a 'Catholic Churchman), 503. A Box for Charitable Contributions in Theatres, 175. A Query to Aged Readers, 813. An Acrostic on Miss Stephens (A. Kew), 175, 204. Alhambra, The (Hurdy-Gurdy), 39. Amazons or Riflemen (C. Mandel), 326, 380. American Composers, 263. Answer who can, 279. Augmented Intervals (L. K.), 93. Bach's Organ Trios, 326. Beethoven's Symphonies (A. W. T.), 219. Birmingham Festival (A Chorister), 506. Castarelli, Mad. 326. Cheshire, Mr. John, the harpist (Baron de Cayvir), 631. Chorus Singers and Cab Fares, 812. Church Music (J. E.), 602. Costa Testimonial (M. Costa), 698. Crystal Palace, The Storm at (G. Grove), 175. Dario, not Davis (Vianesi), 663. Doctor of Music, stitles, 477, 492. Double flats (W. H. C.) 55. Everardi v. Gassier (Ernest Jones), 519. Felix redivivus, 476. Forks (J. Cox), 535. Gilbert, Bennett, 279, 326. Gilbert audi Gadsby, 343. Goldschmidt, Madame Lind and the Bristol Charities, 807. Goodban in re Lunella, 279. Grisi and Lord John (Halifax Guardian), 493. Hallé's Beethoven Recitals (Post), 423. Handel's Choruses, 503. Harmonium or Cabinet Organ, 535. Honour to Musicians (Luigi C. Mosca), 519. Important to Theatrical Managers (Catcher of Gorillas), 588. Irony (Amateur) 39. Laurent (Henry), 326. Leeds Festival (J. W. Atkinson), 346, 377. Major and Minor Mode (Dominant), 39. Marschner, Death of Dr. Heinrich, 810. Meyerbeer's Birthday, 701, 711. Minor Scale (Augmented Tone), 231, 342. Minor Scale (Thomas Murby), 326. Monday Popular Concerts (M. D.), 13. Mozart's Song, 380, 439. Musical Ludlow, 476. Music and the Exhibition (of 1862), 263, 298, 438, 477, 490. Music at Signs (Philharmonic), 12. National Opera (our), 556. Naturals, sharps, &c. again (Verax), 493. New Tablet (John Towers), 30. Niederrheinisches Musik-Fest, 361. Omega satisfied, 359, 439. Orazi e Curiazi (R. Andrews), 107. Organ improvements (N. S. Heineken), 12. Organ of Manchester Cathedral (Musicus) 378. Organ appointments to Cathedrals, 492. Organ of the University, Edinburgh, 602, 631, 663. Oxford, Professor of Music, 503. Padding (Paddy), 359. Palmer, Lisle, 439. Pastorelli, not Castarelli, 326. Pastorelli, not Ransford, 535. Phillips (Miss Alice), (H. Phillips), 701. Phillips (Miss Adelaide), A. W. T. 772, 812. Pianist, or Violinist (De Lavigerie), 30. Possible Letter from a Possible Friend, 535. Puritan's Daughter (John Boosey), 777. Reviews, 451. Riflemen, not Amazons (Tenor Melody), 359. Royal Italian Opera (Gruneison), 234. Sacred Music (Shade of Pythagoras), 141. Shirley, Brooks, 519. St. Chad's Singing (J. T. Jones), 263. Theory of Accidentals, &c. (A. W. Parkinson), 204, 589. Thurnham in re Thurnham, 204. Un Passe-partout (Catcher of Gorillas), 602. Wagner, &c. (Gnat), 91, 279. Wagner's Tannhäuser (a French critic a London), 282. Wallworth, Mr. as Griffin (T. A. W.), 55. Well Paid (Tannhäuser), 772.
Croger's Harmoniums, 334
Crystal Palace, 268, 804
Christy's Minstrels, 215, 378
Czillag, Madame Rosa, 199
Cushman, Miss Charlotte, 522

Dawes, M. Albert, 457
Deacon, Mr., 362
Depret, M., 21
Dickins and Thackeray, by Joseph Goddard, 22
Dupont, Joseph, 155
Dussek, by Alexander W. Thayer, 629, 646, 660, 676, 741

Egerton, Miss Grace, Entertainment, 120
Ely Cathedral, 615
English Music (Robin Goodfellow), 534 536,
English Opera at Croydon, 339
Enterprising Impressario, The, 7, 23, 98, 124, 132, 174, 196, 219, 246, 278

Father Kemp's Old Folks, 110
Female Swiss Singers in Edinburgh, 605
Festival of the Three Choirs, 219
FOREIGN:—
America, 4, 27, 414, 627, 638, 653, 685. Antwerp, 482. Barcelona, 413, 471. Basle, 455. Berlin, 231, 406, 471, 518, 573, 617, 650, 717. Bremen, 789. Breslau, 395, 444, 471, 712. Brunswick, 518, 740, 757. Brussels, 525, 808. Coblenz, 804. Cologne, 174, 215, 236, 422, 439, 535, 653, 712, 759. Constantinople, 573. Darmstadt, 439, 574. Dresden, 410, 461, 471, 740, 772, 804. Florence, 650, 740. Frankfort-on-the-Maine, 284, 486, 503, 631, 724. Hamburg, 444. Hobart Town, 38, 79. Homburg, 518, 740. Ivrea, near Milan, 493. Königsberg, 236, 638, 725. Leipsic, 42, 439, 621, 709, 808. Lemberg, 797. Liegnitz, 538. Lenz, 590. Madrid, 638, 808. Mannheim, 471, 757. Marienburg, 573. Mayence, 422, 717. Melbourne, 546, 638. Meyerbeer's L'Africaine, 42. Milan, 111, 410. Munich, 155, 279, 621, 724, 740, 808. Naples, 808. Nuremburg, 507, 518. Ostend, 546. Paderborn, 215. Paris, 6, 439, 573. Pesth. 54, 719. Prague, 395, 468, 638, 716. Riga, 347. Rome, 79. Rostock, 455. Rudalstad, 422. Saltzburg, 518. Schwerin, 772, Sonderhausen, 236. Spa, 440. Stettin, 725. Stockholm, 140, 468, 573, 638. St. Petersburg, 460, 471, 518, 627, 709, 759, 772. Stuttgardt, 422, 444, 621, 709. Trieste, 649, 749. Troppau, 574. Turin, 84. Vienna, 21, 39, 54, 75, 85, 101, 133, 395, 406, 423, 439, 564. Weimar, 629. Wiesbaden, 518, 574, 590, 772, 808. Zurich, 439, 724.

Formes, Herr, 219.

Gaelic Jacobite Songs, 439
Garrick Theatre, Sale of, 327
Goddard, Miss Arabella, 180, 572, 730, 795
Goddard (Joseph) on the Principle of Dramatic Composition, 309
—— Lecture on Music, 669
Goldschmidt, Madame Jenny Lind, 394, 556, 587, 634, 638, 730
Gounod's Faust in Wiesbaden (by W. Wülfinghoff), 534
Graham, Mr. G. F., 746
Gregorians and Anti-Gregorians, 171
Grisi's (Madame) Farewell Tour, 650, 668, 679, 699, 711, 730, 747, 759, 778, 790, 820.

Hammond (Mr. Alfred), 223
Handel's Life, by F. Chrysander, 135
Hanover Square Rooms, 649, 662
Hawes, Miss B., 279
Hayes, Madame Catherine (London Review), 589
Her Majesty's Theatre, 810
Hereford Musical Festival, 580, 595
Herz (Henri), 8
Hoffman (André), 155
Honeywell (F. T. V.), 219
Horton, Testimonial to Mr., 474
How the Dutchman gave a Promissory Note, 494
How to know, &c., &c., all Sorts of Things (Mace's Monument), 602
Hullah, Mr. and "The Village Coquette," 111

Italian Freedom and Italian Art, 180

Joachim (Joseph), 151, 166

King (The) and the Dancer, 79

Lancia (Madame) and Braham (Augustus) Entertainment, 15
LEADING ARTICLES:—
A New English Opera Company (Limited), 392. A Paragraph on a Neue Berliner Musik Zeitung, 491. Albert, Death of H.R.H. the Prince, 808. American Music, 105. Analytical Programmes (Anteater), 586. Antwerp, The fête communale at, 536, 568, 617. Applause and Encores, 570. Are the Public good Judges of Music? 617. Aristocratic Patronisers of Concerts, 441. Ascher's Domino Noir and Mr. Chorley's Translation, 121. Ditto, ditto, and Death of M. Scribe, 122. Bach and Handel, 648, 713, 776, 822. Beethoven's Prometheus at Cologne, 169, 186, 202. Beethoven, George Thomson and Scotch National Melodies (A.T.) 744. Birmingham Musical Festival and Samson (H.H.), 552. Bull (Mr. Ole), 249, 314. Bunn, The late Mr., 41. Burning of the Warehouse of the Grand Opera, Paris, 489. Castelli, Death of, (The Austrian Literary Nestor), 154. Cimarosa and Paescello, 393. Conservative Land Society and Dr. Worthington, 810. Costa, Mr., Presentation to, 680. Cruvelli, Sophie (Baroness Vigier), 441. Crystal Palace, The, 281. Death of the Duchess of Kent, and the Theatres, 184. De Fontaine (Mortier), 154. English Operas at Her Majesty's and Covent Garden Theatres, 9, 554. Eves, Mr., and Mr. Harrison's consecutive fifths, 440. Faure, M., as Don Giovanni, 312. Farren, Death of Mr. William, 634. Fechter's (M.), Hamlet, 218. Festival of the Metropolitan School Choral Societies, 600. Festival of the Three Choirs, 666. Frankfort-on-the-Maine, Theatrical matters, 600. Galitzin (Prince George), Russian Concerts, 72. Gilbert (Dr. Bennett), Operetta at the Surrey Theatre, 585. Gounod's, M., Faust, 425. Great International (1862) Exhibition, 457. Grisi's retirement, 329, 472. Gruneisen (M.), and the origin of the Royal Italian Opera, 248. Handel, 666. Hayes (Catherine), Death of, 520. Her Majesty's Theatre prospects, 217. Hullah Testimonial Fund, 56, 74. Leeds Festival, 329. Leeds Town Councilmen, 250. Lelie's, Mr. Henry, Holyrood, 86. Limpus', Mr., and St. Michael's, Cornhill, 250. Lessueur, 505. Liverpool Albion, The, and its London Correspondent, 346. Lucca, Mlle., 265. Maddox, Death of

Digitized by Google

Mr. J. W., 153. Mario, Rossini and Verdi, 360. Mark, Dr., 314. Mathews', Mr. and Mrs. Charles, Entertainment, 761. Mendelssohn's Music in Paris, 57. Messiah, The, at St. Paul's Cathedral, 25, 40, 58. Monday Popular Concerts, The, 747. Monday Popular Concerts in the Provinces, 26, 424. Musard, M., 104. Music Halls, 792, 809. Music, its Progress in England, 265. Music at the Great Exhibition, 232, 488. Music Prospects for 1862 Season, 712. Musical Society of London, 10. Musical Festivals and the Messiah and Elijah (Provinciennes), 538. Musical Fêtes at the Coronation of the King of Prussia, 729. Neithardt, H. A., Death of (H. H.) 632. Niederrheinisches Musik-fest, The, 313. O'Connor, Dr., Treatment of Neuralgia, &c., 666. Opera Prospects, 168. Organ at the Cathedral of Halberstadt, 123. Organ at the Cathedral of Manchester, 344. 409. Organ at the University Music Room, Edinburgh, 584, 618. Pantomimes at the English Opera Houses, 89. Music for Pantomimes, 821. Patti, Mlle. Adelina, 297, 313, 409. Pfeiffer's, M. Diapason, 424. Philharmonic Society, 8, 136, 187, 408. Pocchini, Mlle., 41. Political Opinions at Rome expressed by Music, 105. Puritan's Daughter, The, 777. Re-appearances (A.C.) 761. Reeves, Sims, and the Encore System, 330. Rossini's new Composition, "Chant des Titans," 696. Rossini's Guillaume Tell, 264, 280. Royal English Opera Prospectus, 665. Royal Italian Opera, by C. L. Gruneison, 234. Royal Italian Opera Prospectus, 170, 216. Royal Italian Opera, Conclusion of the Season, 504. Royal Society of Musicians, Anniversary of, 185. Rubinstein, Herr Anton, New Opera at Vienna, 680, 697. Russian Music, 24. Schumann's, Robert, Symphony in B flat, 296. Schumann, Robert, his Life, 522. Scribe, 137. Surrey Music Hall, 376, 394. Tempora Mutantur et Grisi et Mario, 361. Theatres, Music Halls, &c., 73, 200. Titiens, Mlle., 457. Vandenhoff, Death of Mr., 649. Verdi, Signor, 377. Volunteers and their Music, 633. Voice, The Means of restoring the, 233. Wagner, Mad. Johanna, 793. Wylde, Dr. Henry, and his New London Academy of Music, 728. Wagner, Herr Richard, and his Concessions, 201. Weber Carl Mario Von, 90, 808.

Leeds Musical Festival, 223, 315
Letters about Music, by Ferdinand Hiller, 611
Letters from an American in London, 620, 635, 651, 667, 677, 699, 726, 743, 758
Lichfield Cathedral, 653
Lincoln, Mr. H. C., 72, 126
Lisst, Franz, 725
Livry, Mlle. Emma, 46

Managers and Music Halls (all the year round), 556, 582
Marchisio, The Sisters, 42, 180, 285, 666, 820.
Marschner (Heinrich), 7, 810
Meerest, Mrs. (Miss B. Hawes), Concert at Ryde, 604, 651
Mendelssohn, 15
Merlet, (Professor), 110
Messiah (The), at St. Paul's Cathedral, 59
Metropolis Free Hospital, 207
Meyer (Leopold de), 84
Meyerbeer, 167, 570, 647, 698
Molique, 218
Moscheles, 362
Moscow, The Great Theatre at, 524
Mozart's Don Giovanni purified (Athenæum), 47
Music, &c. in Aix la Chapelle, 469. Barmen, 198. Berlin, 309, 341, 406, 454, 468, 485, 628, 693, 725, 756, 804. Boulogne sur mer, 547. Brighton, 642. Cassell, 519. Cologne, 119, 739, 789. Dublin (Anteater), 604, 621, 636, 698. Holland, 421. Melbourne, 538. Munich, 119. Nuremburgh, 517, 532. Paris, 20, 36, 52, 69, 85, 148, 164, 180, 293, 324, 389, 404, 420, 437, 453, 484, 501, 516, 534, 564, 579, 627, 645, 659, 675, 691, 707, 723, 755, 788. Pesch, 230. Prague, 395. Southend, 487. Vienna, 167, 183, 213, 356, 405, 709, 740, 756. Wiesbaden, 629.
Music Hall at Frankfort on the Maine, 757
Music of the Future, by F. Hiller, 70, 86
Music Mistress and Young Lady (The), 425
Musical Festival on the Donau, 535
Musical Fish, 455
Musical Pitch, 36
Musical Services, 183
Musical Society of London, 59, 106, 120
Myers, Mr., Evening with Tom Moore, 746

Napoléon (Arthur), 460
National Choral Society, 679
New Grand Opera at Paris (The), 501
New Music Printing Machine, 762
New Operas in hand, 29
Niccolini, G. B., Death of the Italian Poet, 647
Niedermeyer (Louis), 245
Night hath Songs (Spurgeon), 645
Nilsen (Christine), 215
Noblemen's (The) Catch Club, 423
Old Volunteer and Mystic Bassoon, 540
One Who Pays and Mr. Gye, 522
Opéra Comique, its origin and progress, 5, 37, 60, 116, 340, 458, 710
Organ Performance (Mr. Albert Lowe), 685
Organ (The) by Joseph Regnier, 11, 150, 268, 357, 471
Organ for All Saint's, Kensington, 117
Organ at the Cathedral of Halberstadt, 123, 445
Organ at Trinity Church, Knaresborough, 127, 142
Organ at Trinity Church, Coventry, 141, 509
Organ at St. Lawrence, Ludlow, 175
Organ at Long-Holme, near Manchester, 221
Organ at St. Michael's, Cornhill, 250
Organ at Henby Church, Rochdale, 285
Organ at Manchester Cathedral, 285, 345
Organ at Mariners' Church, Hull, 311
Organ at Parish Church, Thorner, Leeds, 343
Organ at Parish Church, Sowerby, Halifax, 343
Organ at Wesleyan Chapel, Burnley, 343
Organ at Wesleyan Chapel, Old Shildon, 359
Organ at St. David's Church, Deptford, 525
Organ at Parish Church, Leeds, 572
Organ at University Music Room, Edinburgh, 585, 608, 631
Organ at West Melton Chapel, Rotherham, 615
Orpheonists, The French, 334
Ottley, Mr. Henry, Lecture on Mr. Fechter's Othello, 762

Paine, Mr. John R., 266
Patti, Mlle, 441, 589, 634, 746
Pauer, Herr, 171
Penna, Mr. F., Entertainment, 444
Philharmonic Society, 441, 746
Philharmonic Society Orchestra, 120
Pictures of Italian Scenery by Professor Agricola, 439
Pittman (M.), Lectures on the Opera, 207
Pocchini, Mlle, 72
Poetry:—
A Carping Critic, 813. A Letter to Desmond Ryan (Exaggerator), 362. A Mother's Forebodings (J. Young), 175. An extempore, 279. Abdication of the Queen of Song (Punch), 471. Epigram by James Smith 359. His Eyes (E. Willis Fletcher), 519. Knap v. Knap, 444. Monday Popular Concerts (A. C.), 794. My dream (Jessica Rankin), 503. Retrospection (J. Young), 223. Sweet Lavender (Jessica Rankin), 573. Violet Charms (John Young), 423. White Spotted Horse, The (Shirley Brooks), 158
Provincial:—
Aberdeen, 14. Arbroath, 79, 812. Belfast, 95, 159, 379, 637, 731, 733, 763. Birkenhead, 78. Birmingham, 45, 107, 141, 222, 379. Bradford, 61, 159, 797. Brecon, 238. Brentford, 14. Brentwood, 46. Brighton, 94, 222, 269, 637, 669, 716, 748, 810. Bristol, 31. Bromley, St. Leonard, 205. Bromley (Kent), 666. Bury, 142. Bury St. Edmunds, 380. Cardiff, 637. Chalfont St. Giles, 509. Chatham, 732. Cheltenham, 237, 749. Cork, 764. Coventry, 509. Croydon, 812. Doncaster, 143. Dublin, 79, 95, 108, 127, 143, 205, 253, 270, 311, 571, 685, 780. Dudley, 95. Dundee, 79. Edinburgh, 31, 62, 78, 94, 108, 127, 158, 190, 247, 637. Enfield, 523. Eton, 107. Glasgow, 31, 78, 206, 380, 812. Godalming, 637. Halifax, 142, 253, 379. Hastings, 715. Hereford, 238. Huddersfield, 77, 95, 269, 285. Hull, 311, 670. Inverness, 253. Ipswich, 78, 143, 221, Jersey, 460. Leeds, 13, 62, 78, 127, 159, 190, 206, 221, 236, 253, 269, 284, 475, 509, 652, 684, 780. Limerick, 79, 108. Liverpool, 13, 46, 62, 78, 95, 126, 190, 221, 237, 252, 301, 379, 637, 652, 670, 701, 715. Ludlow, 407. Lynn, 311. Manchester, 13, 45, 62, 77, 94, 108, 127, 159, 205, 221, 252, 269, 285, 379, 684, 716, 732, 748, 764, 779, 811. Nantwich, 509. Newcastle, 31, 45, 733. Norwich, 205, 524. Nottingham, 731, 764. Oxford, 380. Penzance. 652. Plymouth, 107, 174, 540, 669, 731, 749, 779. Reading, 205. Richmond, 238. Ryde (Isle of Wight), 475. Salisbury, 285. Sheffield, 14, 31, 95, 733. Shrewsbury, 95, 715, 764. St. Leonards, 78. Stafford, 540. Swindon, 253. Sydenham, 284. Warminster, 475. Weymouth, 46. Windsor, 31, 77, 284. Woolwich, 475. Worcester, 108, 684. York, 701.

Ramsden's, Mr., Entertainment, 139
Reed's (Mr. and Mrs.) Entertainment, 223, 649, 796
Reichardt, Herr A. 171, 299
Rellstar (Ludwig), from the Vossische Zeitung, 27.
Reviews:—
Abbot, William, 563. Abt, Franz, 499, 643, 803. Ainley, W. 260. Alexander, J. 435. Althans B. 131. Ames, Mr. Henry, 131, 147. Andrews, R. 68, 715. Andrews, Mrs. J. Holman, 243. Anonymous, 803. Ascher, Joseph, 83. Aspinwall, John, 307, 371. Atkinson, C. 324. Auber, D. F. E. 467, 483. Badarzewska, T. 243. Balfe's Bianca, arrangements of, 83. Balfe, M. W. 131. Ball Room Music Book, 179. Barnett, John, 563. Barrington, A. B. 436. Barton, H. 212. Beethoven's Sonatas, edited by W. Dorrell, 19. Beethoven, 771. Behrens, H. 259. Belcher, W. T. 35. Benedict, Jules, 35, 163, 771. Berger, Emile, 83, 500. Beyer, F., 35. Beyer, Ernest, 131. Birch, W. H. 371, 787. Bliss, Mrs. J. W. 803.

Digitized by Google

Blumenthal, J. 408, 500, 563. Boosey's Musical Cabinet, 4, 787. Borini C. 227. Bridges, W. 227. Brown, A. H. 484. Brissac, Jules, 180. Buckley's American Melodies, 35. Bunnett, E. 643. Chope, Rev. R. R. 211. Clare, Edward, 35. Claribel, 131, 275, 803. Clark, F. S. 164. Clay, Frederic, 328. Cooper, J. B. 259. Cooper, Mrs. 277. Cottam, Arthur, 195. Creed, Mrs. Henry, 408. Croger, T. 307. Cunio, A., 452. Cusins, W. G. 408. D'Alquen, F. 339. De L'Orme, Emile, 4. De Vos, Polydore, 562, 787. Delaseurie, Arthur, 643. Dun, Finlay, 419. Dussek, 19, 67, 147, Dyson, 227. Eayres, W. H. 307, 484. Ergmann, Auguste, 99, 115, 323. Fagan, E. 243. Favarger, René, 516,787. Faust, Carl, 499. Ferraris, F. 436. Field, John, 115. Filby, W. C. 211. Finlayson, C. J. 419. Fletcher, John, 35. Forbes, George, 803. Forde, W. 307. Fowle, T. L. 227. Fowler, C. 164. Gabriel, Virginia, 643. Ganz, Wilhelm, 99, 179. Gaskin, G. J. 227. Gastner (G. of Ceylon), 419, 787. Gattie, J., 147, 275, 325. Gilbert, Alfred, 307. Gilbert, Bennett, 115, 275, 643. Gits, A. G. 771. Glover, Howard, 707, 739. Glover Stephen, 212, 563. Glover, William, 275 Gollmich, A. 163. Goodban, H. W., 99 115, 179, 243, 324, 408. Graham, G. F. 164 Greatorex, Mrs., 195. Green, Joseph, 99.. Greville, The Hon. Mrs., 325. Hall, Charles, 803. Hanson, F. W. 419. Hargitt, C. J. 163, 803. Hartog, Henri, 499. Hatton, J. L., 563, 787. Harvey, R. F. 212, 260. Heller, Stephen, 3. Hemingway, G. 275. Hiles, Henry, 371. Heine, B. 408, 484. Hodges, M. H. 164. Holloway, Dr. A. S. 771. Hope, Owen, 771. Howard, W., 419, 435. Hutchinson, W. 227. Janeck, F. A., 179, 307. Jerrold, Mrs. B., 243. Joel, J. Van, 131. Jones, J. Tomlins, 131. Kirkpatrick, 437. Kucken, F. W., 307. Kuhe, W., 35, 83, 163, 307, 771. Kullak, T., 115, 163. Kunsller, E., 372. L.P. 276. Lake, George A., 51 Lament fot Glencoe, 276. Land, Edward, 467. Lardelli, M., 515. Laurent, Henri, 307. Leduc, A., 408. Leslie, H., 115. Lidel, Blanche, 131. Linter, Ricardo, 371, 436. Lindfeldt, Carl, 452. Liszt, 67, 291, 453. Loder, George, 67. Lott, E. M., 499. Lowe, Joseph, 413. Laurin, Henry C., 453. M. A, M., 356. Macfarren, Mad. 643. Macfarren, G. A., 19. Mayer, Charles, 452. Mc Korkell, C., 163, 436. Marriott, Charles. 308. Mason, Sewell, 323. Mauss, T. 83, 485. Millington, H. 453. Mills, J. H., 227. Mina, 35. Mina, Carlo, 307. Molique, 355. Morgan, John, 99. More, N., 499. Morley, K. K. 115. Mudie, T. M., 35. Murby, T., 51, 787. Nacciorone, Sig., 452, 467. Nairne, Baroness Caroline, 419. New, S. W., 803. Nordman, R., 787. Oberthür, Charles, 35, 131. Orpheon, 211. Orborne, G. A., 131. Owry, Madame, 500. Pacher. J. A., 131. Paterson, R. Roy, 436. Patten, W., 211. Percival, S., 163. Praeger, F., 323. Purkess, J., 67. Raymond, John, 195, 499, 787. Reynolds, E., 260. Richards, Brinley, 19, 52, 67, 212, 227, 307, 500, 772. Richardson, J. E., 179, 243. Robinson, Francis, 307. Roeckel, E., 452. Rubinstein, A., 131. Rummel, J., 563. St. Leger, 419, 515. Scargill, J. J., 515. Schloesser, A., 52, 99, 563. Schubert, 67. Schumann, R., 259. Selle, 213. Semler, Paul, 20. Sllas, E., 51. Sloper, Lindsay, 771. Smart, Henry, 51, 67, 147, 339. Smee, F., 227. Smith, Arthur, 99. Smith, Seymour, 195, 275, 408. Smith, Sydney, 371. Spark, W., 51. Spindler, L., 131. Staton, W., 259. Steele, J., 453, 483. Summers, J. Lea, 99, 483. Thomas, Harold, 99, 164, 195, 275, 515, 771. Thompson, Jessie M., 131. Thomson, Miss E., 419. Thurnam, E., 179. Titoff, 803. Tollemarche, Louisa H., 408. Trekell, J. T., 452, 787. Turo, W., 260. Verdi, 355, 367, 467. Wagner, Richard, 339. Wallace, W. V., 4. Weber, F., 275. Weiser, A., 643. Weiss, W. H., 4. Weisbecker, C., 339. West, G. F., 212. Weyner, Carl, 132. White, Clement, 243, 408. Whitehouse, E., 307. Woyske, E., 259. Wright, Adam, 212. Wrighton, W. T., 68. Yates, Edmund, 307. Youens 195. Young, Rev. Edward, 515.

Ripon Cathedral, restored, 650
Rossini at Home, 166
Royal Academy of Music, 395, 455
Royal Surrey Gardens, 425, 502

Sacred Harmonic Society, 191, 198, 267
Sacred Music in Scotland, 110
Sainton-Dolby's (Madame) Tour, 474
Schachner, Herr, 114
School for the Blind, 111
Scribe, Eugène, 151, 223
Simon Henri, 155
Smith, Death of Mr. Arthur, 634
Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts, 46, 110, 134, 189, 247, 378, 429, 762.
Some Passages in the Life of Lorenzo da Ponte, 597, 613
Spohr (Louis), 781.
Stanzieri (Giuseppe), 429
Standigl (Joseph), 244, 261, 277
Sullivan, Mr., 285
Swift (Mr. J.), 787
Swiss Female Singers, 359, 444

Taffy Orpheonists, 215
Tennant, Mr., 315
The Missing Ship, 676
THEATRES :—
Drury Lane.—Amber Witch, 220. Othello, 698
Her Majesty's (Operas in English). — Amber Witch, 140, 172. Queen Topaze, 30. Robin Hood, 94. Trovatore, 30, 40. Fra Diavolo, 109, 126.
Lyceum.—A New Way to Pay Old Debts (Amateur Performance), 493. Ballo in Maschera, 389. Don Giovanni, 426. Huguenots, 425. Lucrezia, 372. Martha, 426.
Marylebone.—Norma, 426.
Olympic. — Mr. F. Robson's Re-appearance, 698. Ticklish Times, 378. Trovatore, 372, 390. Chatterton, Mr. J. B., Benefit, 636. Titiens, Mlle., Benefit, 442.
Princess.—Don Cæsar de Bazan, 126. Hamlet, 203.
Royal English Opera (Covent Garden). — Bianca, 44. Daughter of the Regiment, 189. Domino Noir, 126. Hiawatha, 94, 109. Lurline, 747. Maritana, 189. Puritan's Daughter, 774, 790. Ruy Blas, 683, 694, 747. Robin Hood, 747. Satanella, 109. Son and Stranger, 172. Toymaker, The, 747. Victorine, 30.
Royal Italian Opera.—Ballo in Maschera, 407. 426, 460. Barbiere, 362. Don Giovanni, 310, 389, 442, 460, 474. Favorita, 236, 247. Grisi's (Madame) Farewell Benefit, 474. Guillaume Tell, 299, 310, 348, 362, 426, 474. Huguenots, 372, 407. I. Puritani, 266, 310. Lucia, 348, 389. Lucrezia, 348. Martha, 460. Norma, 310. Prophéte, 220, 247, 266, 362, 389, 507. Rigoletto, 236, 389. Sonnambula, 310, 362, 372, 389, 407, 474. Traviata, 426, 442, 474. Trovatore, 474. Review of the Season, 507.
Surrey.—Shakespere's Dream, 587.
Tilney (Walter), 199.
Titiens, Mlle., 810.
Towers (John), De Omnibus rebus (Brighton Herald), 583.
Tree (Mrs. Anna Maria), Death of, 522

Vandenhoff, Death of Mr. (Times), 649
Van Praag, Mr., 110
Veluti, Death of, 139
Verdi in Parliament, 111.
Vocal Association, 777

Wagner, Herr, 298, 460
—— Tannhäuser in Paris, 182, 214, 228, 295
——and the Translators into French of Tannhäuser, 190
—— in re Himself and Tannhäuser, 261, 277
Walworth Literary Institution, 263
Warsaw, something about (Times), 605
Weber, Celebration of his Birthday (Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung), 75
—— Concerto in E flat, 207
What does it mean? (Liverpool Albion) 39
Whitty, Miss Anna, 326
Woodin's, Mr. W. A., Entertainment, 7, 46

Zelter, Carl Friedrich, 555, 565

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 39—No. 1 SATURDAY, JANUARY 5, 1861 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped.

MR. HULLAH.—A strong desire has been manifested in various influential quarters to render some service and encouragement to Mr. Hullah, late of St. Martin's Hall, at a very trying period of his life. With the view of consolidating this general feeling of goodwill towards a gentleman who has faithfully devoted many years and many acquirements and energies to an important branch of public education, and whose labours have now to be begun again, the following Committee has been formed, with power to add to its number:—

CHARLES DICKENS, Esq., Gadshill, near Rochester, Kent, Chairman.
The Most Noble the Marquis of Lansdowne, Bowood, Wilts.
The Right Hon. the Earl Nelson, Trafalgar, Wilts.
The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Winchester.
The Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P., Chancellor of the Exchequer.
The Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood, 31 Great George Street, S.W.
The Right Hon. Sir J. T. Coleridge, Knt., Heath's Court, Ottery St. Mary, Devon.
Sir James P. Kay Shuttleworth, Bart., 38 Gloucester Square, Hyde Park, W.
The Very Rev. R. C. Trench, D.D., Dean of Westminster, Dean's Yard, S.W.
The Very Rev. Henry Alford, B.D., Dean of Canterbury.
The Very Rev. A. P. Saunders, D.D., Dean of Peterborough.
A. W. Blomfield, Esq., 8 St. Martin's Place, W.C.
W. Butterfield, Esq., 4 Adam Street, Adelphi, W.C.
R. K. Burstall, Esq., 15 Hanover Street, Long Acre, W.C.
The Rev. G. Currey, Charterhouse, E.C.
The Rev. Samuel Clark, the College, Battersea, S.W.
Harry Chester, Esq., 63 Rutland Gate, S.W.
J. D. Coleridge, Esq., 3 King's Bench Walk, Temple, E.C.
The Rev. Derwent Coleridge, St. Mark's College, Chelsea, S.W.
The Rev. R. Elwyn, Charterhouse, E.C.
Edward Foster, Esq., 220 Marylebone Road, N.W.
Edward J. Fraser, Esq., 26 Craven Street, Charing Cross, W.C.
The Rev. J. H. Gurney, 3 Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W.
James Humphry, Esq., 69 Cannon Street West, E.C.
H. C. Hextall, Esq., 145 Cheapside, E.C.
T. H. Headland, Esq., 9 Heathcote Street, W.C.
The Rev. R. W. Jelf, D.D., King's College, London.
The Rev. C. Kingsley, Eversley Rectory, Winchfield.
The Rev. Joan Lawrell, 388 City Road, E.C.
The Rev. H. W. Phillott, Staunton-on-Wye, Herefordshire.
The Rev. E. H. Plumptre, King's College, W.C.
Geo. T. Porter, Esq., 4 Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W.
Geo. Richmond, Esq., 10 York Street, Portman Square, W.
The Rev. Dr. Rowden, Chichester.
The Rev. John Slatter, Rose Hill, Oxford.
Dr. Storrar, Heathside, Hampstead.
E. C. Tufnell, Esq., 26 Lowndes Square, S.W.
H. Wedgwood, Esq., 6 Queen Anne Street, W.
The Rev. A. Wilson, National Society's Office, Sanctuary, Westminster, S.W.

Subscriptions will be received on behalf of the Committee by any member of the Committee; or by Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand; or Messrs. Glyn and Co., Lombard Street, London.

The Committee are already enabled to announce the following subscriptions:—

	£	s.	d.
The Marquis of Lansdowne	100	0	0
The Chancellor of the Exchequer	50	0	0
Sir J. P. Kay Shuttleworth, Bart.	50	0	0
A. Hobhouse, esq.	50	0	0
G. Richmond, esq.	25	0	0
S. Pitts, esq.	10	0	0
C. Dickens, esq.	10	0	0
E. C. Tuffnell, esq.	5	0	0
Rev. E. H. Plumptre	5	0	0
E. Foster, esq.	100	0	0
H. Wedgwood, esq.	25	0	0
E. Raphael, esq.	5	0	0
Harry Chester, esq.	21	0	0
Rev. F. D. Maurice	10	0	0
C. Hextall, esq.	50	0	0
W. Butterfield, esq.	25	0	0
T. H. Farrer, esq.	10	0	0
J. Humphry, esq.	25	0	0
E. J. Fraser, esq.	25	0	0
E. B. Denison, esq. Q.C.	10	0	0
A. W. Blomfield, esq.	5	0	0
Rev. D. Coleridge	10	0	0
Rev. T. Helmore	5	0	0
Alex. Carr, esq.	5	0	0
Rev. S. Clark	10	0	0
Rev. Mulrhead Mitchell	25	0	0
C. Wentworth, Dilke, esq.	10	0	0
Rev. Thomas Astley Cock, King's College, London	20	0	0
S. Servanté, esq.	5	0	0
Rev. R. Elwyn	10	0	0
Rev. G. Currey	10	0	0
R. W.	1	1	0
Rev. F. H. Gray	2	2	0
Rev. E. Brown	20	0	0
E. A. Darwin, esq.	10	0	0
Rev. John Keble and Mrs. Keble	20	0	0
The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells (Lord Auckland)	10	0	0
The Right Hon. Sir J. T. Coleridge	21	0	0
J. D. Coleridge, esq.	10	0	0
T. M. Bridge, esq.	5	0	0
The Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood	50	0	0
Rev. F. Poynder	10	0	0
Rev. C. R. Dicken	2	2	0
Rev. J. H. Gurney	10	0	0
The Right Hon. the Earl Nelson	25	0	0
H. F. Chorley, esq.	20	0	0
A. Keightley, esq.	5	0	0
R. K. Burstall, esq.	5	0	0
John Green, esq.	5	5	0
R. Johnson, esq.	3	3	0
George Martin, esq.	3	3	0
Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew	2	0	0
J. L. Boothby, esq.	1	1	0
W. R. Massaroom, esq.	1	1	0
Sir Thos. Dyke Acland, Bart.	10	0	0
Rev. T. Williams	3	3	0
Rev. C. F. Eastburn	2	2	0
Rev. W. Benham	2	2	0
Mr. J. J. Mercier	1	1	0
Mr. A. C. Daymond	1	1	0
Mr. A. C. King	2	2	0
Miss Edith Coleridge	2	0	0
The Dean of Ely	5	0	0
Mr. J. Merriman	1	0	0
Mr. Birdseye	1	1	0
A. T. Jones, esq.	10	10	6
Mrs. Blomfield	5	0	0
Rev. A. G. Blomfield	5	0	0
Mr. H. T. Parker, Leipsig	1	1	0
W. Reed, esq.	5	5	0
George T. Porter, esq.	5	5	0
A. Kekewich, esq.	5	1	0
Miss Grove	1	1	0
Miss L. Grove	1	1	0
Rev. D. A. Beaufort	1	0	0
M. Bezeth, esq.	5	0	0
L. Hinton, esq.	5	0	0
B. W. Procter, esq.	10	0	0
Anonymous	5	0	0
The Dean of Canterbury	10	0	0
Ven. Archdeacon Harrison	10	0	0
Earl of Leven and Melville	10	10	0
Chas. J. Cross, esq.	1	0	0
Dr. and Mrs. Storrar	3	3	0
W. Oke Manning, esq.	5	0	0
Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Winchester	10	0	0
Dr. Babington	5	0	0
Sir Henry Dryden, bart.	20	0	0
Chas. E. Mudie, esq.	10	10	0
Alphonse Mariette, esq.	3	0	0
The Lady Hatherton	10	0	0
The Lord Lyttleton	2	0	0
Sir Walter G. James, Bart.	40	0	0
Lady James	10	0	0
Roundell Palmer, esq. Q.C.	20	0	0
Messrs. John Broadwood and Sons	50	0	0
Thos. Watson, esq. M.D.	10	10	0
R. Shum, esq.	1	1	0
John Ruskin, esq.	25	0	0
S. W. Wayley, esq.	5	5	0
Dr. Dyster	5	0	0
S. Lahee, esq.	1	1	0
Mr. R. Sharp, esq.	2	0	0
L. Raphael, esq.	5	0	0
Rev. T. N. Staley	5	0	0
S. Prout Newcombe, esq.	5	0	0
Sir C. Eastlake	5	0	0
Rev. John Curwen	5	5	0
F. H. Dickenson, esq.	10	0	0
Mrs. Botfield	10	0	0
E. & A. D.	5	0	0
Vincent S. Lean, esq.	2	2	0
J. G. Hubbard, esq.	10	0	0
Mrs. Foster	50	0	0
Henry Foster, esq.	20	0	0
Chas. Duncan, esq.	25	0	0
Wm. Foster, esq.	20	0	0
Rev. J. P. Ferguson	1	0	0
Rev. John Lawrell	5	5	0
W. Langton, esq.	2	0	0
Chas. Percival, esq.	5	0	0
Rev. Robt. Jenkins	3	3	0
The Venerable Archdeacon Sinclair	5	0	0
Thos. Griffith, esq.	5	5	0
Rev. John Slatter	10	0	0
The Lord Belper	50	0	0
The Hon. Misses [A. & F. Strutt	10	0	0
W. M. James, esq., Q.C.	5	0	0
Mrs. W. M. James	5	0	0
James Dixon, esq.	1	1	0
Richd. Alchin, esq.	50	0	0
W. S. Johnson, esq.	2	0	0
Miss H. Bradshaw	2	2	0
Miss M. Bradshaw	5	5	0
The Dean of Peterborough	5	0	0

E. J. FRASER, Hon. Sec.

No. 26 Craven Street, Charing Cross, W.C.

MISS HELEN HOGARTH (Teacher of Singing) begs to inform her pupils and the public that she has RETURNED to town for the season, and has removed from Weymouth Street to No. 71 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square.

SIGNOR and MADAME FERRARI beg to inform their pupils and friends they have REMOVED to 32 Gloucester Terrace, Hyde Park, W.

MR. and MRS. LOCKEY beg to inform their Friends, Pupils, and the Public, they have removed to Prospect Villas, Forest Hill, S.E.

MR. and MADAME R. SIDNEY PRATTEN beg to announce, that they have removed to 38 Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, W., where they will continue to give lessons on the Flute, Guitar, and Concertina.

DR. MARK and his LITTLE MEN.
BAND OF FORTY BOYS.
First Visit to London—For One Week Only.
St. James's Great Hall, Regent Street and Piccadilly.

Mr. MITCHELL begs to announce that he has entered into an Engagement with Dr. Mark, of the Royal College of Music, Manchester, for the First Appearance in London of his BAND of LITTLE MEN, 40 in number, selected from the students of the College, an institution originated by Dr. Mark, for the purpose of affording an efficient musical and general education to boys in the poorer or middle classes of society throughout the kingdom. Notwithstanding the great success which has attended the concerts given by Dr. Mark and his Little Men throughout Scotland, Ireland, and the provinces, they have never yet appeared in London, and the present engagement is limited to one week only.

The FIRST CONCERT will take place on SATURDAY EVENING next, Jan. 12, 1861, at 8 o'clock; Second Concert, on Monday afternoon, Jan. 14, commencing at half-past 2, to terminate about 4 o'clock. The subsequent Concerts will be given on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday Evenings, Jan. 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19; and on Thursday and Saturday afternoons, Jan. 17 and 19.

Sofa stalls (a few numbered and reserved near orchestra), 5s.; reserved seats, 3s.; area, 2s.; back seats and galleries, 1s., which may be obtained at the principal libraries and musicsellers; and at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33 Old Bond Street, W.

Programmes and full particulars will be duly announced.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY for 1861 will be issued on the 10th inst., price 1s. 6d.; per post, 1s. 8d. London: Rudall, Rose, Carte and Co., 20 Charing Cross; Keith, Prowse and Co., 48 Cheapside.

MUSICAL WORLD ONE PENNY NEWSPAPER

Digitized by Google

NEW PUBLICATIONS
OF
DUNCAN, DAVISON & Co.,
244 REGENT STREET. (JUST OUT.)

"SCHOTTISH D'AMOUR," by EUGENE MONIOT, Composer of "A Summer's Day," for the piano, price 2s. (Orchestral parts, 3s.)

"SANTA LUCIA," by EUGENE MONIOT, Neapolitan melody, arranged (without octaves), for young pianists, by Eugène Moniot, price 1s.

R. F. HARVEY'S NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
"Cupid's Repose" (Melody)	3	0
"Pensez à moi" (Rêverie)	3	0

"THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER," as a Piano Duet, arranged with variations by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew.

NEW SONG—"That Handsome Volunteer," sung by Miss Emma Stanley in her popular entertainment of the "Seven Ages of Woman," composed especially for her by Emile Berger, price 2s. 6d. (Sung also by Miss Catharine Lucette, in her original entertainment, Captain Morton Price) at the Prince of Wales's Hall, Regent Street.)

BALFE'S NEWEST and most POPULAR SONGS.

	s.	d.
"I love you" (Sung by Sims Reeves)	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose" (Ditto)	3	0
"If I could change as others change" (Sung by Laura Baxter)	3	6
"I'm not in love, remember" (Sung by Miss Parepa)	2	6
"Oh! take me to thy heart again" (Sung by Miss Poole)	2	0

"GOOD NIGHT," (Cradle Song—Wiegenlied) composed by ALEXANDER REICHARDT, price 2s. 6d.

A SONG FOR THE SEASON.—"THE CHRISTMAS ROSE." (Poetry by M. A. STODART.) Composed by LOVELL PHILLIPS. Price 2s. 6d.

NEW HARP MUSIC by C. OBERTHUR, "Thou art so near and yet so far." Reichardt's popular song transcribed for the Harp by C. Oberthür.

MR. WEISS'S NEW SONG.—"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL." (Poetry by J. P. DOUGLAS.) Composed and sung by Mr. W. H. WEISS.

NEW BALLAD.—"IN A LEAFY GARDEN," by GEORGE LODER. Sung with great success by Mr. RICHARD SEYMOUR, is just published, price 2s. 6d.

"MAY."—New Duettino for equal Voices, by HENRY SMART.

NEW ORGAN MUSIC by HENRY SMART.—"Fugue in E minor," from Handel's "Lessons," Arranged for the Organ by HENRY SMART.

"THIS WORLD IS A GARDEN."—Song by GEORGE LODER. Words by J. STIRLING COYNE. Sung every evening by Mr. ROUSE, and enthusiastically encored, at the Lyceum Theatre, in the successful Operetta of "THE PETS OF THE PARTERRE."

NEW WALTZ, "The Woman in White," Valse mystérieuse, by Charles Marriott, dedicated to Wilkie Collins, Esq.

MEYERBEER'S ROYAL WEDDING MARCH (Quatrième Marche aux Flambeaux), composed in honour of the Marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, which was played with such immense effect by the Band of the Guides at the Fête of the Orphéonistes at the Crystal Palace, is published for the Pianoforte, price 5s.,

ROYAL ACADEMY of MUSIC.—The Lent Term commences on Monday, January 14th, 1861.
Candidates for admission must attend at the Institution, for Examination by the Board of Professors, on Saturday afternoon, the 12th inst. at 3 o'clock.
By order of the Committee of Management,
J. GIMSON, Secretary.
Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, 1st January, 1861.

TO PIANOFORTE MAKERS.—Wanted to place a BOY, 16 years of age, for a term of years, as Indoor or Outdoor Apprentice, in a pianoforte manufactory, where he would be taught the usual branches of the art, as tuner and finisher. He has considerable mechanical skill, combined with good musical ear. For terms, &c., apply to Mr. Thirtle, Organist, Boston, Lincolnshire.

BOOSEY & SONS' LIST OF POPULAR PIANOFORTE and DANCE MUSIC, by the most celebrated Composers.
N.B.—The Dance Music is all illustrated in Colours by BRANDARD and PACKER.

BRINLEY RICHARDS.
'Twas Be my only Thought, from Bianca.
Gold Rules the World, from Bianca.
What Sunshine Bright, from Bianca.
The Marriage of Georgette.
The Skipper and his Boy.
Come into the Garden Maud.
Santa Maria, from Dinorah.
The Shadow Air, from Dinorah.
The Power of Love, from Satanella.
Thou art so Near, (Reichardt).

KUHE.
Bianca, Fantaisie Brillante.
Bianca, Galop de Bravura.
Dinorah, Fantaisie de Concert.
Dinorah, Fantaisie Brillante.
Satanella, Valse de Concert.
Satanella, Fantaisie Brillante.
Zampa, Fantaisie Brillante.
Domino Noir, Fantaisie Brillante.
Robert le Diable, Fantaisie Brillante.
Rigoletto, Fantaisie Brillante.
Schubert's Ave Maria.
Schubert's Serenade.

ASCHER.
Toujours Gai, Galop Brillant.
Les Cloches du Village.
Thou art so Near (Reichardt).
Dinorah, Illustration.
Les Vepres Siciliennes, ditto.
Un Ballo in Maschera, (Nocturne).

T. MAUSS.
Merrily over the Snow (Schloesser).
Le Corsaire Galop Brillant.
Mourmahal, (Nocturne).

EMILE BERGER.
Notre Dame Romance, Illustrated.
Campanella Mazurka.
Fantaisie on Balfe's Bianca.
Selection from Bianca, Illustrated.
Selection from Satanella, ditto.
Selection from Dinorah, ditto.
Selection from Martha, ditto.

MADAME OURY.
Bianca Fantaisie Brillante.
Santa Lucia.
Auld Robin Gray.
Souvenirs d'Ecosse.
Fantaisie on Jacobite Airs.

BENEDICT.
Albion, Fantaisie on English Airs.
Erin, Fantaisie on Irish Airs.
Caledonia, Fantaisie on Scotch Airs.

TALEXY.
Satanella Polka Mazurka.
Dinorah Polka Mazurka.
Eva Polka Mazurka.

NORDMANN.
Evening with Meyerbeer.
Evening with Balfe.
Evening with Christy's Minstrels.

LAURENT.
Bianca Waltz, Illustrated,
Bianca Quadrille, ditto,
Bianca Polka, ditto.
Bianca Galop, ditto.
Spring Buds Waltz, ditto.
Margaretta Waltz, ditto.
Daisy Waltz, ditto.
Christmas Waits Quadrille, ditto.
Lord Lovel's Waltz, ditto.
Beloved Star Waltz, or Thou art so Near.

BURCKHARDT.
New Year's Quadrille, Illustrated.
Ramsgate Sands Quadrille, ditto.
Serpentine Quadrille, ditto.
Bal Masque Quadrille, ditto.
Knickerbocker's Polka, ditto.
Dream of the Rose Waltz.

MARRIOTT.
Colleen Bawn Waltz, Illustrated.
Woman in White Waltz, ditto.
Don Pasquale Waltz.
Waterfall Galop.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"Douze Valses pour Piano"—STEPHEN HELLER; Op. 97. (Cramer, Beale, and Chappell.)

IN the present dearth of original productions among modern writers for the pianoforte, the appearance of any new work from a pen at once so individual and accomplished as that of M. Stephen Heller is as welcome to musical amateurs as a dish of clear turtle to an epicure condemned for a lengthened period to live upon "odds and ends." These waltzes are bagatelles, it is true, and bear no very striking affinity to the composer's later manner; but almost every one of them is instinct with a sort of freshness that makes them as grateful to the sense of hearing as mignionette and honeysuckle, after a shower of rain, to that of sight, or smell, or both together. That, compared with the majority of pieces through which M. Heller has helped to enrich the repertory of the piano, they are unelaborate and easy to execute, is, it will be generally admitted, rather a recommendation in their favour than otherwise, more especially inasmuch as they are none the less effective on that account. To take a rapid survey of the whole set, leaving much that might be told to the imagination of our readers:—Nos. 1 and 2 (in F and D) are both pretty, No. 2 being the most engaging. Nos. 3 and 4 (in B flat and D) are "swan-like" in their graceful movement, each at the same time bearing the unquestionable stamp of invention, which in No. 4 is exemplified in a very marked manner by the charming union of passage with cantilena, both in the first part and that which follows, in the relative minor. We prefer, nevertheless, quoting the fluent melody which constitutes the theme of No. 3:—

How elegantly this is harmonised by M. Heller our readers may discover for themselves. No. 5 (in A) is essentially and exclusively Helleresque, as the first four bars may suffice to show:—

That it will be admired all the more for its individuality, need hardly be suggested. No. 6 (A minor)—"Quasi triste," as the author insinuates, at the place where the "tempo" is ordinarily indicated—is thoroughly charming, and will not be received less warmly because of the glimpses of Chopin revealed here and there, as for example:—

No. 7 (F) is like a dream of "Jenny Jones;" quaint and pretty, however, besides being more extended in form than its pre-waltzers. No. 8 (A flat) is appropriately marked "Délicatement, Tendrement," for it cannot be too delicately and tenderly handled. Again we find Chopin influencing our composer, but happily and sweetly, as in the following instance:—

This, too, is designed on a broader canvas than most of those which have been named—an innovation warranted by the beauty alike of the subject and the episodic matter. No. 9 (D flat) is in the style of one of Hummel's "Tyroliennes," and as fresh and elegant as the most popular of them all. To be critical, nevertheless, for once, here is a point which we cannot admire:—

Nos. 10 and 11 (in C major and F minor) both show good points, and are both in M. Heller's own manner, although in No. 11 (page 17, lines 4, 5) another feint at Chopin cannot fail to render itself apparent. This, too, is the longest and most carefully wrought out of the "dozen," with the single reservation of No. 12 (F major), which, with freshness, vigour, and brilliancy worthily crowns the series.

The Douze Valses were originally, we believe, published in three sets (cahiers), four to a set: but here we have them altogether, handsomely brought out, and at a reasonable price.

Digitized by Google

"The Song of the Enchantress"—Poetry by SHELLEY, Music by EMILE DE L'ORME. (Cramer, Beale and Chappell.)

"The coming of the Flowers"—Words by T. E. CARPENTER, Music by W. VINCENT WALLACE. (Cramer, Beale and Chappell.)

"The Knight's Vigil"—Words by J. P. DOUGLAS, Music by W. H. WEISS. (Duncan Davison and Co.)

The first of these compositions is dedicated to Madame Sainton-Dolby, who would probably feel disposed to sing it half a tone lower (in C). Shelley's beautiful lines will be at once brought back to the memory of those who love his poetry by the opening stanza:—

"He came like a dream in the dawn of life,
He fled like a shadow before its noon;
He is gone, and my peace is turned to strife,
And I wander and wane like the weary moon.
O sweet Echo, wake,
And for my sake
Make answer, the while my heart shall break!"

This is the song of the Enchantress, prefacing the Fragments from an unfinished Drama, of which all that was completed is the graceful dialogue between the "Indian youth and the lady." Mr. De L'Orme has shown so much feeling in his musical setting, that we are astonished at his total misconception of the second verse, which to support our criticism we must cite in extenso:—

"But my heart has a music which Echo's lips,
Though tender and true, yet can answer not,
And the shadow that moves in the soul's eclipse
Can return not the kiss by his now forgot.
Sweeet lips! he who hath
On my desolate path
Cast the darkness of absence, worse than death."

Now, at the end of the second stanza, instead of giving the burden, "Sweet lips!" &c., Mr. De L'Orme—careless of the "But" we have italicised—repeats the burden of the first, "O sweet echo! wake," &c., although it is made sufficiently clear that the Enchantress repudiates the aid of "Echo," on second thoughts, as under the circumstances, impotent. Until Mr. De L'Orme restores Shelley's original text—thereby turning nonsense into meaning—we cannot think of seriously reviewing his music.

Mr. Wallace's "Coming of the Flowers" (composed for Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington) is a model ballad, with an engaging melody, and a thoroughly neat accompaniment—in short without exaggeration, a gem of simplicity and grace.

The song of Mr. Weiss is as bold, vigorous, and unaffected as anything we have seen from his pen, and if sung frequently in public, likely to become a formidable rival to his very popular setting of Professor Longfellow's "Blacksmith." The adventurous knight could hardly watch his armour in the chapel to more manly and congenial strains. The coloured lithograph on the title-page is in good keeping with the theme, and the erect and stalwart figure of the new-made chevalier might easily pass for that of Sir Tor, Sir Sagramore, or Sir Dodinas le Savage.

Numbers 12, 17, and 18 of Boosey's "Musical Cabinet" have just reached us, the publication, up to the present time, having attained its twentieth number. No. 12 contains fifteen of Beethoven's songs, with pianoforte accompaniments, adapted to English words by Mr. George Linley. The collection includes some of the most popular of the composer's chamber songs, among which we may name "May Song," "Knowest thou the land?" "The Farewell," "The Quail," "Adelaida," and last, not least, the famous Lieder Kranz, or "Chaplet of Songs." No. 17 (pianoforte series) comprises the five most famous instrumental pieces from Mendelssohn's music to a Midsummer Night's Dream—viz., the Overture, Scherzo, Notturno, Wedding March, intermezzo. No. 18 contains twelve songs by François Schubert, the English words by George Linley, with pianoforte accompaniments. This selection, like that of Beethoven, includes several of the composer's most popular contributions to the chamber. We may single out from them "The Erl King," "The Wanderer," "Hark! hark! the lark!" "Who is Sylvia?" and the incomparable "Ave Maria."

The numbers quoted possess all the recommendations of those noticed on a former occasion—namely, careful printing, good paper, commodious size, and neat exterior.

AMERICA.—NEW YORK.—The latest accounts from New York inform us of the sudden retirement of Mr. Ullman from the management of the Academy of Music, on the 4th of December. The season opened with La Juive, and the crowded state of the theatre argued well for the future prospects. "Probably," writes the New York correspondent of Dwight's Journal of Music, "our Academy of Music never before presented so brilliant an appearance at an operatic representation. The boxes were filled with handsomely dressed women, and the whole house was brilliantly lighted with the same illuminations used at the Prince of Wales's Ball. Then the opera was admirably done. The scenery and grouping were unsurpassed, the processions really splendid, and the acting and singing of Fabbri, Stigelli, and Formes everything that could be desired; there was plenty of orchestra, plenty of good singing, any amount of enthusiasm, not quite enough voice from Anna Bishop, and a considerable superfluity of Quint. The opera was a success, and the press was unanimous in its praise." The second night, however, was by no means so brilliant; and the third no improvement on the second. The fourth indicated no progress, and then the impatient, or unmonied, manager, addressed a card to the Herald, which ran to the following tune:—

Sir,—It is my painful duty to announce to the public that I see myself compelled to close the opera.

Notwithstanding the unanimity of approbation with which the Jewess has been received by the press and the public, the receipts after the first night have fallen greatly below the expenses. This I ascribe to the precarious state of affairs in general, and to the disorganisation into which the opera has fallen during my absence in Europe.

Under these circumstances I cannot do otherwise but retire from the management, and tender my best thanks for the generous aid I have received from the press, the artists, and all the employés of the opera.

I am, dear Sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,
Academy of Music, Dec. 4. B. ULLMAN.

Then the singers tried matters on their own behalf, and gave Masaniello, with Herr Stigelli, Herr Formes, and Mlle. Fabbri. If, as we learn from the same writer quoted above, that "Stigelli's Masaniello was magnificent," and that "his last act was really thrilling," all we have to say is that Mr. Gye's ex-second tenor must be wonderfully advanced.—The soirées of M. Otto Dresel, the pianist (who was in London in 1852), have proved highly successful. The fourth and last was given on the 13th of December, and attracted an overflowing audience. The programme merits quoting.

Sonata (C sharp minor), Beethoven; two preludes and mazurka (B minor, Op. 33), Chopin; spring song and serenade, Robert Franz; two études (E major and E minor). Chopin; songs, "Moonlight night" and "Du meine Seele," Schumann; andante from symphony, Schubert; allegro brilliant, for four hands, Mendelssohn; "The Erl King," Lisst (Piano solo) Miss Fay; song, "O, welcome, fair woods," Robert Franz; "Marche Hongroise," Schubert; slumber song, Otto Dresel; valse (E flat, Op. 18), Chopin.

—The concert in aid of the German-English School of Music, at the Music Hall, is reported as a great success. This concert was a foretaste of what was to be expected from the Philharmonic Society, as it was given entirely under the supervision of and performed by members of that respectable body

Digitized by Google

THE OPERA COMIQUE.

ITS ORIGIN AND PROGRESS.

(Continued from page 760.)

DELLA MARIA, DEZEDE, CHAMPEIN, DELABORDE, MARTINI, AND PICCINI.

To terminate the list of musicians who wrote comic operas during the last century, I will mention the names of Dézède, Champein, Delaborde, Martini, and Piccini.

DEZEDE.

Dézède, or Dézaides, or again, as some writers of the time have it, Désaides, was born in 1740, but in what country is not exactly known. Some ascribe to him a German origin; others place his birthplace at Lyons. He himself knew nothing of his family. A pension was paid him of 1000*l.* a year, which was raised on his majority to 2000*l.* He wished to make inquiries in order to discover his parentage; but his notary informed him that if he did so his pension would be withdrawn. Dézède took no heed of the injunction laid on him by the man of law, continued his investigations, and was deprived of his pension. This determined him to derive a means of livelihood from his talent. He had studied under an abbé, who taught him music, the harp, and composition. His début was made at the Comédie Italienne on the 28th of October, 1772, with Julie, an opéra comique in three acts, the words of which were by Monvel. The same year he produced L'Erreur d'un Moment, a sequel to Julie, a one-act, which has obtained a succès d'estime.

The Stratagème découvert (1773) and Les Trois Fermiers (1777) followed next. On the 30th of October in the last-named year he brought out the opera of Fatmé; in 1778, Zulime, ou le Porteur de Chaises, at the Opéra Comique; on the 27th of February, 1780, Cécile, in which Mad. Trial appeared after a long period of rest. She was received with loud applause, although she had no voice left. This piece was not performed many times; it contains a pretty romanza—the boatman's song (La Chanson du Batelier). In 1783, on the 30th of June, occurred the first performance of his best work, Blaise et Babet, the success of which continued for two years. The words were by Monvel. The same year he had composed a grand opera, Péronne Sauvée, which was none the less for his previous success, a failure. There was a joke made about it by the wits to the effect that it was an opera of laitues (lettuces), for there was nothing worth keeping of it but the chœurs (choruses) quasi cœurs (hearts).

In 1784 Dézède produced Les Deux Frères, the words being by Flavel, and Alexis et Justine, a sequel to Les Deux Pages. In 1790, Les Trois Noces, of which he had written the words himself, was played at the Théâtre de la Nation, where he had previously produced, in 1787, Alcindor. His music, of a simple and pastoral style, was not wanting in originality. Dézède was of a most eccentric turn of mind, and what was called in those days dépensier (spendthrift). The King of Bavaria induced him to join his court, and granted him a pension. He died in Paris in 1792.

His daughter, Florine, was a musician. She wrote an opéra comique, Nanette et Lucas, ou la Paysanne curieuse, a slight work, in which she sought to imitate the pastoral style of her father. This operetta was performed with creditable success in 1781.

CHAMPEIN.

Stanislas Champein was a native of Marseilles, and was born November 14, 1753. He first became chapel-master in a provincial church, and composed some good ecclesiastical music. He had the good fortune to get a motet of his composition performed at the chapel of Versailles. This work, executed before an illustrious audience, established his reputation, and facilitated his entry into the dramatic career. Le Soldat Français, an opéra comique in two acts, was his first work of that class, and was played by the comedians of the Bois de Boulogne. In January 1780, he brought out Mina, an opéra comique in three acts, which was only played a few nights; and subsequently, up to the year 1792, he wrote a considerable number of pieces, which it would be wearisome to enumerate. I shall only mention those which were the most successful. La Mélomaine (1781); Les Dettes (1787), two acts; Le Nouveau Don Guichotte, two acts. This last piece was played at the Théâtre de Monsieur (the Feydeau); and as at that time it was forbidden to play any pieces which were not translated from the Italian, it was necessary to pass off Le Nouveau Don Guichotte as the translation of an Italian opera by a composer who was christened Zucharelli.

Champein remained twelve years without having a piece produced at any of the theatres. He had, however, in that time written the scores of no less than fifteen grand operas and comic operas, which were accepted, but never beheld the light of the foot lamps. Among these we find Beniowski, the book of which was destined to be set to music, with striking success, by Boieldieu. Champein died on the 19th of September, 1830. His old age was visited with much misfortune. He lived on government pensions, which successive revolutions alternately deprived him and restored to him. At last, under the Restoration, and at the petition of a number of illustrious men—Catel, Boieldieu, Dupaty, Scribe, Fétis, &c., a pension was granted him, which he enjoyed but a short time before his death.

DELABORDE—MARTINI.

I shall only make a passing mention of Jean Benjamin Delaborde, head valet de chambre to Louis XV. He was born in Paris on the 5th of September, 1734, and died on the revolutionary scaffold on the 22nd of July, 1794. He learned the violin and counterpoint of Rameau. He could not have had a more illustrious or a more capable instructor. He wrote a few comic operas, of which nothing is known but their names. I may mention Alix et Alexis (July 6, 1768), Annette et Lubin (same year), Les Trois Rivales (1763), Imène et Iménias, ou la Fête de Jupitre (1770). On the 31st of October, 1772, by order of the Queen, Le Billet de Mariage, by Défontaines, was played, but without success.

Martini (Jean Paul Egide), who must not be confounded with the celebrated theoretical musician of Bologna, was born at Freystadt, on the 1st of September, 1741. His real name was Schwarzendorf. Having had some disagreements with his family, he resolved to expatriate himself, and allowing the direction of the wind to settle which road he should take, he found his way to France, where he exchanged his barbarous sounding name for that of Martini. His best works were his first opera, L'Amoureux de Quinze Ans, performed April 18, 1771, at the Comédie Italienne; Henri IV., ou la Bataille d'Ivry, three acts, at the same theatre (1774), the overture of which was very successful; and Le Droit du Seigneur, words by Défontaines, played for the first time September 17, 1787. Martini enjoyed for several years the favour of the public. His style is melodious. The celebrated romanza, Plaisir d'Amour, will convey an idea of it.

PICCINI.

If Gluck was not successful in opéra comique, although at Vienna he produced two operas of this class—Les Pélerins de la Mecque and Les Chasseurs de défaut, such was not the case with Piccini. This great man (born at Bari in 1728, died in Paris May 7, 1800), wrote comic operas of estimable merit. Indeed, there is but one step from the Italian Opera buffa, in which he was entirely successful, to the French school of opera. I shall not here introduce a biography of this great artist, who is connected only by a very slender thread with the class of works of which I am sketching the history. Laborde induced him to come to France, where the Queen commanded him to write the music to a comic operatic subject called Phaon, destined for the Comédie Italienne, but it was only played at Choisy before the court.

Le Fat Mepriśé (1779) had little success; but Le Dormeur Eveillé, four acts, by Marmontel, succeeded both at court and with the town. It had been played at Fontainebleau, the 14th of November, 1783, and it was on the 28th June, 1784, that the Parisians heard it. The score was censured for being a little monotonous, but the libretto was considered very interesting. Le Faux Lord, in two acts, met with complete success; the words were by the eldest son of the composer, Alexander Piccini. This piece was first played December the 6th, 1783. Lucette, the words of which were also by Alexander Piccini, met with a different fate (1784). Both this piece and Le Mensonge Officieux (1787) failed. Durosoy subsequently arranged with the music of Piccini Les Fourberies de Marine, in three acts; but this pasticcio was not successful. A son of this composer, Louis, wrote several comic operas, which have not obtained any lasting reputation.

Digitized by Google

If grand opera in France owed to Germany and to Italy its earliest and principal celebrities (Rameau excepted) we shall establish the fact that comic opera has ever gained its greatest successes through French composers. We have seen in the first part of this history of the Opéra Comique that only French composers have shone in that school—Monsigny, Phillidor, Dalayrac,—I was almost about to quote Grétry, for though the country in which he was born is not politically a part of France, it is intimately allied to it in manners and language. We shall now witness the triumphs of Nicolo, Méhul, Lesueur, Boieldieu, and Herold, all natives of France.

PARIS.

(From a Correspondent.)

M. HECTOR BERLIOZ, the most accomplished musician, the most fertile composer, and the most zealous combatant that France possesses, is an object of hatred to a whole generation of mediocre individuals, who thwart him in every possible manner. Their endeavours succeed so well in la belle France, that we are quite astounded when we hear a chorus of applause echoing in his favour from over the German frontier. This is sad, very sad! The reason of this is, that our education and customs in France are pre-eminently inimical to art. Mediocrity—mediocracy—is supreme among us! Thick, common blood flows in our veins. Realism howls out its veto as soon as comfortable digestion is disturbed; it grows angry directly any one dares to appeal to a man of superior intelligence. What is to be done against such a state of things? A sensible system of musical education and development is the only means which can be employed to destroy such crass materialism. In the first place, no one should be allowed to teach music without adducing proofs of actual proficiency; this would get rid of that scum of teachers who allow bad music to be played, and produce bad pupils. But what shall we say of the class-books, especially for the elements of music? Why are they not subjected to some serious and severe test? I do not, as a matter of course, allude to those obligingly favourable testimonials of approbation which the Conservatory is constantly issuing, duly marked with its stamp; I require some real test, applied with the most unflinching severity, because we have to guard a whole generation against bad instruction by means of bad elementary works.

In a pamphlet (Fillonneau, Revue Musicale de 1860, à Paris), I find the following observations on Beethoven's last works, especially the Sonata, Op. 111, where the writer is speaking of the performance of the said sonata by Herr von Bülow:—

"In these compositions there is always some excellent movement, and we think that no one is bound to play the whole of them any more than that we are bound to listen. Op. 111 has been played this winter by several distinguished pianists, who have, however, had the good sense to omit the last half!"

It is not, naturally, every one who is capable of following the bold flight, and comprehending the mighty thoughts of a man of genius; but then those who cannot do so should hold their tongues, for every person is allowed to be silent. I also am silent, when I behold the wearied faces of some most elegant audience who have been listening to a fugue by Bach, and when I hear, on their waking up, because the mill-clapper has stopped, their ejaculations of delight! The playing of many virtuosi resembles the walk of a drunken man. The tempo rubato takes its name from the fact of its robbing the composer's music of its proper time.

In most of the theatres of Paris a man risks his health; nay, more, his life. A horrible atmosphere poisons the lungs; physicians agree in asserting that they owe a large number of patients to the unhealthy air in our theatres. Would that this were the only inconvenience to which we were subjected in order to have the pleasure of seeing a play! The spectator is perched upon a seat so narrow, that even a child must feel cramped when occupying it; it is impossible to stretch one's legs; you are condemned to absolute immovability if you would not incommode your neighbour, who is quite as badly off for room as yourself. In addition to this, you have to stand up every instant to let some new-comer pass; and, however closely you keep to your place, you are lucky if you get off with simply having your boots muddied, and do not get your feet crushed and trodden on.

Figures, it is well known, play an important part nowadays. I will make a statistical statement. At the conclusion of 1860 there were in Europe 18,140 actors and singers, 21,609 actresses and female singers, 1,733 theatrical managers and directors; the sum total of persons of all classes employed in theatres was 82,216. The number of musicians can only be approximately calculated: if we take it at a million, of whom 600,000 are pianoforte players, we shall be pretty near the truth. A reward will be given to any one who shall answer the following question: What relation does the total of 1,082,216 artists, Richard Wagner included, bear to the progress of dramatic and musical art?

The Moniteur has published a plan of the site of the new Opera-house, which differs from all those yet issued, together with a notice that the work is thrown open to public competition. The theatre is to stand in the midst of a large space, and will have no building within 60 feet of any portion of it. Its façade will be in view of the Boulevard, and at not more than 50 or 60 yards' distance. The theatre is contain from 1,800 to 2,000 persons; the length from the back of the boxes to the proscenium to be about 60 feet. The stage is be capable of holding about 400 persons, its width 45 feet, and its depth 104. The total length of the building—which is to include not only the theatre but all its accessories—is to be 490 feet by 228. The grand hotel of the Opera is to be built between the new theatre and the Boulevard; it will cover about 8,000 square yards of ground, and contain 600 bed-rooms, besides saloons, dining-rooms, and every other feature of an hotel. A similar building is now nearly completed, as regards the shell of the construction, on the Boulevard de Sebastopol. This latter is to be called the Grand Hôtel du Commerce, and the two promise to become formidable rivals to the Hôtel du Louvre.

Letters from Turin give the information that Mlle. Titiens and Signor Giuglini were about to commence a series of engagements in that capital, whence they go to Milan, Genoa, Florence, &c., &c. I hear, by the way, that Mr. Lumley, the ex-manager of Her Majesty's Theatre, has secured a new prima donna of extraordinary endowments and accomplishments, and whom, in all probability, will be heard in London next season. Her name is Galetti, and furthermore rumour is loud in praise of her beauty and general appearance—a second Grisi, in short, about to come to judgment.

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—The Festival is fixed for the 27th of August next, and three following days, under the presidency of the Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot. The committee have appointed Mr. Costa as conductor, and they will again enjoy the invaluable services of Mr. J. O. Mason as orchestral steward. The report of the orchestral committee deals chiefly with a matter closely affecting the success of these meetings. It distinctly lays down and supports the principle that nothing short of the highest attainable excellence will maintain the pre-eminence of the Birmingham Festivals, or continue to afford to the General Hospital the revenue it has hitherto derived from this source. The committee show that while it would undoubtedly be possible to cut down the expenses of the next Festival to the level of 1846, and thus to make a large profit, such a course would certainly result in so greatly lowering the prestige of the festivals as to render them utterly valueless, either as expositions of the musical art or as helps to the cause of charity. The principle advocated by the committee is unquestionably sound. In these days of competition, people insist upon having the full value for their money, and if they cannot obtain it at Birminghan they will go to Leeds or Bradford, or some of those other periodical meetings which have become formidable rivals to our own festival. We are glad to learn that the general committee fully recognised the wisdom of the course proposed by the orchestral committee, and recorded in a general resolution their conviction that "the policy pursued in maturing the musical arrangements has been sound and judicious, and calculated to maintain the Triennial Festival as a permanent institution in aid of the funds of the General Hospital of Birmingham."—Birmingham Gazette.

Digitized by Google

THE ENTERPRISING IMPRESARIO.

CHAPTER V.

A THEATRE is not the only sphere of an impresario's operations—an Italian Opera not his only mine of gold or River Tamar. Whatever contributes to the amusement of the public, and is the means of making money, may be considered legitimate occupation for an enterprising "undertaker," as the term is translated literally. Some who are supposed to be exclusive members of the craft will perhaps resent the assertion as an indignity put upon them; but if there be one impresario who devotes himself solely and wholly to his theatre, minding his own business, and nothing else, he has hitherto escaped my notice. Some are poets (one poet-manager, whose effusions it was too much the fashion to ridicule, irrespective of their merit, has but just now "shuffled off this mortal coil," leaving all who knew him to regret the loss of a good friend and kind-hearted man); some are publishers or musicsellers; some seek a profit in hot-houses and tea dealing; some (but with gratitude be it said they are very rare) are —— (kind reader! has not every calling, even the dustman's, its different grades?); some are singers, and engage themselves at enormous salaries.

I followed the fortunes of my particular impresario in an undertaking in which he misplaced a large amount of energy and capital, none other than the Royal Surrey Gardens, a dismal swamp, which formerly afforded shelter to a collection of howling wild beasts, and was the resort of the nursemaids of the neighbourhood.

By the exertions of a company of directors, of whom my friend was one, the wild beasts were exterminated, the swamp was drained, and at a vast expense a magnificent music hall erected. It was here I had an opportunity of judging of the positive necessity of absolute power in the management of any similar enterprise. "Division of labour" by any number of directors can never have a satisfactory result, when catering for the public is concerned. No matter how carefully organised, or how well carried out, joint management rarely succeeds, and never does so if undertaken by a body of committee-men. The activity so indispensable to success is paralysed, and favourable circumstances are neglected. No member of the direction being allowed to incur liabilities for his brother directors without their knowledge and consent, the Royal Surrey Gardens were managed by a committee, and the undertaking consequently met with its inevitable fate. Moreover, if the manager of a theatre has difficulties to overcome, the directors of such a place as the Surrey Gardens had to contend with obstacles far more insurmountable. One which gave them more trouble and vexation than the sore throat of any prima donna or tenore was the weather. A drop of rain cost hundreds—a thunder storm reduced the balance at the banker's to the smallest sum imaginable. I have known a fall in the barometer intimidate a full meeting of directors, the slightest indication of an unfavourable change

"Making the boldest hold their breath for a time."

Some would wait patiently until the threatening clouds dispersed or burst, and drown the receipts; others would tap the unoffending prophetic little instrument so violently that it would fall bodily, and sustain irreparable injury. A board day of the Royal Surrey Gardens Committee afforded an interesting opportunity for the study of human nature. Perhaps equally exciting or disheartening as the weather (for it must be remembered that the spirits of the directors rose as well as fell according to the fluctuations of the mercury) was the presence of the renowned Jullien at a committee meeting. M. Jullien rarely made his appearance, and never did so without having some extraordinary suggestion or complaint to make. His energetic, and sometimes violent, manner contrasted strangely with the sedate composure of the phlegmatic Englishmen whom he came to address. The effect he at first produced was extraordinary. He alarmed them, and some vainly attempted to reply to his arguments. After the second or third time they became more accustomed to his invectives, and listened to him in silence, discussing what he had been saying in his absence.

No man ever gave expression to more extraordinary ideas—ideas which in any ordinary mortal would have been attributed to insanity—than Jullien; no man ever talked so incessantly. He had the gift of language as well as music, and some time of his life had acquired a vast amount of information on various subjects. He was well versed in history and botany. That which he really knew of the latter science was sometimes disguised and discredited by the singular stories he told of his influence upon trees and flowers. He used to assure me that he had so "arranged" a certain plantation upon his estate in Belgium, that when the wind was in the south the trees rustling together played the slow movement of a particular symphony.

ANTHATER.

THE LONDON GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION, whose entertainments last season at the Dudley Gallery, Egyptian Hall, under the direction of Mr. Land, obtained a large share of public favour, are announced to resume their performances of glees, madrigals, and old English ballads, at the same locality, on Monday evening next, January 7th.

HEINRICH MARSCHNER.—This celebrated German composer is again in Paris. He is about to produce his new opera, Hiarne der Sängerkönig, at the Grand Opera, in obedience to the express commands, moreover—at least, so it is said—of the Emperor Napoleon. It is much to be regretted that the German theatres-royal, especially those of Berlin and Vienna, allow themselves to be deprived of the honour—or rather, neglect the obligation they are under—of being the first to bring out a new work of the greatest of living German operatic composers.

POLYGRAPHIC HALL—WOODIN'S ENTERTAINMENT.—Mr. W. A. Woodin, after a long and prosperous tour in the provinces, on Boxing-night made his reappearance at home quarters, with a Cabinet of Curiosities, being an "entirely new and original musical, mimetic, pictorial, graphical, polygraphical, and authorspographical entertainment," expressly written for him by a popular dramatist. The fund of invention displayed in the creation of the numerous characters with which the mimic stage is peopled, and the versatility of talent and untiring spirit with which their realisation is effected, are equally admirable—so rapid, indeed, is their production sometimes as almost to make one hold one's breath, as if in very sympathy with the performer. It must be added that Mr. Woodin is greatly aided in the various characters which he assumes by the costumier, the disguises in every case being complete and life-like, and many of them of the highest merit, pictorially considered. After a few miscellaneous scenes by Mr. Griddler, the Hon. Mrs. Magenta, Lancelot Long, Esq., and Mr. Tom Galloper, G.W.R.C., who treats us to a song on "Social Varieties," which serve as a sort of prologue, the entertainment assumes a more distinct and methodical form, the object being to illustrate the peculiarities of character both in and out of town in the four seasons of the year. Thus, under Spring, we have "The Fashionable Marriage," Mrs. Popple, the pew-opener, being amongst the most conspicuous actors on the interesting occasion. Then comes, "The Public Dinner," on behalf of one or other of the innumerable London charities, with Nicholas Noddler, Esq., M.P., a great conception of a chairman; and Mr. Bobbles, a perfect study of a secretary; "Epsom on the Derby-day" introduces a perfect crowd of turf notabilities—the "correct card" vendor, the fortune-telling gipsy, the thimble-rigger, and the acrobat, being especially admirable. "Spring in the Country" gives occasion for the display of a remarkable specimen of the enthusiastic angler, Mr. Rodney Hook, and another of the model landlady of the Red Lion, being no other than the inimitable Widow Whimperley, so calm in her record of matrimonial reminiscences, and her avowal of present bereavement, and withal so solicitous that all her guests may be comfortable and make a good breakfast, with all the little relishes appropriate thereunto. Summer, of course, has its excursionists, more especially to the sea side, where Jones, the skipper, winds up the business with an appropriate song, and a hornpipe danced in character. In Autumn we go upon the grand tour, in Wales, in Scotland, in Ireland, or to Switzerland, choice specimens of the natives of each locality, with appropriate songs, being represented in broad but truthful outline. Winter, with its entertainments, concludes the changeful scene of a performance which we may pronounce one of the most agreeable and mirth-moving entertainments of the season. We should observe that the Polygraphic Hall has been entirely redecorated during the recess, gaily lighted, and the general aspect further enlivened by the introduction of handsome mirrors on each side of the stage. Appropriate set scenes of the four seasons of the year form a pleasing accessorial attraction at the back of the stage during the performance.

Digitized by Google

HENRI HERZ.—Herz, the pianist, had announced a concert in one of the newest cities of California, and had been obliged to send to San Francisco to procure a property necessary to the entertainment—viz., a piano. At the hour announced for the concert, the tickets were all sold, the house was crowded, the artist was at his post, and everything was in readiness—except the piano. In consequence of some inexplicable delay, the instrument had not arrived. Herz looked at his rough and bearded auditory in very considerable trepidation. What if the gold digging dilettanti should take it into their heads to give him a taste of revolver or bowie-knife, by the way of filling up the time! Heavy drops of perspiration stood on the frightened pianist's brow, and he began to wish himself in China, in Kamchatka—anywhere but in California. The miners saw his alarm, and kindly comforted him. "Never mind the cussed pi-anner," said two or three of them soothingly; "we don't care for it; we came to see you. Make us a speech!" Herz, with restored serenity, did the best he could. The spoken entertainment seemed to please the audience, and everybody, except the artist, had quite forgotten all about the piano, when its arrival was announced. A number of stout men carried the instrument into the hall, and placed it on the platform. It was a three-cornered, or "grand" piano, and Herz, promising himself to astonish these simple and easily-satisfied inhabitants of the Pacific coast, seated himself on an empty whisky-keg (instead of the more civilised stool). Blum! blum! splash! splash! Not a sound did the piano utter, save that of keys striking in the water! The Californians who had brought the "box" from San Francisco, finding it very heavy, had floated it to town, and, upon dragging it out upon the levee, had neglected to pour the water from the interior.—Brighton Guardian.

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE SEVENTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON

WILL TAKE PLACE

ON MONDAY EVENING, JANUARY 14, 1861,

On which occasion the celebrated Violinist,

M. VIEUXTEMPS

(Who has been expressly engaged for these Concerts),

Will make his First Appearance in London, after an absence of Eight Years.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Quartet, in D minor, for Two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello—first time at the Monday Popular Concerts—(Schubert), M. VIEUXTEMPS, Herr RIES, M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI. Song (Benedict), Miss LASCELLES. Song (G. A. Macfarren), Miss AUGUSTA THOMSON. Prelude and Fugue, à la Tarantella, in A minor—first time at the Monday Popular Concerts—(J. S. Bach), Miss ARABELLA GODDARD.

PART II.—Sonata, in C minor, for Miss ARABELLA GODDARD, Pianoforte, and M. VIEUXTEMPS, Violin—first time at the Monday Popular Concerts—(Beethoven). Song (Henry Smart), Miss LASCELLES. Canzonet (Dussek), Miss AUGUSTA THOMSON. Quartet, in E major, No. 59, for two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello (Haydn)—first time at the Monday Popular Concerts—M. VIEUXTEMPS, Herr RIES, M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI.

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT. To commence at Eight o'Clock precisely.

Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s.

Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28 Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co., Hammond, Addison and Co., Schott and Co., Ewer and Co., Simpson, and Oetzmann and Co., Regent Street; Bradberry's, London Crystal Palace, Oxford Street; Duff and Co., 65 Oxford Street; Prowse, Hanway Street; Chidley, 195 High Holborn; Purday, 50 St. Paul's Church Yard; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48 Cheapside, Turner, 19 Cornhill; Cook and Co., 6 Finsbury Place, South; Humfress, 4 Old Church Street, Paddington Green; Fabian, Circus Road, St. John's Wood; Ransford and Son, 2 Princes Street, Cavendish Square; Ivory, 275 Euston Road; Mitchell, Leader and Co., Ollivier, Campbell, Hopwood and Crewe, and Willis, Bond Street, And CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond Street.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—Last Nights of Queen Topaze.—THIS EVENING (Saturday), QUEEN TOPAZE. Characters by Messrs. SWIFT, SANTLEY, PATEY, PERROTT BARTLEMAN; Mlle. ALESSANDRI and Mlle. PAREPA. Mlle. MORLACCHI and M. MASSOT will dance in the incidental ballet. The highly successful pantomime of HARLEQUIN AND TOM THUMB; or, Merlin the Magician. The scenery by Mr. William Beverley. Notice.—During the Pantomime the doors open at half-past 6, commence at 7 o'clock. Box-office open from 10 till 5 Notice.—The opera commences at 7 o'clock, the pantomime commences at 9 o'clock each evening. Carriages to be ordered for 11 o'clock. To-day (Saturday), January 5th, a Grand Morning Performance of the Children's Pantomime. Commences at 2 o'clock, terminates at 4. On Monday next will be performed, in English, the First and Fourth Acts of IL TROVATORE. PAREPA, LEMAIRE; SANTLEY, PATEY, SWIFT. Conductor—Mr. HENRY BLAGROVE.

THEATRE ROYAL DRURY LANE.—Lessee, Mr. E. SMITH. THIS EVENING (Saturday) Her Majesty's servants will perform the new comedy, in two acts, entitled THE ADVENTURES OF A BILLET-DOUX. The new grand Comic Christmas Annual, under the title of PETER WILKINS; or, Harlequin and the Flying Women of the Loadstone Island. Scenery by Beverley. The opening by Blanchard. Produced under the superintendence of Robert Roxby. Harlequins, Mr. Cormack and Mr. St. Maine; Columbines, the Misses Guiness; Pantaloons, Mr. Naylor and Mr. E. R. Martin; Clowns, Mr. Huline and Mr. R. Power, and a little one in by Young Huline; Sprites, by the celebrated Lavator Lee Family. Reduced prices as usual. Open at half-past 6; commence at 7 o'clock. Box-office open from 10 till 5.

NOTICES.

To ADVERTISERS.—Advertisers are informed, that for the future the Advertising Agency of the THE MUSICAL WORLD is established at the Magazine of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 229 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyle Street (First Floor). Advertisements can be received as late as Three o'Clock P.M., on Fridays—but not later. Payment on delivery.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2*s.* 6*d.* / Every additional line (10 words) ... ... 6*d.*

To PUBLISHERS AND COMPOSERS.—All Music for Review in THE MUSICAL WORLD must henceforward be forwarded to the Editor, care of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 229 Regent Street. A List of every Piece sent for Review will appear on the Saturday following in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

To CONCERT GIVERS.—No Benefit-Concert, or Musical Performance, except of general interest, unless previously Advertised, can be reported in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JANUARY 5, 1861.

THE Philharmonic Society is busy, if we are not misinformed, in reconstructing its orchestra. Only those members of the old band who are not attached to the Royal Italian Opera will (can) remain. Happily some of these are first-class men, some, indeed, what our French friends describe as "hors ligne," among them being found such players as Mr. Blagrove, Herr Becker, &c. On the other hand it is well known that several artists of the highest eminence, not engaged at Covent Garden, are scattered about the country. The co-operation of all or most of these, we are told, it is the intention of the Philharmonic directors to invite. Our readers are of course aware that one of the best double-bass players (Mr. Rowland), one of the best horn-players (Mr. H. Jarrett), and one of the best violinists (Mr. W. Thomas) in Europe, the best violoncellist (Sig. Piatti), together with such capital "fiddlers" as MM. Bezeth, Goffrie, &c., have for years seceded from the Royal Italian orchestra. They will naturally, without exception, be applied to, as well as many others of scarcely inferior talent, whom we cannot stop just now to designated by name, to fill up the vacancies caused by the desertion of the "forty," who henceforth must depend for their income upon the Opera in Bow Street, the Sacred Harmonic Society and the triennial festivals at Birmingham, Bradford and Norwich—providing, by the way, that future undertakings in Floral Hall, during the autumn months, do not ("accidentally") deprive them of the last.

For our own parts, much as we deplore the breaking up of the long-established Philharmonic band, we should still more deeply regret such a possible crisis as the ultimate breaking up of the Philharmonic Society itself. Such an event would be little short of a national calamity; though, had the directors for one instant entertained the idea of changing the days of any, even one, of their concerts, from Monday to Wednesday (as was politely suggested to them, in their emergency, by those very persons who precipitated that emergency), no other result could have been anticipated. A Philharmonic concert, not on a Monday (evening), would be no Philharmonic concert at all. But the honest work of nearly half a century is scarcely to be upset by a temporary difficulty, however perplexing; and the directors, in positively refusing to make any compromise, big or small, have acted with no less wisdom than determination. Had they conceded one point, they would soon have been asked to concede another. The difficulty, such as it is, was nevertheless, boldly confronted; and for the sake of the players themselves — who, we cannot but think, showed strange weakness in subjecting their individual liberties of action to the blind control of a despotism—we sincerely trust that the mere secession of an orchestra, no matter how excellent, may never, in a country with such vast musical resources as Great Britain be accepted as equivalent to the inevitable dissolution of a time-honoured and important musical body-corporate. Some day the musicians who have abandoned the Philharmonic to its fate, will probably find reason to regre ttheir want of esprit de corps—or, in other words, unanimity of sentiment—which prevented them from making a steady though respectful protest, and declining to sign away their rights as free citizens for any temptation, or in deference to any covert intimation of what might be the probable consequences of that refusal. Last year they made a resolute stand, precisely under similar circumstances.

Digitized by Google

As for orchestral performers, we verily believe there are enough in this country, at present unattached, to form another Philharmonic orchestra, and a strong one, even supposing that Professor Bennett (like Mr. Lumley, in 1846,) were left without a fiddle, drum-stick, flauto piccolo, or trombone.

ENGLISH composers cannot complain that English managers have done nothing for them within the last season or two. That National Opera is in the ascendant is entirely due to the energy and enterprise of the winter directors of the two great Italian houses. It is gratifying to know that English Opera has sprung from Italian speculation. But for Her Majesty's Theatre and Covent Garden, we should certainly not now have two theatres devoted to national music. How far the two establishments may prove an advantage, depends on the judgment and discretion of the managers. These are despotic rulers, in whose hands their destinies are placed, with no fear, save from public opinion; with no check, save from public expression. No doubt the directors have a ticklish part to play. They cannot please all parties; in their desire to do so, they may realise the fable of the old man and his ass, and please nobody. There are, however, certain broad principles to act upon, which à priori would seem to constitute the basis of theatrical administration, and to depart from which would necessarily imply some fatuity or perversion of understanding. The first consideration in originating an English operatic speculation would be, we need hardly say, the production of English operas. This is self-evident and incontrovertible. If the director, nevertheless, thinks fit to vary his programme by some foreign work of celebrity, translated into the vernacular, the musical public will not object, provided the work be well adapted to the performers. In short, a good Italian or French opera, if suitable to our artists, would be just as acceptable, or nearly so, at any rate, as a new opera by a favourite native composer. No English opera perhaps was ever received with greater favour than Masaniello, Fra Diavolo, or Gustavus, not merely because the music was in each instance excellent, but because our singers could both sing and act. Braham's performance of the Neapolitan fisherman enhanced the magnificence of Auber's music, and although our great tenor was by no means the beau idéal of Scribe's brigand, his execution of the music of Fra Diavolo was incomparable. We may, therefore, rest satisfied that if Mr. E. T. Smith, or Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison could present us with more Masaniellos, Gustavuses, or Fra Diavolos, the public would not complain that they were not national works, but be delighted to get them under any circumstances. Has this been the policy of the managers of English Operas either at Her Majesty's Theatre or at Covent Garden? Apparently not.

The first work produced by Mr. Smith this year, in his inaugurative undertaking of National Opera at Her Majesty's Theatre, was Robin Hood, by Mr. Macfarren. So far so well. The second was Queen Topaze, an English version of a French opera, entitled La Reine Topaze, by M. Victor Massé, a French composer. So far so ill. The first novelty presented to the public this season by Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison was Georgette, an English version of a French opera, entitled Les Noces de Jeannette, by M. Victor Massé, a French composer. What! two French operas by one French composer, produced within a week or so at the two great English Opera-houses! Precisely. Who is M. Victor Massé, the French composer, that he could so bend and sway from their line of strict obligation the managers of the national theatres, who had pledged themselves to stand by native musicians at all risks, and in defiance of all opposition (vide prospectuses)? Surely he must be a greater genius than Auber, Boieldieu, Herold, &c., and have written more striking and admirable works than La Dame Blanche, the Pré aux Clercs, Fra Diavolo, or Lestocq. No such thing. M. Victor Massé is a man of moderate talent, and may be reckoned among third-rate French composers. Moreover, the two productions which have exercised so profound an influence on the English directors are considered comparatively of little worth even in Paris, where they first saw the light. This is incredible! Nevertheless, there must have been something in these operas upon which Mr. Smith and Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison confidently reckoned for a triumphant result. What the managers saw in M. Victor Massé's operas we cannot say; but we may assert that the elements of success were not found in the least degree either in Georgette or in Queen Topaze. Let the admirers of English opera chew upon this, and draw their own conclusions therefrom.

We have just been informed that Auber's Domino Noir is in active rehearsal at the Royal English Opera. We are not greatly delighted with this news. The Domino Noir is one of the most sparkling and exquisite works that ever adorned the scene of the Opéra Comique; but we are not quite satisfied that it will bear translation to the boards of Covent Garden. The music is too delicate, too spirituel for the broader sensibilities and tastes of the English public, while the characters, even more than those in the Crown Diamonds, demand an amount of finesse and finish in the acting, not to be found in our best English singers. Not that the music would not delight on its own account. In no country in the world is the genius of Auber more thoroughly appreciated than in England. But the Domino Noir perhaps, of all the renowned composer's operas, requires a perfect ensemble and nicety in the details, which we must not look for on the English stage. At all events, if we must have the Domino Noir, let us have it in its purity and entirety, without amalgam or alloy. Let not Miss Pyne and Mr. Harrison, in their intense anxiety to gratify the English musical taste, attempt to recommend Auber with even the choicest seasonings of Messrs. Benedict, Brinley Richards and Tully; nor seek to lend a false brilliancy to the finale, by interpolating tinsel variations on some catching theme, which has neither meaning nor purpose. If Auber cannot please by his own music, no changes or additions will make him do so. Champagne will bear admixture with no other wine.

Digitized by Google

NOW that the first concert of the third season of the Musical Society of London is at hand, a suggestion or two may not be altogether out of place. The concerts should be made as nearly as possible what is termed "attractive," but at the same time they should not be without evident purpose. A new composition of some importance ought, as a sine quâ non, to be a feature in every programme. It is probable that, as very few trials have taken place, there is not much to be expected from their influence. Nor, by the way, have we any great faith in "trials," unless where a definite purpose is in contemplation. In what did the trial of orchestral works by the Philharmonic band last year—at the invitation, too, of the Philharmonic directors—result? Answer—"smoke." A number of pieces were carelessly gone through—once or twice, according to the sensitiveness of the composer—and from that very day forgotten. At any rate, it is notorious that not a single specimen was laid before the subscribers at any one of the six concerts.

We can hardly blame the Philharmonic Society, the peculiar nature of its constitution borne in mind, for this seeming apathy to the claims of native and living composers; but we may fairly reproach the Musical Society of London, if it produces nothing new, or revives nothing that has ill deserved neglect, in the course of the ensuing season. Novelty is expected at its hands; and if novelty be not forthcoming, people have a right to ask, and will ask, what are the precise objects of the institution.

We cannot insist too often that if the Musical Society of London aims at nothing more than holding four concerts and a couple of "conversaziones"—as they are styled—in St. James's Hall, it merely helps to illustrate the fable of the mountain and the mouse. True, it is, or promises to be, a self-supporting body, and may tell the public at large to go about its business. It don't want the public at large; in short, it has got no accommodation for the public at large, strictly so denominated. St. James's Hall is scarcely big enough to hold the fellows, associates and subscribers who propose sooner or later to become associates and fellows themselves. All this is undeniable; and yet, on the other hand, the Musical Society of London courts public sympathy, and is for this reason amenable to public criticism. It does not solely think to benefit itself by holding pleasant conversaziones and giving much pleasanter concerts for its own particular gratification. If it intended no more than that it could hardly with conscience send invitations to the press; because in that case the press would have no more business to report or chronicle its proceedings at St. James's Hall than report the private concerts and soirées of Lord Bareacres and the Duchess of Fitzbattleaxe. We are therefore in no wise transgressing the rules of propriety in discussing the (public) acts of the Council of the Musical Society of London, and in a future number shall take the liberty of offering the "few suggestions" hinted at above.

SUMMER is certainly the season of music; the birds, the Italian singers, and the Savoyard organ-grinders, arrive in England in the spring and go away in the autumn. Perhaps the organ-grinders do not go away, but at least large numbers of them disappear from London. At the same time the Italian singers are replaced by harlequin, columbine, clown and pantaloon (for it is they who really constitute the "attraction" at our two operatic theatres just now), and in place of linnets and nightingales, we have pheasants and partridges. This last substitution may be tolerated, for we have a passion for game, and have always maintained that even the best of our singing birds do not know how to sing; how could they poor things, never having been taught? Some of them it is true, a few miserable bullfinches of German origin for instance, have received instruction, and yet these sing ten thousand times worse than the warblers of the woods, who, as long as they keep to their woods are, we admit, very charming.

We shall be glad for our part to hear that "Summer is icumen," as Mr. Chappell would say, or even that Spring is "icumen," and that audiences who love music are "icumen," and, above all, that pantomimes are "agoing." Pantomimes are like the plumpuddings of which they are the inevitable Christmas accompaniments. You can manage to digest them when you are very young, but they soon oppress you, soon bore you, and you very soon begin to hate them. Heaven forgive us for undervaluing for an instant (writing too in a London coffee-room!) the enchanting music of the birds! What was that sound which struck with deadening effect upon our ears one night last week when we ventured to enter Covent Garden after the "Marriage of Georgette" had been played? That accursed, thousand times repeated twittering of fiddles, issuing from an orchestra which five minutes before had been directed by Mr. Alfred Mellon, and which had actually gained a reputation second to that of no other orchestra in London! Surely the music is worthy of the drama! The twittering and strumming is as good in its way as the low buffoonery of chorus, the idiotic pleasantries of pantaloons, the unmeaning agility of harlequins. Of the columbine only it is not worthy—when the columbine happens to be pretty; pantomime music being of an ugly and grovelling character, such as can in no way be associated with female beauty.

"Children like pantomines as they are," we shall be told. But would they like them one atom the less if they were accompanied by music instead of the most vulgar noise that musical instruments can possibly produce? We think not; and we will even venture to say that lively and appropriate music of a genuine kind would make pantomimes twice as attractive as they are now to the general public, while to lovers of music they would at least cease to be the ear-piercing nuisances that they are at present.

But is not the effect of the cold on the human vocalists really very distressing? Is it not sad that we should have scarcely any singers in London just now, and that those who are here should either be unwilling to sing or unable to get any one to listen to them?

M. VIEUXTEMPS.—This celebrated violinist arrived in London yesterday, to fulfil his engagement with the Monday Popular Concerts. He leaves to-night for Glasgow, where the provincial tour, under the direction of Mr. S. Arthur Chappell, is to commence. The other concerts, at all of which M. Vieuxtemps will play, are to be held at Edinburgh, Newcastle, Manchester and Liverpool, at which last town, both a morning and evening performance are announced.

Digitized by Google

THE ORGAN.*

TWELFTH STUDY.—THE INFLUENCE OF FORM OR QUALITY OF TONE CONTINUED—THE FORM OF THE MOUTHS AND TONGUES OF THE PIPES.

SINCE the vibrations, which produce the sound in an organ pipe, depend for their character on that of the vibrating apparatus, the dimensions of this apparatus in all its parts must necessarily influence the quality of the tone. In the case of pipes with mouths, as distinguished from reed pipes, it is of the greatest importance, and most essential, to make the lips exactly parallel to one another, first, for their effect on the eye, then for their effect on the ear; for if the proportions of the mouth are destroyed, it is no longer possible so to train it as to get from it those effects which are proper to it, and which it is most desirable it should produce. A low mouth, one, that is, in which the lips are at no great distance from one another, will yield a feeble sound, but a cutting quality of tone. This is due to the quick rush of the wind, which, on first issuing from the throat† of the pipe, dashes headlong against the cutting edge of the upper lip, at the very outset of its flight, and at the top of its speed. In this case the upper lip has great hold upon the current air on its first issuing from the throat of the pipe; but in proportion as the lips are removed to a greater distance from one another, the upper lip will have less hold upon this current, and the result will be a less cutting quality of tone. The higher, the more gaping a mouth is, the weaker also will be the sound emitted by it, and the quality of its tone will be then somewhat hollow and without much body, not wholly unlike the voice of a singer who opens his mouth too wide. From this defect his voice loses in vigour, and becomes dull. Perfection would seem to consist in a certain roundness of tone lying midway between the two extremes.

There is a measure for the length of the lips, which admits of no deviation, and this is, that they should be as long as the fourth part of the circumference of the pipe. But the height of the mouths, the distance—that is, from lip to lip—varies, as we have already seen, according to the nature of the stop; and the great variety of flue-pipes, open and stopped, especially in Germany, shows us how builders are able to make use of the greater or less distance of one lip from the other for the production of an almost infinite variety of qualities of tone, and even shades of the same. We also find in the scales or measures laid down by German and French builders, that the third or the fourth, and even two-sevenths of the length of the lips, is given for the height of the mouths of the open pipes, and that for stopped pipes, for the obvious reason that they are more dull in their sound, their mouths are opened almost to the half of the length of their lips. A difference, too, is made in determining the particular measures between the pipes of metal and those of wood, but this regards the builder only; all that it concerns us to notice is the influence that this or that particular kind of lip has upon the quality of the tone.

We have noticed the effect that follows from the lips being at a greater or less distance, when one is perpendicular to the other; we have next to consider the effect of their being at various distances in a diagonal direction. This diagonal distance has more effect, properly speaking, upon the speech of the pipe than upon the quality of its tone, though, as has been already shown, the quality of the tone does undoubtedly very closely depend upon the relative proportions of all the sound-producing parts of the pipe. We know very well that for the pipe to speak properly, or yield its true quality of tone, the air coming from the throat ought to be directed by the lower lip against the cutting edge of the upper lip. This upper lip is then made for this reason a little in arrear of the lower one, and it is the greater or less departure of the upper lip from the perpendicular line that falls between it and the lower lip which regulates the sound and quality of the tone. If the upper lip is either too much in front of the lower lip, or too much in arrear of it, the pipe will not speak at all, for the air in either case does not then get that sort of cut against the edge of the upper lip, which is absolutely necessary for it, in order that it may make the pipe speak. If this lip (the upper that is), is not far enough in arrear, within the pipe, the pipe will speak its octave; if, on the other hand, it is too far back, the pipe will be slow to speak, and in both these ways the quality of tone is very sensibly modified.

From what has been now said, it will be clearly seen that the wind may be said to find the centre of its action in the mouth of the pipe. The lips are subject to a perpetual and not inconsiderable tremulous motion, which would very soon change their form unless they were made thicker than the rest of the pipe, and that more especially about the base of the mouth. Some builders even, for the sake of greater solidity, edge the mouths of their open metal pipes with a thin plate of metal fixed at right angles to each extremity of the mouth. This they are obliged to do in the case of their stopped metal pipes, because otherwise they would not be able to tune them, the tuning of these pipes being effected either by pressing these plates of metal, or ears, as they are called, closer together, or by separating them further apart.

After the lips, we have to consider that part of the vibrating apparatus which is called the language. This is a small piece of metal which, according as it is set at a greater or less distance from the lower lip, and according to the angle which it makes with it, has a most material influence on the character of the sound. Its edge, by almost meeting the lower lip, forms, with it, the throat of the pipe, and the more cutting this edge is, the more cutting also will be the quality of the tone. Its thickness is a matter of considerable importance; for if it were too thin it would yield to the pressure of the wind, and though it might not lose it hold, it would at least get out of place and lose its proper position exactly opposite the lower lip. Hence it is better to make it of tin than lead, because tin is less flexible and less easily oxidised by the air than lead. In thickness it should be about the third of the height of the mouth, and it should be inclined to the lower lip at an angle of about sixty degrees. It is quite as important for the language to be parallel to the lower lip as it is for the lips to be parallel the one to the other. Its office is to direct the current of air against the upper lip. If then the language is inclined at too great an angle to the lip, the air will be directed by it into the body of the pipe and not against the lip; if it is not inclined enough, the air will be directed by it wholly outside the pipe; if, again, the language is depressed on one side, and raised up on the other, it will no longer be of any use at all as a means for directing the current of air. Hence, the least movement in the language from its true position has great influence on the sound, and consequently on the quality of the tone, for if it is so inclined as to direct the air too much to the inside of the pipe, the quality of the tone will become dull and unmusical; if too much to the outside of the pipe, the quantity of the sound will not be so great in amount, and the quality of the tone will become hard and wanting in body. If the language is too near the lip, so as to form with it too narrow a throat, the pipe will not be supplied with a proper quantity of sound, and hence its quality of tone not being in proportion to its scale, will be wanting in sufficient body of sound; if the language, on the contrary, is too far removed from the lip, it will make the throat too large, and, in this case, the quantity of wind, which it will allow to escape, will be more than the vibrating apparatus requires for its proper action, and hence the quality of tone will again become not only unmusical, but also what is technically called windy. The same effect will be produced if there are too many of those teeth or notches, which it is necessary to make in the edge of the language in order that the pipe may speak with greater promptness. If these notches are only lightly marked it will not be difficult to obtain a biting quality of tone; if they are cut deep and near together, they will have a very considerable influence in diminishing the force of the air, because by their roughness they will put a hindrance in the way of its passing freely through the throat. In general, if the throat is too narrow, the pipe has great difficulty in speaking, but when it will speak well under such straitened circumstances, the quality of its tone will be much more clear and keen; when, on the contrary, this same aperture is only a little too wide, the sound and quality of tone will be somewhat more mellow, but the quality will lose something of its keenness, and be deficient both in steadiness and vigour.

* From L'Orgue, sa Connaissance, son Administration, et son Jeu, by Joseph Regnier.

† This is perhaps more commonly called the wedge.

Digitized by Google

In the reed pipes, the vibrating apparatus, the reed, that is, and all that is necessary for the proper sounding of the tongue, have no less an influence on the quality of their tone than that which is necessary for their speech in the pipes, of which we have been just speaking. Shortness in the reed* is the cause of sweetness and thinness in the quality, length in the same enables builders to put strong tongues, the tone of which will be equal in brightness to its strength. "It is remarkable," says Dom Bédos, "that reeds varying in length find favour with all the most skilful builders..... So made, they must of necessity yield sounds differing from one another in power, and each sound good in its kind. Without pretending to decide which system is best; whether, that is, it is better to use long or short reeds, I certainly think that short reeds are better for organs intended for small churches, because in their case the builder is obliged to voice them soft. Large reeds require to be voiced loud, and therefore they would have a very good effect in large churches."

The hardness of the tongues, attained by cold beating, and their thickness, are also an important element towards forming the quality of the tone of reed pipes. If the tongue is harder than it ought to be the quality will be also hard, poor and feeble if the tongue is also feeble. "If they are much beaten," says our author, "they must be smaller than if they are only moderately beaten, or not beaten at all. As in the flue pipes, it is necessary for the lips to be exactly parallel to one another and to the language, so also in the case both of striking reeds and free reeds, regularity of movement in the tongues, and an exact proportion between their length and thickness, are most essential elements towards purity and brightness in the quality of their tone. This observation, taken together with what has been said about the reed and its parts, the vibrations of which perform the same office as those of the column of air in the open or stopped flue pipes, makes it quite evident that if the smaller pipe of such stops yields a fine and thin quality of tone, the small tongues of reed pipes will yield also a quality of tone every way analogous to this. In fact, the quality depends on the mass of air made to vibrate, and the mass of air made to vibrate depends on the size of the tongue; the greater, then, the surface of the tongue striking the air, the greater, also, the column of air made to vibrate under its blows. From this follows a singular phenomena, which science finds it more easy to attest than to account for, and this is, that though the length and thickness of the tongues act very powerfully upon the pitch of reed pipes, so as even to make it vary a note higher or lower, their breadth acts upon nothing but the quality of their tone. And hence it is certain, that, however much the breadth of the tongue is either increased or diminished, as long as the length and thickness of it remain the same, the number of the vibrations will remain the same also, and, consequently, that the note or pitch of the pipe will not vary. All the difference that will arise from this variation in the breadth either way will be, that narrowness in the tongue will yield the quality of tone of all the finer kinds of scales, and that breadth will yield that of all those scales which allow to the wind a fuller and more ample range, while an exact proportion between the parts will assure to them both roundness and vigour. In all these respects there is so great a correspondence between reed pipes and open or stopped flue pipes, that what is said of the one class may with equal propriety be said of the other.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The only thing in the shape of novelty announced at this theatre is two acts of the Trovatore, in English, with which the performances commence on Monday. Our operatic readers will be glad to learn that all obstacles to the speedy production of Mr. Wallace's Amber Witch are effectually brushed away.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.—Mr. Alfred Mellon's Victorine is announced to be produced on Monday next with Miss Louisa Pyne, vice Miss Parepa, in the principal character. Auber's Domino Noir is in rehearsal, and there is still some rumour about M. Gounot's Faust. In the meanwhile the public are getting impatient to know when Mr. Balfe's Bianca is to be produced.

* This is called the beak in German building manuals. A better term, as giving rise to less confusion.

Letters to the Editor.

MUSICAL SIGNS.

SIR,—Having for several years past followed the musical profession, and having experienced from time to time considerable annoyance in reading music, consequent upon the inaptness of musical signs to express things signified, I have thought it desirable, through the medium of your valuable paper, to lay before the musical world generally a few ideas, which, if carried out in future publications, would, I flatter myself, much help the profession and musical public.

First and foremost then, I will commence with the slur ⁀ intended at present for a twofold duty, and consequently often confounded with the bind. Now, could we not have the bracket ⌊‾⌋ instead of the slur for the tye or bind, and hence get rid of occasional ambiguity? Professor Bennett's is, I believe, the only music in which I find it employed; but why should it not be universally adopted and printed? Next, I would suggest a more definite signature—why should not a minor key be made evident at a glance, that the amateur who may know but very little of the theory of music, and yet have practised the scales, be without the least doubt as to the mode in which a piece of music may be, or in which it may at least commence.* I will next suggest a new character in lieu of the clumsy double flat at present used. Can we not have a new sign? say a character like this— 𝄫 or 𝄬;—would not this be an improvement? I now come to the stave, the highest and lowest lines of which are often made ambiguous through the joining ledger lines together above and below it; but perhaps we cannot alter the stave itself; but if the bad practice of joining the ledger lines together were discontinued, and the notes written a little more widely apart, difficulty in reading from that cause would, I feel sure, be done away with. The next alteration I desire is the carrying the bar line down through both staves, as in the foreign publications. Our crotchet rest also is not as definite as the foreigners. Look at 𝄽 and look at 𝄽. You see our foreign friend is supplied with a tail, as well as head, hence more definite. I am also an advocate for a new double sharp sign, unless we adopt the foreign fingering 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, as the double sharp sign being too much like the × for the thumb, a change either of the former or the latter seems desirable; perhaps this—♯♯ for a double sharp might be considered an improvement; but the change to the foreign fingering would please me best.

Trusting that my communication may at least have the effect of agitating these questions, and that the subject may be handled by those more able than myself, allow me to remain, with an apology for my perhaps too lengthy letter, yours obliged, a constant reader of your little publication,

PHILHARMONIC.

ORGAN IMPROVEMENTS.

SIR,—Perhaps the following additions, which I made to my organ about thirteen years since, may be found of service to some of your readers; I therefore send the description for insertion in the MUSICAL WORLD. At the back of the pedal naturals I added a raised piece similar to that upon the sharps. This addition facilitates the execution of some pedal passages, the heel being used as the toe is on the sharps. The position of these raised pieces is such as not to interfere with the ordinary method of pedalling. At the same time I contrived the following plan for leaving both feet at liberty for the pedals when using the swell. To the seat is attached a firm back, like the back of a chair. This back is fixed to a bar of iron, which bar is attached to the back of the seat, and is parallel with it. The bar moves, or revolves, in sockets, also fixed to the seat at each end. At one end of the bar is an arm, standing at right angles, and at the end of this arm is a cord, or chain, which, running under pulleys fixed to the floor, and there connected with the swell pedal, enables the player, by mere pressure of his back, to open the swell shutters, both his feet being at liberty for his pedals. It is difficult, I fear, to make the plan perfectly comprehensible by description alone; but as you are not in the habit of adding illustrations to the MUSICAL WORLD, I do not forward a sketch, but shall be happy to give any further information to your readers who may be interested in the matter. I am, Sir, yours truly,

Sidmouth, Dec. 26. N. S. HEINEKEN.

P.S.—Of course instead of the simple cord or chain a lever might be used.

* For the minor keys the signature would be better with the minor 3rd, and minor 6th, and sharp 7th for sharp keys, as, for example, A minor; and flat 3rd, flat 6th, and natural 7th for flat keys, as in F minor.

Digitized by Google

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

SIR,—I wish you would urge the Directors of the Monday Popular Concerts, who so wisely eschew mediocrity in their selections of instrumental pieces, to extend a like rule to the vocal portion of their entertainments. I, a lover of good music, have attended the two recent —— nights, with, so far as the instrumental concert was concerned, unmixed delight; but in both the pleasant flow of the evening was broken by an ill-advised selection of vocal music. On the latter occasion Miss —— sang a song by ——, and on the former Miss —— one by ——, of the abstract merits of which perhaps the less said the better; but their merits (and especially this applies to the last-named song) relatively to the instrumental pieces may be characterised by one word—twaddle. Now I venture to think this a mistake, and I am the more convinced that it is so, by contrasting the effect which both the above ladies produced in their second songs, over the selection of which a better genius had presided. Their first efforts fell flat, as they deserved to do; while their second songs roused and delighted the audience.

I venture to trouble you with this; for, as an overworked professional man to whom music is his only relaxation, I am anxious that nothing should mar the success of the Popular Concerts.

I am, your obedient servant,

M. D.

P.S.—I do not, of course, mean to dispute Messrs. ——'s undoubted talent; nay, I admit the songs in question are good enough as drawing-room music, and also that their composers are capable of much better things.

[We have inserted the above letter in a spirit of eclecticism, but we disagree altogether with its contents, in their application to those composers whose names we have purposely omitted.—ED. M. W.]

Provincial.

THE HOLIDAY ENTERTAINMENTS in the larger towns and cities of the provinces are about to receive a great accession to their strength in a series of Monday Popular Concerts, to be given at Edinburgh, Glasgow, Newcastle, Bradford, Manchester and Liverpool. These admirable performances, conducted with so much spirit, judgment, and skill, cannot fail to exercise a healthy influence on the provincial taste, which, doubtless, needs invigoration from some purer source than ill-digested operas, oratorios inefficiently executed, or chance miscellaneous concerts. That the same energy which has been all along so conspicuous at St. James's Hall, will be carried into the country, may be argued from the first programme of the inaugural provincial series:—

Part I.—Quartet in G No. 1 (dedicated to Haydn), Mozart; song, "Name the glad day" (canzonet), Dussek; Prelude, Sarabande and Gavotte, for violoncello, J. S. Bach; song, "The Bellringer," Wallace; Sonata in E flat, No. 3, Op. 29, Beethoven. Part II.—Sonata in B flat, No. 1, Op. 69, for violin and piano, Dussek; Song, "Ah! why do we love?" Macfarren; song, "I'm a roamer," Mendelssohn; quartet in B flat, No. 6, Op. 18, Beethoven.

The instrumental performers are, M. Vieuxtemps, Herr Ries, M. Schreurs, Signor Piatti and M. Charles Hallé; the vocalists, Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington and Mr. Weiss. M. Charles Hallé is conductor, a guarantee that the Monday Popular Concerts will lose nothing of their metropolitan prestige in their temporary removal to the provinces. "It is intended," writes the published analytic programme of the provincial series, "to follow up this inaugurative series with others of a similar character, and at convenient intervals to solicit the approving verdicts of provincial audiences for those programmes which elicited the most marked favour at St. James's Hall."—At the last of the Saturday Concerts in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, Mr. Sims Reeves and Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington sang, as did also Miss Fanny Huddart, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, Mr. Weiss and Signor Sarti. The attractions of the concert were further enhanced by the performance of M. Sainton on the violin, and M. Lemmens on the harmonium. We read good accounts in the local journals of the Christmas-eve performance of the Messiah at the Town Hall, Leeds. The singers were, Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington and Mrs. Sunderland, who shared the soprano music; Miss Fanny Huddart, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, Mr. Santley and Mr. Inkersall. "The very crowded audience," writes the Leeds Intelligencer, "that overflowed the Town Hall showed, in their earnestness of demeanour and decorous attention, that ardent love of Handel's masterpiece for which Yorkshire has been famous during a century. Their expectations were handsomely fulfilled; for the whole of the music was sung with such rich vocal quality, so thorough a knowledge of the text, and such genial sympathy with the majestic subject, as to make up a performance which we think in the present day has been never surpassed." As all the praise is bestowed on the Choral Union and the soloists, and not one word said of the orchestra—an oversight, surely, in an article nearly a column long—we may take for granted that the band was superior to that of the Sacred Harmonic Society. That the writer, nevertheless, has peculiar opinions on the subject of music, we think, may be seen in the following speculations which occur at the conclusion of his notice:—

"We have no wish to select any points which might be improved, especially because the grandeur of Christmas-eve's oratorio was due more than anything else to the unanimous spirit and sympathy of the singers with the poetry they were singing; and this consciousness gives us the opportunity to enter our protest against any other motive power being allowed to take precedence. Handel never wrote his sacred music to vindicate the science of sound, and stop there; but, catching from Nature the harmony which is to genius as the breath of God, he chained it down to a lifeless scroll, that he might preserve to men the memory of their forgotten emotions, and develope, in grand harmony, the heart-binding personality of God. We congratulate our talented conductor, then, on the artistic finish and vocal wealth of his Choral Union, but we beg of him, and of them, to let every performance of the Messiah rise higher and still higher, in spiritual warmth and expression, than the point it worthily attained to on Christmas-eve."

This is the bonâ fide "transcendental" style. Another performance of the Messiah was given in the same locality on the Saturday previous to the Leeds Town-hall Concert Society, in which the principal singers were Mrs. Sunderland, Miss Witham, Miss Crossland, Mr. Inkersall and Mr. Weiss, the band being the West Riding Orchestral Union, and the chorus the Leeds Madrigal Society's Concert Choir. Mr. Jackson, of Bradford, officiated as conductor, and Mr. Spark presided at the organ. The performance, though not spoken of in such lavish terms, appears to have been more than creditable. Mr. Weiss particularly seems to have created a great sensation. "The fine and well-cultivated bass voice of Mr. Weiss," says the Intelligencer, "gave a degree of grandeur and sublimity to his singing, which roused the enthusiasm of the audience to the highest pitch. His powers of declamation were finely displayed in the air, 'Why do the nations furiously rage together?' The eminent basso achieved a decided triumph, and the piece was loudly encored."—The musical public of WORCESTER, evidently not so exacting as Leeds, rests content with "selections" from the Messiah instead of the whole work—not at all complimentary, by the way, to a city pertaining to the Festival of the Three Choirs. The two Christmas Concerts at the Music Hall were but thinly attended. The performance of Maritana and the Trovatore at the theatre on the previous Wednesday, with Miss Fanny Reeves and Mr. Elliot Galer, as soprano and tenor, was more attractive. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean are announced to appear in The Wife's Secret on Wednesday next.

The London correspondent of the Liverpool Albion, in his amusing hebdomadal contribution, under the head of "Metropolitan Gossip," thus alludes to the death of Mr. Alfred Bunn:—

"However, as far as the British lion is concerned, the leap-year has jumped into the gulf of eternity in a blaze of triumph, as poor Bunn used to say, the once radiant Alfred having himself gone out, and it is to be hoped gone up, in an illumination of wax candles, Roman candles, of course; for the author of the 'Light of other days' died in that faith whereof commercial splendour forms a potential element. With what gusto Bunn used to tell the tale of the pyrotechnist on whose tomb a sorrowing and admiring friend inscribed the ingeniously alarming epitaph:—'He is gone where only his own fireworks can be excelled!' Let us trust that the same professional aspiration is applicable to Bunn's case now, but with a difference in the degrees of latitude and temperature. There has been no such secession from Thames to Tiber since the time of his operatic friend, Ambrogetti, the once magnificent baritone and lady-killing Apollo of the King's Theatre, and who, retiring in the prime of life and the heyday of fortune from the boards, became a brother of La Trappe, preferring that order perhaps in memory of his great character Giovanni, in which he used to make his subterranean exit down the stage in a cataract of brimstone brilliancy and a whirlwind of unearthly music, including the catcall cry of that sad dog Leporello, and the horse-laugh of the equestrian marble statue. Unlike the Italian, however, King Alfred became no anchorite in his retirement, and was probably as little of an ascetic as the abdicated Charles V., who used to fast in the monastery of Yuste on sixteen courses of fish, and carp at every one of them if its sauces were not more piquant than of the one preceding. Bunn had troops of friends, but wasn't without crowds of enemies, beginning perhaps with another Giovanni, though not an harmonious one, for he was notorious for the creation of family jars and domestic discords among flats and sharps, namely—the late "dark and imperious Earl," Fitzhardinge, who, when Colonel Berkeley, raised a fatal Cresswell Cresswellised flame in the heart of Alfred's rib, the once beautiful Margaret Agnes Somerville, whose Belvidera and Bianca divided the town with Miss O'Neill's, while her portraiture of the petrified Perdita would put Pygmalian ardour in a bosom of flint—ætat 21, when gentlemen arrive at years of indiscretion, and may make fools of themselves according to act of parliament, provided they can pay for their capers. "Why should a man ever be more than one and twenty?" as Farren used to say, with such poignant drollery, in Bunn's! own masterly play of the Minister and the Mercer, with Dowton for the shopkeeper, and the other incomparable comedian as the diplomatist. Alack, why indeed? Echo answers why; but the wherefore sticks in Echo's throat, like the Amen in Macbeth's; and for the same reason; because the utterance is garotted by thoughts associated with the lachrymatory ducts and sentimental pocket-handkerchiefs, which perhaps it is a crying shame to introduce at this hilarious season, with Twelfth Night, or What you Will, scarcely half-a-dozen days off, and when every gill-filling Jack will say with Sir Toby,—"Dost thou think, because thou art virtuous, there shall be no more cakes and ale? Yes, by St. Anne, and ginger shall be hot i' the mouth, too!" Bunn should not have died hereafter. Any delay in his final farewell of the scene of life would not have been for his benefit; and it is creditable to his management that he shuffled off the mortal coil instead of dragging it, like a wounded snake, any longer. The sight of this year's pantomimes, all over London, would have put him to tortures more terrible than the throat-rattle agony of his old foe, Macready, in what Ducrow used to call the pint of pisin (poison) business in King John. Ghost of Mother Goose, skeleton of Grimaldi, only to behold the appalling death's head and cross-bones contortions and grimaces of wooden brain lumbering body and dumpling visage that now pass for pleasantry, and are accepted as such by our poppy-headed public! Preadamite jokes, antediluvian tricks, fossilised fun that must have been antiquated when Methuselah was in petticoats, spasmodic humour that would give an ostrich a strychniafied stomach-ache to swallow a grain of, are thrust before our many-headed monster, Mr. Bull, who absorbs it all, in the manner of the Lord Wodehouse's ancestor, the Dragon of Wantley, who thought nothing of a cowhouse, a sheepfold, and a couple of church-steeples for breakfast. The extravaganzas are burlesques on amusement, calculated only to entertain a misanthrope who finds pleasure in that most terrible of mundane spectacles more shocking than a rouged corpse—imbecility masquerading in what it believes to be wit. But we are in an age of progress: whither? That's the point; and stinging and barbed that point is, Penny newspapers multiply; and penny wisdom suffices the sagacity of our wiseacres.

Digitized by Google

In noticing the performance of Miss Helena Walker in the Messiah at Sheffield last Wednesday week, the Sheffield Daily Telegraph says:—"Miss Helena Walker made her first appearance in this town, and from the manner in which she acquitted herself, there is little doubt but her services will be required on future occasions. Her voice is a soprano of the purest quality; and she sings with that simplicity and distinctness of articulation which always finds a response in her audience. She sang the two airs, 'rejoice greatly' and 'I know that my Redeemer liveth,' and it was difficult whether to admire most, the animated brilliancy of the former, or the profound and touching pathos exhibited in the latter."

A concert was given in the Town Hall, Brentford, on Thursday evening, the 20th ult. (writes a Correspondent), in connection with the Literary Club. The programme was such as is not often heard at a provincial concert. The part songs, &c., by the full choir, included "The hardy Norseman," "Now is the month of maying," "When winds breathe soft," "Sleep gentle lady," &c., and a solo glee by the conductor, Mr. C. J. Cross—"Beautiful night." Mr. Humphrey declaimed Purcell's "Come if you dare," with much force and vigour. The single-voiced glees were Bishop's "Blow, gentle gales," and Mendelsshon's "Nightingale," both well given. Two glees for male voices—Hâartels, "The Miller's daughter," and Mendelsshon's "Love and wine,"—were given with spirit. Miss Jane Palmer sang Haydn's air, "She never told her love," Mr. Evans the ballad in Robin Hood, "My own my guiding star," Miss Saunders "The convent cell," from the Rose of Castile, and Mrs. Harriet Lee, Mr. Macfarren's ballad, "The beating of my own heart." Mrs. Lee being encored, substituted "Rory O'More," which she sang without copy of the music or words. In the midst of one of the verses she suddenly forgot the words, which led to much merriment, on the part of the audience, in which the lady joined heartily, and beginning the verse again, arrived without interruption at the end. Mr. Cross sang the old song, "The leather bottle," and also a medley. The concert was conducted by the last-named gentleman. The Town Hall was crowded inevery part. It is gratifying to hear that the Brentford Literary Club is in a flourishing condition.

The Christmas performances of the Messiah have not been confined to England, nor even to southern Scotland. From the Aberdeen Express we learn that Handel's oratorio was performed at the Music Hall in the great northern Scotch city, on Friday, the 28th ult., the success of which appears to have been beyond all precedent. The notice of our Caledonian contemporary is sufficiently interesting to warrant us in laying it almost in extenso before our readers, more especially as it was the first appearance of Miss Augusta Thomson in her native country, and the first time of her singing the soprano music of the Messiah entire, which, doubtless, her friends will be glad to peruse.

Rarely has the Music Hall presented so brilliant an appearance as on Friday evening last, when an audience of fully two thousand were assembled at seven o'clock, in the expectation that, at that hour, the overture to Handel's Messiah would then be commenced. As the minutes glided on, without any signs of the orchestra being occupied, tokens of impatience began to be exhibited, which, after some time, were somewhat allayed by the choristers taking their places, but which again broke forth at intervals, until at twenty-five minutes after time, the band, Miss Augusta Thomson (soprano), Miss Clara Mackenzie (alto), Mr. George C. Cooper (tenor), and the conductor made their appearance, when the latter made an excuse for the delay, by placing an empty chair in a prominent position on the orchestra. The truth was that Mr. Weiss, the bass solo, had but that moment arrived. He had missed the train at Stirling, and had telegraphed so; and the directors had instantly ordered a special train to bring him on, which only arrived in Aberdeen while the audience were assembled. Of the soloists, neither the soprano, contralto, nor tenor had been heard in Aberdeen before, and considerable anxiety was manifested as to how Miss Augusta Thomson would acquit herself, the latter having achieved an undoubted reputation on the Continent and in London. After a few recitatives, which proved her to possess a distinct articulation, the first air, "Rejoice greatly," calculated to test her powers as a vocalist and interpreter of Handel, was given with great purity, and showed that she was fully qualified for her work. No liberties were taken with the text, either here or in the air, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," which was sung with perfection throughout, and which, if encores were at all allowable, richly deserved it. The shrinking of humanity at the passage, "And tho' worms destroy this body," and the confident assurance immediately succeeding, in "Yet in my flesh," was most feelingly given, and the ascending passage leading up to G, "For now is Christ risen," was admirably sustained. The ascent to B flat at the close of "Come unto Him," now traditionally allowable, was given with great ease and freedom. Her voice, though not powerful, is remarkably clear and ringing, especially in the higher notes, and in florid music her vocalisation was all that could be wished. The musical public of Aberdeen will gladly welcome back Miss Thomson, and her musical skill and vivacity of manner will always ensure her numerous admirers. Miss Clara Mackenzie is new as a soloist, and possesses a pure contralto voice of sweet and good tone, and of considerable power in its lower notes; her singing of the air, "He was depised," showed that she possessed much feeling. With a little more animation in her manner, and increased cultivation of her voice, Miss Mackenzie will captivate those who are not led away by the superior brilliancy and point of the soprano part. In the opening recitative, Mr. Cooper proved his fitness for interpreting Handel's music. In the recitative "Thy rebuke," and in the two airs, "Behold and see," and "Thou shalt break them," he made a most favourable impression. Mr. Weiss has been heard here before, and save towards the end, and particularly in "The trumpet shall sound," betrayed no symptoms of fatigue consequent on his long journey. Perhaps his most effective appearance was in the fine air, "Why do the nations," which he sung with great vigour, and which was deservedly much admired. Three quartets were given, the first, "Their sound is gone out" (being the only piece encored throughout the performance), "Since by man," and "For as in Adam." The Choral Union sustained their established credit. True, there were one or two slips in time,—speedily rectified, and excusable in the circumstances, but such choruses as "Behold the Lamb," "For unto us," "All we like sheep," showed that they were still under the able guidance of their conductor, Mr. Latter, who must be congratulated on his triumphant performance. With such a chorus and conductor, and such an organist as Mr. Baker, no fears need be entertained of a lack of sterling music amongst us, and the establishment of a numerous and efficient band of instrumentalists would dissipate any fears which could be entertained as to the success of any future performances. It is evident, by the large audiences which attend the concerts given by the Union, and by the general satisfaction expressed regarding the present performance, that they will be supported. The vocal force on the occasion numbered between 220 and 240 voices, and the instrumentalists from 30 to 40.

Digitized by Google

MENDELSSOHN AND THE GERMAN NATIONAL SONG.

MENDELSSOHN had a clear theoretic insight into the character of the national melody; he has even, as it is well known, written national songs, with the intention of concentrating in them the style and spirit of the popular melodies. We cannot find this in any of the great masters who preceded him. And again, he comprehended the people's song in its historical signification. As he was not only a creative, but also a critical and inquiring spirit, this comprehension was, from the beginning, a condition of the most remarkable of his artistic organisation. The national song had been rendered insipid, by the imitators of the Viennese tone-school; the musical romanticists had perverted it with mannerism; but to him it was the most natural thing to go back to the purer original forms, that have been handed down to us from an earlier period. This was like the successful efforts of the sagacious poets, Arnim, Brentano, Uhland, &c., who transferred the simple form and manner of expression of the songs of the middle ages, to their new, thoughtfully written ballads; indeed, in singing the well-known Minne-song, or his song of "Parting," the same spirit is breathed around us which we enjoy in the works of the abovementioned poets. We must not be surprised that this decisive change in the history of music took place some time after the literary revolution; it was long after the poets that the musicians stepped out from the period of naïve creation, and decidedly fixed their position in unity with the revolution in culture of the entire nation. And so it is, that through Mendelssohn, the German people's song, in a deep historical sense, has been re-found; and that, in him, the twilight impulse—to seek in national melody creative strength for musical production—which seems to influence our newest music, ripened, in him, to conscious deed.

Is it not a national disgrace, that the Germans should be contending with the Parisians in their superficial opera style, their fancies, studies and rondos,—forgetting those sublime forms of art, springing from the depths of the German mind—the oratorio, the symphony, sonata, quartet? In this Mendelssohn was essentially a national composer; he made it the aim of his life to reinstate these noble forms in all their ancient honour. And so it happened, that he easily fell into frosty elegance, when he at times composed "saloon music." But when he composed a German song, a sonata, or a church piece, his heart warmed to his work. Let this be a lesson and a warning to others!

Mendelssohn did his best to give to his large works the greatest possible finish,—but he was, notwithstanding, most finished in his smaller works—in his songs; and this is not his least fame. The German song, from the artless national melody up to the verses of Heine, coquetting with the national style, and over-civilised at heart, has been as genially, as nobly sung by Mendelssohn as by Mozart and Schubert. The grey-haired Goethe once laid his hand on the boy Mendelssohn, in whom he took delight. And the serious old master, Cherubini, gave the youth, in weighty words, his recommendation to an artistic career; it must have been the Song Composer Mendelssohn, upon whom Goethe's hand rested, and of whom Cherubini pronounced prophetic words of praise. But we take it as a promising sign of the times, that the most national tone-poet of the present has only been completely, freely, genially creative in the—little song.

HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS.—A musical entertainment of a novel kind, entitled, Light and Shade, or Photographing and Spirit-Rapping, was produced at the above rooms on Saturday evening, under the direction of Mr. W. Willott, for the purpose of exhibiting the vocal and histrionic talents of Mad. Lancia and Mr. Augustus Braham in a diversity of styles. The entertainment has been written by Mr. F. C. Burnand, and the music composed and arranged by Mr. J. T. Haines. This little affair is not without a certain degree of merit, and no doubt will meet with success in the provinces, for which it is especially intended. We cannot, however, help thinking that the admirable and varied talents of Mad. Lancia might be turned to far more profitable account. Burlesque vocalisation can hardly tend to improve an artist whose forte lies in earnest and impassioned singing, and who, whatever her capabilities may be, must find her progress interfered with by such trivial exercitations. Mad. Lancia, who is very young, should rather turn her attention to perfecting her style and method, and making herself, what she should be, one of the leading dramatic singers in England. Even on Saturday, although introduced in the most worthless characters, and having to sing music of the most commonplace kind, she could not conceal that native grace and ease, and that impulsiveness, which distinguish her from all artists on the English stage. Mad. Lancia's best efforts—because more in her immediate line—were the cavatina "Ah forsé è lui," from La Traviata, and the grand scena of Abigail from Attila, both of which she gave with great force and animation. Mr. Augustus Braham exhibited capital mimetic powers, and gave his songs with remarkable vigour and energy, all but "Oft in the stilly night," which he sang throughout sotto voce, and which perhaps was his best achievement. The entertainment was repeated last night, but we doubt if it will be given again in London. The company on both occasions was more select than numerous.

M. CHARLES TAMBURINI, son of the celebrated singer, who served as a volunteer in the late campaigns in Lombardy and Sicily, has been appointed a captain in the Piedmontese army. The promotion is the more merited, that he abandoned a good position in Paris to serve the Italian cause.—Morning Chronicle.

"ALL AMONG THE BARLEY," arranged for Pianoforte Solo as a Galop, by ELIZABETH STIRLING, price 2s.
Also by the same composer, the above melody, arranged as a Waltz, price 3s. Both compositions may be had of Hammond, 214 Regent Street; Williams, 123 Cheapside; and Novello, 69 Dean Street, Soho.

ORCHESTRION.—(The grandest self-acting musical instrument ever made.)—Performance from 10 A.M. until 4 P.M., at No. 3 Hanover Square. Cards of admission to be had by letter, or on presentation of card at Messrs. Imhof and Mukle's, 547 Oxford Street. Manufacturers and importers of all kinds of self-acting and barrel musical instruments, pianofortes, Nicoll Freres musical boxes, and a new kind of organ for churches and schools.

WALLWORTH'S ART OF SINGING. Second Edition, just out, full music size, price 7s. A new and modern method for cultivating the Voice, and for gaining a perfect vocalisation—a practical work—Contains 35 pages of music. With a true method for acquiring the Shake, now for the first time introduced in a Singing Tutor. By T. A. WALLWORTH, Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.
Published by A. W. Hammond (late Jullien), 214, Regent Street; and may also be had of the Author at his residence, 81, Park Street, Grosvenor Square, W., where pupils are also received.

LETTS' APPOINTMENT DIARY, price 2s. 6d. in roan tuck pocket-book. An hourly arrangement of each day, to enable Professors and Teachers of Music to regulate their engagements exactly. This book originated with one of the greatest Vocalists of the day.
Sold by all Booksellers. Descriptive catalogue, gratis.
Letts, Son & Co., Publishers 8, Royal Exchange.

Digitized by Google

Evans' Cottage Harmonium at Six Guineas,

In a French Polished Pine Case, has the full compass, Five Octaves, and a soft, subdued agreeable quality of tone—designed expressly for a cottage or small sitting room.

Evans' Harmonium at Ten Guineas,

Is in a handsome French Polished Oak Case, and possesses that rich organ-like quality of tone so peculiar to all Evans' Instruments.

Evans' English Harmoniums.

An Illustrated Catalogue of the whole of these well-known Instruments, with one and two Rows of Keys, the Percussion Action and Pedals, at prices ranging from Six Guineas to 140 Guineas—may now be had upon application to the Manufacturers, BOOSEY AND CHING, Holles Street, London.

Case's Patent English Concertina,

As used by Signor Regondi and other eminent Professors, still maintain their pre-eminent position as Concert and Drawing-room Instruments. The Four Guinea Concertina has the Full Compass and Double-Action. The Patent Concert Concertina, in Amboyna or Bird's-Eye Maple, possesses every Modern Improvement that can possibly be introduced into the Concertina. A large stock of Second Hand Concertinas for Sale or Hire.

BOOSEY AND CHING, Manufacturers, 24 Holles Street, London.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.
London: 18 Hanover Square.

PIANOFORTE DUETS.

	s.	d.
BILLET (ALEXANDRE).
"Lucia de Lammermoor"	4	0
"Les Huguenots"	4	0
"La Traviata"	4	0
BRISSAC (JULES).
"Rigoletto" (transcription of the Quartet)	4	0
BRUNNER (C. T.)
"Martha"	3	6
CUNIO (ANGELO).
"La Sonnambula"	5	0
LEFEBURE (WELY).
"Hommage à Sa Majeste Napoleon III." (caprice militaire)	6	0
"Le retour de l'armee" (Marche triomphale)	6	0
LOUIS (N.)
"Fleurs Venitiennes." Trois mélodies Italiennes varieés. No. 1 in G. 2 in C. 3 in B flat (each)	4	0
MAYER (CHARLES).
"The Royal Saxe-Coburg March"	4	0
ROUBIER (HENRI).
"Le depart du Zouave." (Grand Quadrille militaire)	4	0
RUMMEL (J.)
"La Favorita"	4	0
"I Lombardi"	4	0
SCHLOESSER (ADOLPHE).
"Don Juan" (Grand Duo)	6	0
"Terpsichore" (Duo de Salon)	6	0
WAGNER (R.)
March from Tannhauser, arranged by Theodore Mauss	5	0

The above duets are of a pleasing and popular character, and are adapted for moderately advanced performers.

London: Ashdown and Parry, 18, Hanover Square.

MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON. Season 1861.—CONVERSAZIONE.—The Fellows, Associates, Lady Associates, and Nominated Annual Subscribers of this Society are hereby informed, that the FIRST CONVERSAZIONE of the present year will be held at St. James's Hall, on Wednesday Evening, January 23rd. Admittance in Regent Street, from half-past Eight o'Clock. N.B.—Tickets are not transferable to Conversazione. The Annual Subscription of Members and Subscribers is due on the 1st of January. Tickets delivered and Subscriptions received by Messrs. Cramer and Co., 201 Regent Street.

CHARLES SALAMAN, Hon. Sec.,
36 Baker Street, W.

St. James's Hall, 28 Piccadilly.

BUCKLEYS' SERENADERS.—CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.—St. James's Hall, Piccadilly.—Crowded houses every performance. Every evening at 8, and Two Day Performances on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons at 3. Tickets may be secured at Austin's Ticket Office, 28 Piccadilly, from 10 till 5. Stalls, 3s.; area, 2s.; gallery, 1s. No bonnets are allowed in the Stalls. Books of the Words, 6d. each. Change of Programme, including Operatic Selections from Lucrezia Borgia, Trovatore and La Sonnambula.

"The most unique and varied entertainment in London."

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening, C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

PECKHAM AMATEUR MUSICAL UNION.—The Subscribers are hereby informed, that at the Fifth Concert, Saturday, January 5th, the following artists will assist:—Miss ROSE HERSEE, Mr. FIELDING, Mr. MONTEM SMITH, Mr. SHOUBRIDGE, Mr. WINN.—Solo (Flute) Mr. H. J. WOOD. Grand Duo (Pianoforte) the Misses CLINTON, (their first appearance in public).—Conductor, Mr. F. OSBORNE WILLIAMS. To commence at Seven. Carriages at Half-past Nine. Candidates duly nominated will be ballotted for every week in January.

HENRY HERSEE, Jun., Brunswick Terrace, Camberwell, President.
HORACE QUARE, Grove Terrace, Camberwell, } Hon. Secs.
WALTER CHESSEMAN, Queen's Road, Peckham, }

THE ORATORY, BROMPTON, LONDON, S.W.—CHOIR OF THE ORATORY.—Parents or Guardians who wish to present Boys as Candidates for admission to the Choir of the Oratory, must apply by letter only, to the Rev. Fr. Glosg, at the above address. The Boys are placed under the care of one of the Fathers of the Oratory, and receive a good English Education, besides Instruction in Music. Their Education, Board, Lodging, and Clothing, are entirely free. They are brought up strictly in the Catholic Faith. Candidates will be chosen solely according to Musical capabilities, united with good character; so that unless a Boy's Qualifications satisfy a somewhat high standard, he will not be likely to succeed.

GLEES, MADRIGALS, and OLD BALLADS, Egyptian Hall.—Mr. MITCHELL begs respectfully to announce that the popular and eminently successful performances of Glees, Madrigals, and Old Ballads by the LONDON GLEE and MADRIGAL UNION, Miss J. Wells and Miss Eyles, Mr. Baxter, Mr. Cumming, Mr. Lawler, and Mr. Land (Conductor) interspersed with Literary Illustrations by T. Oliphant, Esq., will be resumed for One Month Only, commencing on Monday next, January 7.—Royal Library, 33 Old Broad Street, W.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, January 5, 1861.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 39—No. 2 SATURDAY, JANUARY 12, 1861 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped.

NEW PUBLICATIONS
OF
DUNCAN, DAVISON & Co.,
244 REGENT STREET. (JUST OUT.)

"SCHOTTISH D'AMOUR," by EUGENE MONIOT. Composer of "A Summer's Day," for the piano, price 2s. (Orchestral parts, 3s.)

"SANTA LUCIA," by EUGENE MONIOT, Neapolitan melody, arranged (without octaves), for young pianists, by Eugène Moniot, price 1s.

R. F. HARVEY'S NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
"Cupid's Repose" (Melody)	3	0
"Pensez à moi" (Rêvérie)	3	0

"THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER," as a Piano Duet, arranged with variations by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew.

NEW SONG—"That Handsome Volunteer," sung by Miss Emma Stanley in her popular entertainment of the "Seven Ages of Woman," composed especially for her by Emile Berger, price 2s. 6d. (Sung also by Miss Catharine Lucette, in her original entertainment, Captain Morton Price) at the Prince of Wales's Hall, Regent Street.)

BALFE'S NEWEST and most POPULAR SONGS.

	s.	d.
"I love you" (Sung by Sims Reeves)	3	0
"Pretty as a Rose" (Ditto)	3	0
"If I could change as others change" (Sung by Laura Baxter)	2	6
"I'm not in love, remember" (Sung by Miss Parepa)	2	6
"Oh! take me to thy heart again" (Sung by Miss Poole)	2	0

"GOOD NIGHT," (Cradle Song—Wiegenlied) composed by ALEXANDER REICHARDT, price 2s. 6d.

A SONG FOR THE SEASON.—"THE CHRISTMAS ROSE." (Poetry by M. A. STODART.) Composed by LOVELL PHILLIPS. Price 2s. 6d.

NEW HARP MUSIC by C. OBERTHUR, "Thou art so near and yet so far." Reichardt's popular song transcribed for the Harp by C. Oberthür.

MR. WEISS'S NEW SONG—"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL." (Poetry by J. P. DOUGLAS.) Composed and sung by Mr. W. H. Weiss.

NEW BALLAD.—"IN A LEAFY GARDEN," by GEORGE LODER. Sung with great success by Mr. RICHARD SEYMOUR, is just published, price 2s. 6d.

"M. Y."—New Duettino for equal Voices, by HENRY SMART.

NEW ORGAN MUSIC by HENRY SMART.—"Fugue in E minor," from Handel's "Lessons." Arranged for the Organ by HENRY SMART.

"THIS WORLD IS A GARDEN."—Song by GEORGE LODER. Words by J. STERLING COYNE. Sung every evening by Mr. ROUSE, and enthusiastically encored, at the Lyceum Theatre, in the successful Operetta of "THE PIED OF THE FANTINES."

NEW WALTZ, "The Woman in White," Valse mystérieuse, by Charles Marriott, dedicated to Wilkie Collins, Esq.

MEYERBEER'S ROYAL WEDDING MARCH (Quatrième Marche aux Flambeaux), composed in honour of the Marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, which was played with such immense effect by the Band of the Guides at the Fête of the Orphéonistes at the Crystal Palace, is published for the Pianoforte, price 3s.,

"FRESH AS A ROSE," sung by SIMS REEVES, and enthusiastically encored at Mr HOWARD GLOVER'S Concert, St. James's Hall, was composed expressly for the occasion by BALFE, and is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

ST. JAMES'S HALL,
(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)
MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE CONCERTS WILL BE RESUMED
ON MONDAY EVENING, JANUARY 14, 1861,

On which occasion the celebrated Violinist,
M. VIEUXTEMPS
(Who has been expressly engaged for these Concerts),
Will make his First Appearance in London, after an absence of Eight Years.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Quartet, in D minor, for Two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello—first time at the Monday Popular Concerts—(Schubert), M. VIEUXTEMPS, Herr RIES, M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI. Song, "The Maiden and the River" (Benedict), Miss LASCELLES. Song, "The very Angels weep" (Mozart) Miss AUGUSTA THOMSON. Prelude and Fugue, à la Tarantella (Bach), Miss ARABELLA GODDARD.

PART II.—Sonata, in C minor, for Violin and Pianoforte (Beethoven), M. VIEUXTEMPS and Miss ARABELLA GODDARD. Song, "Come back to me" (Henry Smart), Miss LASCELLES. Canzonet, "Zuleika" (Mendelssohn), Miss AUGUSTA THOMSON. Quartet, in E major, No. 559, for two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello—first time at the Monday Popular Concerts—(Haydn), M. VIEUXTEMPS, Herr RIES, M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI.

M. VIEUXTEMPS will make his SECOND APPEARANCE on Monday, Jan. 21.

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT. To commence at Eight o'Clock precisely.
Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s.

Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28 Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co., Hammond, Addison and Co., Schott and Co., Ewer and Co., Simpson, and Oetzmann and Co., Regent Street; Bradberry's, London Crystal Palace, Oxford Street; Duff and Co., 65 Oxford Street; Prowse, Hanway Street; Chidley, 195 High Holborn; Purday, 50 St. Paul's Church Yard; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48 Cheapside, Turner, 19 Cornhill; Cook and Co., 6 Finsbury Place, South; Humfress, 4 Old Church Street, Paddington Green; Fabian, Circus Road, St. John's Wood; Ransford and Son, 2 Princes Street, Cavendish Square; Ivory, 275 Euston Road; Mitchell, Leader and Co., Ollivier, Campbell, Hopwood and Crewe, and Willis, Bond Street; And CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond Street.

BUCKLEYS' SERENADERS.—CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.—St. James's Hall, Piccadilly.—Crowded houses every performance. Every evening at 8, and Two Day Performances on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons at 3. Tickets may be secured at Austin's Ticket Office, 28 Piccadilly, from 10 till 5. Stalls, 3s.; area, 2s.; gallery, 1s. No bonnets are allowed in the Stalls. Books of the Words, 6d. each. Change of Programme, including Operatic Selections from Lucrezia Borgia, Trovatore and La Sonnambula.
"The most unique and varied entertainment in London."

MISS HELEN HOGARTH (Teacher of Singing) begs to inform her pupils and the public that she has RETURNED to town for the season, and has removed from Weymouth Street to No. 71 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square.

SIGNOR and MADAME FERRARI beg to inform their pupils and friends they have REMOVED to 32 Gloucester Terrace, Hyde Park, W.

MR. and MRS. LOCKEY beg to inform their Friends, Pupils, and the Public, they have removed to Prospect Villas, Forest Hill, S.E.

MR. and MADAME R. SIDNEY PRATTEN beg to announce, that they have removed to 38 Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, W., where they will continue to give lessons on the Flute, Guitar, and Concertina.

MISS AUGUSTA THOMSON begs to announce that she has REMOVED to 38 Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, W.

HERR MAURICE NABICH begs to inform his friends and pupils that he has returned to town for the season.
Communications to be addressed to 3 Grove Terrace, Grove Road, Forest Hill.

MUSICAL WORLD NEWSPAPER

Digitized by Google

BOOSEY & SONS' LIST OF POPULAR PIANOFORTE and DANCE MUSIC, by the most celebrated Composers.

N.B.—The Dance Music is all illustrated in Colours by BRANDARD and PACKER.

BRINLEY RICHARDS.

'Twas He my only Thought, from Bianca.
Gold Rules the World, from Bianca.
What Sunshine Bright, from Bianca.
The Marriage of Georgette.
The Skipper and his Boy.
Come into the Garden Maud.
Santa Maria, from Dinorah.
The Shadow Air, from Dinorah.
The Power of Love, from Satanella.
Thou art so Near, (Reichardt).

KUHE.

Bianca, Fantaisie Brillante.
Bianca, Galop de Bravura.
Dinorah, Fantaisie de Concert.
Dinorah, Fantaisie Brillante.
Satanella, Valse de Concert.
Satanella, Fantaisie Brillante.
Zampa, Fantaisie Brillante.
Domino Noir, Fantaisie Brillante.
Robert le Diable, Fantaisie Brillante.
Rigoletto, Fantaisie Brillante.
Schubert's Ave Maria.
Schubert's Serenade.

ASCHER.

Toujours Gai, Galop Brillant.
Les Cloches du Village.
Thou art so Near (Reichardt).
Dinorah, Illustration.
Les Vepres Siciliennes, ditto.
Un Ballo in Maschera, (Nocturne).

T. MAUSS.

Merrily over the Snow (Schloesser).
De Corsaire Galop Brillant.
Mourmahal, (Nocturne).

EMILE BERGER.

Notre Dame Romance, Illustrated.
Campanella Mazurka.
Fantaisie on Balfe's Bianca.
Selection from Bianca, Illustrated.
Selection from Satanella, ditto.
Selection from Dinorah, ditto.
Selection from Martha, ditto.

MADAME OURY.

Bianca Fantaisie Brillante.
Santa Lucia.
Auld Robin Gray.
Souvenirs d'Ecosse.
Fantaisie on Jacobite Airs.

BENEDICT.

Albion, Fantaisie on English Airs.
Erin, Fantaisie on Irish Airs.
Caledonia, Fantaisie on Scotch Airs.

TALEXY.

Satanella Polka Mazurka.
Dinorah Polka Mazurka.
Eva Polka Mazurka.

NORDMANN.

Evening with Meyerbeer.
Evening with Balfe.
Evening with Christy's Minstrels.

LAURENT.

Bianca Waltz, Illustrated.
Bianca Quadrille, ditto.
Bianca Polka, ditto.
Bianca Galop, ditto.
Spring Buds Waltz, ditto.
Margaretta Waltz, ditto.
Daisy Waltz, ditto.
Christmas Waits Quadrille, ditto.
Lord Lovel's Waltz, ditto.
Beloved Star Waltz, on Thou art so near.

BURCKHARDT.

New Year's Quadrille, Illustrated.
Ramsgate Sands Quadrille, ditto.
Serpentine Quadrille, ditto.
Bal Masque Quadrille, ditto.
Knickerbocker's Polka, ditto.
Dream of the Rose Waltz.

MARRIOTT.

Colleen Bawn Waltz, Illustrated.
Woman in White Waltz, ditto.
Don Pasquale Waltz.
Waterfall Galop.

DR. MARK and his LITTLE MEN are now in London for One Week only. First Concert, To-night, at the Great ST. JAMES'S HALL. Doors open at half-past 7. The Second Concert on Monday afternoon at half-past 2. Third concert on Tuesday Evening, January 15th, and every evening during the week. Day performances on Thursday and Saturday Afternoons.

Tickets, 3s., 2s., and 1s., which may be obtained at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library 33, Old Bond Street, W.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening, C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

TO MUSICAL DIRECTORS. — An experienced VIOLINIST of great eminence having returned to town lately, is open to an engagement either as Solo or Orchestral performer. Testimonials, if required, from the élite of the profession. Address, A. S., 6, Marlbey Place, South Lambeth.

WANTED, Good TENORS, BARITONES, and BASS SINGERS. Six or Twelve Months certain. All letters post-paid. Apply to Mr. Edward Weston, Music Hall, Holborn.

THE LONDON GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION gave the inaugurative concert of a new series, on Monday evening, at the Dudley Gallery, Egyptian Hall. The various works of our best English part-song writers of the olden as well as modern times were sung with most praiseworthy precision and expression by those practised performers, Miss Eyles, Miss Wells, Mr. Baxter, Mr. W. Cumming, Mr. Lawler, assisted and directed by the zealous and indefatigable Mr. Land, to whose enterprising spirit and musicianly ability it is not too much to say that the London Glee and Madrigal Union is largely indebted for its present position as a national artistic institution. Five encores in one short concert ought certainly to prove the popularity of this species of entertainment, and on the present occasion demands for repetition which would take no denial were elicited by Hook's fresh and genial Vauxhall song, "I never loved any, dear Mary, but you," sung by Mr. W. Cumming; Sir Henry Bishop's quintet, "Blow gentle gales," executed by all the members of the union; Miss Eyle's capital version of "Oh, mother, a hoop, a hoop," the words of which, though more than a century and a half old, are perfectly applicable to the present age of crinoline, and which we beg leave to quote in full for the delectation of our lady readers:—

"What a fine thing have I seen to-day,
Oh! mother, a hoop!
I must have one, and you cannot say 'Nay,'
Oh! mother, a hoop!
For hoops do men's eyes and men's hearts so allure,
That I shan't get a husband without one, I'm sure,
Do give me a hoop!

"Men, just like the women, now puff themselves out,
So give me a hoop!
Buckram and wadding they stuff all about,
Do give me a hoop!
For why should the old men young women abuse
For applying the like things, and to the same use?
Do give me a hoop!

"One thing I'm told, which I beg you will note,
And give me a hoop!
Nine men and women upset in a boat,
Oh! oh! for a hoop!
The men were all drown'd, but the women did float,
And by help of their hoops they were safely pull'd out,
Oh, give me a hoop! oh, mother, a hoop!"

Encores were also awarded to the "Maypole song with a burden" (1670), sung by Miss Eyles and Mr. Lawler; and "A humorous ditty, for three voices, from Weelke's "Ayres, or Phantastic Spirits" (1608), given with great point and effect by Messrs. Baxter, Cumming, and Lawler. The hall was densely crowded, and the entire concert seemed to give perfect satisfaction to the audience, which for the most part was of a fashionable description. In Bishop's glee the pianissimos were attained with wonderful effect, and the light and shade most admirably given. The difficult counterpoint in Weelke's "Harmonious ditty" delighted and astonished the audience.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"Beethoven's Sonatas for the Pianoforte, complete, in two volumes"—edited by W. Dorrell, with a Sketch of the Life, by G. A. MACFARREN. (Boosey and Sons.)

A GUINEA Beethoven! What next? Quid tum postea?—as Tully inquired of Brutus. Here we have, in two neat and elegantly prepared volumes, the whole of the thirty sonatas for pianoforte alone—that glorious company of tone-poems—from the terse and vigorous F minor, the first of the three (Op. 2) dedicated to Haydn, and the first that Beethoven submitted to publicity, to the very last that fell from his pen (Op. 111), the gorgeous and unfathomable C minor (not unfathomable, let it be understood, because of its unintelligibility, but because of its infinitely deep poetic meaning), inscribed to that fortunate Archduke Rodolphe, to whom was also dedicated the magnificent trio in B flat (Op. 97), for piano, violin, and violoncello. Talk of Christmas-boxes and New-Year's gifts! What more grateful "in memoriam" could be offered to any one possessed of a love and taste for the "divine art," on either of these auspicious occasions?

Mr. Macfarren's able and interesting biography—instinct with a sympathetic appreciation of his subject, enriched by criticism which, while brief and epigrammatic, is everywhere keen and searching, and written with no less eloquence than judgment—greatly, of course, enhances the value of this edition of the pianoforte sonatas. With Mr. Macfarren's estimate of Beethoven we almost wholly concur; and the more weight deserves to be attached to it, inasmuch as, approaching his subject with befitting reverence, he shows himself, nevertheless, no unscrupulous hero-worshipper (like Herr Lens?), no manufacturer of fine phrases, quand même (like Herr Lens?). His views of Beethoven the man, and of Beethoven the artist, are lucid, philosophical, and just in an equal measure.

Mr. W. Dorrell, one of the most esteemed living professors of the pianoforte, has performed his task of editorship conscientiously and thoroughly. He has no doubt compared the various existing editions of the sonatas, in order to ensure a well-authorised selection from the conflicting readings occasionally found; and in chiefly adhering to the Brunswick edition he has, we think, done wisely. The carefulness with which the proof sheets have been revised is evident in the invariable correctness of the text. In this important particular, indeed, thanks to Mr. Dorrell, the guinea Beethoven is as valuable as it is attractive, and eminently serviceable in all that appertains to the publishers' share of the undertaking. The Messrs. Boosey are entitled to the thanks of every amateur pianist of moderate means. The thirty-two sonatas of Beethoven would, not long since, have cost the purchaser at least ten guineas; and now they are presented in a handsome, portable, and unprecedentedly convenient form for one pound one. This edition, then, may justly be hailed as a Beethoven for the Ten Thousand; and perhaps we shall not be arraigned for extravagance or enthusiasm if we venture so far as to predict that, should every succeeding year bring with it an advance in general musical culture among the populations of these islands proportionate to the advance which the last quarter of a century has witnessed, it may eventually aspire to the still more ambitious, comprehensive, and significant title of a BEETHOVEN FOR THE MILLION.

For the information of amateurs it may be added that Mr. W. Dorrell's edition of the Beethoven sonatas is also being issued in monthly parts at one shilling (!), and that the number for January, containing the first and second of the sonatas from Op. 2—(in F minor and A major)—dedicated to Haydn,—are now before us. "Quid tum postea?" Cicero might reasonably have asked the question twice of Brutus, had Brutus given him a similar opportunity for inquisitiveness.

"Name the glad Day"—words by JOHN OXENFORD, music by DUSSEK. "Gentle hope from Heaven descending"—words by JOHN OXENFORD, music by DUSSEK. "Now Summer has departed"—words by JOHN OXENFORD, music by DUSSEK. "Thy pardon, dearest treasure"—words by JOHN OXENFORD, music by DUSSEK. (Chappell and Co.)

THE above are republications, with new poetry from the accomplished pen of Mr. John Oxenford (a manifest improvement on the original), of four out of Dussek's till lately forgotten, though so well worthy to be remembered, canzonets. They have all been heard, at least once, at the Monday Popular Concerts—where Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington's singing of "Name the glad day" has several times, and Mr. Sims Reeves', of "Gentle hope," on one memorable occasion, have been received with rapture by the audience. "Now summer has departed" is equal in most respects to either of its companion songs; while "Thy pardon, dearest treasure," a short duet, in spontaneous grace and beauty rivals Mozart himself, when Mozart deigned to be most simple, unaffected, and familiar. The canzonets are appropriately included in the Monday Popular Concerts Library (vocal department), edited by Mr. Arthur S. Chappell, a series of welcome revivals, the idea of which originated in the brilliantly successful quartet-concerts at St. James's Hall, at which so many masterpieces, instrumental and vocal, have been rescued from oblivion. We may add here that a very elegant and tasteful adaptation of the canzonet, "Name the glad day," for pianoforte alone, from the graceful and practised hand of Mr. Brinley Richards (Chappell and Co.), is now before us, and that we can recommend it unreservedly, as an attractive and charming "pièce de salon."

"Wallace's 'Bell-Ringer'"—inscribed for the pianoforte by BRINLEY RICHARDS. (Chappell and Co.)

WHAT has been said of the adaptation of Dussek's canzonet ("Name the glad day") applies with equal justice to this no less skilful adaptation of Mr. Wallace's new and very popular song of the "Bell-ringer," which, through the singing of Mr. Santley at the Monday Popular Concerts, and of Mr. Weiss in the provinces, added to the influence of its own intrinsic beauty, has attained so wide a measure of popularity.

"Late, too Late,"—music by A. MACFARREN. (Joseph Williams.)

AN admirable setting of Guinevre's beautiful song in The Idylls of the King. Only one of our best composers could write fitting music to Tennyson's poetry, and in this instance Mr. Macfarren has certainly done so. A lover of coincidences or resemblances, in the Illustrated Times, has remarked, that "The four words, 'too late, too late,' have suggested to Mr. Macfarren four sustained notes, with arpeggio accompaniments, and with the harmony varied on each, like the four words, 'true love, true love,' in Marian's charming air in Robin Hood. But religious music has often been adapted to the words of a love-song, and the music of a love-song has often been adapted to religious words," &c.

There is, however, no such thing as definite expression in music. Every one knows the difference between a lively strain and a sad one; but when we come to the expression of emotions which have some sort of analogy (however distant) between them, it becomes very difficult indeed, to mark any distinction between them at all by musical means. To understand at once how the same melody may be intimately associated—as in the mind of one and the same person—with three different shades of feeling, it is only necessary, as our contemporary observes, "to remember a certain Irish air, which with comic words is comic as 'The Groves of Blarney,' which with pathetic words is pathetic as 'The Last Rose of Summer,' and which with words which are neither comic nor pathetic, is neither comic nor pathetic (but pleasing and touching) as 'The Bay of Dublin.' Much more might be said on the subject, for which The Illustrated Times may find time and space on some future occasion.

Digitized by Google

"The Nymphs of the Wood," romance; "The Joys of Spring," impromptu; for pianoforte, composed by PAUL SEMLER. (Chappell and Co.).

If not wholly inoffensive, (instance bar 1, line 1, page 2, of "The Joys of Spring"), these short and easy pieces are by no means violently repulsive. We have seen shorter pieces and better; but we have also seen longer pieces and worse; we have also seen shorter pieces and better. We have seen—— but never mind what we have seen (it must come out), longer, shorter, better and worse pieces, by M. Rénè Favarger, &c. &c. &c.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

THE chief event of the past week, which has given a sunset lustre to the departing year, is the long expected production of M. Offenbach's comic opera of Barkouf, the libretto of which is by MM. Scribe and Boisseaux. All sorts of vexatious incidents had delayed its appearance for weeks; but now it has come it promises to supply food for mirth till the carnival bids all good Catholics shake hands with jollity and good living, and prepare for fasting and repentance. The fun of Barkouf is of the broadest and most extravagant description, and he who would enjoy it must do as the authors have done, doff all reason and sobriety, and put on the cap and belts. Here is a sketch of the plot, if so grave a term can be applied to such pure absurdity.

It has pleased the Great Mogul to appoint over the city of Lahore a Kaïmakan on four legs as a punishment on the entire population of the city for having given birth to an armed insurrection. The dog Barkouf, which is the name to which the new Kaïmakan answers, being fairly installed in his imperial kennel, shows himself a perfectly unapproachable potentate, threatening all who come near him, even the Grand Vizir Balbalek himself, with a row of terrible fangs. There is only one person towards whom the new governor exhibits any amenity; and that is the young flower-girl, Maïma, to whom Barkouf had once belonged; he had been the friend of her youth. The Grand Vizir, who has got a variety of decrees and documents requiring the signature of the governor, deems it expedient to avail himself of the influence possessed over him by Maïma, and accordingly appoints her secretary and interpreter to the Kaïmakan. Hereupon the chief officer of justice presents himself, and demands a warrant authorising him to hang Xailoun, one of the leaders of the recent insurrection; but Xailoun is beloved of the fair orange vendor, Balkis, and Balkis is on terms of friendship with Maïma. Barkouf being consulted under these circumstances as to the propriety of hanging the criminal in question, delivers himself in three barks, which, being interpreted, signify that the offender is pardoned. The next appeal to the governor is in the matter of a projected marriage between the daughter of the Grand Vizir and a young officer called Saëb. The minister desires the signature of the Kaïmakan to the contract, but is summarily refused, or rather bow-wow'd off, Saëb being no less than Barkouf, a friend of Maïma's childhood, and the young girl having secretly destined him to be her own bridegroom. The Grand Vizir is transported with rage, and, calling round him other discontented officials, gets up a conspiracy against Barkouf. The chief features of the plot are to hand over the gates of the city to the Tartars, and to poison Barkouf in a cup of whatever his favourite drink might be. But Maïma scents out the treason, and when the chief cup-bearer brings in the drink destined for his master, the young girl, in the name of the Kaïmakan, invites the conspirators to drink out of the same cup. The Grand Vizir and his accomplices are seized with trembling and betray their guilt. The Tartars, however, make their appearance at the city gates, but are repulsed by Saëb and a handful of brave men, assisted by Barkouf, who is killed in the field of battle. Finally, Saëb is wedded to Maïma and Xailoun to Balkis.

Such is the subject on which M. Offenbach has made his first attempt at the legitimate Opéra-Comique. It is a question whether it would not have been wiser to have chosen less extravagant materials and situations less likely to tempt him into the extremely light buffo style on which his reputation previously stood, and beyond which prejudice would inevitably forbid him to stray. Undoubtedly much of the music of Barkouf is of the Bouffes Parisiens stamp, and if M. Offenbach has any enemies (and what successful man is without them?) he will have given justification to their verdict that he has failed in showing himself equal to the higher requirements of the stage on which Auber, Adam, and Halevy won their laurels. There are other portions of the work which seem to show, however, that if the composer had cared more to avoid giving a hold to the sort of hostile criticism he was sure to encounter, he might have done so. The public at large, however, are not likely to be so fastidious as long as they are pleased, and will not like M. Offenbach's lively and eccentric buffo style a whit the less under the roof of the Feydeau Theatre, and executed by such artists as these of the Imperial Opéra Comique. Mlle. Marimon acted and sang charmingly as Maïma, and greatly enhanced the success of the opera. Mlle. Belia, Mad. Casimir, and MM. Sante Foy, Lemaire, and Berthelier played the other chief parts.

At the Grand Opéra Guillaume Tell has been revived, and great pains have been taken to render the performance worthy of the establishment, and of the great composer who has chosen Paris as the home of his honoured old age. The presence of Mlle. Carlotta Marchisio has allowed of the restoration of the grand scena in the third act, and in the hands of this lady the part of Mathilde resumes all its original importance. Morelli made his rentrée in the part of Guillaume Tell, and was warmly and flatteringly received. The bills last Friday announced the four hundredth performance of this opera.

The papers of the day publish the terms of the new decree relative to the payment at the Imperial Opéra, which came into operation from the 1st of January, 1861. The first article fixes the entire sum to be paid for author's rights, each evening at 500 fr. (20*l.*) The second article settles how this sum is to be divided according to the number of acts acted, and whether they be opera or ballet. If an opera or a ballet occupies the entire evening, the entire 500 fr. are due to the authors. If the performance consist of an opera in five, four, or three acts, and a ballet in one, the authors of the former are to receive 375fr. (15*l.*) and the remainder, 125fr. (5*l.*) goes to remunerate the authors of the ballet. A number of other cases comprising all possible contingencies are mentioned, and the remuneration for ballet and opera is allotted in the same proportion. Composers and literary authors are comprised in the term authors, and the sum awarded is to be divided in equal shares between the two. In the case of a ballet the sum allotted is divided into thirds, one of which goes to the composer of the music, one to the author of the plot or programme, and one to the inventor and arranger of the dances.

(From another Correspondent.)

THE recent revival of Guillaume Tell has given a new impetus to the fortunes of the Académie Impériale de Musique et de Danse. The success was eminent, and the new Mathilde, Mlle. Carlotta Marchisio, was loaded with honours. "Different new elements," writes a Parisian journalist, "have conspired to give a seal of solemnity to this reprise of Guillaume Tell. The most interesting, the most attractive, beyond all contradiction, was the début of Mlle. Carlotta Marchisio in the part of Mathilde. If you have not heard the great air of the second act, 'Sombres Forêts,' sung by Carlotta Marchisio, you have never heard it at all! It is impossible to imagine anything more pure, more delicate, more sweet, more mellow, more suave, than this soprano with the timbre of gold! With an exquisite admixture of morbidezza she rendered this adorable melody, so fresh and palpitating, like a thought of love, realising in a marvellous fashion the thousand gradations of impression and of difficulties. Applause, such as they seldom bestow except at the Italiens, overwhelmed the cantatrice." The same journal expresses aloud its satisfaction at certain restorations to the score. "To the third act has been added an entire scene. Then the curtain, in place of rising upon the public Place of Altorf, as has been the custom for twenty years, discloses to view the ruins of a monastery, where Mathilde and Arnold meet to take leave. A duet of adieu—and what a duet! There is, above all, an allegro for Mathilde, 'Sur la terre étrangère'—a marvel of melody, which Carlotta sings with that taste, that method, that charm, which we cannot too much praise, and which place her so high in the opinion of amateurs."

Digitized by Google

The only novelty spoken of in connection with the Italiens is Verdi's Un Ballo in Maschera, which, now that M. Scribe and M. Calzado have come to terms, and the late injunction by the celebrated dramatist has been withdrawn, is likely, I hear, to be produced. Rumour speaks of dramatical and musical effects in the last scene equal to those in Rigoletto and the Trovatore. If the Ballo in Maschera be worthy to bear comparison with Gustave, all I have to say is, it must be a chef-d'œuvre. I read in the Petersburg papers that Meyerbeer's Pardon de Ploërmel, under the designation of Il Pelegrinaggio, has been revived at the Imperial Opera with extraordinary éclat. The opera, brought out at the end of last season, was given two or three times, and served merely to whet the appetite of the public. Mad. Fioretti, the Dinorah, does not, however, appear to have excited any extraordinary enthusiasm. Signor Calzolari is reported as every way admirable in Corentino; and what Mad. Nantier-Didiée can do with the music of the male goatherd, you or your readers need not be informed. One of the best things in the performance seems to have been Signor Everardi's singing of the couplets of the hunter I cannot greatly fancy Signor Debassini in the character of Hoel

Jules Janin, the celebrated French critic, fully appreciating the excellence of Lord Derby's translation of some of the best Odes of Horace, recently confided to a friend in England a copy of his own French version of that author, with a request that he would forward it to his Lordship. M. Jules Janin joined to the work some graceful French verses in honour of the noble translator. The gift has been acknowledged in the following letter, which does equal honour to the writer and to the French author:—

"Knowsley, Dec. 31, 1860.

"Sir,—A long and painful illness, of between three and four months, has thrown my correspondence greatly into arrear, and will, I hope, be accepted as an apology for my not having earlier acknowledged with thanks the receipt of your letter of the 20th ult., with the volume which you have been good enough to transmit me on the part of M. Jules Janin. May I beg you, when you have an opportunity, to assure that gentleman how highly I feel flattered by the compliment which has been paid me by one so highly distinguished in the literary world, in sending me a copy of his work accompanied by his autograph, which will greatly enhance its value. At the same time I am bound to confess that he has done me too much honour in classing me with himself in the list of translators of Horace. All that I have attempted in that way has been the translation of a few of the Odes, two of which have appeared in a publication of a friend of mine, and which I presume are those which M. Jules Janin has honoured with his approval.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant, DERBY."

VIENNA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

NOTHING can be more enjoyable than the present bracing weather, the brilliant sunshine, the clear frosty atmosphere and brisk north wind have an exhilarating influence upon young and old. The snow which fell heavily last week still lies thick and white upon the ground, affording capital opportunity for sleigh driving, the delight of the Viennese. Carriages and carts, omnibuses and almost every other kind of vehicle are converted into this popular means of conveyance, the bells of which, as they rattle through the streets, enliven the city by their merry music. The imperial sleigh, drawn by six gaily bedecked horses, dashes up and down the Prater; the belle of the season, wrapped in costly furs, reclines luxuriously in her sleigh-sofa, while whirled along over the noiseless snow; the millionaire orders out his swiftest "thoroughbreds," and drives his sleigh at a prodigious pace; the sturdy leech of Vienna descends from a sleigh at his patient's door. How long the amusement will last depends upon the weather, which however promises to tire out the Viennese of their new playthings.

Both the imperial theatres, the Burg and Kärntnerthor, are closed this evening, in consequence of the death of the king of Prussia.

The rehearsals of Rubinstein's opera have been resumed, Herr Ander having undertaken the part originally confided to Herr Wachtel. The latter has received his forfeit money and been dismissed. He is now singing with extraordinary success in Pesth. It appears there is an understanding between the different German theatrical managers, by which a singer who has broken an engagement with one is prevented singing elsewhere. Wachtel being still in litigation with the director of the Hesse Cassel Theatre, will therefore be unable to appear in Germany until the dispute is settled.

The representations at the Kärntnerthor Theatre (which, by the way, is still to let) during the past year have consisted of 221 operatic performances, and 77 ballets; 298 in all.

The operas have been given as follows:—Der Postillon von Lonjumeau (with Wachtel) 16 times; Trovatore, 14; Tännhauser, 12; Jüdin, Wildschütz, Robert, and the Huguenots, 10 each; Prophète, 9; Fliegender Holländer, Lohengrin, Leonore (Favorita), 8 each; Hernani, Jessonda, Euryanthe, and Iphigenia, 1 each.

The ballets Kumisjeger, 20 times; Carnevals-Abenteuer 15; Satanella, 11; Nymphe, 10; Ubelgehutete Mädchen, 9; Robert and Bertram, 8; Insel der Liebe and Vernandette Weiber, 2; Giselle 1.

The operatic répertoire looks well, and it is much to be regretted that many of the operas are now no longer practicable, in consequence of the dismissal of Herr Wachtel.—The daily papers mention the fact of Ullmann's bankruptcy in New York, and express a hope that Mad. Csillag (who is under engagement to the bankrupt) will therefore not go to America in the autumn, but return to Vienna. It remains to be seen whether Ullman's bankruptcy is not, as is often the case with the transatlantic impresarii, merely a ruse to get over a bad season, clear himself of his debts, and so begin unfettered a new career of puff and speculation.

The charming Jetty Treffz has decided upon making a farewell visit to England this summer, when the public will have an opportunity of hearing her once more, and for the last time, sing those popular songs and ballads with which her name is so completely identified.—Strauss's concert in the Volks Garten on New Year's Day was the scene of an uproar which narrowly escaped a serious termination. After the Austrian Hymn had been performed as usual by the band, a call was made for the German as well as for the Hungarian national air, both of which have been forbidden in Austria for the last twelve years. Strauss declined to comply with the demand, and the public threatened violence. It appears the clamour reached the ears of the authorities, for an order was sent from head-quarters that the required melodies should be played. The performance excited the enthusiasm of the previously enraged audience to the most extraordinary pitch, giving a fair indication of the newest state of public feeling in this country.

ANTRAETER.

M. DEPRET.—(Communicated).—The musical world has just suffered a great loss in the person of M. E. Depret, who, by his distinguished talent as an artist, has won as great and well merited reputation in England as in Belgium. His recent marriage with a member of one of the most distinguished English families will entirely remove M. Depret from a career which he has followed hitherto with so much success.—La Presse de Londres, 22nd Dec.

Digitized by Google

DICKENS AND THACKERAY.

A COMPARISON.

THACKERAY'S canvas is crowded; the figures round, lifelike, and natural. Dickens's page is moderately peopled; the figures are original, and intensely vivid in some cases; in others pale, shadowy, and more like embodiments of a few sentiments than replete human beings. Thackeray's action is steady and elaborate, somewhat diffuse, though still lifelike; the action of Dickens is slightly more dramatic, and with a swifter current of narrative interest. The humour of Thackeray is quiet, broad, and skilful; that of Dickens is deep and keen. Thackeray's is natural; that of Dickens is exceptional. In Thackeray's humour there is a mingling of indefinite irony—irony, however, pointless, and apparently purposeless, as it is not launched boldly at any important stronghold of abuse, or any positive representative of a corrupt institution; but, like the Delphian oracle, it is obscure in its tendency. It arrogates to its author credit as a social reformer in general, but does not expose him to take issue with the adversary. The irony of Dickens is as clear as an arrow in its tendency, and reveals its author as belonging to a distinct school of opinion.

Mr. Thackeray, however, is distinct in his satire, clear in his irony, bold and open in his invective in reference to the past, if not to the present. He is as merciless to defunct statesmen, noblemen, and kings as to existing plebeians, lackeys, and snobs. His powers of depicting weakness, folly, vice, and abuse, perchance, have in the past a clearer field of action than it is usual for these instruments to meet with when applied to the present. Contemporaneous events, characters, and institutions never lack crowds of defenders to screen them from adverse shafts; and irony, like lightning, shows to greater advantage in a clear sky and remote horizon.

Thackeray's pathos is deep and generous, genuine and unaffected, warm and vibrating to the heart. The pathos of Dickens is poignant and exceptional, high in its spirituality, but faint in its vibrations to the pulse of human life. In the comments of these two authors, as in their irony, Thackeray's remarks are obscure in their general tendency; whilst those of Dickens are bold, clear, and pointing in a definite direction. In style Thackeray is easy and profuse of illustration and quotation, talkative and amusing to frivolity, and in frivolity didactic. Dickens is free from quotation, and peculiarly happy in illustration. In description Thackeray is shrewd and effective; Dickens graphic and poetical.

The burthen of Thackeray's morality is not surely "vanitas vanitatum," as he himself appears frequently to give out, else what is the moral of those genial pictures of health, virtue, and content—those histories of simple and generous hearts? Upon this subject both authors necessarily coincide, as deep, shrewd, and wide observers of human life, and add their testimony to the simple truth—that purity of thoughts and rectitude of actions produce content and elicit respect; that a kindly disposition, a generous heart, is inseparably associated with friendship, love, and affection; and that these qualities and attributes alone are the essential conditions of happiness.

The impressions of society created by Mr. Thackeray's works are, that amidst two brazen images are universally worshipped and followed, Wealth and Distinction; that to these nearly all will "fawn and flatter, seek and sue;" that in pursuit of these men will smile on their enemies, and look coldly upon their friends; that these are the great social magnets that divert the heart from the deep electric undercurrent of nature; and that few minds withhold their tribute to this general homage.

"The crowd, the hum, the shock of men,"

But the peculiarity of this exposition is, that the adulation of rank is not pictured in a spirit of denunciation or reproof, but in a spirit of sympathy. All readers of Thackeray must admit that his writings leave this impression. There are also in Mr. Thackeray's pictures of society several minor aberrations which detract from their reality, and that are noxious in tendency. Of the ideas calculated to be derived from these portions of Mr. Thackeray's works may be cited the following. That all young men possessing a clear title to the epithet of "gentlemen" are educated at college; that it is a symptom of dawning spirit and character in these to indulge in "pleasant vices;" that sons of successful tradesmen, merchants, bankers, and men of business are, if honest, vulgar, and in no case able to speak their mother tongue correctly; that even professional men, surgeons and lawyers wear high-lows (a favourite trait in Mr. Thackeray of a plebeian), and, though "educated," are by no means "gentlemen." Is not this Mr. Thackeray's representation of this department of society? Is there a character in the industrious classes of life pourtrayed in his writings who does not drop his H's, and who is not invested with the stereotyped marks of vulgarity current amongst novelists? Does there figure, on the other hand, in Mr. Thackeray's pages a "gentleman" whose gentility is not totally independent of industry and purity of habits, though it may be associated to some extent with them, and the essential conditions of which are not made more to consist in personal connections and an outward hauteur and dignity of manner?

The impression of society conveyed by Dickens indicates the pursuit of self-interest under a plausible exterior—imposture, inherent in the character or adopted—prevailing throughout the length and breadth of the community. Mr. Dickens illustrates that benignant appearance, urbanity of manner, dignity of station, a deep responsibility, and a world-wide importance of function, is by no means incompatible with an unremitting pursuit of self-interest and practice of deception; that business, politics, philanthropy, religion, are eaten into in their single representatives, as well as in their very strongholds, by this subtle and invidious principle.

This general truth may not have been first discovered by Mr. Dickens; but his has been the peculiar instinct to detect with searching scrutiny, and lay bare with keen satire, this element of imposture in all its plausible forms and complex conditions. And thus, though other writers have presented the public with villains enough to people a pandemonium, Dickens has been the most prominent in laying them before the world in their distinctive and practical garbs, exposing in turn the legal, the political, the benevolent, the religious, the social, the public or the domestic—humbug.

We also learn from the example of this author that a novelist, if he would in earnest regenerate society, must launch his satire not only at miscellaneous characters but at those associated with prevailing systems; he must challenge not only the solitary straggler on the roads of life, but also the thick crowd that throng the processions; he must throw the light of his logic not only upon the past and harmless, but also the present, the actual, the living, the powerful, the dangerous; that his scent, like that of a bloodhound, must be as intent in the "gardens of roses" as on the bleak common; that thus striking in all directions, he must rely for support on all classes; that drawing down upon himself the savage thunder of time-rooted influence and power, he must lean for protection not on a clique or a single interest, but society at large. Mr. Thackeray, in his representation of human characters, impresses the great truth that there is perfection in none; that in those generally accepted as without blemish, some weakness or imperfection surely lies, which, if it become developed by particular circumstances, manifests itself in the strangest inconsistencies of conduct, confounding the observer of human nature and casting a shadow over virtue itself. Thus Mr. Thackeray shows us the gentlest and simplest disposition, ennobled by a long career of duty, softened by affection and reverend with years, capable, through adverse circumstances and the eternal fallibility of the human heart, of absolute injustice. We are shown, in the example of perhaps the purest impersonation of female virtue that ever an author conceived, a heart wondrous, unfathomable, awe-inspiring in its pure depths of love and gentleness, still capable of betraying cruelty, harshness, and ingratitude.

No so striking, but still important, and betraying a peculiar faithfulness in the representation of human character, is Mr. Thackeray in teaching that not only extreme failings may be exhibited from the setting of priceless virtues, but that singular and habitual rectitude and amiability of conduct may be united with actions quite inconsistent with a very elevated standard of honour; that in real life the practical lines of virtue often run irregularly with the imaginary lines of high principle; that we may be good enough for this world, without being too good; that though the waters of evil in some may rise and flood the whole nature, in others they will never rise beyond a certain height, but that they exist in all. As Mr. Dickens's specific peculiarity is the discovery of imposture in all combinations, so he teaches that good, like evil, may be found in the like incongruous mixture of conditions and circumstances; that minds of the dingiest hue, so far as they are enlightened by education, may be prompted by an affectionate nature to the highest exhibition of virtue, to glow with the purest thoughts, to construct deeds of charity and love in the most perfect and delicate forms, and to be susceptible of the most refined and exalting influences. But there is one character upon which Mr. Dickens delights to dwell, the conception of an angelic tenderness, an infinite virtue, an infinite love, without spot or stain, fit for heaven, and spiritualised, though on earth. In regarding these of Mr. Dickens's creations, though we feel they are not of earth, we derive from their contemplation a feeling of holiness; we seem to have breathed the incense of virtue, and are affected as in regarding some exquisitely chaste, soft, and lovely picture of the Madonna.

Digitized by Google

Thus though these authors present relative merits and demerits, contrasts in genius, manner and views, the minds of both are rare mirrors held up to inward and outward nature. Both are great teachers. Thackeray will be admired for power and faithfulness of execution, Dickens for originality of conception. Thackeray paints from nature, Dickens from the mind. Thackeray is an artist, Dickens a poet. The same contrast prevails throughout. Dickens is creative, Thackeray imitative. And thus, though we meet in Thackeray's works characters more absolutely real and human than in the works of Dickens, in the latter we behold absolute realities of human lineaments in original combinations. Thackeray teaches us what human nature really is, Dickens what it might be; and both sides of this contrast has its advantages. In regarding the droll side of human character, though it may be satisfactory to see but the simple truth, it is far more striking and amusing, and quite as instructive, to behold the humorous more divested of the dull, more intense in wit and marked in character. In the more serious aspects of life also, though it is deeply important for us to realise clearly the exact truth, it is still salutary and not unedifying to catch at times a glimpse of the nobler attributes of humanity developed into replete existence.

Thus Dickens's philosophy is emulative and elevating; that of Thackeray sobering. Thackeray will inherit the gratitude of posterity for the remarkable vigour and faithfulness with which he has painted his view of the panorama of life; Dickens for the original aspects in which he has pourtrayed it; for the inspired light he has thrown into the hitherto hidden nooks and crannies, and with which he has adorned the mountain peaks of humanity; and lastly, for the singleness, earnestness, and boldness with which he has lent his powers to the denunciation of the social, political, and class evils of his own time; to the impartial exposure of present abuse and imposture; to the good of the poor, and to the ever opposed but ever moving cause of progress.

JOSEPH GODDARD.

THE ENTERPRISING IMPRESARIO.

CHAPTER VI.

THE wild beasts and an occasional open-air concert at the Royal Surrey Gardens, are proved to have been more profitable than the high-class musical performances, to give which a company took the gardens off the hands of the original proprietor.

It was only when the directors engaged the lion Alboni or the Bengal tiger, Reeves, that they could congratulate themselves upon receipts adequate to meet expenses; and even the roar of those celebrated bipeds failed, after a time, to attract the public to that out-of-the-way corner of London in which the gardens are situate.

Notwithstanding the vast sums spent in their embellishment, the grounds never, to my mind, lost their normal desolate appearance. In spite of the shrubberies and fountains, they obstinately belied the title of pleasure-gardens by day, while at night the monumental fashion in which the 10,000 variegated lamps were distributed made the place look like an illuminated cemetery, and the visitors wandering about like so many troubled spirits. Truly, the Music Hall is a fine building when seen from the exterior, but the inside, or the approaches to it, are anything but comfortable or elegant. And the stagnant pond called figuratively an Italian lake! into which the fireworks used to fall, and into which (shall I ever forget it?) I saw two human beings tumble. The first was an acrobat, who had madly proposed to traverse the water on a barrel, and had a right to expect a ducking, in which he was not disappointed. He got on to his barrel out of a boat, which was to follow him in case of accident. Standing erect for an instant on the tub, he made one attempt to roll it, and suddenly, with a splash, disappeared from the gaze of the spectators who crowded the borders of the "Italian lake." The boatmen picked him out of the water, and, nothing daunted, he tried again. This time the barrel was moved a few feet forward. The spectators cheered in anticipation of the feat being performed, but alas! another turn, a [spasmodic effort to keep his balance, and down he went once more. Dressed for the occasion in the flesh-coloured costume peculiar to his calling, the poor acrobat, when he was helped into the boat the second time, was hardly to be recognised for the black mud which he brought up with him from the bottom of the pond. He declined to make another trial, but retired to clean and dry himself amid the groans of the lookers-on, leaving it an open question to this day whether it be or be not possible to walk upon a barrel in the water. Immersion No. 2 was more accidental, and might have been attended with more serious consequences than that of the ambitious athlete. In the gardens is a so-called Venetian terrace, upon which people of vivid imagination can lounge, and in their fancy convert the pestilential exhalations of the pond into refreshing breezes from the Adriatic. "Don't it smell beautiful?" I once heard a youthful cockney say to his inamorata, as they were promenading, one hot summer night, when the water gave forth a stronger perfume than musk. At the extremity of the terrace is a deceptive flight of steps leading into the pond, from which a boat used to take the public for a row round Mount Vesuvius—(N.B.—this could only be done at the Surrey Gardens, and by permission of that celebrated pyrotechnist Mr. Southby), for the small charge of 1d. each. At night, the terrace being less brilliantly illuminated than the other parts of the grounds, this flight of steps was even more dangerous than by day. There was no gate or barrier of any kind. "Some one will surely walk down those steps into the water," must have passed through the mind of everybody who saw them; and so it happened. One crowded night the cry of "A man drowning!" was heard all over the gardens. A rush was made for the pond, and there the boatmen were to be seen dragging an unfortunate pleasure-seeker out of the thick muddy water at the foot of the aforesaid Venetian staircase. Entranced by the fumes of his cigar, and perhaps something stronger, he had forgotten all sublunary cares, and had been wandering about in a happy dreamy state. Chance led him to the treacherous steps; he wandered on and down them, when a cold dirty bath rudely restored him to his senses and the unpleasant realities of life. He was extricated; and as he stood upon the banks would, I believe, have been crushed to death by the crowd which surrounded him, had it not been that the odour emitted by the mire with which he was covered from head to foot was strong enough to keep the people off him.

"I always tell you so, Mr. ——," said —— to Mr. —— the parliamentary agent, who was one of the directors, "I knew the man would fall into the lake." "And why didn't you say so?" was the curt reply. Misfortune overtook the Surrey Gardens company. The expenses exceeded the receipts; the shareholders began to grumble (as they always do under such circumstances), and most unjustly blamed the directors, who had spared no time or trouble to promote the success of the undertaking. The company became insolvent, and it was determined to close the gardens. ——'s reputation was at stake. A provincial tour, which he was about to make, would be ruined if his name was associated with the failure. He determined to give the company a certain sum for the gardens for a short time, and bring the season to a triumphant termination under his own management. The arrangements were concluded; —— was manager and conductor. He announced a grand closing festival to take place in three weeks time. The difficulty was to keep the gardens open during the intervening period. At the end of the first week the band struck for payment. It was a Saturday afternoon, after the morning concert. A deputation from the orchestra met —— upon the grass plot before the hall, and informed him of their firm determination not to perform that evening unless their salaries were paid in full. How to gain time? The deputation would not be satisfied with a mere verbal promise; hard cash was the only remedy, and nothing else; without that there would be no performance—the gardens must be shut. —— began to pray! The friend to whom he had written arrived while he was on his knees. —— no sooner saw him than he jumped up exclaiming, "Le bon Dieu has heard my prayer; there is the man with the money;" and set the musicians on to the supposed Crœsus, who had innocently come to the gardens to see what was the matter.

Digitized by Google

ANTEATER.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—THIS EVENING (Saturday) in English, the First, Second, and Fourth Acts of IL TROVATORE: Manrico, Mr. PARKINSON, Count di Luna, Mr. SANTLEY; Ferrando, Mr. PATEY; Ruiz, Mr. TERROTT; Azucena, Madame LEMAIRE; and Leonora, Miss PAREPA. Conductor—Mr. HENRY BLAGROVE. To conclude with the highly successful pantomime of HARLEQUIN AND TOM THUMB; or, Merlin the Magician. The scenery by Mr. William Beverley. Notice.—During the Pantomime the doors open at half-past 6, commence at 7 o'clock. The Pantomime commences at 9 o'clock each evening. Carriages to be ordered for 11 o'clock. Grand Juvenile Night, on Monday Evening next, January 14.—The Lessee having received numerous communications from his subscribers and the public, intimating a generally expressed wish for a Juvenile Performance, he has much pleasure in announcing that the same will take place on Monday next, Jan. 14. The performance will commence at 7 o'clock precisely with the Children's Great Comic Pantomime, entitled HARLEQUIN AND TOM THUMB; or, Merlin the Magician and the Good Fairies of the Court of King Arthur. The gorgeous scenery by Beverley, comprising the magnificent transformation scene. Harlequin, Clown, Pantaloon, and Columbine, by the celebrated Lauri Family. Sprites by the Tribe of Arabs. After which, the Second and Fourth Acts of IL TROVATORE. Principal characters by Mdlle. PAREPA, Madame LEMAIRE; Mr. PARKINSON, Mr. PATEY, and Mr. SANTLEY. Mdlle MORLACCHI will dance in the incidental ballet. Early application is necessary to secure places. Box-office open from 10 till 4. Doors open at a quarter-past 6. Pantomime commences at 7, and the opera at a quarter to 9. Carriages to be ordered for 11 o'clock. Grand Morning Performance of the Children's Pantomime of TOM THUMB to-morrow (Saturday), January 12th, commencing at 2 o'clock precisely.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.—Lessee, Mr. E. SMITH. THIS EVENING (Saturday) Her Majesty's servants will perform the new comedy, in two acts, entitled THE ADVENTURES OF A BILLET-DOUX. The new grand Comic Christmas Annual, under the title of PETER WILKINS; or, Harlequin and the Flying Women of the Loadstone Island. Scenery by Beverley. The opening by Blanchard. Produced under the superintendence of Robert Roxby. Harlequins, Mr. Cormack and Mr. St. Maine; Columbines, the Misses Guiness; Pantaloons, Mr. Naylor and Mr. E. R. Martin; Clowns, Mr. Huline and Mr. R. Power, and a little one in by Young Huline; Sprites, by the celebrated Lavator Lee Family. Reduced prices as usual. Open at half-past 6; commence at 7 o'clock. Box-office open from 10 till 5.

NOTICES.

TO ADVERTISERS.—Advertisers are informed, that for the future the Advertising Agency of the THE MUSICAL WORLD is established at the Magazine of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 229 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyle Street (First Floor). Advertisements can be received as late as Three o'Clock P.M., on Fridays—but not later. Payment on delivery.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2s. 6d.
Every additional line (10 words) ... ... 6d.

TO PUBLISHERS AND COMPOSERS.—All Music for Review in THE MUSICAL WORLD must henceforward be forwarded to the Editor, care of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 229 Regent Street. A List of every Piece sent for Review will appear on the Saturday following in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

TO CONCERT GIVERS.—No Benefit-Concert, or Musical Performance, except of general interest, unless previously Advertised, can be reported in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JANUARY 12, 1861.

WHAT will our readers say if we talk politics to them to-day, and above all, Russian politics? But we have an excuse at hand. No one can write a complete account of the French Revolution without speaking of its great musical accompaniment, the Marseillaise; and similarly, there are musical works which cannot be satisfactorily described without some serious reference to historical and political events with which they are intimately connected, or on which they are founded. Indeed, every subject is connected, nearly or remotely, with every other subject. Once a German critic, in writing a paper on Correggio's Ecce homo! thought it necessary to ask himself, by way of preface—"An homo deus esse potest?" and occupied twenty-four pages in giving his answer. This was unfair to his readers, who were for the most part painters and amateurs of painting, and we shall take care not to follow the example of the Teutonic pedant. Still, if we wished to communicate to the Japanese some particulars about Mr. Macfarren's Charles II., though we should not begin by writing an essay on the Civil War, the Protectorate and the Restoration, we should think it necessary to tell them who Charles II. was; and as we desire at present to give some information about Glinka's Life for the Tzar to English readers (who know quite as little of Russia as the Japanese do of England), we feel called upon in the first place to state who the Tzar was, for whom somebody gave his life, who the somebody was who gave it, and under what circumstances it was given.

May we here, without being accused of imitating our German friend, ask why the English know so little of Russia, which during the last forty years has produced so many eminent men in literature and the arts? "Europe," says M. Herzen, "knows less of Russia than Cæsar before invading it knew of Gaul," and certainly the accounts which Russian writers have given us of their country are not calculated to make us long to form any intimate acquaintance with it. The literature of Russia is absolutely unknown to us, though all the works of Poushkin and Lermontoff have been translated into German, and about a quarter of what Gogol has written into French.* However, the best informed of our painters know the works of Brouloff by reputation, the celebrated bronze horses by Baron Klodt were seen at the Great Exhibition of 1851, and we now can form some idea of Russian music through Prince Galitzin and his highly interesting Russian Concerts.

There are many tests by which to measure the degree of civilisation that a nation has arrived at, but none more certain than its proficiency in the fine arts, and it will be a curious thing if by this time next year, we know more of Russia through its music, than through its literature or through any branch of its history. Such will assuredly be the case, for not only has Prince Galitzin made arrangements for another series of concerts, in which will be presented specimens of the music of Glinka, Bartnianski, Makaroff, Alabieff, and other Russian composers (among whom the Prince himself must not be forgotten), but he also intends to produce next season, at one of our English theatres, Glinka's operatic masterpiece, the aforesaid Life for the Tzar. The English version of this work is being prepared by a writer of whom it would be little to say, that he is the best of our librettists; and Prince Galitzin, who was the intimate friend and (we believe), the pupil of Glinka, will of course superintend its production. It offers wonderful opportunities for novel and picturesque costumes, and equally novel and picturesque scenery (such, for instance, as the Polish camp, the Kremlin by moonlight, &c.). The music not only very beautiful and highly dramatic, but from the national character of the melodies, possesses an originality which to English ears would be most striking. The story too is exceedingly dramatic, and as we have already given the reader to understand, belongs to an interesting period of Russian history—the period of the great war between Russia and Poland, when Moscow fell into the possession of the Poles, and was afterwards liberated (1612) by Prince Pojarski and Minin the cattle dealer of Nijni-Novgorod; when Michael, the first of the Romanoffs, was elected Tzar, and when the young monarch, but for the devotion of a peasant named Ivan Soussannin, would have been taken prisoner by the Polish army, and in all probability executed.

* Our dramatic readers will perhaps be glad to know that one of the two most remarkable comedies in the Russian language, Grief from Wit, by Griboiedoff, has been translated into English.

Digitized by Google

Minin, the butcher or cattle-dealer of Nijni-Novgorod, is the most popular figure in Russian history, which is supposed, by those who have never studied it, while exhibiting plenty of tyrants, to present no patriots. The humble citizen of Nijni, after rallying his fellow-townsmen around him, assuaged the jealousies existing between the Russian chiefs of parties, and called upon Prince Pojarski to place himself at the head of his countrymen. After four days' incessant fighting the patriots reached Moscow, and put to flight the Grand Hetman Chodkieviscz, who occupied the city in the name of the Polish king. The Polish garrison, or a portion of it, defended themselves obstinately from the Kremlin, but were at length compelled to surrender. During the struggle between the invaders and the inhabitants Moscow was reduced to ashes, and the Russians suffered as much from the Christian Poles as they had suffered from the Mahomedan Tartars. The patriotism of Minin and Pojarski is commemorated in a monument, in which the citizen of Nijni is represented calling upon the prince to assume the chief command. This monument, a vigorous and effective piece of sculpture, stands in the Red Place, outside the Kremlin walls, to the astonishment of those tourists to Moscow who have been in the habit of regarding the Polish question only from the Lord Dudley Stuart and Mansion-House-ball point of view.

After the election of the Tzar Michael, the chief of a band of Polish invaders, who were endeavouring to take him prisoner, happened to fall in with this Soussannin. They interrogated him as to the Tzar's place of concealment, and he offered to reveal it if they would accompany him. The proposition having been eagerly accepted, the loyal peasant led them to a wood from which it was impossible to find an issue, and then boldly declared to them that to save the life of the Tzar he had determined to sacrifice his own. It was accordingly sacrificed, and in commemoration of his devotion the inhabitants of the village in which he lived are to this day exempted from the payment of certain taxes, while Ivan Soussannin himself has not only had a monument erected to him in his birthplace, but has also had the honour of being made the hero of a popular three-act opera.

A writer in this journal spoke some months ago of one of the songs from Ivan Soussannin (or "Life for the Tzar") as "full of the most plaintive tenderness." The grand national hymn from the same work was heard (under the direction of Prince Galitzin) and loudly applauded at the Floral Hall; the Polish March was played with great success at one of Prince Galitzin's concerts at the St. James's Hall; then there is a trio, which, as the readers of Letters from the Baltic will remember, threw Lady Eastlake into ecstasies; a magnificent patriotic air, which the loyal, enthusiastic peasant sings at the moment of martyrdom; and an admirable concerted piece, in which the happy Ivan and his fair betrothed take part, and which is sung on the stage, while the gradual approach of the Polish army, which is to strike terror into the hearts of the Muscovites, is indicated in the orchestra. But descriptions of music are always tedious, and the music of Life for the Tzar will be heard before long in its proper place, that is to say, on the operatic stage.

AMPLITUDE is one of the principal elements of the sublime. Vastness of extent, height, or depth, fills the mind with wonder and admiration, and prepares it, as it were, for a conception of infinity of space. The contemplation of the sea or a boundless plain elevates our thoughts, and produces an idea of grandeur and magnificence beyond any other object in nature. Even in matters of utility, the imagination is gratified by what is stupendous and gigantic, and invariably associates what is little with what is weak and futile. Free speculation is prone to consider that a public structure cannot be too extensive, a ship too huge, a steeple too lofty. What is most accommodating we are apt to think is most useful, and believe that everything is gained when space is mastered. But as the human senses are restricted to a very narrow sphere, and as Nature herself is circumscribed by certain boundaries, it is worth while reflecting whether there are not limitations to all objects intended for man's benefit, and whether what is meant for the purposes of utility may not have a line of demarcation from either side of which it will deviate into inefficiency or utter uselessness. It will be granted at once that a ship may be too big, since its size may render it available in the deepest waters only, whereby its chief advantage as a conveyance from shore to shore would be lost. That a church, also, may be too capacious, we think, cannot be denied, for it is no less necessary for those attending divine service to hear the preacher than contemplate the deity. In most of our cathedrals and many of our parish churches a clergyman, as far as the majority of the congregation is concerned, might just as well deliver his sermon from the vestry as from the pulpit. The vast area in the midst of which he is placed—vast in width, depth, and height—absorbs nine-tenths of the speaker's words, and those only can hear him who are within the immediate focus of the sound of his discourse. The congregation takes its leave, instructed only in part, and many blame the preacher's enunciation or their own ears for not having heard distinctly, when the fault lay entirely in the size of the building. And this brings us to the subject in hand.

A performance of the Messiah on a scale of unusual grandeur and completeness is announced to take place at St. Paul's Cathedral, on Friday, the 25th inst., in aid of the funds for the "purchase of the new organ" (which recently, by the way, figured conspicuously in Mr. E. T. Smith's Alhambra). Six hundred performers, we are told, are to be employed in giving effect to Handel's sublime music; and the execution, it is confidently anticipated, will surpass anything heard previously within the walls of the great metropolitan Cathedral. So speaks the official document. A body of six hundred singers and players in St. Paul's may reasonably be estimated as holding the same relation to the building as the three thousand of the Handel Commemoration Festival to the central transept of the Crystal Palace. How little the performance of the three thousand fell short of expectation we need not now record. The central transept of the Sydenham Palace was found too big even for so large a force of choristers and instrumentalists, while the voices of the soloists, beyond the immediate neighbourhood of the platform, were all but lost in immensity of space. Nay, it was said that ten thousand voices and instruments, though all sang and played, would, in the great Handel orchestra, have failed to produce an effect equal to that of the Sacred Harmonic Society's "seven hundred" at Exeter Hall, even though these do not all invariably sing and play. It follows, therefore, we think, that the performance of the Messiah in the south transept of St. Paul's Cathedral will not realise the expectations of its originators. The area is too large to allow of the sound of the voices being distributed equally to all parts of the audience, and many of the instruments will not be heard at all. Such was the result at Sydenham; such will be the result on Ludgate Hill. It is only right the public should be informed of what they have to expect. No doubt the sight will be magnificent and imposing in the extreme. The new decorations and garniture will be exhibited in the most striking light; the thunders of the new organ will shake the building with its reverberations; the beauty of the fair visitors will shine out pure and resplendent; their tournures will declare themselves most fashionable and unexceptionable; the stewards and officials be most polite and attentive; the canons look authoritative; the beadles important; while looming down on all, from its eyrie in the clouds, the mighty dome will spread its canopy, like a shield interposed between heaven and the audience, yet not near enough to ward off the inclemency of the season, which, unless in the meanwhile the pluvial god succeed in overwhelming the serried ranks of General Jack Frost, cannot fail greatly to interfere with the gratification to be derived from the performance. To many, therefore, who feel inclined to regard the music as a secondary consideration, the "festival," as it is called, at St. Paul's Cathedral will prove an undoubted treat. That, however, Handel will be worthily represented we cannot be persuaded, although the most splendid anticipations are held out by the protectors.

Digitized by Google

THE Monday Popular Concerts have invaded the provinces, laid siege to Glasgow, Edinburgh, Newcastle, Bradford, Manchester, and Liverpool, and taken them successively by storm. Among those who know how widely a taste for music has been spreading of recent years in the country, there could have existed little doubt as to the issue of the Messrs. Chappell's enterprise. This, however, by no means weakens the sense of gratification with which we,—who, from the beginning, have acknowledged the excellent tendency of the quartet concerts at St. James's Hall (the true and genuine "People's Philharmonic,")—make record of their triumphs in the splendid music-rooms of Scotland, Northumberland, Yorkshire, and Lancashire. It is to the credit of Bradford, by the way, that it should have taken the initiative in the new speculation. Bradford was first to build a music-hall, and first to set up a great music festival. Leeds followed, some six years later, and six years hence, perhaps, will venture on a "Monday Popular Concert." Vivat Bradford! The emporium of wool may not (as some insist) be able to boast a "Spark" of musical genius; but Samuel Smith, Esq., and oratorio Jackson know how to appreciate it in others, and we congratulate them on this fresh proof of their intelligence and spirit.

For details of the provincial campaign—which (in the unavoidable absence of Mr. S. Arthur Chappell), has been directed by his energetic representative, Mr. Jarrett,—we must refer the reader to our provincial summary. It is agreeable to find the local papers unanimous in their expressions of approval, and not less so to peruse so much sensible and healthy criticism in their columns. Manchester and Liverpool have long been noted for the ability of their musical reviewers, and if we may judge by the Evening Courant (now so admirably conducted by our valued contributor, Mr. James Hannay), Auld Reekie has at length thrown her sword into the scale, and with plain right to challenge competition. All this says more and more for the progress that art is achieving in Great Britain; and as so comparatively small a number of the instrumental compositions for the chamber which the recognised masters have bequeathed to the world, are familiar even to the largest and most crowded provincial towns, the compact little phalanx of missionaries from St. James's Hall have plenty of honourable labour cut out for them. It is to be hoped that the result of their first "circuit," may justify other undertakings of a like nature, whenever opportunity shall offer. Manchester is better informed than its fellow towns and cities—thanks to the exertions and long residence of Mr. Charles Hallé, the minstrel elect of the wealthy merchants of Lancashire, who listen to his music without cotton in their heads, much less in their ears; but to other places such programmes and performances as those of the Monday Popular Concerts must open a new vein of intellectual enjoyment, the cultivation of which can hardly fail to produce good fruits. One excellent result is likely to ensue. Their example will, of course, lead to emulation, and emulation to the institution of similar undertakings in all parts of the country where music is (and where is it not?) a favourite recreation. This probable multiplication of Monday Popular Concerts must bring with it, as an inevitable consequence, a multiplication of quartet players; and thus a school of fiddlers may be established and nurtured in the country, as formerly there used to be a school of actors. York and Lancashire may organise their musical circuits, as of old they organised their dramatic circuits; and in this case future directors of the Philharmonic Society would stand in no fear of dissolution, through the unfair and encroaching egotism of future Italian-opera managements. We should draw our musicians from the provinces as we draw our soldiers and our sailors.

MASTER DREW DEAN'S Concert took place on Monday last, the 7th inst., at the Albion Hall, Dalston, and was well attended. Master Dean was encored in a fantasia for the flute on English airs, by Carte, and Miss Amelia May received the same compliment in a song by Harrison, entitled "All Nature's gay," accompanied on the flute by Master Dean. Mr. J. Hill also gained much applause in a duet for violin and pianoforte with Master Dean. Two amateurs, Messrs. Frank Hanley and H. Osborne, sang, but their extreme nervousness partially, if not wholly, impaired their means of utterance.

MYDDELTON HALL.—Mr. H. W. Jackson recently gave his first concert of the season here, assisted by the following artists:—Miss Harrington, Miss Anne Cox, Mrs. Robert Paget, Messrs. S. Champion, A. Lester, H. Buckland, and the Amphion Star Union. Pianoforte, Messrs. Bird and Gardner. Conductor, Mr. Hubbard.

AMERICA.—News from the far west is unusually scant this month; whether it be that entrepreneurs refrain from providing novelties about the holy season, or that nearly all musical entertainments are laid aside during the period of festivity, it is difficult to say. A first-rate performance at the last concert of the Philharmonic Society of New York is chronicled by the New York correspondent of Dwight's Journal of Music, and the programme given entire, which we quote:—

Part I.—Symphony, No. 6, La Pastorale, Op. 68, in F, Beethoven; concerto for pianoforte, in A minor, Op. 54, R. Schumann. Part II.—Festkisenge, Poème Symphonique (1st time), F. Liszt; Grande Fantaisie Russe, for violoncello, A. Kummer; Paraphrase de Concert, for piano, "Rigoletto," P. Liszt; overture, "Jubilee," Weber.

The writer is altogether silent about Liszt's two pieces—a pity, since we should like to have heard Young America's opinion concerning the friend and disciple of Richard Wagner, and the most unflinching champion of the Music of the Future.

Digitized by Google

LUDWIG RELLSTAB.*

THE place occupied by Rellstab's efforts in the more extended sphere of polite literature will be properly appreciated by the biographer, who enters into all the details of the case. We propose merely to throw a light over the influence exercised by his writings and opinions on matters connected with art-culture in Berlin. With him there has been extinguished a prominent mental element in society here. In him we possessed, for many years, the promoter of all movements whence art-culture was developed, or by which it was purified—the representative of public opinion on it. The man who was able to guide the views of the masses, and fascinate them by his words, must have possessed a peculiar power, most unmistakeably conscious of its effect, and imbued with all the more authority from the fact, that it cannot capriciously talk people over, but demands an independent judgment.

Next to his talent, and talent under all circumstances pursues its own path, the peculiar course of culture distinguishing Ludwig Rellstab's life, will aid materially in explaining his importance. The years of his childhood and youth date back to the time of fertile ideas and imposing deeds in the German fatherland. Classic literature had just penetrated, body and bone, into the educated world, and romanticism was putting forth its most luxuriant blossoms. Between the two, among the people, were the rough contrasts of debasement and elevation, all exciting circumstances, which necessarily assisted a boy of a peculiar and strongly marked disposition. The family relations and domestic matters by which the boy's first notions were suggested, were likewise of a favourable description.

At the period when Ludwig Rellstab was born in Berlin (April 13th, 1799), his father, a man of liberal education, especially on the subject of music, possessed a considerable establishment as a bookseller, music publisher and printer. Regular concerts, with a full band, used to be given in his house, so that the artistic feeling of his son was awakened by hearing the works of Sebastian, Emanuel, and Friedemann Bach, Mozart, and other masters. During the summer, the family resided at a small villa in the Thiergarten†, which, being then in its natural uncultivated state, afforded the boy plenty of places to play in, while it also excited the most delicious feelings in his poetical mind. His mother was a model of the most noble womanly qualities. On the occasion of his making a journey, in the year 1821, to Weimar, Zelter recommended him to Göthe, "for the sake of his excellent mother, of whom he had been very fond." The incitement, also, to action which he derived from his playfellows, especially from his cousin, Wilhelm Häring (Willibald Alexis) may not have been without influence upon his growing capabilities.

For the nonce, however, as we learn from Rellstab's own confession, these capabilities were principally displayed in the manufacture of pasteboard articles and fireworks, and in executing conjuring tricks, it being an interesting and curious fact, that the first notice Rellstab wrote for the Vossische Zeitung, was a criticism on a conjuror, who gave his performances near the house of Rellstab's father, in the Thiergarten. Rellstab was then twelve years of age. His father, who used, as a musical critic, to furnish articles for the paper from time to time—prevailed on the boy, who was rather advanced in his German school studies, to write the report, which was kindly accepted by the then editor, Professor Catel. In other branches of learning, it is said that the performances of the young author were not particularly conspicuous, although at the Joachimsthal and Werder gymnasiums, which he attended, he enjoyed the good fortune of being under such celebrated teachers as Bernhardi, Zumpt, Twesten, Lange, and Spillecke. It is true that the period in question was that of the most lively and enthusiastic sympathy for the welfare of the Prussian and German fatherland. When the pupils of the third class, who were old enough to bear arms, although tolerably ill acquainted with their Latin dictionary, advanced in brilliant uniform to meet their younger schoolfellows; when the masters, who had previously bestowed only blame on them, shook hands at parting, and pressed them to their heart, we do not think they were adopting the best plan to keep up the taste for Curtius or Julius Cæsar in the youngsters left behind. "Tears of the tenderest emotion," so Rellstab himself tells us, "fill my eyes even now, as with hair grown grey, and my life drawing to its close, I write down these lines recalling the sad and yet never-to-be-forgotten delicious hours of my youth and boyhood." That the great events of the time did not produce a merely transient impression upon him, was proved by his most determined resolution to embrace the career of arms. His father used frequently to have violent disputes with him on this subject.

Meanwhile the second campaign had begun, and his father had died suddenly of apoplexy while out walking. The youth, now in his sixteenth year, could no longer resist the impulse of his heart; Körner's songs of freedom, set to Weber's vigorous melodies, were whirling around on his brain. He offered himself as a recruit to the Colomb'sches regiment of hussars, and was accepted. He was, however, dismissed after his first period of service, because one of his eyes, which was weak, became entirely useless. His determination was extraordinary, possessing a touch of obstinacy. He succeeded in prevailing on his guardian to allow him to enter the Military School, and it was not long before he was promoted to be mathematical master and officer. The assiduous youth had thus gained a starting-point for independent exertion, and, with his restless love of work, a sentiment shooting out in the most opposite directions, he was enabled to concentrate his strength and fix his eye steadily on certain objects.

The peaceful state of affairs in Germany—a state of affairs continually affording fresh foundations for artistic activity—awakened or collected in Berlin all kinds of intellect, and introduced Rellstab into the midst of the busy throng. Ludwig Berger and Bernhard Klein constituted the centre of a new musical epoch. The youthful Rellstab joined them. Ludwig Devrient shone as a star of the first magnitude in the theatrical world; Zelter occupied the place of honour among the representatives of serious, respectable old men; E. T. A. Hoffman was an original on the domains of music, painting, poetry, and even jurisprudence; old Körner and Streckfuss furnished, in their way, considerable incitement to literary efforts; while Rungenhagen, W. Bach, and G. Reichardt joined the narrower circle of musical activity. It was said that men so universally gifted ought to light and maintain the fire of intellectual and artistic life at one common point of reunion. As such a point, the younger Liedertafel was founded by Rellstab, Klein and Berger. Zelter did not hesitate becoming an honorary member. Rellstab was the poet of the association, and that which was called into existence by the free intercourse of the members re-echoed far and wide, exercising a decided influence on the taste for art evinced by the educated classes.

Rellstab's musical studies, which, during this time, had been neglected, but for which his strict father had laid a solid foundation, were again resumed. Berger and Klein, who not unfrequently used to take a delight in listening to the young officer's extemporising on the pianoforte, took him as their pupil, guiding him to correctness of composition, reading scores with him, and initiating him into the depths of Mozart's and Beethoven's compositions.

On a course of such irregular, although serious work, his duties as teacher at the brigade school exerted, besides many other disagreeable results, a paralysing effect. Rellstab always spoke of the military profession with the highest respect, and among his most intimate friends he numbered officers of high rank; the sympathies of his life, however, had their roots in a very different soil. He resigned his commission, and, as, after the decease of his mother, he had inherited a competency, he was easily enabled to discover the paths which conducted his talent to maturity.

His friends had long perceived and appreciated his poetical powers. It was partly owing to their influence, and partly to a plan which he had formed in his own mind, that he resolved on attempting to divert German opera into new channels, so that the literary foundation for the music might be included in the domain of independent art, properly so called. He wrote the words of Dido, and Klein composed the music. Berger was enraptured

* From the Vossische Zeitung.

† Zoological Gardens," now a favourite resort of the people of Berlin.

Digitized by Google

with the subject and its treatment, of which he had been informed by Rellstab; C. M. von Weber, in Dresden, Tieck, and Jean Paul valued the work highly (Rellstab's correspondence contains proofs of this), and formed their estimate of the author's talent accordingly, although a considerable number of lyrical poems had already laid the earlier foundations of his reputation. The first representation of Dido took place on the 15th of October 1823, the birthday of the present king. The opera was revived in the year 1827, and once more performed in 1854, but it never achieved a decided success. We will return to Rellstab's theatrical labours presently.

Meanwhile, he transferred his place of residence to Frankfort-on-the-Oder, in order to be able to undertake, free from interruption, greater works. He here drew up the plot for his tragedy of Karl der Kühne, which he afterwards completed at Weimar. He now commenced his travels, continuing them almost every year to his death, for the purpose of obtaining on the one hand, by intercourse with eminent persons or suggestive characters in the social and artistic world, matter for his productions, and, on the other, in order to elevate himself by the charms and magnificence of nature, which he loved like a child.

We accompany him with interest to Dresden, where, during 1821, he passed a pleasant time—associating, as he did, with C. M. von Weber and Ludwig Tieck—and, especially, took a great interest in the celebrated evening readings of Tieck; to Bairenth, where Jean Paul most cordially welcomed him in the bosom of his family, and where in the "Fantaisie" and "Eremitage," now so well known through the "Siebenkäs," and more especially in the little hostelry of the wonderful "Frau Rollwenzel," he enjoyed many hours of the most interesting conversation, and conceived the highest respect for the great poet; to Weimar, where he made a lengthened sojourn; where he was a constant visitor of Göthe's daughter-in-law, Ottilie von Göthe, and where, on several evenings, he was present, with Zelter, at the parties in Göthe's house, often deeply moved by the great poet, but, as a general rule, not feeling captivated by his aristocratic and reserved demeanour, particularly when he remembered Jean Paul. We here find him making the acquaintance of Johanna Schoosenhauer — the mother of the celebrated philosopher — Hummel, Riemer and Eberwein. We likewise are informed of an interesting evening at Göthe's, when Zelter introduced his pupil, Felix Mendelssohn, then twelve years old, to the prince of poetry, filling the latter with surprise and admiration at the boy's great musical talent.

In Heidelberg, Rellstab formed the acquaintance of Kreuzer, and that original, Thibaut, so esteemed for his old Italian Gesangverein, and whose work, on the Purity of Music, created a sensation in its time. Welcker, Moriz Arndt, A. W. von Schlegel, P. Hebel, and Caroline Pichler pass before our gaze, and we possess from Rellstab's pen characteristic sketches, which, with as much penetration as love, exhibit to us the sayings and doings of these various individuals. What captivates us most, however, is Rellstab's intercourse, in 1825, with Beethoven, the sick genius, nearly crushed by his mournful fate. What we glean from this residence of Rellstab in Vienna is not important in an artistic light; he often visited Beethoven, and conversed with him by means of a writing-tablet; but, as far as Rellstab is concerned, the Beethoven conversations are worthy of attention, because the touching tenderness with which the young poet was treated called forth, in his Reise Mittheilungen, one of those admirable sketches, where overflowing sensibility and respect for the object described go hand in hand with the most artistic form of style.

If we cast a glance over the career of our friend up to this time, and also recollect the condition of political newspapers at that period, as well as the limited interest possessed by the articles for the general reading public, it cannot be denied that a man of Rellstab's talent, thus cultivated and precisely in its prime, would, if gained over for a journal, invest with preponderating importance any paper for which his services might be secured. In addition to this is the fact, that on returning from his interesting travels in Germany, Switzerland, and Italy, to Berlin, Rellstab found that capital in a state of art-enthusiasm produced by Henrietta Sontag, and which formed a glaring contrast to his travelling impressions. A reflex of his opinions on this head is to be found in the saucily satirical sketch of character, published under the title of Die schöne Henrietta, a sketch, in which so delicately clear a light, speaking in in a literary sense, was cast upon sundry individuals in Berlin, besides the fair idol of the day, that the author's reputation in the capital was firmly established from that moment. For a feuilleton writer the ground was sufficiently prepared; the only thing needed was the seed from which not only the varied pictures of Berlin society, but also the serious truths of scientific and artistic life shut up.

The then editor of the Vossische Zeitung was Herr Lessing, a commissary of justice, and descended from a branch of the family of the celebrated poet and critic of the same name. This gentleman secured the young author's services. On the 31st October, 1826, Rellstab's first criticism appeared in the Vossische Zeitung. His talent for communicating art-impressions, and conveying in his writings the innermost thoughts of the public, went on increasing year by year, and attained its culminating point in 1847, after which date the political life of Germany, nay, more, of Europe, entered a completely new phase. Pecuniary losses, occasioned by the year of the revolution, and many other dispiriting causes, crippled, in some degree, his mental energy. His opinions and feelings would not accommodate themselves to the new development of political life, and he abandoned a considerable portion of his usual labours. We must, therefore, bear in mind the period we have mentioned if we would properly appreciate the services he rendered to newspaper literature.

With the greatest possible impartiality—for the love of truth shall have as great a share as friendship in our sketch—we will go, through Rellstab's musical criticisms belonging to this part of our subject. We are presented with a picture gallery of the artistic individualities who shone, during a period of more than twenty years, in the art-firmament of the educated world. We first read notices of Mad. Sontag, Catalani, Schechner, Sessi, Heinefetter, and Milder. Subsequent years make us acquainted with Hummel, Fräulein von Schätzel, Paganini, and Schröder-Devrient. To these we must add the names of Mendelssohn, Kalkbrenner, Wild, the Brothers Müller, and Mad. Schechner-Wagen. After 1835, there appear in the foreground artists better known, and more popular at the present day. Among these we make the acquaintance in their most brilliant impersonations, of the more or less important members of the Theatre Royal, who belonged for some time to that establishment. Herren Bader, Mantius, Krause, the ladies Von Fassmann, Louise Schlegel (Mad. Köster), and Tuczeck, excite our lively interest, while the concert-room, as well as the stage, is from time to time transiently illuminated by stars of the greatest splendour. Clara Novello and Pauline Garcia the Sisters Milanollo and Jenny Lind, Vieuxtemps, Thalberg, De Bériat, Liszt, and other great artists come under this category. There is no scarcity either of elaborate judgments on eminent art productions, both novelties and revivals. We read with lively interest minutely-critical notices of Bach's Passionsmusik, of Fidelio, of Bernhard Klein's David, of Löwe's Sieben Schläfer, of Mendelssohn's music to A Midsummer Night's Dream, and of other works.

Rellstab's musical education reposed upon undoubted talent. The latter was, however, not so highly developed, so far as technical matters and the syntax of the art were concerned, as to enable him to write a symphony or a quartet. That the power of doing so is necessary in a critic, will, however, be asserted only by an artist who may, perhaps, have learnt something, but who is deficient in the best and most requisite qualification. It is true that the technical and theoretical education of the critic must not be so far below the productions criticised, that he cannot see his way clearly everywhere, even in the score of a great work of art. But it must be remembered, that Rellstab wrote for a political paper, and for readers who desired to be informed from day to day, of what was going forward in the world. This object is satisfied by an innate taste for art, a general æsthetical education, the power of describing a thing popularly, and a warmth of sentiment which can excite sympathy and enthusiasm for art and artists. Critics like Fink, Gottfried Weber, and in some degree, Rochlitz, can give the musician many a suggestion worth remembering; but whether the divine spark lurks within his work or production, they will not always be competent to say. In difficult cases, Rellstab could not do the first, but he was always able to do the last.

Digitized by Google

The task which he more particularly imposed on himself was to introduce the susceptible and educated men of the non-professional public and dilettanti into the magic realms of tone, and to foster in them a love for what is beautiful and grand in art. His decisions were, therefore, in most cases, of a positive nature, and seldom crushing; it was only when vanity and arrogance, qualities so frequently found in artists, came glaringly under his notice, that he cast into the scale the whole weight of his eloquent language and love for what is unconditionally beautiful. In all things, but more especially in his dealings with his opponents, he was frank and outspoken, accepting the combat even where he foresaw a defeat. All the worse for him! Openness and truth were fundamental traits in his character. Was he defeated in his contest with Spontini? The evidence is now tolerably complete. What share personal excitability had in the quarrel we will not inquire; both the persons concerned suffered and were punished.

With creative artists, Rellstab was mostly conscientiously severe In this he was swayed by moral motives; art occupied so high a position in his eyes that he regarded an unsuccessful artist's career as the most unfortunate of all existences. Whoever starts with the notion that a critic must never be mistaken, and that it is a capital crime for him to contradict himself once in his life, may take as an answer many a beautiful confession of Rellstab's, such, for instance, as:—"With regard to my artistic errors and mistakes—how many have I committed, and how frequently, even now, am I doubtful whether I was right at first or afterwards. I do not spare myself, but give myself up with my contradictions and changing views. I stick to the French proverb, that 'he who never changed his opinion never had one.'" Rightly understood, this proverb contains a truth well worthy of our attention. When looking back over Rellstab's criticisms, we linger with heartfelt delight over the notices more especially dedicated to some particular impersonation or to the artist individually. This delineation of Leonore and Donna Anna, as performed by Mad. Schröder-Devrient in the year 1831; of the funeral service in honour of Klein, in 1832; of Fräulein Schechner in Iphigenia and Fidelio, in 1829; of Liszt's concerts, in 1841–43; but above all, his criticisms on the sisters Milanollo; the parts played by Jenny Lind from 1844 to 1846; and the artistic, loving memorial erected by him, in 1847, to that noble pair, Fanny Hensel and her brother Felix Mendelssohn, are specimens of characteristic musical criticism, in which fine critical perception plays quite as important a part as an ardent disposition entirely engrossed by its subject and held captive by the omnipotence of art.

Notwithstanding many an erroneous opinion with regard to details, Rellstab was always right in the long run. For the impressions of what is conditionally and what is unconditionally beautiful he possessed a degree of susceptibility which seized on anything certainly and quickly, and had the right word, the most intelligible and frequently most happy turns for what was to be described. This delicacy of perception on his part was not acknowledged by unprofessional men alone, but even by artists, and we recollect some expressions of approval, nay, more, of astonishment, on the subject from Mendelssohn, who, as is well known, never hesitated to say freely what he thought. We are rendered acquainted with the humorous side of Rellstab's criticism—his gentle nature never turned to satire—in the twelve annual series of the little musical periodical, Iris, which was discontinued at the end of the year 1840. In this publication Rellstab discussed those musical matters of the day which came under his notice, and did not give him any particular trouble.

Rellstab's labours for the Vossische Zeitung extended, however, far beyond his duties as a musical critic. The editorship of the French article was for a long time in his hands, and he discharged his task with great prudence; occurrences in municipal and social circles, when described by him, always excited the interest of the reader; novelties in literature introduced by his pen scarcely needed any other advocate. He was, moreover, employed for a large number of periodicals published in other places; he educated singers, both male and female, for the stage, and wrote many-volumed romances, tales, dramas, and poems. We possess his collected works, as published by Brockhaus, in Leipsic; but if we were to put all he has written into the shape of books, we might fill a whole library. Such restless activity required unusual natural gifts, quite as much as an iron will and unexampled industry. Among his works in the department of the belles lettres, besides some of his tales, the two romances "1812," and the one he wrote last, Drei Jahre von dreissigen, occupy the first place. There is no doubt that Rellstab's talent was most to be relied on in the description of occurrences and impressions. It happened, however, that he ignored this predominating faculty of his. In the project of recasting German opera, the noble end in view was worthy of praise; but Rellstab's strength was not sufficient for it; his dramatised Eugene Aram obtained a respectable success, because the original work came to his aid; his Feldlager was borne up, and that for a few years only, by Meyerbeer's music. For the course of the action arising from the most marked opposition of the various personages, for striking combination, by which the interest of the public is concentrated, for that shortness and sharpness of expression which dramatic composition requires, his pen was too lyrically soft, and his views of things too broad. Nature had created him to be a writer of epics, a narrator. He willed, however, and, even in this instance, his will achieved a certain success. Just as his partiality for acknowledged tendencies in art sometimes caused him to appear unjust towards ideas newly sprung up, in opposition to his many years' experience, he not unfrequently over-rated the measure of those artistic abilities which tallied with his own views. In such instances, his prejudices and his good heart ran away with him. This enables us to explain, on the one hand, his repugnance to Spontini, and, on the other, his exaggerated valuations of Bernhard Klein and Ludwig Berger, to whom he erected monuments of love and respect in his monographies.

Rellstab was very happily married as far back as 1834, and from that period looked upon his existence at home, in the bosom of his family, as an oasis, which invited him from a whirlpool of exciting troubles to cheerful repose and recreation. It always afforded him the greatest pleasure to collect around him, in his own house, esteemed friends, whom he used to captivate by his humour, his happy talent of narration and his kindly disposition. This kindliness in his family circle was not, however, confined merely to the surface, but extented to his most intimate relations.

He had long set all his worldly affairs in order. The recollection of the way in which his father died, and the warnings he received during the last two years of his existence, impressed him with the probability of his soon sinking to rest. When we take into consideration the fact that his mind could not remain quiet, and that, according to human experience, he must have fallen a victim to a more terrible weakness, we must despite all the grief of his family and friends, consider his lot a happy one. A higher will than that of man wished to show its kindness towards him. In the midst of cheerful prospects the evening hour of farewell was approaching, to be followed by a tearful morning-greeting. The night of the 27th to the 28th November was for him the day of eternal light. He achieved reputation, honour, and love; they will survive him!

NEW OPERAS IN HAND.—If all we hear is correct neither Her Majesty's Theatre nor the Royal English Opera is likely to be in want of fuel to keep the lyric conflagration in a blaze. In addition to the operas with the names of which our readers are already acquainted—namely, the Amber Witch of Mr. Wallace, the Ruy Blas of Mr. Howard Glover, the Bride of Florence and Lambert Simnel of Mr. Frank Mori, &c., &c.—Herr Molique is busy at an opera, name not transpired; Mr. Henry Leslie is far advanced in an opera, name not transpired; Dr. Wylde has completed an opera, name not transpired; Mr. Benedict has finished one act of his Esmeralda, and more than a scene of his Colleen Bawn; Mr. Macfarren is already some way in the first act of an opera, name not transpired—not to mention his Prince of Modena, El Maleckor, both finished, and Hamlet, of which the overture has been heard; Mr. Aguilar has completed an opera, name not transpired; Mr. Henry Westrop has completed an opera, name not transpired; Mr. Charles Stevens has several operas finished, names not transpired; Mr. F. B. Jewson has completed an opera, name not transpired; Mr. Brinley Richards has completed an opera, name not transpired; Mr. Lindsay Sloper has completed an opera, name not transpired; and, to conclude, Mr. John Barnett and Mr. Henry Smart have completed an opera each, the name of the first Jesse, the name of the latter not transpired.

Digitized by Google

The Opera.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Queen Topaze has been withdrawn, and its place supplied by two acts of the Trovatore—a proof that Mr. E. T. Smith must be driven very hard for something new. Worse weather could not be imagined for play-going folks, but Her Majesty's Theatre, nevertheless, "holds her own"—to make use of an unmeaning vulgarism which would have transported Dr. Johnson and Southey out of their senses—among the Christmas attractions, thanks to the splendour and excellence of the pantomime rather than the beauty and novelty of the opera. Mr. Sims Reeves, we learn, will make his re-entrance on the 25th of January in, it is rumoured, Mr. Wallace's much expected Amber Witch.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA—Mr. Alfred Mellon's Victorine was revived on Monday, and given every night during the week, with Miss Louisa Pyne in place of Mlle. Parepa as the heroine. The new Victorine, we need hardly say, sings the music wonderfully, and is likely to realise for the opera a new lease of public favour. All the other parts, with the exception of Julian, given to Mr. Henry Wharton, in the absence of Mr. Santley, were the same as last season. Mr. Balfe's Bianca is at last announced. We trust the managers will reap no ill effect from the strange error committed in withdrawing so eminent a success at the onset.

Letters to the Editor.

A MINOR SCALE.

SIR,—I read, with curiosity and interest, some remarks in your last impression, signed "Philharmonic;" and as his query regarding the minor scale and its signatures is worthy of some consideration, you will perhaps pardon me if I address a line or two to you on the subject.

It is evident that "Philharmonic" must form his minor scale with the flattened sixth and sharpened seventh, both in ascending and descending, or his remark can have no pertinence whatever. Now, before we can entertain the question of "signatures," we must arrive at some definite conclusion respecting the construction of the minor scale. There can be no question but that this scale was originally formed from the ancient Æolian mode. It was modernised by a sharpening of the seventh grade, thus creating a leading note, which was deemed (and properly so) as necessary a portion of the minor mode as of the major. Now, my firm conviction is, that if this leading note be contradicted, we no longer have the minor mode, but modulate, for the time being, into what is generally known as the "relative major," or else retrogress into the Æolian mode. Assuming this to be correct, the leading note is at once established as a permanent grade of the minor mode. By what arbitrary law, then, are we to be compelled to digress when the scale descends? for I maintain (however this remark may be disputed) that the leading note has a governing property in determining a key, even when it does not ascend to its tonic, and that the chord generated from the flat seventh does not suggest the minor mode to the ear, but effectually contradicts it. Then, as to the sixth degree, I again ask, by what arbitrary law was it ever raised?—thus destroying the character, the identity of the minor and establishing in its stead a hybrid modern-major-and-ancient-Æolian mode, which can be defined by no manner of signature (without accidentals), and whose defects are as intolerable to the eye as to the ear. I say to the eye; for let any person examine an elaborate composition in the minor mode; let him behold the galaxy of accidentals, and see if they are not enough to frighten any but the most accomplished and practised musician. I say to the ear; for let him sound and examine the intervals of the ascending scale, and see if the effect of the two tritones (3-6 and 4-7) be not sufficient to compel him to apply his digital members to his auricular organs.

I know that the supporters of the aforesaid mongrel argue that the scale, such as I advocate, is wrong, "because it contains an interval greater than a tone," and "because it belongs to the chromatic, and not to the diatonic genus." To this I reply, that I take a scale to mean a gradation of sounds based on the harmonic chords of tonic, subdominant, dominant; that the minor chord of subdominant contains a minor third, and that of the dominant a major third, whether ascending or descending. Now in this sense I do not consider the augmented tone as a chromatic interval at all. Besides, I know no law which confines a scale to a so-called tone, so long as the notes are nominally contiguous; and, with regard to the derivation of the word "diatonic," it as much refers to an augmented tone as it does to a semitone. Rameau seemed exactly to "hit the difference" between the major and minor when he called the one "the scale with the great third and sixth," and the other "the scale with the little third and sixth."

Having endeavoured to establish the minor as a permanent scale, let me now approach the question of signatures; and, for the information of "Philharmonic," and others interested in the subject, I will first remark, that the minor scales, with their real signatures, have already been published, under the editorship of Dr. E. Bennett Gilbert, who has compiled them with much ability, has fingered them throughout, and has (in my opinion, with excellent judgment) connected each minor scale with its synonymous major, as opposed to the relative principle, thereby considerably facilitating their performance, as both notes and fingering become much easier by being thus compared. I have observed that the same gentleman has had the daring to use the real minor signature in his compositions; and I am convinced that if all composers who affirm the permanent principle of the minor scale would do likewise, the apparent difficulty would soon vanish; and that when our pupils ask us the very pertinent question, "How am I to know when a piece is in the major or minor mode?" we might be able to answer, "By its signature," instead of endeavouring to impart to the tyro abstruse explanations of modulation, &c. (which in nine cases to one they do not understand), and leaving them wondering, and still wondering.

I am afraid, Sir, that I have much trespassed upon your time and space, but trust the importance of the subject will appear sufficient excuse; and if these remarks should tend to enlist the expressed opinions of others more capable of pronouncing an opinion than myself, I shall not regret having troubled you with this communication.

I am, Sir, yours very faithfully,

W. C. FILBY.

23, Kensington Park Terrace, W.

NEW TABLET.

Tho' low the subject,
It deserves our palms.—SHAKSPEARE.

SIR,—The enclosed tablet is sent for your critical inspection; and with the hope that it may call forth a few remarks upon its utility in your invaluable "WORLD." I inserted the extract at the head of this paper, fearing that you might deem the whole affair too trivial for your notice. As my advertisement states, it has been designed to facilitate the learning of the indispensable "signatures," which have always more or less, inspired the juvenile votaries of Cæcilia with unnecessary terror.

I believe, Sir, you will readily acknowledge that what is rendered clear and comprehensible is, at the same time rendered attractive. If the same rule were applied to sundry "theories," we should have less polemical bitterness and more sound musicians.

Yours, very truly,
JOHN TOWERS.

[The new tablet has come to hand. It is a good tablet, but indescribable.—ED.]

PIANIST OR VIOLINIST—VIOLINIST OR PIANIST, &c.

SIR,—In your last No. of your estimated journal you inserted a letter signed "Amateur," a letters very curious indeed, upon the confusion of instrument; you allow us to observe to this "Amateur" that he is in the wrong to treat as an ignorant the chronicler of the journal of Birmingham, because in his letter he commits an error much ruder. He says:—

"We shall probably hear that the celebrated violinist, M. Thalberg, and the eminent pianist, Vieuxtemps, are about," &c

M. Vieuxtemps was never a pianist, but a VIOLINIST.

You will oblige us to insert these in your next No.

Your obedient,
DE LAVIGERIE, Sub-Editor of "le Gaulois."

[We are obliged to the sub-editor of Le Gaulois for his information. We have always believed that M. Vieuxtemps was a violinist, and what is more that M. Thalberg was a pianist.—ED. M. W.]

Digitized by Google

Provincial.

The first series of the Monday Popular Concerts in the provinces was inaugurated on Monday evening at GLASGOW, in the City Hall, with triumphant success. The following account is taken from the Morning Journal of Tuesday, and is given in full:—

"The lovers of classical music had a special treat last evening in the City Hall. In conjunction with Messrs. appell of London, the managers of a greatly successful series of Monday Evening Concerts in St. James's Hall, Mr. Muir Wood organised, for their delectation, a concert of first-class music on a scale, as near as may be, the same as those given in the metropolis. The artists who appeared were M. Vieuxtemps, one of the most finished violinists in the world; Signor Piatti, as famed on the violoncello; Herr Ries and M. Schreurs, second violin and viola, respectively; and Mr. Charles Hallé, the all-accomplished pianist. For the vocal department, Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington and Mr. Weiss were retained. Given such performers, and a programme selected from the works of Mozart, Beethoven, Bach, Dussek, Macfarren, and Wallace, and it needs no specially inspired prophet to foretell that the classicists would muster in force. The first piece of the evening was Mozart's quartet in G, No. 1, for violins first and second, viola and violoncello. It was, without doubt, an exquisite performance, and would have been enjoyed completely by the audience assembled but for the serious annoyance caused by late-comers marching up to their places, wherever situated, in the middle of the finest passages. Perhaps, on the whole, the greatest effect was produced by the opening morceau of Part Second, Dussek's sonata in B flat, Op. 69, No. 1, for violin and pianoforte, by M. Vieuxtemps and Mr. Charles Hallé. This was deliciously rendered, and the last movement, a particularly lively and melodious allegretto, unanimously redemanded. Mad. Sherrington, who was in excellent voice, taking the state of the atmosphere into consideration, sang a song of Dussek's, 'Name the glad day,' and Macfarren's 'Ah! why do we love?' in both of which she succeeded in calling down the plaudits of the house. Mr. Weiss gave Wallace's 'Bell-ringer,' and the buffo song, 'I'm a roamer,' from the beautiful little operetta, Son and Stranger, an offering made by the gifted Mendelssohn to his parents, according to old German custom, on their 'silver' wedding-day. We need scarcely say that our English basso was fully up in both efforts, and, had he responded to either of his encores with his own and Longfellow's 'Village blacksmith,' would have left nothing undone to secure our lasting admiration. The hall, we should mention, especially in the reserved seats, was well filled, taking into account the bitterly inclement weather, which we much fear must be playing sad havoc at present with the receipts of all lectures and entertainments whatsoever."

The Daily Mail and Bulletin are equally encomiastic, and chronicle the concert as one of the most eminent successes ever achieved in the City Hall. From all accounts the only drawback was the intense cold, over which, as one of the Glasgow critics most truthfully observed, Mr. Muir Wood had no possible control. The cold, nevertheless, did not keep the people away, since the hall was crowded by the beau monde of the "City o' the saut herring." In the opinion of the writer of the Daily Mail, "It was well that the merits of the performers justified applause, as a smart application of the feet to the floor had not only the effect of giving credit when it was due, but it also tended to keep in something like natural heat these cold extremities." But one expression infringing on that of unqualified gratification is indulged in by any of the critics. "Our only regret," writes the Daily Bulletin, "is, that financial considerations make it impossible to have frequent visits from the same company; meanwhile, we are none the less obliged to the Messrs. Muir Wood and Co., for allowing us to hear for ourselves the excellencies of an institution of which we have heard so much."

The first essay of the Monday Popular Concerts, in EDINBURGH, also proved eminently successful. The concert took place in the Music Hall, on Tuesday evening, and attracted a full attendance, all the reserved seats being occupied, a fact too significant to escape observation. The Edinburgh Evening Courant devotes a long notice to the performance, in which every person and thing meet almost unqualified praise. We say "almost," because in the case of Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, the writer, while bestowing the highest eulogium on the lady's talents and acquirements, and her great and varied qualifications both in opera and oratorio, points to "a slight foreign accent, and a more than slight foreign style," as blemishes. The fair artist will no doubt read this without annoyance, more particularly as she is described in the next paragraph "as complete mistress of florid vocalisation as she is of the plainer style," praise beyond which nothing well could go. The remaining artists—M. Vieuxtemps, Herr Ries, M. Schreurs, Sig. Piatti, Mr. Charles Hallé, and Mr. Weiss—are equally complimented, the great Belgian violinist, perhaps, coming in for the lion's share of the favour. This was but fair, as it was M. Vieuxtemps' first appearance in Edinburgh, and the journalist has not even trenched on exaggeration when he says "he possesses the highest qualifications which go to constitute a great player." At the third concert of the Edinburgh Musical Association, Mad. Devrient, the daughter of a citizen of Auld Reekie, made her first appearance in her native country, as a vocalist in the bravura school. Her performances were unequal, and, as she was labouring under the combined effects of nervousness and catarrh—two powerful enemies to correct vocalisation—her talents must not be adjudged by this appeal. The concert, as regards the instrumental part, was first rate, the principal pieces being Mendelssohn's A minor symphony, Beethoven's sonata for pianoforte in E flat (Op. 7), and the overtures to the Siege of Corinth (Rossini), and the Naiads (Prof. Sterndale Bennett). The estimate of Prof. Bennett's overture by our northern contemporary, the Edinburgh Courant, is somewhat peculiar. "The Naiads," he says, "is one of the composer's best orchestral works, and one, not only frequently played in London, but in high reputation in Germany. In structure it is more like a movement of a symphony than an overture; but, whatever its form, it is a composition which any musician might be proud to acknowledge." The pianist was Signor Cunio, a recent addition to the number of resident musicians in Edinburgh, whose execution of Beethoven's sonata was remarkable for its brilliancy, if for nothing else. The Saturday evening concerts appear to find great favour in the eyes, or rather ears, of the middle classes. "Scotch music" is all the rage, under which denomination, however, we cannot reckon Mendelssohn's A minor symphony, though called "Scotch;" much less subscribe to the heretical act of giving "the second, third, and part of the fourth movements," which we find chronicled in the public prints. Jullien's Caledonian quadrilles, and Henry Bishop's songs are more to the purpose.

From the Newcastle Daily Journal we learn of the further progress of the Monday Popular Concerts in the provinces.

"The concert given last evening," writes our contemporary, "in the New Town Hall, by the London Monday Concert Company, was a great success both in regard to the high quality of the music and the numbers of the audience. It is difficult to express the effect of the quartet, in G, No. 1, Mozart, with which the concert began. It was truly exquisite, as were others which space does not enable us to particularise, but which elicited expressions of intense feeling from all parts of the hall. Mad. Lemmens Sherrington, however, must be specially noticed; she was recalled every time she sang; and other artists received a similar expression of applause. The whole gave the greatest satisfaction to an audience which included many of the best musicians in the town. Mad. Sherrington and Mr. Weiss, it will be observed by advertisement, are to take part in the concert of the Sacred Harmonic Society next week."

Of the same performance the Daily Chronicle and Northern Counties Advertiser says:—"We never remember a programme containing more exquisite gems of composition, or rendered in higher and more finished style of art."

The Sheffield papers announce the success of Mr. Willott's new entertainment, "Photographic Lights and Shades" in the hands of Madame Lancia and Mr. Augustus Braham. The lady's singing and acting seem to have enlisted the unanimous favour of the inhabitants, the sharpness of whose judgment is almost as proverbial as that of their blades.

From a Bristol correspondent we learn that the Bristol and Clifton Harmonic Society gave their usual Christmas performance of Handel's Messiah, on Wednesday evening, December 26, in the Victoria Rooms, Clifton, which was densely crowded, there being upwards of three thousand people present. The following were the principal singers: Miss J. Wells, Miss M. Wells, Mr. Montem Smith, and Mr. Lambert, assisted by a full and complete band and chorus.

The third concert of Mr. Dyson's "Second Series of Popular Concerts" at Windsor, the same correspondent informs us, took place in the Town Hall, on Thursday evening, the 3rd instant. The vocalists were Miss Annie Cox, Mr. Dyson, and Mr. Lambert.

Digitized by Google

Evans' Cottage Harmonium at Six Guineas,

In a French Polished Pine Case, has the full compass, Five Octaves, and a soft, subdued agreeable quality of tone—designed expressly for a cottage or small sitting room.

Evans' Harmonium at Ten Guineas,

Is in a handsome French Polished Oak Case, and possesses that rich organ-like quality of tone so peculiar to all Evans' Instruments.

Evans' English Harmoniums.

An Illustrated Catalogue of the whole of these well-known Instruments, with one and two Rows of Keys, the Percussion Action and Pedals, at prices ranging from Six Guineas to 140 Guineas—may now be had upon application to the Manufacturers, BOOSEY AND CHING, Holles Street, London.

Case's Patent English Concertina,

As used by Signor Regondi and other eminent Professors, still maintain their pre-eminent position as Concert and Drawing-room Instruments. The Four Guinea Concertina has the Full Compass and Double-Action. The Patent Concert Concertina, in Amboyna or Bird's-Eye Maple, possesses every Modern Improvement that can possibly be introduced into the Concertina. A large stock of Second Hand Concertinas for Sale or Hire.

BOOSEY AND CHING, Manufacturers, 24 Holles Street, London.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.
London: 18 Hanover Square.

PIANOFORTE DUETS.

	s.	d.
BILLET (ALEXANDRE).
"Lucia de Lammermoor"	4	0
"Les Huguenots"	4	0
"La Traviata"	4	0
BRISSAC (JULES).
"Bigoletto" (transcription of the Quartet)	4	0
BRUNNER (C. T.)
"Martha"	3	0
CUNIO (ANGELO).
"La Sonnambula"	5	0
LEFEBURE (WELY).
"Hommage à Sa Majesté Napoleon III." (caprice militaire)	6	0
"Le retour de l'armee" (Marche triomphale)	6	0
LOUIS (N.)
"Fleurs Venitiennes." Trois mélodies Italiennes variées. No. 1 in G. 2 in C. 3 in B flat (each)	4	0
MAYER (CHARLES).
"The Royal Saxe-Coburg March"	4	0
ROUBIER (HENRI).
"Le depart du Zouave." (Grand Quadrille militaire)	4	0
RUMMEL (J.)
"La Favorita"	4	0
"I Lombardi"	4	0
SCHLOESSER (ADOLPHE).
"Don Juan" (Grand Duo)	6	0
"Terpsichore" (Duo de Salon)	6	0
WAGNER (R.)
March from Tannhauser, arranged by Theodore Mauss	5	0

The above duets are of a pleasing and popular character, and are adapted for moderately advanced performers.

London: Ashdown and Parry, 18 Hanover Square.

ROBERT COCKS AND CO.'S LIST OF NEW PIANO MUSIC.

NEW PIANO MUSIC, by W. VINCENT WALLACE:—La Luvisella, Neapolitan Melody, 3s.; Chorus of Dervishes, 3s.; Fantasia on the Ruins of Athens, 4s.; Good News from Home, varied, 3s.; Come where my Love lies Dreaming, 3.; Croyez-moi, romance, 2s. 6d.; The Shepherd's Roundelay, 4s.; March of the Volunteer Rifles, 2s. 6d.: La Plainte du Berger, 3s.

NEW PIANO MUSIC, by BRINLEY RICHARDS:—La Carolina, Souvenir de Naples, 3s.; Cherry Ripe, transcribed, 3s.; La Czarina, Mazurka de Salon, 3s.; Le Carneval de Venise, 3s.; Louisa, Nocturne, 3s.; The Young Recruit, solo, 2s. 6d., duet, 3s., as a march, 2s. 6d.; The Plough Boy, 3s.; The Gipsy's Life, 3s..

NEW PIANO MUSIC, by G. F. WEST: Santa Lucia, Neapolitan Air, 3.; Fra Poco, 3s.; Fantasia on Lucia di Lammermoor, 3s., Robert, toi que j'aime, 3s.; Perchè non ho, 3s.; Ah! che la Morte, 3s.; Qui la voce; 3s.; Fantasia on Les Huguenots, 3s.

THE COLLEEN BAWN QUADRILLE, dedicated to Mrs. Dion Boucicault, finely illustrated, 4s.
"A spirited quadrille, founded on some of the most popular of the inexhaustible melodies of Ireland."—Illustrated Times.

London: ROBERT COCKS and Co., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, W., and of all Musicsellers.

THE ORATORY, BROMPTON, LONDON, S.W.—CHOIR OF THE ORATORY.—Parents or Guardians who wish to present Boys as Candidates for admission to the Choir of the Oratory, must apply by letter only, to the Rev. Fr. Gloag, at the above address. The Boys are placed under the care of one of the Fathers of the Oratory, and receive a good English Education, besides Instruction in Music. Their Education, Board, Lodging, and Clothing, are entirely free. They are brought up strictly in the Catholic Faith. Candidates will be chosen solely according to Musical capabilities, united with good character; so that unless a Boy's Qualifications satisfy a somewhat high standard, he will not be likely to succeed.

LETTS' APPOINTMENT DIARY, price 2s. 6d. in roan tuck pocket-book. An hourly arrangement of each day, to enable Professors and Teachers of Music to regulate their engagements exactly. This book originated with one of the greatest Vocalists of the day.
Sold by all Booksellers. Descriptive catalogue, gratis.
Letts, Son & Co., Publishers 8, Royal Exchange.

COUNTRY SITUATION.—Wanted, for LIVERPOOL, a Young Man, of good address and unexceptionable references, to undertake the management of a Sheet Music and Instrument Warehouse. Would be required to have a knowledge of the pianoforte.
Address, stating salary expected, &c., &c., E. Nelson, 63a Mount Pleasant, Liverpool.

GLEES, MADRIGALS, and OLD BALLADS.—DUDLEY GALLERY, EGYPTIAN HALL.—Last Three Weeks of THE LONDON GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION, under the direction of Mr. LAND. Miss J. WELLS and Miss EYLES, Mr. BAXTER, Mr. CUMMINGS, Mr. LAND, and Mr. LAWLER, with Literary Illustrations by J. OLIPHANT, ESQ., every evening (Saturday excepted) at half past 8, and on Monday, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday mornings at half-past 3.
Reserved seats, 3s.; unreserved, 2s. A few Fauteuils, 5s. each, to be obtained at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33 Old Bond Street, W.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, January 12, 1861.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 39—No. 3 SATURDAY, JANUARY 19, 1861 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped.

MR. HULLAH.—A strong desire has been manifested in various influential quarters to render some service and encouragement to Mr. Hullah, late of St. Martin's Hall, at a very trying period of his life. With the view of consolidating this general feeling of goodwill towards a gentleman who has faithfully devoted many years and many acquirements and energies to an important branch of public education, and whose labours have now to be begun again, the following Committee has been formed, with power to add to its number:—

CHARLES DICKENS, Esq., Gadshill, near Rochester, Kent, Chairman.
The Most Noble the Marquis of Lansdowne, Bowood, Wilts.
The Right Hon. the Earl Nelson, Trafalgar, Wilts.
The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Winchester.
The Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P., Chancellor of the Exchequer.
The Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood, 31 Great George Street, S.W.
The Right Hon. Sir J. T. Coleridge, Knt., Heath's Court, Ottery St. Mary, Devon.
Sir James P. Kay Shuttleworth, Bart., 38 Gloucester Square, Hyde Park, W.
The Very Rev. R. C. Trench, D.D., Dean of Westminster, Dean's Yard, S.W.
The Very Rev. Henry Alford, B.D., Dean of Canterbury.
The Very Rev. A. P. Saunders, D.D., Dean of Peterborough.
A. W. Blomfield, Esq., 8 St. Martin's Place, W.C.
W. Butterfield, Esq., 4 Adam Street, Adelphi, W.C.
R. K. Burstall, Esq., 15 Hanover Street, Long Acre, W.C.
The Rev. G. Currey, Charterhouse, E.C.
The Rev. Samuel Clark, the College, Battersea, S.W.
Harry Chester, Esq., 63 Rutland Gate, S.W.
J. D. Coleridge, Esq., 3 King's Bench Walk, Temple, E.C.
The Rev. Derwent Coleridge, St. Mark's College, Chelsea, S.W.
The Rev. R. Elwyn, Charterhouse, E.C.
Edward Foster, Esq., 220 Marylebone Road, N.W.
Edward J. Fraser, Esq., 26 Craven Street, Charing Cross, W.C.
The Rev. J. H. Gurney, 3 Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W.
James Humphry, Esq., 69 Cannon Street West, E.C.
H. C. Hextall, Esq., 145 Cheapside, E.C.
T. H. Headland, Esq., 9 Heathcote Street, W.C.
The Rev. R. W. Jelf, D.D., King's College, London.
The Rev. C. Kingsley, Eversley Rectory, Winchfield.
The Rev. Joan Lawrell, 388 City Road, E.C.
The Rev. H. W. Phillott, Staunton-on-Wye, Herefordshire.
The Rev. E. H. Plumptre, King's College, W.C.
Geo. T. Porter, Esq., 4 Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W.
Geo. Richmond, Esq., 10 York Street, Portman Square, W.
The Rev. Dr. Rowden, Chichester.
The Rev. John Slatter, Rose Hill, Oxford.
Dr. Storrar, Heathside, Hampstead.
E. C. Tuffnell, Esq., 26 Lowndes Square, S.W.
H. Wedgwood, Esq., 6 Queen Anne Street, W.
The Rev. A. Wilson, National Society's Office, Sanctuary, Westminster, S.W.

Subscriptions will be received on behalf of the Committee by any member of the Committee; or by Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand; or Messrs. Glyn and Co., Lombard Street, London.

The Committee are already enabled to announce the following subscriptions:—

	£	s.	d.
The Marquis of Lansdowne	100	0	0
The Chancellor of the Exchequer	50	0	0
Sir J. P. Kay Shuttleworth, Bart.	50	0	0
A. Hobhouse, esq.	50	0	0
G. Richmond, esq.	25	0	0
S. Pitts, esq.	10	0	0
C. Dickens, esq.	10	0	0
E. C. Tuffnell, esq.	5	0	0
Rev. E. H. Plumptre	5	0	0
E. Foster, esq.	100	0	0
H. Wedgwood, esq.	25	0	0
E. Raphael, esq.	5	0	0
Harry Chester, esq.	21	0	0
Rev. F. D. Maurice	10	0	0
H. C. Hextall, esq.	50	0	0
W. Butterfield, esq.	25	0	0
T. H. Farrer, esq.	10	0	0
J. Humphry, esq.	25	0	0
E. J. Fraser, esq.	25	0	0
E. B. Denison, esq. Q.C.	10	0	0
A. W. Blomfield, esq.	5	0	0
Rev. D. Coleridge	10	0	0
Rev. T. Helmore	5	0	0
Alex. Carr, esq.	5	0	0
Rev. S. Clark	10	0	0
Rev. Muirhead Mitchell	25	0	0
C. Wentworth Dilke, esq.	10	0	0
Rev. Thomas Astley Cock, King's College, London	20	0	0
S. Servanté, esq.	5	0	0
Rev. R. Elwyn	10	0	0
Rev. G. Currey	10	0	0
E. W.	1	1	0
Rev. F. H. Gray	2	2	0
Rev. E. Brown	20	0	0
E. A. Darwin, esq.	10	0	0
Rev. John Keble and Mrs. Keble	20	0	0
The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells (Lord Auckland)	10	0	0
The Right Hon. Sir J. T. Coleridge	21	0	0
J. D. Coleridge, esq.	10	0	0
T. M. Bridge, esq.	5	0	0
The Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood	50	0	0
Rev. F. Poynder	10	0	0
Rev. C. R. Dicken	2	2	0
Rev. J. H. Gurney	10	0	0
The Right Hon. the Earl Nelson	25	0	0
H. F. Chorley, esq.	20	0	0
A. Keightley, esq.	5	0	0
R. K. Burstall, esq.	5	0	0
John Green, esq.	5	5	0
R. Johnson, esq.	3	3	0
George Martin, esq.	3	3	0
Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew	2	0	0
J. L. Boothby, esq.	1	1	0
W. R. Massaroom, esq.	1	1	0
Sir Thos. Dyke Acland, Bart.	10	0	0
Rev. T. Williams	3	3	0
Rev. C. F. Eastburn	2	2	0
Rev. W. Benham	2	2	0
Mr. J. J. Mercier	1	1	0
Mr. A. C. Daymond	1	1	0
Mr. A. C. King	2	2	0
Miss Edith Coleridge	2	0	0
The Dean of Ely	5	0	0
Mr. J. Merriman	1	0	0
Mr. Birdseye	1	1	0
A. T. Jones, esq.	10	10	6
Mrs. Blomfield	5	0	0
Rev. A. G. Blomfield	5	0	0
Mr. H. T. Parker, Leipzig	1	1	0
W. Reed, esq.	5	5	0
George T. Porter, esq.	5	5	0
A. Kekewich, esq.	5	1	0
Miss Grove	1	1	0
Miss L. Grove	1	1	0
Rev. D. A. Beaufort	1	0	0
M. Bezeth, esq.	5	0	0
L. Hinton, esq.	5	0	0
B. W. Procter, esq.	10	0	0
Anonymous	5	0	0
The Dean of Canterbury	10	0	0
Ven. Archdeacon Harrison	10	0	0
Earl of Leven and Melville	10	10	0
Chas. J. Cross, esq.	1	0	0
Dr. and Mrs. Storrar	3	3	0
W. Oke Manning, esq.	5	0	0
Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Winchester	10	0	0
Dr. Babington	5	0	0
Sir Henry Dryden, bart.	20	0	0
Chas. E. Mudie, esq.	10	10	0
Alphonse Mariette, esq.	3	0	0
The Lady Hatherton	10	0	0
The Lord Lyttleton	2	0	0
Sir Walter C. James, Bart.	40	0	0
Lady James	10	0	0
Roundell Palmer, esq. Q.C.	20	0	0
Messrs. John Broadwood and Sons	50	0	0
Thos. Watson, esq. M.D.	10	0	0
R. Shum, esq.	1	1	0
John Ruskin, esq.	25	0	0
S. W. Wayley, esq.	5	5	0
Dr. Dyster	5	0	0
S. Lahee, esq.	1	1	0
Mr. R. Sharp, esq.	2	0	0
L. Raphael, esq.	5	0	0
Rev. T. N. Staley	5	0	0
S. Frost Newcombe, esq.	5	0	0
Sir C. Eastlake	5	0	0
Rev. John Curwen	5	5	0
F. H. Dickenson, esq.	10	0	0
Mrs. Botfield	10	0	0
E. & A. D.	5	0	0
Vincent S. Lean, esq.	2	2	0
J. G. Hubbard, esq.	10	0	0
Mrs. Foster	50	0	0
Henry Foster, esq.	20	0	0
Chas. Duncan, esq.	25	0	0
Wm. Foster, esq.	20	0	0
Rev. J. P. Ferguson	1	0	0
Rev. John Lawrell	5	5	0
W. Langton, esq.	2	0	0
Chas. Percival, esq.	5	0	0
Rev. Robt. Jenkins	3	3	0
The Venerable Archdeacon Sinclair	5	0	0
Thos. Griffith, esq.	5	5	0
Rev. John Slatter	10	0	0
The Lord Belper	50	0	0
The Hon. Misses A. & F. Strutt	10	0	0
W. M. James, esq., Q.C.	5	0	0
Mrs. W. M James	5	0	0
James Dixon, esq.	1	1	0
Richd. Alchin, esq.	50	0	0
W. S. Johnson, esq.	2	0	0
Miss H. Bradshaw	2	2	0
Miss M. Bradshaw	5	5	0
The Dean of Peterborough	5	0	0

E. J. FRASER, Hon. Sec.

No. 26 Craven Street, Charing Cross, W.C.

MADAME CATHERINE HAYES (assisted by Miss LASCELLES, Mr. TENNANT and Signor BURDINI; violin, Herr BECKER; conductor and soloist, Mr. FRANCESCO BERGER), will make a Tour in Ireland, commencing in February. Applications relative to engagements to be addressed to Mr. TENNANT, 307 Oxford Street, New Bond Street, W.

SIGNOR and MADAME FERRARI beg to inform their pupils and friends they have REMOVED to 32 Gloucester Terrace, Hyde Park, W.

MR. and MRS. LOCKEY beg to inform their Friends, Pupils, and the Public, they have removed to Prospect Villas, Forest Hill, S.E.

MR. and MADAME R. SIDNEY PRATTEN beg to announce, that they have removed to 38 Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, W., where they will continue to give lessons on the Flute, Guitar, and Concertina.

MISS AUGUSTA THOMSON begs to announce that she has REMOVED to 38 Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, W.

MR. GEORGE FORBES begs to inform his Friends and Pupils that he has REMOVED to 22 PORTSDOWN ROAD, Maida Hill, W.

MUSARD'S celebrated BAND, from PARIS, at ST. JAMES'S HALL. M. MUSARD begs to announce that he will give a series of PROMENADE CONCERTS at the above Hall, commencing on Saturday evening, 2nd February next.

GLEES, MADRIGALS, and OLD BALLADS.—DUDLEY GALLERY, EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY.—Last Week but One. It is respectfully announced that the performances of THE LONDON GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION—Miss J. WELLS and Miss EYLES, Mr. BAXTER, Mr. W. CUMMINGS, Mr. LAND, and Mr. LAWLER, under the direction of Mr. LAND, with Literary Notices by J. OLIPHANT, Esq., will be continued, for a Fortnight only, every evening (Saturday excepted), and on Monday, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday mornings, terminating positively on Saturday, February 2nd. Evening, at half past 8; morning, at half-past 3.

Reserved seats, 3s.; unreserved, 2s. A few Fauteuils, 5s. each, to be obtained at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33 Old Bond Street, W.

Digitized by Google

NEW PUBLICATIONS
OF
DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.,
244 REGENT STREET. (JUST OUT.)

"SCHOTTISH D'AMOUR," by EUGENE MONIOT. Composer of "A Summer's Day," for the piano, price 2s, (Orchestral parts, 5s.)

"SANTA LUCIA," by EUGENE MONIOT, Neapolitan melody, arranged (without octaves), for young pianists, by Eugène Moniot, price 1s.

R. F. HARVEY'S NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
"Cupid's Repose" (Melody)	2	0
"Pensez à moi" (Rêverie)	3	0

"THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER," as a Piano Duet, arranged with variations by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew. Price 3s.

NEW SONG—"That Handsome Volunteer," sung by Miss Emma Stanley in her popular entertainment of the "Seven Ages of Woman," composed especially for her by Emile Berger, price 2s. 6d. (Sung also by Miss Catharine Lucette, in her original entertainment, and Captain Morton Price, at the Prince of Wales's Hall, Regent Street, and by Mr. A. J. Sutton, of Birmingham.

BALFE'S NEWEST and most POPULAR SONGS.

	s.	d.
"I love you" (Sung by Sims Reeves)	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose" (Ditto)	3	0
"If I could change as others change" (Sung by Laura Baxter)	2	6
"I'm not in love, remember" (Sung by Miss Parepa)	2	6
"Oh! take me to thy heart again" (Sung by Miss Poole)	2	0

"GOOD NIGHT," (Cradle Song—Wiegenlied) composed by ALEXANDER REICHARDT, price 2s. 6d.

A SONG FOR THE SEASON.—"THE CHRISTMAS ROSE." (Poetry by M. A. STODART.) Composed by LOVELL PHILLIPS. Price 2s. 6d.

NEW HARP MUSIC by C. OBERTHUR, "Thou art so near and yet so far." Reichardt's popular song transcribed for the Harp by C. Oberthür. Price 3s.

MR. WEISS'S NEW SONG—"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL." (Poetry by J. P. DOUGLAS.) Composed and sung by Mr. W. H. WEISS. Price 3s.

NEW BALLAD.—"IN A LEAFY GARDEN," by GEORGE LODER. Sung with great success by Mr. RICHARD SEYMOUR, is just published, price 2s. 6d.

"MAY."—New Duettino for equal Voices, by HENRY SMART. Price 2s. 6d.

NEW ORGAN MUSIC by HENRY SMART.—"Fugue in E minor," from Handel's "Lessons." Arranged for the Organ by HENRY SMART. Price 3s.

"THIS WORLD IS A GARDEN."—Song by GEORGE LODER. Words by J. STIRLING COYNE. Sung every evening by Mr. ROUSE, and enthusiastically encored, at the Lyceum Theatre, in the successful Operetta of "THE PETS OF THE PARTERRE." Price 3s.

NEW WALTZ, "The Woman in White," Valse mystérieuse, by Charles Marriott, dedicated to Wilkie Collins, Esq. Price 4s.

MEYERBEER'S ROYAL WEDDING MARCH (Quatrième Marche aux Flambeaux), composed in honour of the Marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, which was played with such immense effect by the Band of the Guides at the Fête of the Orphéonistes at the Crystal Palace, is published for the Pianoforte, price 5s.

"FRESH AS A ROSE," sung by SIMS REEVES, and enthusiastically encored at Mr HOWARD GLOVER'S Concert, St. James's Hall, was composed expressly for the occasion by BALFE, and is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

WALLWORTH'S ART OF SINGING. Second Edition, just out, full music size, price 7s. A new and modern method for cultivating the Voice, and for gaining a perfect vocalisation—a practical work—Contains 35 pages of music. With a true method of acquiring the Shake, now for the first time introduced in a Singing Tutor. By T. A. WALLWORTH, Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.

Published by A. W. Hammond (late Jullien), 214 Regent Street; and may also be had of the Au hor at his residence, 81 Park Street, Grosvenor Square, W., where Pupils are also received.

TO BE PUBLISHED BY SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MUSIC, a new work; being three Essays which appeared in the MUSICAL WORLD. By JOSEPH GODDARD. Orders of the MUSICAL WORLD and the Public, wishing to encourage the publication of the above, may do so by forwarding their names to Mr. J. GODDARD, 3 St. Paul's Crescent, Camden Square, N.W. Price 5s. For further particulars, see the MUSICAL WORLD of Jan. 19th, 1860.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY'S PUBLICATIONS.

JOHN FIELD'S SIX CELEBRATED NOCTURNES. Edited by FRANZ LISZT. Price 2s. each.

"Each of these Nocturnes is a model that the student may examine to his advantage. They are less suited as a whole for the capricious player than for those who, having acquired a certain command of the instrument, possess a taste too good to be satisfied with common airs, which grow into absolute irksomeness by a string of still more common variations. It is, therefore, to pianoforte players who admire the products of a fertile imagination, regulated by a correct taste, that these Nocturnes will be always welcome."—The Critic.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

SCHUBERT'S IMPROMPTU in B Flat (played by Mr. Charles Hallé). Price 3s. 6d.

"The impromptu in B flat presents capital practice for the moderately advanced performer, and abounds with passages that will be sure to enchain the cultivated ear, and delight the refined taste."—The Critic.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

SCHUBERT'S IMPROMPTU in E flat. Price 4s.

"The theme is florid yet light; the episode gives scope for expression in cantabile phrases, set off according to the modern fashion. This is a piece to attempt in public without being too difficult for amateurs."—Athenæum.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE KULLAK. LES ARPEGES. Price 5s,

"After the exhibitions of mere difficulty, dissonance, and noise adopted by many pianoforte writers of the day, it is grateful to come in contact with music that embodies such skill in construction that a great end may be achieved by tolerably facile means. Those who are ambitious to soar beyond the commonplace may find in this something to aid their flight."—The Critic.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

E. SILAS. TARENTELLE. Price 4s.

"Scarcely any kind of composition has found more votaries among the highest musicians than that of the Tarentelle; Auber, Rossini, Chopin, Stephen Heller, Pauer, have all contributed to it from the rich stores of their imagination, and this of M. Silas may fairly take its place by the side of any of them for its strength and originality. It has the wildness and rollicking vivacity so characteristic of the dance, with a certain roughness that is not unpleasing, and gives it considerable force and vigour. It is a piece that will certainly become popular, the more so, as while being effective and striking, it has the advantage of not being overwhelmingly difficult."—Manchester Guardian.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. LISZT'S Arrangement of the MARCH from Richard Wagner's "Tannhäuser." Price 4s.

"Liszt's arrangement is in his own usual excellent style. He treats the air as a jeweller would a precious gem, surrounding it with a setting, rich, varied, and brilliant, in admirable taste and keeping, from which the subject stands out clear and well defined. It does not present any especial difficulty to a good performer, and is a highly effective, brilliant piece."—Manchester Guardian.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. LISZT'S SOIREES DE VIENNE. Nine Valses-Caprices. Price 3s. to 5s. each.

These celebrated Caprices, on Waltzes of Franz Schubert, have been played with extraordinary success by Mr. Charles Hallé, Herr Rubinstein and other distinguished pianists.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. ERGMANN'S RONDO APPASSIONATO. Dédié à Madame Davison, née Goddard. Price 4s.

"The theme of this Rondo is spirited and biting, a thing to tempt a pianist who commands humour and piquancy."—Athenæum.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. ERGMANN'S REMINISCENCES D'OBERON. Price 3s,

"Overdone, as we are, with arrangements of operatic airs, it is quite refreshing to meet with any so good as these "Reminiscences" of M. Ergmann. Although easy enough to make scarcely any pretensions beyond being a school piece, it is so well written,—the subjects are managed with so much grace and finish, there is so much spirit and variety in it, that the composer may well expect it to become extensively popular. It is founded on three of the favourite airs of Weber's charming opera, two of which are most ingeniously interwoven together."—Manchester Guardian.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN AND PARRY

(Successors to Wessel and Co.),

18 HANOVER SQUARE.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"The Knights of the Cross"—words by J. F. WALTER, music by CHARLES OBERTHUR (author)—is a very good trio for soprano, tenor and bass, with the advantage, too, of a German version of the text (by Dr. H. J. Marc), which will be specially acceptable to (German) purchasers. Herr Oberthur is evidently a disciple of the Spohr school of harmony, and (as may be seen in the third bar) admires Mendelssohn's two-part song, "Oh, would that my love could silently flow." His taste is commendable.

"The Erl King's Kiss"—words by E. FITZBALL, music by JULES BENEDICT (Boosey and Sons)—is a composition full of passion, dramatic sentiment and vigorous harmony. A German version of the text, however, would be specially acceptable to (English) purchasers, desirous of understanding the vernacular of Mr. Fitzball, who tells us (among other matters) that "The Erl King hath come with snow-blanched hair."

From among several miscellaneously-rhetorical flowers or flourishes, dedicated to the grimly wood-fiend's victim, the following, inter alias, are worth unearthing:—

"Her blue eye is clos'd to the moon's cold beam,
Her loose hair is lock'd in the frozen stream,
Her brow is wreath'd with mortal pain,
Like one that hath struggl'd and cried in vain," &c.

The pith of the story is that her "false craven lover" having left her "unsought 'neath their trysting-tree," the Erl king takes his place and gives her a kiss, whereby she straightway becomes his "daughter" (Lady—— King?) The catastrophe is recorded by Mr. Fitzball in verse not easy to measure:—

"They've cover'd her over with cloth of pall,
They've carried her home to her father's hall,
They've braided the dark cypress round her hair,
The Earl king hath kiss'd her, the maiden is dead."

"Dead" is a bold rhyme to "hair."

"Autumn Leaves, why should ye perish?"—words by C. R. BROWN, music by T. M. MUDIE (Wood, Edinburgh; J. Muir Wood, Glasgow); "Far, far away" Ditto; (same publisher); "The Young Pilgrim,"—words by VEITCH, music by T. M. MUDIE (R. Mills), are charming songs all three (lying in each instance within the compass of ordinary voices)—the poetry admirably read, the melody graceful and unaffected, the accompaniment neat and finished to a degree. Our choice among the three, if compelled to adventure a preference, would be given to "Far, far away," the expressive elegance of which is still further enhanced by the interesting variety which Mr. Mudie has thrown into the accompaniment; though, probably, its companions ("The Young Pilgrim" especially) in the matter of "recherché" harmony and modulation would (by musicians) be awarded the palm. How is it that none of Mr. Mudie's songs are ever heard at the Monday Popular Concerts?

"Pour les Attraits"—by W. KUHE (Hopwood and Crewe).—Herr Kuhe styles this pretty and well-written piece, "villanelle, transcrite pour le piano;" from which we are led to suppose the melody upon which it has been constructed is not of his own invention. The arpeggios of the introduction may induce amateurs to look for the willow-song in Rossini's Otello; but they will look in vain. Nevertheless, that the clever German pianist has laid hold of an attractive theme for his "villanelle" (which, appearing at the beginning of the new year, might more appropriately, and perhaps more intelligibly, have been entitled Pour les Etrennes"), a very brief extract is enough to prove;—

On the other hand, if not his own subject, why has Herr Kuhe withheld the name of the composer? Why did he not remember not to forget (to be plain) that the composer of the opera of Marie Stuart was one Niedermeyer? The tune of "Auld lang syne," in the major key, at once conjures up the remembrance of this same Niedermeyer's most popular effort—his terribly hacknied "villanelle," which Herr Kuhe's publishers—

Not Herr Kuhe
We are sure—

(as good a rhyme as hair and dead) would seem to desire should pass for Herr Kuhe's, instead of this same Niedermeyer's. Fi donc!

"Buckley's American Melodies"—composed and arranged for the pianoforte by FREDERICK BUCKLEY (Hopwood and Crewe).—Of these we have received seven—viz., "The lily was the only flower," "Our youthful days have vanished," "The Queen of the Dell," "I'd choose to be a daisy," "The grave of little Bell," "Ella Leene," and "Where are my schoolmates gone?"—the salient characteristics of one and all of which have been sufficiently acknowledged by the public to spare us the task of describing them. All we need add is that, in their way, they fully merit the favour they have met with; that a prettier tune than "Ella Leene," a more graceful (and vocal) one than "Our youthful days have vanished" (which has genuine sentiment, unaccompanied by the faintest hint at maudlin), a merrier one than "The Queen of the Dell," or, in a certain sense, a more original and piquant one than "The grave of little Bell" could not be desired; and that (a golden recommendation) whether as regards the pianoforte accompaniments, or the arrangement of the voice-parts in the choral refrains, Mr. Frederick Buckley has afforded clear evidence of the fact that he is a musician of taste as well as acquirement.

"Come then, John, the Soldier Band," words by D. CARTER, music by W. T. BELCHER (Belcher, Birmingham; Jewell, London). "The Rainy Day," words by H. W. LONGFELLOW, music by "MINA" (Simpson). "A Friend in time of Need," words by ADOLPHUS J. MANSFIELD, music by EDWARD CLARE (ditto). "Dred, the Slave Prophet of the Dismal Swamp," descriptive scene, words by H. W. LONGFELLOW, music by PROFESSOR CLARE (ditto). "Nelly New," negro song, words and music by PROFESSOR CLARE (ditto). "Poor Jumbo is dead" (songs of the coloured opera troupe); "We parted in the Corn-fields" ("Ballads of the Ohio Minstrels");—edited by PROFESSOR CLARE (Holdernesse). "Serenade Fantasia" ("Come into the garden, Maude"—pianoforte, by F. BEYER), ditto. Also, Simpson. "Grand March, dedicated to the Glasgow Rifle Corps, JOHN FLETCHER (Wood and J. M. Wood, Edinburgh and Glasgow).

Little more is necessary than to acknowledge the receipt of the above vocal and instrumental pieces. Mr. Belcher's song is energetic but commonplace. "Mina" has found a graceful, if not over fresh melody, for Professor Longfellow's

Digitized by Google

"Rainy Day," in which the "common fate of all" is so epigrammatically embodied. Professor Clare's music to "Dred" is neither so attractive nor so finished as Professor Longfellow's poetry; nor is his "Nelly Now" so new or so racy as the specimens he has edited of the nigger-melody of the Ohio Minstrels and coloured Opera Truope; while least of all prepossessing, is his "Friend in Need," with its E natural in the second bar at the top of page 3, and its equally unpleasant progression from D major to the dominant flat seventh on F natural (the melody considered), in the last bar of the third line, same page. The "Grand Glasgow Rifle March" of Mr. John Fulcher, may be dismissed with much the same criticism as we have already applied to Mr. Belcher's martial song.

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY.

PIANOFORTE.

ERGMANN.—A Rondo Appassionato.
FIELD, J.—Six Nocturnes.
KULLAK, T.—Les Arpèges.
LISZT, F.—March from "Tannhäuser."
SCHUBERT, F.—Impromptu in B flat.
Ditto ditto E flat.
SILAS, E.—Tarentelle.

ANDREWS (Manchester).

VOCAL.

ANDREWS, R.—"A happy Christmas."
"Gentle maids in time beware."
"The Christmas Hymn."
"Thee will I love."
"The Hymn for Christmas."
"Therefore with angels."

ROBERT COCKS AND CO.

PIANOFORTE.

ADELBERG, L.—"La Mazureska."
PURKESS, J.—"The O. D. C. Polka."
RICHARDS, B.—"Louise Nocturne."
Ditto "La Czarina Waltz."

VOCAL.

CHERRY, J. W.—"Away, vain dreams."
WRIGHTON, W. T.—"Thy voice is near."

DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.

PIANOFORTE.

LISZT, F.—"L'Etoile du Soir," from "Tannhäuser."

VOCAL.

BALFE, W. W.—"Fresh as a Rose."
LODER, G.—"This world is a Garden."
Ditto "In a Leafy Garden."
SMART, H.—"May." Duettino.
WEISS, W. H.—"The Knight's Vigil."

NEW OPERA OF AUBER AND SCRIBE.—Letters (private) from Paris speak in raptures of the music of Auber's new opera, now rehearsing at the Opéra Comique. The most gifted of French musicians is said to have exhibited all the vigour and freshness of his early or middle periods. A new masterpiece is confidently expected. The singers and the members of the orchestra are unanimous in their enthusiasm about the work. Tant mieux.

MUSICAL PITCH.—The depression of the musical pitch by a quarter of a tone, adopted in the Parisian orchestras, has now been put in practice, for the first time, in Germany, at Cologne. The Concert Society of that city have lowered the pitch of all the instruments of their orchestra, and the effect is said to be completely satisfactory. The stringed instruments have lost nothing of their sonority, and the change is found to be a great boon to the singers. London stands as much in need of reform in this respect as any place whatever. The inconveniences of the present pitch are loudly and generally complained of, and yet the attempt made last year by the Society of Arts to remedy the evil has apparently been allowed to fall entirely to the ground.—Spectator.

ON DITS.—M. de Morny is declared to be the composer of the last new operetta at the Bouffes; and a well-known ministerial writer is to be the subject of a forthcoming play, now being rehearsed, at the Français. Some people declare that the Count had a notion of conducting the orchestra as well, but that the house was not large enough to make the experiment worth while.

SUICIDE OF ONE OF CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS.—The banjo player of the Christy's Minstrels, Thomas Lye, cut his throat on the 5th instant.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent).

Wednesday, 16th January.

SINCE my last there has been an important début at the Grand Opera—that of M. Labat (formerly Professor of History at the Academy of Music), in the part of Eleazar, in the Juive. The attempt was an ambitious one, and it is not surprising if the result has not proved entirely satisfactory. M. Labat has undoubtedly a fine organ, but lacks both skill and experience in the use of it. His most successful efforts were in the more energetic parts, such as the trio in which the curse is pronounced. As a whole, however, the performance was weak. On the following evening the sisters Marchisio reappeared for the first time since their tour in the provinces. The opera was, as a matter of course, Semiramis, their celebrated duo in which produced the same electrical effect on the audience as when the exquisite blending of the sisters' voices, and the delicate precision of their execution, was a fresh sensation. I told you of the new measure which so handsomely regulates the emoluments of authors and composers producing works at the Imperial Opera. The artists have had no less reason to be pleased with the new order of things, in a financial respect, which inaugurates the new year. It had in the first instance been contemplated to present a new year's gift of 500 fr. to every one of the performers, dancers, and other artists engaged on the enormous establishment of the first lyrical stage in France; but Count Walewski, who is the Jupiter of the canvas firmament of the opera, has with great wisdom judged that a progressive increase of salary would be a more dignified form of expressing the Imperial appreciation of operatic performances, while an immediate saving to the coffers of the state would result by spreading the intended new year's gift over a period of five years, and reducing the future annual gifts by 100 fr. each year. Accordingly, from the 1st of January, the salaries of all the artists of the Grand Opera are to be raised 100 fr. every year for five years. Apropos of new year's gifts, Mlle. Emma Livry, the celebrated danseuse who has so recently achieved so remarkable a choregraphic triumph in Mad. Taglioni's ballet, Le Papillon, has received from another potentate, the Emperor of Moneybags, M. Rothschild, a magnificent diamond brooch, which may now be seen nightly darting out its myriad scintillations from the panting bosom of Mlle. Livry, more especially in the Valse des Rayons.

At the Italian Opera they have been busy for some time getting up Verdi's new opera, Un Ballo in Maschera. Great expectations are entertained of the master's latest work, and a few nights ago Mad. Grisi and Signor Badiali sang several fragments from it at Rossini's house, which were pronounced fully worthy the genius of Verdi.

At the Opéra Comique M. Offenbach's new opera of Barkouf, whereof I gave you some account in my last, has, after a short suspension, during which it has undergone vigorous reduction, again taken its place in the bills, where, notwithstanding the galling fire of criticism which has been opened upon the composer and all his works, it will probably continue some little time longer. Meanwhile, the new opera by those glorious veterans and heroes of a hundred dramatic and lyrical victories, Auber and Scribe, is being busily got on with. Its title is to be La Circassiene, and it is reported on good authority to be on a par with the best works of the ever-verdant composer. Auber is the Palmerston of the lyrical stage, and, like him, has managed to keep ahead, of old time, and save his youthful elasticity from the old fellow's stiffening clutch. If any reader should here remark that Auber has made a special study of beating time, I shall not dispute the priority of so obvious a quibble with him, but will endeavour to trump him by observing that in like manner our prime minister, so long as he is minister, will never lose his prime.

There have been two novelties at the Bouffes Parisiens. One is an operetta by M. de St. Rémy, the libretto of which is by MM. Léon Halévy and de Servière. It is entitled Le Mari sans le savoir, and the plot turns on a will, by which a certain Chamaroux, while away in the colonies, is requested to marry the daughter of the testator, who, the better to insure the execution of his last wishes, enjoins the said daughter to give herself out at once as secretly married to the individual in question. On returning to his native land, Chamaroux is surprised to find himself the tenant of a new house, to which his confidential servant had removed his penates, placing them under the charge of the testamentary Mad. Chamaroux. He finds himself too old to carry out his friend's dying request, but gets out of the difficulty by marrying the lady to his nephew, who, by this means, still continues to bear his name. The music of this trifle is, without being excessively original, lively and agreeable. M. de St. Rémy is not the name of any composer alive or dead; but beneath this appellation lurks an aristocratic personage, whose musical taste and ability are well known. The Count and Countess de Morny were present on the first night, and presented Mlle. Auber, who impersonated the heroine, with a handsome brooch. The second novelty at this little house is the long-expected diminutive opera by M. Offenbach, entitled La Chanson de Fortunio, the unequivocal success of which will compensate the composer for the adverse criticisms to which his late attempt at a higher stage was exposed. The subject is founded on Alfred de Musset's well-known song—

Digitized by Google

"Si vous croyez que je vais dire
Qui j'ose aimer,
Je ne saurais pour un Empire
Vous la nommer."

Fortunio is a notary, married, settled, and of grave reputation, so far as the present at least is concerned, for in his youthful days, when he was but a clerk, there are certain rumours afloat of his gallant exploits, and of the irresistible effects upon the gentler sex produced by his manner of warbling "Si vous croyez," &c. But all this is forgotten now, both by himself and others, and what remains of his youthful adventure is an intense suspicion of the designs of all who approach the female part of his household. Lothario married has become Othello, and there is admirable scope for the development of his jealous characteristics in the fact that his wife is excessively pretty, and his clerks, without exception, a set of unconscionable scapegraces. One in particular, young Valentin, attracts the suspicions of the notary by his insinuating respectfulness towards his mistress. Being excessively timid, however, Valentin would never have gone beyond sighing and secretly plucking roses to send his master's wife but for the suggestions of Friquet, a fellow-clerk, who disinters from among some old papers the famous song with which old Fortunio had done such execution, and inoculates the whole office with amorous designs. Friquet, to favour an interview between Valentin and Mad. Fortunio, gets the old notary out of the way by a trumped-up story, and on his return finds all his clerks at the feet each of a grisette, and singing the ditty of his youth. He grows more jealous than ever, but not without cause, for a window shortly opens, and a rose is thrown by the hand of Mad. Fortunio to Valentin. With this significant token of the success of the chanson de Fortunio the little piece ends. The whole tone of this trifle is thoroughly French, to use the word in its worst sense, but it is decidedly amusing in its bustling liveliness and gaiety. The part of Valentin was intrusted to a débutante, Mlle. Pfotzer, whose fresh and clear voice and natural expression, notwithstanding a certain "gaucherie" found favour with the public.

The theatrical news this week presents only one feature of importance, the production of a new comedy in five acts, by M. Emile Augier, it is entitled Les Effrontés, and though abounding in satire, has in its plot more the character of a drama than of a purely comic work. The principal parts are played by Madame Arnould Plessy, and MM. Samson, Provost, Regnier, Got and Delaunay. The Emperor was present on the first night, and waited till the name of the author was given out, heartily adding his quota to the burst of plaudits which greeted it. I must also mention another successful comedy, by the clever author of Les Pattes de Mouche, M. Sardou. It is entitled Les Femmes fortes, and was produced at the Vaudeville. The subject is American, and the author satirises Yankee manners, though one would think it scarcely necessary to cross the Atlantic for materials to indulge his caustic humour. To return to strictly musical affairs: Mad. Clauss Szavardy has just returned from a tour in Germany, where she has been triumphantly received. Touching Germany, the Hanoverian government has lately published a decree interdicting all encores, and even that substitute for the encore, the reappearance of the artist after he or she has quitted the stage, to acknowledge the applause of the audience. No doubt very unseemly interruptions to the musical and dramatic progress of a work arise from this cause; but the rigorous prohibition in question will be felt as a hardship in many instances, especially at the Italian Opera. Roger is singing at the Royal Theatre there, but the edict just alluded to does not appear to have been put in force with respect to his performance, for I hear of his having been recalled as many as nine times during the Huguenots. At Augsburg there has been an operetta performed, the parentage of which is of the most singular character. The words are written by the King's procurator, and the music composed by the burgomaster, which is much as if the Attorney-general were to write an opera and the Lord Mayor supply the music. The title of this production is Hans ist da. Anglicè, John is there.

THE OPERA COMIQUE.

Its Origin and Progress.

Second Part.—Nineteenth Century.

(Continued from page 6.)

Before proceeding with these biographical studies, and examining the works of those composers who have written for the Opéra Comique during the 19th century, I have to bring forth a few facts relative to the theatres in which these performances were given, and of which I have spoken hitherto only in a summary manner.

We have seen the humble cradle in which was nursed the comédie à ariettes at the fairs of St. Germain and St. Laurent, which were held, the one in winter the other in summer. The fair of St. Laurent had been in existence for three or four centuries previously, and derived its name from the church of St. Laurent, near which it was established. It lasted, according to official regulations, for fifty days, that is, from the 9th of August, the eve of St. Laurent's day, to the 29th of September, but it was often extended to three months. The fair of St. Germain had originated in the 12th century. At first it was held only once in the year, but under the reign of Louis XI., in 1482, it took place twice a year. The date of its commencement was frequently changed. First it was on the 1st of October, then the 3rd of February, subsequently the 12th of November, and, lastly, in the month of May. This fair only lasted from a fortnight to a month. The Benedictines, however, to whom the ground belonged on which the booths were erected, sought to prolong its duration, and in this but followed the example of the Lazarists, who possessed the ground of the St. Laurent fair. In 1650 the notion came up of erecting theatres at these fairs, but before our Opéra Comique came into existence, there figured in them, puppets, menageries, giants and dwarfs, learned animals, conjurors and rope-dancers. It was not till 1678 that plays were acted in them.* In 1714, the widow Baron and the Sieur St. Elme entered into partnership, and their company called itself the Opéra Comique.†

In 1716, the Duke of Orleans had invited over some Italian comedians who had installed themselves in the Hotel de Bourgogne, and two years later, to add to the interest of their performances, he obtained a license to have plays acted in French by them. Meanwhile the success and renown of the comédies à ariettes, set to music by Daric, Monsigny and Phillidor had so increased, that the court desired to hear them, but as etiquette forbade that any other actors than the comedians in ordinary to the king should play before their majesties, it was determined to unite the company of la Foire to the Comédie Italienne, and the new theatrical establishment was inaugurated by the performance of Blaise le Savetier, preceded by a prologue written for the occasion.

During passion week, the Italian comedians had permission to play at the fair theatre, and as this was the only theatrical performance going on at the time, their receipts were considerable.

* The title of the earliest known of these was Les Farces de l'Amour et de la Magie.

† The managers employed Le Sage to write for their theatre, and here it was that he produced his comedies, and among them Turcaret, his chef-d'œuvre.

Digitized by Google

In 1762, the share of each actor after Easter, was 11,500 livres, an enormous sum if we consider the period. In 1781, a new theatre for the Italian comedians was commenced building in the garden of the Hôtel de Choiseul, a plot of land of 1800 square toises being set apart for the purpose. "The new house," says Bachaumont, will stand isolated, "with an open space in front, and the city consents that the back part towards the boulevard shall be laid open, cleaned out and paved. In the side streets, to which the names of Favart and Marivaux are given, a footway will be formed for pedestrians, separated from the road by posts, at intervals of from five to six feet. Five streets in all will converge upon it, not counting a passage which will be provided for pedestrians." This house, to which the name of the Favart was given, was opened to the public on the 28th of April, 1783. Six years afterwards, on the 28th of January, 1789, a new company performing opéra comique, started as a rival to the united companies of the Foire and the Comédie Italienne, in the theatre of the Tuileries, under the title of the Théâtre Monsieur. This latter enterprise was transplanted to the Feydeau theatre on the 6th of January, 1791, where performances were given until 1798, when the theatre closed, the manager being a bankrupt. It re-opened, however, some time after, and the rivalry of the Favart and Feydeau theatres stimulated the production of an abundance of works, among which were, as we shall shortly see, several masterpieces. In April 1801, however, both theatres closed, and after one or two experiments, attended with varying success, an Imperial decree established in 1806 a special theatre for Opéra Comique to be located in the Feydeau theatre. In 1829, after the retirement of two celebrated singers, of whom I am soon to speak, Elleviou and Martin, the Opéra Comique was transferred to the Salle Ventadour, where several managers succeeded each other, who were not, however, very successful in their endeavours, and the enterprise was again brought to a close. The Opéra Comique again appeared at the Théâtre des Nouveautés in September 1832, a theatre which had previously been occupied by the Vaudeville company. But on the night of the 14th of January, 1838, the Salle Favart, in which Italian Opera was played, having caught fire and burned to its four walls, it was rebuilt according to the plans of M. Carpentier, and the Opéra Comique took up its residence there on the 16th of May 1840* and opened with Le Pré aux Cleres.

ELLEVIOU.—MARTIN.

Elleviou and Martin powerfully contributed to the fame of the pieces played at the Favart and Feydeau Theatres. Their careers are so intimately bound up with that of the Opéra Comique that it would be vain to sketch their biographies before mentioning the works which they created, to use an expression recommended by usage rather than good sense.

ELLEVIOU.

Pierre Jean Baptiste François Elleviou was born at Rennes on the 14th of June, 1769 (according to some biographers, on the 2nd of November in the same year). He was educated at the public school of Rennes, and was a schoolfellow of Al. Duval, the friendship existing between them, and which was strengthened by their theatrical success, having sprung up here. "Elleviou could, no more than myself, escape his destiny," says Duval, in the preface of l'Oncle Valet. "In spite of his father, who intended him to follow the profession of medicine, which was his own, he could not, as he would say in our secret confidences, accustom himself to groping in dead bodies. Our tastes, which were similar, had united us in the closest friendship. Whether or no my travels and a little better knowledge of mankind had taught me that the consequences of our vagaries might render us both miserable by provoking the anger of our families, I persuaded him to combat his inclination for the stage, and not to attend the theatres so assiduously; but in the midst of my solemn exhortations he would break in with some of the finest airs of Grétry, and I would at last answer him by some high-sounding tirade out of a tragedy. So uncontrollable was the demon which possessed us both, that the entire society of our little town was thrown into commotion, that we might get them to play comedies and tragedies; and as we had been much encouraged by the actors whose company we frequented as much as was in our power, we had the double pleasure of believing ourselves far superior to our young comrades, and of laughing in our sleeves at the manner in which they declaimed the fine verses of Voltaire. Our parents, who were far from suspecting that our diversions would end by causing them a great deal of vexation, were proud of our attempts, and would willingly mingle their applause with that of their friends. These small successes only gave fresh encouragement to our first and cherished idea. It was only in the capital that a reputation could be made and glory won. But how get there? How evade the vigilance of our parents? This was what we succeeded in doing, however, both of us, though at different times. Elleviou, more impatient than I, was engaged as soon as he reached Paris by the manager of La Rochelle, but at the moment of his appearance an order from the intendant caused him to be arrested. He was taken to a tower which overlooked the public place; and every evening our scapegrace would treat the fair ladies of the little town with his songs, for all flocked to hear the troubadour medical student, who would laugh out like a madman as he sang,

'Dans une tour obscure,
Un roi puissant languit,' &c.

"His father soon made his appearance, and all was forgiven. He was received with open arms in our town, and feasts were held in his honour; and as soon as we met he recounted all his successes and mishaps, assuring me, at the same time, that he persisted in his intention to be received a doctor, but of the Italian Theatre only. He kept his word; for he no sooner arrived in Paris to complete his studies than he made his appearance at the Comédie Italienne, without ever having played in the country, and obtained the greatest success in the first line of characters. The public saw, from his very first appearance,* that this young man united, to the chief requisites of an actor, the mode of utterance and the delicacy of manner which betokened the good education he had received. I shall not speak of the reputation he has made in the career which he pursued; all Paris regrets he should have taken his farewell at an age when he might hope for another ten yers of success. And I, more than any one, regret it, for I might have in writing for him extended still further my stock of pieces for the Opéra Comique."

HARMONIOUS VOLUNTEERS.—On Friday afternoon, 28th Dec., the No. 2, St. John's Company of the Queen's Westminster Volunteer Rifles was inspected and attested by Lieut.-Colonel Earl Grosvenor. This new company is composed exclusively of workmen in the employment of Messrs. John Broadwood and Sons, pianoforte makers. On the occasion in question it assembled in strong force, to the number of 128 men, under the command of its officers, Capt. F. Rose, Lieut. G. T. Rose and Ensign A. Black. After being attested, it was put through a variety of manœuvres, which, taking into account the short time it has been under drill, viz., seven weeks, were performed with great precision, and which elicited the warm approval of Earl Grosvenor.

HOBART TOWN.—The presence of an Italian Opera company in Hobart Town promises the lovers of the lyric drama an unwonted treat. Signor and Signora Bianchi have produced a great sensation in the musical circles of Sydney and Melbourne, where they have drawn during a long season, crowded houses. Both as a singer and an actress, the Signora is spoken of in terms of the most enthusiastic praise, her voice being described as magnificent, and her dramatic talents as of the highest order. Mr. Gregg, Mr. and Mrs. Hancock, and other colonial favourites are attached to the company. The opera announced for to-night is Il Trovatore, which will be succeeded by a musical melange, in which Mr. Winterbottom will perform some of his bassoon solos. No doubt a numerous and brilliant audience will attend the Theatre Royal to partake of this novel feast of song and sweet sounds.—Hobart Town Puff.

* Although another theatre, the Théâtre Lyrique, is playing Opéra Comique, I shall not speak of it, its establishment not coming within the range of time fixed for these papers.

* Which took place April 1, 1790, in the part of Alexis in the Déserteur

Digitized by Google

VIENNA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Jan. 8, 1861.

THE race of hairy pianists is not yet extinct. A very fine specimen was caught last week, close to this city, in the act of torturing a grand. Like other undomesticated animals at this inclement season of the year, it is supposed to have been driven from its native haunts, and forced to seek the protection of civilised man. Every characteristic of the race was so fully developed in this particular instance, that there was not the slightest difficulty in its classification. The shaggy mane, the long, bony digits, the lanky, half-starved looking figure, the sallow complexion, and that peculiar maniacal, vacant stare, which makes the object of its gaze so truly uncomfortable. Those eyes once fixed upon you, and it's of no use trying to avert them; turn where you will, they follow you about with the most obstinate constancy.

If you smile in mild recognition of the thing which you suppose is looking at you, a demoniacal grin suffuses its countenance, and you are made positively nervous. What a relief when all those contortions are over, and the deafening sound ceases! The creature leaves his victim, whose inside has been terribly weakened by the thrashing, wipes his perspiring fingers, and declares himself completely exhausted. No wonder. One wishes he had been so long since, at least such was the case on the occasion in question, when this last found specimen of the race exhibited his skill. But from such a subject to matters more musical.

On Saturday, 5th, the Wiener Sänger-Band gave a concert in the new Diana Saal, a handsome building lately opened, available for balls and concerts in winter, and convertible into a vast swimming-bath during the summer months. It is situate on the Leopoldstadt bank of the river, opposite Treumann's Theatre.

The hall is constructed of wood and iron, and in proportion is somewhat similar to that of St. James's. The prevailing colours of the decorations are white and green, against which some life-size portraits and pictures in fresco on each side of the arched ceiling and at either end have a gay appearance. Three massive gilt chandeliers, with innumerable jets of gas, afford a brilliant illumination. Along each side of the room, on the ground floor, and along the gallery, are twenty-four recesses, prettily furnished. During the dancing season these are used as eating-rooms; in summer the furniture is changed, and each recess elegantly fitted up for the accommodation of the bathers. The level of the centre of the room is some three feet lower than that of these recesses and the platform by which they are approached, an arrangement which prevents the dancers being disturbed by the promenaders. The entertainment on Saturday consisted as much of eating and drinking as of music; the latter did not begin until half-past eight, while the former had been going on since six o'clock. The eating-rooms were each occupied by a merry party, and in the centre of the hall were some eighty or ninety small round tables, every one of which was engaged. The singers themselves, members of a Liedertafel, seemed to devote more attention to their knives and forks than any other performance. According to German custom, the Sänger-Band sang their part-songs at table, where they were supposed to have been dining or supping. The choir consists of some hundred male voices. They sang well, but certainly not better than any of the choral societies which we are accustomed to hear in England. During the evening some solos were sung by a Mlle. Gerhart, from Pesth, Herr Hrabaneck, and Herr Gunz, of the Kärntnerthor Theatre, who volunteered their services. A certain Herr Boscovitz performed a series of extraordinary gymnastics upon the pianoforte, exciting the wonder, if not the admiration, of his audience. A recitation by a pretty little actress from the Burg Theatre completed the programme of the evening, after which smoking began, and the eatables and drinkables again attacked with renewed vigour.

At the Kärntnerthor we have had three interesting performances during the past week, namely, Mozart's Figaro's Hochzeit, Wagner's Holländer, Meyerbeer's Profet. The first-mentioned opera is here given without recitative, the dialogue being spoken. Herr Beck eminently distinguished himself both in this work and in the Holländer, which latter rôle he has made completely his own. In Figaro's Hochzeit the ladies Ceillag, Wildauer, and Liebhart sang and acted with great effect, and evidently enjoying the fun of the plot; they imparted their good humour and merriment to the audience, who relished it accordingly.

ANTRATER.

Letters to the Editor.

MAJOR AND MINOR MODE.

SIR,—The logical and well-written letter of your talented correspondent, Mr. W. C. Filby, should be read by every musician. I do not say I endorse every word of it, but it contains so much truth and evinces so much experience and intimate acquaintance with the subject, that its writer should at least be entitled to the thanks of all professors.

Still I cannot altogether agree with Mr. Filby's somewhat utopian theory of discarding all connection between a major and its relative minor, and vice versâ, as I consider that many fine progressions would thereby be lost. Would Mr. Filby dare to use a triad on the mediant with an augmented fifth? If he would (for I do not fancy he can be a man who would set forth a principle and not adhere to it), I must say that I think he is wrong, and that the relative major chord would be far preferable.

His theoretical arguments on the construction of the scale are admirably correct, but I question if what he calls the synonymous principle will stand the test of practice and everyday use.

Please give this a place in your excellent paper and oblige

Yours obediently,

DOMINANT.

IRONY.

SIR,—You were good enough to insert a few lines in your valued paper of the 29th ult., in which I pointed out the sort of criticism one gets in this town where music is concerned. Your correspondent, M. de Lavigerie, triumphantly assures your readers that M. Vieuxtemps is a VIOLINIST!!! Surely, M. de Lavigerie, despite his name, is of that race concerning whom Sydney Smith averred that nothing less than "a surgical operation could get a joke into their heads." But, an he be a true Gaul, I beg to refer him to Johnson's dictionary for the word "Irony."

AMATEUR.

THE ALHAMBRA.

SIR,—As I take a general interest in musical matters, I paid a visit a few evenings since to the Alhambra Palace, and although the arrangements, musically and otherwise, are certainly very satisfactory in the main, I could not but be struck with the great want of taste which could sanction the use of such a vile piano. I feel assured that so bad an instrument would not be tolerated at any third-rate music hall, and therefore hope that Mr. Tully's attention need only be called to this (in these musical days) grievous oversight to have it at once replaced by one worthy of the establishment.

I am, Sir, yours respectfully,

HURDY-GURDY.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?—(From the London Correspondent of the Liverpool Albion.)—Take another sample. Behold that æsthetical establishment, the Crystal Palace, which was to have crystallised the whole cockney community into "one entire and perfect chrysolite," purging it of all coarseness, and rendering us at any rate like the flies in amber, a deuce of a wonder how we got into such a medium of pellucid purity. It was to be the grand educational institution of the epoch and of the earth; addressing the mind's eye through the corporeal sense; a manufactory of omniscience for the million at a shilling a head, and twopenny buns for three halfpence; refining, elevating, exalting the crowd into a condition of transcendental ecstacy with mental nutriment and unexceptionable ham-sandwiches; begetting an ardour for the fine arts which would be unappeasable anywhere but in this astonishing glass house, which covered plaster of Paris casts of all Greek sculpture, and gambouged copies of all Italian painting, and fac-similes of every representable phenomena in all creation, except the directors, who were too precious to be reproduced in any other substance than brass and lead, the first for the physiognomy, the second for that part of the anatomy which surmounts the human face divine. Well, contrast present performances with past promise. At this moment the daily journals groan, in more senses than one, with enormous announcements about the Palace, such as Wombwell, the peripatetic menagerie man, has too much respect for his kangaroos to put outside his caravan, and the late Mr. Richardson would have hesitated to placard them on his booth the last days of the saturnalia of Bartholomew Fair. These advertisements minutely narrate, in the most classic English, that certain clowns "will tell the drollest stories and sing the funniest songs," and that all sorts of jack-pudding gymnastics will be gone through, such as a small mayor in a small town would deem it derogatory to the intellect of his Little Pedlingtonians to be asked to tolerate on a market day. Our old friends, the Pig-faced Lady, and the Learned Pig, and Miss Biffin, and Fire King Chabert, and the Singing Mouse, and the Whistling Oyster, and the Talking Fish, were clearly born before their time, like other precocious characters. They should have waited till the latter moiety of the highly-cultivated nineteenth century was ten years old, and then they would have been appreciated as they deserved by the eminently competent judges who preside at the great conservatory of popular instruction at Norwood. Moreover, they would have justice done to their merits by encomiastic and analytic journalists in columns' length; so that the Industrious Fleas, for instance, would have been treated as though they were a herd of hybrids between megatheriums and mastodons.

Digitized by Google

Advertisements.

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE EIGHTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON
(49TH OF THE SERIES),

WILL TAKE PLACE

ON MONDAY EVENING, JANUARY 21, 1861,

On which occasion the celebrated Violinist,

M. VIEUXTEMPS

(Who has been expressly engaged for these Concerts),

Will make his Second Appearance in London, after an absence of Eight Years.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Quintet, in C major (Beethoven), M. VIEUXTEMPS, HERR RIES, M. SCHREURS, Mr. WEBB, and Signor PIATTI. Song, "The Quail (Beethoven), Mr. TENNANT. Trio, "Ave Maria" (Schlösser) Mme. LOUISA VINNING, Mme. LAURA BAXTER, and Mr. TENNANT. Song, "Lascia ch'io pianga" (Handel) Mme. LAURA BAXTER. Suite de Pieces, containing the "Harmonious Blacksmith," for Pianoforte solus (Handel), Miss ARABELLA GODDARD.

PART II.—Sonata for Pianoforte and Viola (Vieuxtemps), Miss ARABELLA GODDARD, and M. VIEUXTEMPS (First time at the Monday Popular Concerts). Song, "The First Violet" (Mendelssohn) Mme. LOUISA VINNING. Trio, "L'Addio" (Curschmann), Mme. LOUISA VINNING, Mme LAURA BAXTER, and Mr. TENNANT. Trio, in D minor, for Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello (Mendelssohn), Miss ARABELLA GODDARD, M. VIEUXTEMPS and Signor PIATTI (By unanimous desire).

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT. To commence at Eight o'Clock precisely.

Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s.

Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28 Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co., Hammond, Addison and Co., Schott and Co., Ewer and Co., Simpson, and Oetzmann and Co., Regent Street; Bradberry's, London Crystal Palace, Oxford Street; Duff and Co., 65 Oxford Street; Prowse, Hanway Street; Chidley, 195 High Holborn; Purday, 50 St. Paul's Church Yard; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48 Cheapside, Turner, 19 Cornhill; Cook and Co., 6 Finsbury Place, South; Humfress, 4 Old Church Street, Paddington Green; Fabian, Circus Road, St. John's Wood; Ransford and Son, 2 Princes Street, Cavendish Square; Ivory, 275 Euston Road; Mitchell, Leader and Co., Ollivier, Campbell, Hopwood and Crewe, and Willis, Bond Street; And CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond Street.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—THIS EVENING (in consequence of its continued success), QUEEN TOPAZE. Principal characters by Misses PAREPA and ALLESANDRI; Messrs. SWIFT, PATEY, BARTLEMAN, TERROTT, and SANTLEY. Concluding with the Children's great pantomime of HARLEQUIN AND TOM THUMB. The gorgeous scenery and transformations by Beverley. Harlequin, Clown, Pantaloon, and Columbine, by the celebrated Lauri Family. Sprites by the Arabs. Doors open at half-past 6, commence at 7 o'clock. Notice.—SIMS REEVES will make his reappearance in his favourite character of Robin Hood on the 5th of February. In active preparation, a new grand original opera, by W. V. WALLACE, entitled THE AMBER WITCH. Principal characters by Mr. SIMS REEVES, PATEY, SANTLEY, FANNY HUDDART, and Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON. Box Office open daily from 10 to 5. Grand Morning Performance of the children's Pantomime of TOM THUMB to-day (Saturday), commencing at 2 o'clock, in which the celebrated Rochette Family will appear.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH. THIS EVENING (Saturday) Her Majesty's servants will perform the new comedy, entitled THE ADVENTURES OF A BILLET-DOUX. The new grand Comic Christmas Pantomime of PETER WILKINS Scenery by Beverley. The opening by Blanchard. Produced under the superintendence of Robert Roxby. Harlequins, Mr. Cormack and Mr. St. Maine; Columbines, the Misses Guiness; Pantaloons, Mr. Naylor and Mr. E. R. Martin; Clowns, Mr. Huline and Mr. R. Power, and a little one in by Young Huline; Sprites, by the celebrated Lavator Lee Family. Reduced prices as usual. Open at half-past 6; commence at 7 o'clock. Box-office open from 10 till 5. Mr. and Mrs. CHARLES KEAN will very shortly appear. Full particulars will be given forthwith. A Grand Morning Performance of the Children's Pantomime, PETER WILKINS, every Wednesday, commencing at 2 o'clock.

Birth.

On the 5th instant, at Argyll Lodge, Wimbledon Common, the wife of OTTO GOLDSCHMIDT, Esq. (Mad. JENNY LIND GOLDSCHMIDT), of a son.

NOTICES.

To ADVERTISERS.—Advertisers are informed, that for the future the Advertising Agency of the THE MUSICAL WORLD is established at the Magazine of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyle Street (First Floor). Advertisements can be received as late as Three o'Clock P.M., on Fridays—but not later. Payment on delivery.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2s. 6d.
Every additional line (10 words) ... ... 6d.

To PUBLISHERS AND COMPOSERS.—All Music for Review in THE MUSICAL WORLD must henceforward be forwarded to the Editor, care of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street. A List of every Piece sent for Review will appear on the Saturday following in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

To CONCERT GIVERS.—No Benefit-Concert, or Musical Performance, except of general interest, unless previously Advertised, can be reported in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JANUARY 19, 1861.

THE result of the forthcoming performance of the Messiah at St. Paul's Cathedral, on Friday next, is not likely to be imperilled for want of strong and frequent recommendation. The following paragraph, apparently "official" ("communiqué?")—our readers know what that means—has appeared in the columns of the Morning Herald and other contemporaries:—

REHEARSAL OF "THE MESSIAH" AT ST. PAUL'S.—Yesterday evening there was a rehearsal under the dome of St. Paul's of the oratorio of the Messiah, which is to be performed on Friday, the 25th instant, before the Lord Mayor and sheriffs, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, and other dignitaries of the Church and State, in aid of the expenses which have been incurred in the recent cathedral restorations, and the purchase of the splendid new organ, for which the dean and canon have no available capitular revenues. Mr. John Goss, the organist of St. Paul's, conducted the rehearsal, most of the band and chorus, which will consist of 600 performers, being present. The orchestra has been placed in the south transept in front of the new organ, which has been erected for the special Sunday evening services, charitable festivals, and o her special occasions. The powers of the new instrument were last night amply tested, and showed that a sound judgment was displayed by Sir Gore Ouseley, Precentor Webber, and the other gentlemen to whom the task of recommending its precise location was entrusted. The Dean of St. Paul's, the Archdeacon of London, and other gentlemen, who attended the rehearsal last night, expressed themselves highly satisfied with its results, and it was announced that a full rehearsal with the band, under the leadership of Mr. Henry Blagrove, will take place next Wednesday evening. Several of the great City companies have liberally subscribed towards the Cathedral restorations and the purchase of the organ, but there is still a considerable deficiency, which it is confidently expected the receipts from the forthcoming performance will cover.

Not to enter further into the speculations advanced by us last week as to the adaptability, or non-adaptability, of the south transept of St. Paul's Cathedral for the purposes of a musical performance, we must ask—how does it happen that in all that is stated respecting the organ, no mention whatever is made of the builders, nor one word ventured as to whence and in what manner the instrument was procured? We have already hinted that the "new organ" was once the property of Mr. E. T. Smith, into whose possession it came when he purchased the Panopticon, re-christened by him "the Alhambra," and that he very recently parted with it to the Dean of St. Paul's for the use of the cathedral. We may now add that the organ was originally built for the Panopticon, by the eminent manufacturers, Messrs. Hill. Why the committee of the Festival should withhold these facts from the public, it is difficult to make out. That the organ is one of the finest ever constructed in this country, everybody admits who has heard it; and what the Musical World thought of it when first exhibited in Leicester-Square, may be ascertained by reference to Mr. Henry Smart's interesting, masterly, and elaborate article written at the time. The "sound judgment displayed by Sir Gore Ouseley, Precentor Webber, and the other gentlemen to whom the task of recommending its precise location was entrusted," is therefore unquestionable.

Digitized by Google

Possibly the committee shrank from the acknowledgment that the organ, in every way (if their judgment may pass) so admirably adapted to the cathedral, had been originally built for the lay purposes of miscellaneous concerts, &c., and were unwilling to disturb the sacred self-gratulation of the subscribers, who considered they were aiding in the purchase of an orthodox (and maiden) instrument. At all events, it was unnecessary to withhold the names of the manufacturers, which would reasonably have given rise to suspicion, even had we not quietly broached the question. Another point is worth considering. An organ prepared for and exactly suited to the Alhambra is not inevitably the kind of work (however great a work sui generis) for a building of so wholly different a nature as St. Paul's.

MR. BUNN is no more; and, whatever effect the announcement may have on youthful and impressionable "Arlines," we do not mind saying that in our opinion, "hollow hearts" ought to "wear a mask;" for which reason the mask is appropriate enough to the Harlequin of an English pantomime, who as the author of an excellent article on "Pantomimes" in the second number of Temple Bar remarks, "has dwindled into an inane dancer and posture-maker, with no more humour than a barber's pole." We are told, however, that such was the power possessed by Carlin (the celebrated French harlequin) of impressing his audience that "it was common to find yourself fixing your eye-glass at the black senseless pasteboard, and fancying you were watching an endless succession of comical expressions upon it." But we are not going to write an article about theatrical masks, from those of the Greek tragedians downwards—though the subject is far from being a despicable one; all we propose to do is to tell two or three anecdotes about masks, one of which will perhaps interest the author of the before-mentioned paper on "Pantomimes" in Temple Bar. In the pantomimes of Italy, and, until the end of the last century, in the ballets of France, all the typical charcters seem to have worn masks; but we fancy (after reading the lines hinted above concerning Carlin) that pantomimists may have adopted them, or at all events retained them, not for any poetical reasons, but simply for the sake of having an additional difficulty to overcome. If Carlin had not worn a mask, Fleury would doubtless have found it impossible to believe that any actor could impress his audience as he did without depending in the least upon the play of his features. Thus the pasteboard face, which to an indifferent pantomimist must always be an obstacle in the way of complete dramatic expression, was to Carlin, aiming at this complete dramatic expression, no obstacle at all; but, negatively, a means of triumph.

But to our anecdotes. The part of Harlequin then was never played without a mask, except for a short period in 1685, at an Italian Theatre, where the celebrated Angelo Costantini was engaged. This popular tragedian having consented to appear as Arlecchino, was called upon by the public to "throw off the mask," that it might still be delighted by the play of his admirably mobile features. When Costantini returned to tragedy, the actors who replaced him as Harlequin, re-assumed the mask, and it has never since been laid aside.

Anecdote the second. When Rameau's opera of Castor and Pollux was revived in 1772 at the Académie Royale de Musique, Apollo's pas seul, which occurs in the fifth act, was to have been danced by Gaetan Vestris, who represented the fairhaired Phœbus with an enormous black wig, a mask, and a copper sun on his breast. Something, at the last moment, prevented Vestris from assuming his old part, and Maximilien Gardel was asked to replace him, Gardel consented, but only on condition that he should appear in his own natural hair (which was of an appropriate golden colour), without any of the ridiculous attributes which until then had been considered inseparable from the costume of Apollo, and, above all, without a mask. This innovation met with the approbation of the public, and from this moment the mask was abandoned by all the principal performers in ballets, though for some years afterwards those Coryphées still kept to it who represented Winds, Shades, and Furies. The masks of the Furies were as hideous and terrible as they could be made; those of the Shades were perfectly white; those of the Winds had a puffed-out appearance, as though the winds were blowing, and were about to "crack their cheeks."

Some of our readers must have seen M. Scribe's ballet of Manon Lescaut, in which three of the most celebrated French dancers of the eighteenth century (Mlles. Sallé, Camargo, and Petitpas) are introduced in the divertissement. In this ballet within a ballet the principal characters, in strict accordance with the terpsichorean traditions of the Académie Royale, are rivers, shepherds, followers of Bacchus, &c. These personages, however, are shown to us in Manon Lescaut, of which the action takes place somewhere about 1750, without masks, whereas it was not until nearly a quarter of a century afterwards that the custom was introduced of appearing in ballets unmasked and in natural hair. Indeed, we find, from the accounts of the first performance of Beaumarchais's and Salieri's opera of Tarare, that the Winds, in the divertissement of that work, still wore the old-fashioned masks; and Tarare was not produced until 1785.

THE lovers of the ballet will learn with deep regret that the fascinating, and accomplished Mlle. Marietta Pocchini expired at Rome a few days since. The melancholy event, as communicated on Wednesday last by the Turin correspondent of the Times, who received the intelligence by electric telegraph from Rome, is stated to have occurred shortly after the lady's confinement. Mlle. Pocchini had been married about twelve months to Signor Borri, the ballet-master, who accompanied her last year to England. Further particulars have not reached us. The correspondents of the other London journals from the various Italian States are entirely silent respecting the death, which is somewhat strange, as such an occurrence, one would have thought, must have created the most profound sympathy in all quarters. We fear, however, that there is no likelihood of any error on the part of the telegram, as it would answer no purpose whatsoever for anybody to fabricate such a calamity.

Digitized by Google

Marietta Pocchini was certainly the most remarkable dancer among those who had been of late years before the public. She was the legitimate successor of those bright particular stars that constituted the galaxy of talent which belonged to the palmy days of the ballet. By the side of Taglioni, Fanny Cerito, and Carlotta Grisi, she would have retained her lustre, and commanded her share of favouritism. In the celebrated "Pas de Quatre," which some twenty years since exercised so powerful an influence over the destinies of Her Majesty's Theatre, she would have formed the most fit and brilliant adjunct to the glorious trio above named—and this without any attempt to underrate the very rare accomplishments of Mlle. Lucile Grahn. In the terpsichorean hemisphere Pocchini was a star of the first magnitude. Her talent was of the highest order; her appearance was striking; her grace consummate. Indeed, in the last quality no dancer we saw ever surpassed her, and few approached her. The sensation she created four years ago, when she first appeared at Her Majesty's Theatre, was extraordinary, although the ballet then had long declined; and the manager, consulting the popular taste, did not deem it requisite, even with so incomparable an artist, to endeavour to restore its lost prestige. To the decline of the ballet, whatever others may consider, we are inclined to think the falling off in popularity of the opera is in a great measure to be attributed. The taste for dancing, we are aware, is reckoned by many exceptional; and some even go so far as to assert that the ballet is an offence against morality. With extreme opinions we do not pretend to enter into conflict; but how an art, which necessitates youth, beauty, shapeliness, lightness, agility, grace, ease, porpriety of motion—to say nothing of the higher requirements of expression and imitation, which, to be true, must be poetical—can be regarded as a mere bodily exercitation, or, at best, a gymnastic feat of strength or activity, we are at a loss to explain. The poetry of motion has been recognised from the earliest ages, and its professors accepted as educational teachers. It remained for English Puritanism to decry what Nature had originated and Art had idealised and made perfect.

The ballet, nevertheless, has had strenuous supporters in this country, and, although in imminent danger from the attacks of false religionists and self-styled purists, with such artists as Marietta Pocchini to revivify its glories, and with managers of greater faith than Mr. Gye and Mr. E. T. Smith, might have stood a good chance of resuscitation and re-establishment on the operatic boards. The most brilliant light, however, is now extinguished, and there is less hope than ever that the ballet will recover its ancient splendour and magnificence.

If, nevertheless, we are to give credit to Parisian rumours, and to accept the judgment of Parisian journalists, a new candidate for terpsichorean honours has started up lately at the French Opera, likely to eclipse all existing reputations. The name of Mlle. Emma Livry is not unfamiliar to the readers of the Musical World. Our own Correspondent from Paris has descanted freely on her merits, and noticed her performances frequently. The new danseuse is a pupil of the Taglioni, who, it would appear, has taken extraordinary pains in her education, and composed a ballet expressly for her, to introduce her to the Parisian public. The ballet, entitled Le Papillon, achieved a triumph, and Mlle. Livry has been lauded to the skies. Such a success, indeed, has instigated the director of the Royal Italian Opera — no enthusiastic admirer of dancing, we may presume—to offer her an engagement, and Mlle. Emma Livry will make her début at Covent Garden, next season, in the ballet written expressly for her by Mlle. Taglioni. The manager of Her Majesty's theatre has sustained an irreparable loss; the manager of the Royal Italian Opera may obtain an unprecedented success; but the lovers of the ballet have yet to learn whether Mlle. Emma Livry can supply the place of Marietta Pocchini.

THE AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY is dissolved. The particulars next week.

THE SISTERS MARCHISIO.—(From the Moniteur Universelle.)—To return to the reprise of Guillaume Tell, which has inspired us with the foregoing reflections, we must acknowledge that, if the execution was not at all points irreproachable, at least the text and the traditions of the chef-d'œuvre have been faithfully respected. Mlle. Carlotta Marchisio sang the part of Mathilde in its integrity. She gave the famous air "Sombres forêts" with supreme taste, a grand style, an infinite charm, and finished it with a magnificent and ingenious cadence. After the duet with Arnold, in the restored scene of the third act, the enthusiasm of the audience knew no bounds. In fine, all the music was given with rare elegance and refinement; and Rossini, who had made her rehearse every note, would have been enchanted with his pupil, if his health had permitted him to attend the performance. They related to him the plaudits, the bravos, the recalls, and all the episodes of this triumphal evening. He replied that he was in no-wise astonished, that he had no fear on Mlle. Marchisio's account, and that the same success would await her everywhere. With respect to his own music, he said with an air and with a tone that no one but himself could render, that he was not sorry that this rococo music had still some partisans.

LEIPSIC.—Herr Schachner, the well-known pianist and composer, is at present at Leipsic superintending the rehearsals of his oratorio. This work, of which the libretto has been prepared by Herr Geibel, the popular German poet, and whom our musical readers will remember as the author of the libretto of Mendelssohn's Lurlei, is founded on passages in the Old Testament, relating to captivity of the Israelites in Babylon. The first performance of Herr Schachner's oratorio is fixed for the 12th instant. A contemporary writes:—"The last evening performance in the Conservatory before the holidays was very interesting. The following is the programme:—Concerto for violin, Mendelssohn (1st movement), by Mr. Albert Payne, of Leipsic (an English gentleman); fugue for piano, in E minor (Op. 35), Mendelssohn, by Mr. Franklin Taylor, of Birmingham; air from Semele, 'Awake, Saturnia,' Handel, Miss Rosamund Barnett, and concerto for pianoforte, in F minor, Chopin (last two movements), Miss Clara Barnett, of Cheltenham. Mr. Arthur Sullivan, formerly holder of the Mendelssohn Scholarship, played the wind instrument parts of the concerto on a piano, and conducted the song from Semele. The pieces were one and all admirably performed. It is gratifying that the children of one who has deserved so well of the cause of music in England as Mr. John Barnett has done should give such rich promise of future excellence."

L'AFRICAINE.—It is now decided that this long-expected chef-d'œuvre (we may as well anticipate what may be the public verdict) is retained for the opening of the new opera-house in Paris, about which there is at present so much interest.

AN OLD SHAKSPEARE.—A "first folio" of Shakspeare is said to have been discovered in Germany, and purchased by a London bookseller.

Digitized by Google

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

M. VIEUXTEMPS, the foremost representative of the Belgian school of violin-playing, and one of the most accomplished performers of this or any other time, made his first appearance at the Monday Popular Concerts at the 48th concert of the series and second of the third season, on Monday night, when he led the quartets and took part, with Miss Arabella Goddard, in a grand sonata for pianoforte and violin. St. James's Hall, as might have been expected on such an occasion, was crowded in every part, and the warm reception accorded to the great violinist must have been as gratifying to himself as his performances were gratifying to the audience. It is a good many years since M. Vieuxtemps has been heard in this country, but little or no change in his talent is observable. His tone, always remarkable for breadth and richness, combining the two important elements of quantity and quality, is, if possible, grander than ever. Certainly no instrumental artist has been able to boast a more magnificent "voice" as a medium of display. Every note is full, sonorous, and telling, no matter what the rapidity, no matter what the difficulty of the passage or phrase in which it occurs. On the other hand, in the matter of execution M. Vieuxtemps is now just what he has been throughout his public career—viz., irreproachable. More faultless mechanism it is impossible to imagine. With such a solid foundation for manual skill the mere chance of a failure seems out of the question; and this, joined to an intonation scarcely less unerring and sure, invests the playing of M. Vieuxtemps with what may be termed a satisfactoriness, which, never leaving the ear an instant in doubt, allows no incident to disturb its entire sense of enjoyment. Then the sweeping and majestic "bow-arm" (to be slightly technical) brings out a volume of sound as uniformly equal as harmonious. It has been suggested that M. Vieuxtemps gives forth too much tone; but this is, in our opinion, merely a charge invented to extricate hypercriticism from dilemma. Where the tone is so legitimate there cannot, one would think, be "too much" of it, more especially as with M. Vieuxtemps it is never in any instance forced or abused, but invariably musical and pure. The magical dexterity of the left hand, which the most elaborate contrivances are unable in the slightest degree to perplex, thoroughly responds to the indications of the right, and completes the mechanical perfection of the whole. In his style M. Vieuxtemps belongs essentially to that celebrated Belgian school of which he is justly the most renowned disciple. Some may esteem it redundant in the artifices of expression, occasionally laboured, and here and there overdrawn. But every original style has its peculiarities; and as an Italian would give a different reading to many parts of the sonata of Beethoven introduced on Monday night, so a German would still more widely differ from both, while an Englishman, with the eclecticism which forms part of his nature, would, supposing him able to cope with the great masters of the "bow," combine the excellences and in all probability the defects of the three. M. Vieuxtemps can no more be arraigned for being a Belgian than M. Sainton (the only existing great master in a school which is no school at all) for being a Frenchman, Signor Sivori for being an Italian, or Herr Ernst, Herr Molique and Herr Joachim for being Germans. Artists of the highest class, with the stamp of individuality upon them, should be accepted in good faith, idiosyncracies and all; and as M. Vieuxtemps is indisputably what our friends on the other side of the Straits term an "artiste hors ligne," we must not stop to question his manner of "interpreting" the classical composers, even though at times we may feel disposed to dissent from it. That his style is as essentially attractive as his execution is superb was proved on the occasion under notice by the enthusiastic plaudits that greeted every one of his performances. The following was the instrumental part of the programme:—

Quartet in D minor (strings)	Schubert.
Prelude and fugue in A minor (pianoforte)	Bach.
Sonata in C minor (pianoforte and violin) .	Beethoven.
Quartet in E major (strings)	Haydn.

The above selection, engaging enough on the strength of its intrinsic excellence, was doubly so inasmuch as not one of the pieces had previously been heard at the Monday Popular Concerts. Schubert's quartets, like his orchestral writings, are only now beginning to be known, and the triumph achieved last night by the one in D minor (generally recognised as the "posthumous") would seem to show that the audiences at these entertainments are either more musical or less inclined to regard everything from one particular point of view, and measure everything by one particular standard, than the audiences of the Musical Society of London, where the orchestral symphony in C major (recommended long ago by no more contemptible authority than Mendelssohn himself to the Philharmonic directors) was listened to last year with an impatience trenching on discourtesy. Doubtless the admirable execution of M. Vieuxtemps and his companions (Herr Ries, M. Schreurs, and Signor Piatti) had a good deal to do with the success of the quartet in D minor; but, independently of this, we are inclined to believe that the ingenious and fanciful variations of the slow movement, the fire of the allegro, the quaintness of the scherzo, and the evidence apparent throughout the entire work of the influence which Beethoven—in whom Schubert acknowledged the most inspired master of the art—had exercised over the mind of his young and ardent contemporary, would have roused the sympathies of a less musical audience than that of Monday night, even if M. Vieuxtemps and Signor Piatti (who more than ever showed his right to be esteemed first among violoncellists) had not been there to exhibit all the beauties of the composition in the most favourable light. That the instrumental works of Schubert are not to be jauntily dismissed is incontestible; and that they are capable of interesting vast audiences may be surmised from the foregoing.

Schubert died in 1828, Bach (the Bach—John Sebastian) in 1750, nearly half a century before Schubert was born. It might, therefore, have been thought that the prelude and fugue coming immediately after an imaginative work like that of Schubert, written probably a hundred years later (the quartet in D minor was Schubert's last), would place the venerable Cantor of Leipsic in an awkward predicament. Not so, however. Although one of the longest, most elaborate, most mechanically intricate and difficult to execute of all his compositions, the prelude and fugue in A minor is one of the most animated and irresistible pieces ever written. In the fugue especially—a kind of prestissimo movement in the tarantella style, as impetuous and vigorously sustained as that of Mendelssohn in the so-called "Italian Symphony"—although rigidly respecting the laws of contrapuntal design. Bach has fairly thrown aside the wig, and given the reins to his fancy. It is almost impossible to believe that such a display of exuberant vivacity could be made under such exceptional conditions; but so thoroughly had the old master possessed himself of the secrets of his art, that the strict form of writing had become to him a natural language—in short, his habitual mode of expression. Thus, with infinite facility, he poured forth a tarantella in the shape of a fugue; and the difficulty to even an attentive hearer is to believe that he is really listening to a fugue. The result of Miss Arabella Goddard's irreproachable performance surpassed what might have been expected; and "the most intellectual of musicians"—as Bach has been styled by some half-thinkers, who would make us believe that his imagination was as dull as his intellect was keen—was received with the honours that are never denied him at these genuine and healthy entertainments. Prelude and fugue were heard with unabated interest from one end to the other; and the pianist, being unanimously summoned back, returned to the platform, though, with commendable discretion, she declined to repeat the fugue, which the numerous worshippers of Bach among the audience were clamorous to have once more.

Perhaps the most signal success of the evening was achieved by the sonata of Beethoven in C minor, for violin and pianoforte (M. Vieuxtemps and Miss Goddard), that gorgeous masterpiece which musicians prefer to the more universally famous one dedicated to Kreutzer—and if prodigal richness of invention, combined with a splendour of imagination hardly surpassed even in the C minor symphony, be taken into account, with good reason. M. Vieuxtemps performs this sonata in a style so individual that it can be likened to the reading of no other great violinist who has essayed it in this country. Conception, manner of phrasing, taste, and general execution are peculiar to himself and to the school of which he is the most brilliant living disciple. The audience were enchanted with the whole; each of the four movements was followed by a burst of approbation; and at the conclusion both performers were recalled, the hall literally "ringing" with the applause. Haydn's delightful quartet, one of the most genial inspirations of one of the most genial of composers, played to perfection, brought this most admirable entertainment to a termination with appropriate spirit, and confirmed the success of M. Vieuxtemps, whose engagement at the Monday Popular Concerts promises to be as advantageous to the conductors as it is acceptable to the musical public.

Digitized by Google

Before the commencement of Haydn's quartet, Mr. Benedict addressed the audience in a speech as sensible as it was brief. The habit in which many persons thoughtlessly indulge, of quitting the room while the performance is going on, has long been a nuisance at St. James's Hall, as it has been a nuisance at the concerts of the Philharmonic and Sacred Harmonic Societies. Mr. Benedict, however, respectfully requested that those who were not anxious to remain till the end would leave either before the quartet began or between any two of the movements, so that those who wished to hear the whole might do so without interruption or annoyance. The consequence was that out of the vast audience assembled, only a very few took their departure, and "Papa Haydn" was honoured with the decorous attention so justly due to his merits.

In a programme where the instrumental music acts so conspicuous a part, the vocal department naturally occupies a secondary place. The selection last night, however,—accompanied by Mr. Benedict, with his accustomed taste and skill—was extremely good. The "Maiden and the River," by Mr. Benedict himself, a song of high poetical merit, and the unambitious but not less beautiful ballad by Mr. Henry Smart, entitled "Come back to me," Mozart's pathetic air, "The very angels weep" ("Selbst Engel Gottes weinen," according to the original text), and Mendelssohn's plaintive and ever welcome "Suleika"—the first two sung by Miss Lascelles, the last two by Miss Augusta Thomson, all four artistically and with true feeling—were the vocal pieces, against which the only charge that can be preferred is that they were too uniformly grave considering the serious character of most of the instrumental music, which but for the cheerful and happy quartet of Haydn, and the Tarantella "danced" by old Sebastian Bach (ordinarily the gravest and most sedate at any musical party), would have scarcely afforded one glimpse of merriment. Mr. Arthur Chappell should remember that music is not "all tears," and that five or six long pieces in the minor (or melancholy) mode are a little too much for a single evening, and likely to dismiss such among the audience as are inclined to sentiment moping rather than exhilarated.

The Opera.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—In justice to a meritorious artist, and in contradiction of an injurious statement made last week by a contemporary, we feel bound to state that the real reason that Mr. Swift was unable to undertake the part of Mamieo, in Il Trovatore, for which he was announced, was a domestic affliction of the severest nature. Mr. Swift has this week reappeared in his character of Raphael, in Massés's Queen Topaze, with his usual success.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.—Mr. Balfe's new opera, Bianca, which has been withdrawn during the early representations of the pantomime, was reproduced on Thursday night, to the evident gratification of a large audience. The length of the entertainment has necessitated several excisions in the work, and as these have all been effected with discretion, the opera gains considerably by the operation. For instance, the exhortation of the monks at the end of the first scene; the air given to Malespina in the second; and the song of Fortespada, which resembles so strongly "When the fair land of Poland," are all now omitted, to the manifest improvement of the work. The pruning-knife, perhaps, might, not disadvantageously, have been made use in one more instance? The scena for the Duke in the third act, "O, crown of power," might be cut out, with no worse effect than that of depriving Mr. Lawrence of his only solo. The first representation of Bianca could not easily be improved upon, and we noticed the work at length so recently that we need not again enlarge upon its excellences. We cannot say that Miss Louisa Pyne sings better than when the opera was first produced a month ago, for that would be impossible; but she certainly seems imbued with fresh animation and energy at each successive representation. Mr. Harrison appeared to be suffering from the effects of a cold, but he nevertheless infused so much expression into the ballad, "Once more upon the path of life," that it was honoured with an encore; and his impersonation of the brigand has lost none of its striking effect. Mr. St. Albyn has made the small part of Beppo so conspicuous by his dancing, that his name next occurs to the mind; and Mr. H. Wharton, Mr. H. Corri, and Mr. Lawrence, all sustained their former characters with their usual success. Miss Thirlwall was as admirable as she always is. The grouping of the choristers was careful and effective, and the orchestral accompani- were executed, under Mr. Mellon's direction, with such accuracy and dash as must have ensured the success of works infinitely inferior to Bianca. That Mr. Balfe's last opera is already a favourite with the public cannot be doubted. The large theatre, on Thursday night, was well filled—in some parts, indeed, inconveniently. The applause was constant, and there were frequent demands for the repetition of morceaux which have at once seized the popular taste.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—The performance of Handel's Judas Maccabæus on the 11th inst. was not the most admirable we have heard from the society. The chorus, however, left but little to be desired. Since last season considerable changes have been effected in the orchestra, the position of many of the instruments having been altered, and a considerable number weeded out of the chorus. This no doubt has given offence to many of the old hands, who have been members ever since the formation of the society, and after giving their services so long, felt themselves aggrieved at being thus dispensed with. Nevertheless we cannot but feel that such proceeding was necessary, as the Sacred Harmonic Society has achieved a position of the highest importance, and in order to hold that position, to sustain the credit of the conductor, and to keep pace with the advanced musical taste and knowledge of the present day, some step of the kind was bound to be taken, for there is no doubt that among the seven hundred not a few were more or less ineffective; and as inefficiency and perfection are antagonistic elements, and it must (or should be) the aim of the society to attain the latter, we must repeat our conviction that M. Costa has done wisely in rejecting those not thoroughly competent for their work. Not that the chorus can yet be considered as absolutely perfect, weakness being manifested more than once on Friday evening. "Fallen is the foe," for instance, where the sopranos were sadly wanting, and in other cases where something was left to be desired. The tenors and basses would be excellent, but for their tendency to loud singing; indeed the sopranos are not sufficient in strength to balance the male voices, and were at times all but lost in the full choruses. The brass too, again, was frequently overpowering, and made one wish occasionally that some of the "additional accompaniments" had been omitted. Turn we now to a far more agreeable task than that of fault-finding. Our pen runs much more glibly when awarding praise, and to the soloists upon this occasion the highest is due. The beautifully clear and powerful voice of Mad. Weiss was heard to the greatest advantage, and the three principal airs, "O Liberty," "From mighty kings," and "Wise men flatt'ring," were given by that lady in the most finished and musician-like style. Miss Banks is one of the most steadily rising soprano singers of the day, and each season exhibits the most gratifying progress. Possessed of a voice of the sweetest quality, flexible to a degree and always in tune, her singing invariably affords pleasure, and well as her first air, "Pious orgies," was delivered, the second, "So shall the lute," was still better, and elicited a spontaneous and hearty burst of applause—the regulations notwithstanding. To Mad. Laura Baxter fell but little, but that little was well done, due effect being given to the air "Father of Heaven," and her voice telling well in the concerted pieces. To Mr. Montem Smith, who sang the part of Judas, we must give a word of commendation for the courage and talent he displayed in one of the most arduous tenor parts in existence. To Mr. Lewis Thomas was allotted the bass music, in which he displayed his accustomed excellence, "Arm, arm, ye brave!" and "The Lord worketh wonders" being delivered with all the requisite energy and expression. The Hall was well filled, although not so densely crammed as we have seen it. For the next performance the Creation is announced, and as we hear of nothing in the shape of novelty in preparation, we are led to conclude that the directors of the Sacred Harmonic think it wiser to trust to the half dozen works which have done service with such regularity for so long a time past, than to follow the examples of Birmingham, which gave us the immortal Elijah, or Norwich, which has so recently produced one of the best modern oratorios from the pen of one of our most accomplished musicians—we need hardly name Herr Molique's Abraham.

Digitized by Google

Provincial.

THE second concert of the Birmingham Musical Union, which took place at Dee's Hotel, on Tuesday evening, the 8th instant, although inferior in interest to the first, was undeniably good, and drew a very large attendance. The programme is worth citing:—

Concertino, violin, with string accompaniments (Spohr); Song, "Deh vieni," (Mozart); Sonata, No. 1, Op. 12, piano and violin (Beethoven); Chamber trio, piano and strings (W. S. Bennett); Trio in E flat, Op. 1, No. 1, piano and strings (Beethoven); Song, "Bear it together," (Irish); Solo pianoforte; Quartet in D, No. 93, Op. 12 (Haydn).

The executants were Messrs. Barnett and Duchemin (pianoforte), H. and G. Hayward (violin), and Aylward (violoncello). Mr. Barnett played the pianoforte part in Professor Sterndale Bennett's trio, which seems to have been greatly admired, the Daily Post expressing its opinion, that "the music, without aiming at the ideal of Haydn and Mozart, is full of character and interest, and, notwithstanding an occasional Mendelssohn reminiscence, thoroughly original." Miss Gray—the young lady, we presume, who last year made so successful a début, at St. Martin's Hall, in the Messiah—sang both the songs named in the programme with entire success, notwithstanding her evident nervousness. Mr. Barnett executed two solos on the piano—one, a prelude by Mendelssohn, the other, a caprice by Professor Bennett.

We learn from the Manchester papers, that the adjourned meeting of the Manchester Glee and Choral Union was held on Thursday evening (the 3rd inst.), in the School-room, Peter Street. The regular soirée was announced to take place, last evening, in the Mechanics' Institution, David Street. The Glee and Choral Union, by the way, is the only organised body of professional singers in Manchester—a fact not easy of credit in so large and art-boasting a city. Thanks to the energy and activity of the conductor, Mr. William Spark, the Society is progressing favourably. The present engagement of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Payne terminated on Monday. It appears that the talented "entertainers" are about to pay a visit to America, "with the object," as wittily suggested by the Manchester Times, "of preventing the threatened disruption of the Union through their genial humour." The first of the Monday Popular Concerts was given in the Free Trade Hall, on Saturday evening, with eminent success. The receipts exceeded 150*l*., and the enthusiasm of the audience was boundless. We have received several other communications from the provinces respecting the success of the Monday Popular Concerts, but as these reiterate merely what appeared in our last number we need not reproduce them. One article from the Newcastle Daily Chronicle and Northern Counties Advertiser, however, is so apt in its remarks thot we present it in extenso:—

"It has often been discussed whether instrumental or vocal music hold the higher position in the world of art. By instrumental music we of course mean orchestral symphonies, quartets, quintets, sonatas, &c. By vocal music, such works as cantatas, masses, operas, oratorios, &c. Now it is by no means easy to determine which is the superior, or which of these two forms of music offers the greater opportunities and facilities for the expression of the musician's thoughts and feelings. Lamartine, in one of his works, argues at some length in favour of the superiority of instrumental music; and this opinion is entertained, we believe, by a great number of musical authorities. It is, indeed, scarcely possible to imagine higher manifestations of the musical art than are to be found in the nine grand symphonies of Beethoven, or in the 17 violin quartets, and the 32 pianoforte sonatas by the same composer; to say nothing of the instrumental works of Hadyn, Mozart, Spohr, Mendelssohn, and others, the form and proportions of the symphony, quartet, or sonata (for they are all constructed on the same model), are better adapted to the development of a great musical idea than that of any other species of composition. However, it is certain that whatever musical authorities or literary men may have said, the public taste has hitherto run in favour of vocal music, or perhaps, we should rather say, in favour of the vocalist; for the public flock to hear the singer quite irrespective of the music he or she sings. Now this adulation of a voice merely, acts most prejudicially to the cause of music, and is, besides, most unfair to the instrumentalist. There is no question that, as a rule, the instrumentalist stands much higher in the matter of musical education than the vocalist, and it is well known that public singers are not unfrequently but imperfectly acquainted with the very first principles of music. A comparison of the attainments of the two will set the matter in a clear light. Let us suppose a singer to be endowed with a naturally good voice, two or three years' moderate application will be sufficient to qualify him either as a public performer or private teacher. He will have to cultivate his voice, a process requiring great care and delicate treatment. When not occupied in this way, he will be employed in acquiring a slight knowledge of the pianoforte, or an acquaintance with the Italian language. As soon as his voice becomes developed and under control, he will be ready to accept engagements; and if he should have a tolerable share of confidence and a strong pair of lungs, he will probably become a public favourite and command good terms. On the other hand, take a pianoforte player. He must have worked assiduously for many years—probably from his childhood, to have acquired the necessary flexibility and strength of finger—he must be acquainted with the works of Bach, Handel, Scarlatti, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Chopin, and all the host of modern composers. If he be also an organist, he is supposed to be well acquainted with the works of the English Church composers, from Orlando Gibbons to the last new anthem—in short, the entire range of Church music for the last 300 years. Again, if he be engaged as an accompanist, he will be expected to understand the style and manner of the modern Italian Operatic School, and to know the necessities and requirements of the singer, and will probably have, at the last moment, a request to transpose the song a note higher or a note lower. In addition to all this, he must understand the theory as well as the practice of music—harmony, counterpoint, instrumentation, and be able to read from score. This is not a fancy sketch. We have no hesitation in saying, a very large number of the organists and pianoforte performers in this country come fully up to this standard. Now, we will not stop here to comment upon the relative amount of pecuniary support which these two classes of musicians obtain from the public. We have all heard of the extravagant terms obtained by some of our leading vocalists, and we also know that, as a consequence, musical speculations with popular singers frequently, we might say usually, end in disastrous failure and loss. But if the injudicious and excessive patronage awarded to the vocalist be injurious to the interests of the art, what have we to say of the support given to those nondescript entertainments in which a black face seems to be the only necessary qualification? The musical portions of the entertainment are generally of the poorest kind, such as would elicit no approbation were the performers to appear with clean skins—the histrionic attempts are painful to witness, and the libretto, or dramatic part of the entertainment, is usually made up of threadbare jokes and the latest importations of American slang. There is, however, another side to the picture. Within the last two or three years instrumental music has begun to assert its dignity and importance. Formerly it was only at the concerts of the Philharmonic Society in London that the large instrumental works of the great masters could be heard. But although these concerts were always patronised by the reigning sovereign, the aristocracy, and the wealthy class of musical amateurs, yet certain restrictive regulations, and the excessively high charges for admission, completely excluded the general public. No attempts were made in other quarters to provide a similar kind of entertainment for the middle classes. It was argued that the mass of the public was incapable of appreciating the abstruse works of the great composers; that to comprehend and enjoy them they demanded a power of concentration and analysis which the majority of musically uneducated persons did not possess. The late M. Jullien was one of the first to solve this problem, and with what success our musical readers well know. A Mozart, Beethoven, or Mendelssohn night was a frequent occurrence during his annual series of winter concerts, and a crowded house was always the result of the experiment. The New Philharmonic Society in London followed in the same path. The latest, and perhaps the most daring attempt to test the capacity of the public for the appreciation and enjoyment of the highest class of instrumental music was made by Messrs. Chappell and Co., when they instituted the Monday Evening Popular Concerts at St. James's Hall, London. The violin quartets of Mozart, Beethoven, &c., were, to the generality of even musical persons, sealed books. Now, however, an audience of more than 2000 persons may be seen every Monday evening at St. James's Hall listening with the deepest attention to one of the later quartets of Beethoven, or some other masterpiece by one of the great composers. It must be remembered, too, that these persons do not reside in proximity to the Hall, but come from the suburbs, two, three, or four miles, to hear these works. We are glad to find that Messrs. Horn and Story have made arrangements for a concert at our New Town Hall to-morrow (Wednesday) evening, upon the same plan as the Monday Popular Concerts. Of the artists engaged for this occasion it is quite superfluous to speak. Three greater performers than Vieuxtemps, Piatti, and Charles Hallé, on their respective instruments, could not be found in Europe. We remember, some time since, asking one of our best English violinists which of all the great performers on the violin he considered the greatest. His reply was, 'Vieuxtemps, unquestionably.' The programme, also, is admirable. The quartet, No. 6, Op. 18, by Beethoven is well suited to the broad and grand style of Vieuxtemps. The prelude, &c., by Seb. Bach, for the violoncello, is a wonderful performance, by Piatti, and the pianoforte sonata by Beethoven, will be, in the hands of Mr. Chas. Hallé, a treat of the highest order. In addition to this, we have for the vocal department Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington and Mr. Weiss. This is perhaps the first time that long instrumental works of a high character have been given in Newcastle; and we sincerely trust that the experiment may be as successful here as it has been in London, and that the public of this town may not be found far behind, in matters of taste, that of the metropolis."

Digitized by Google

At Liverpool the first of the Monday Popular Concerts was given on Friday evening in last week, but the audience was not so large as was anticipated. "The directors of these concerts," writes the Liverpool Albion, "deserve every encouragement in their endeavours to improve the taste of the people, giving them first-class music at very low figures; but such, unfortunately, scarcely ever take with a Liverpool public." This is not very complimentary to the taste of the Liverpuddlians, and hardly true, we venture to assert. It does not follow that because the first of the Monday Popular Concerts did not draw a large crowd that the second will not do so. The journal just quoted appears to think that a necessity exists, even in Liverpool, for the establishment of the same kind of music. "These concerts," it writes, "belong to that class of which it may be said we cannot have too many; and we trust the Philharmonic Society may favour us with many such during the season." A performance on the grand organ of St. George's Hall was given on Thursday evening by Mr. W. T. Best. The following selection was played:—

Overture, Nabucco, Verdi; Adagio (E major), Lefebure Wely; fantasia on old English airs, W. T. Best; choral march, "Crown ye the Altars,"—Ruins of Athens, Beethoven; Reminiscences of the Opera, Semiramide, including the cavatina, "Bel raggio lusinghiero;" the chorus, "Belo si celebra;" the duet, "Giorno d'orrore;" and the March of Priests, "Ergi omai," Rossini.

A CORRESPONDENT from Weymouth informs us that Mr. Ricardo Linter, the pianist and composer, inaugurated a series of popular concerts at a popular price. The first attempt was made on the 28th of December, and the programme consisted of a selection from the works of Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn and Weber. The vocal illustrations were given by Mrs. Ricardo Linter. As an entirely new feature, a sketch of the origin and history of the compositions of the masters was read by Mr. Rowland Brown, a Dorsetshire poet, whose discourse, interspersed with quotations from Milton, Shakspeare, Shelley and Tennyson, was greatly appreciated by the audience. This attempt of Mr. Ricardo Linter to improve the musical taste of the Weymouth public proved a great success. The entertainment was repeated on Monday evening.

SOCIETY FOR THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF THE FINE ARTS.—A lecture on Mendelssohn and his works was delivered on Thursday evening last by Mr. Alfred Gilbert at the Architectural Gallery, 9 Conduit Street. The illustrations were selected to exhibit Mendelssohn's peculiarities of style in music for the church, the chamber and the theatre. The vocal music was exceedingly well given by the following members of the "Arion" Choir. Miss Fosbroke, Miss E. Gresham, Mad. Andrea and Miss Boden, Messrs. Belton, Belgemaum, Milne Haughton and Layland. The chamber music was particularly attractive, consisting, besides some vocal music, of No. 6, B flat, of the Lieder ohne worte. The three last movements of the trio in D minor, and the two last of the sonata, for pianoforte and violoncello, in which Mr. Alfred Gilbert was ably assisted by Mr. Louis Diehl, a young violinist we hope soon to hear again, and by Mr. Daubert, the well-known violoncellist. Mr. W. C. Filby was the accompanist.

POLYGRAPHIC HALL.—Mr. Woodin's new entertainment, the Cabinet of Curiosities, is constructed on a principle which is at once ingenious in itself and fitted to display his versatile power to the fullest extent. The four parts into which it is divided are named after the four seasons of the year, each of which is illustrated by a set of typical characters. Thus, for instance, Spring has its public dinners and its Derby Day, the latter of which compels Mr. Woodin to split himself into a perfect mob of eccentric figures; Summer takes us to the seaside; Autumn carries us over Ireland, Scotland, and the Continent; and in Winter we worship our metropolitan Lares. These phases of the year are exhibited in dresses scarcely to be numbered, and in changes of countenance and dialect not to be numbered at all. The "Derby Day" is most remarkable for rapid transitions, and, as one instance of a perfect make-up, there is a belle attired in the fashion of 100 years ago, with powder and patches, who may fairly be considered a rival to the modern young ladies so conspicuous in the Olio of Oddities. But, perhaps, the most novel scene is one that represents an altercation between two gentlemen of opposite tempers and complexions, who sit in adjacent boxes at a London eating-house. By an ingenious mechanical contrivance, these gentlemen show themselves in such quick alternation, and are so completely different in appearance, that one can hardly avoid believing that they are two personages, instead of one, Mr. Woodin. In the art of changing his dress this clever "entertainer" has never been excelled, or even rivalled. Scarcely has he quitted the stage attired in the most elaborate costume than he interrupts the applause of his audience by reappearing at his table in the normal black suit, whence or how nobody knows. As usual, his entertainment terminates with an imitation of several popular singers and actors; and it is illustrated throughout by some very pretty scenes.

THE HULLAH FUND.—The first concert, under the direct auspices of the committee of the Hullah Fund, will take place at St. James's Hall on Tuesday evening January 29th. Mr. Benedict's new lyrical legend, Undine, and other orchestral works of importance (vocal and instrumental), will be the principal features; all the best orchestral artists in the profession will take part in the performance. The whole of the musical arrangements are under the direction of Mr. Benedict.

MDLLE. EMMA LIVRY.—Mr. Gye has engaged this new terpsichorean celebrity, about whose remarkable merits the Parisian papers are so unanimous, to perform at the Royal Italian Opera, in the new ballet by Taglioni, entitled Le Papillon, recently produced with such success at the Académie Impériale de Musique et de Danse.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—M. Alfred Musard, director of the well-known Summer Concerts in the Champs Elysées, has engaged the large Music Room in St. James's Hall for a series of promenade concerts, to be held during the month of Febuary every night in the week, except the Mondays, which Mr. Arthur Chappell, with his Monday Popular Concerts, judging from the present aspect of affairs, intends appropriating to himself during the greater part of the spring and summer.

BRENTWOOD.—A correspondent informs us that a concert was given on the 31st of December, in aid of the local Band Fund. The artists engaged were Miss Annie Cox, Mrs. Robert Paget, Mr. Hubbard, and Mr. Alexander Thornley. Pianoforre, Mr. Simpson, organist of Shoreditch Church. The band, which has only been organised some three or four months, played several pieces very creditably, under the baton of their excellent military bandmaster.

Digitized by Google

DON GIOVANNI PURIFIED.—A stir has been of late made in Germany to improve, purify, and re-arrange the words of Mozart's Don Juan, which, as every lover of that master-work knows, is anything but satisfactory. A new text, with corrected stage-directions, has been put forward by Baron Alfred von Wolzogen—and yet another new text, by Prof. Bischoff, of Cologne, has lately been published. The former we have examined, and find it, in every respect, an improvement on the old one. Of course, there will be pedants who will raise the easy and effective cry of "Sacrilege!"—but we only wish that more efforts of the kind were made by competent persons, willing to efface themselves in an ungrateful labour, with a view of being of service to the art. Nevertheless, our German friends, who hold with us that such amendment is reverential rather than otherwise, will, for aught we know, raise a cry against us when we add, that some of the elegance vanishes from the music of this master-work with the Italian words.—Athenæum.

Advertisements.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Mr. HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR. Second Concert. FRIDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 1st. To commence at half-past Eight. The programme will include "HOLYROOD," a cantata (first time of performance). Words by HENRY F. CHORLEY, set to music by HENRY LESLIE. Principal parts sung by Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, Miss PALMER, Mr. WILBYE COOPER and Mr. WEISS. The Orchestra will be complete in every department. Bennett's CAPRICE, for pianoforte, with orchestral accompaniments. Pianoforte, Miss CAZALY. Mendelssohn's 43rd PSALM, for an eight-part choir, &c.—Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 2s. 6d.; area, 1s. Persons subscribing are entitled to one extra ticket for this Concert. Subscriptions 21s. and 10s. 6d.
Addison, Hollier & Lucas, 210 Regent Street; Cramer, Beale & Co., 201 Regent Street; Mr. Austin, Ticket Office, St. James's Hall; and at Keith, Prouse & Co.'s, 48 Cheapside.

MISS HELEN HOGARTH (Teacher of Singing) begs to inform her pupils and the public that she has RETURNED to town for the season, and has removed from Weymouth Street to No. 71 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square.

HERR MAURICE NABICH begs to inform his friends and pupils that he has returned to town for the season.
Communications to be addressed to 3 Grove Terrace, Grove Road, Forest Hill.

TO THE MUSIC TRADE.—Wanted, a genteel Young Man for the Counter at a fashionable Music Warehouse at the West End of London. One would be preferred who speaks either French or German.
Address, by letter only, with full particulars, to G. H., at MITCHELL'S Royal Library, 33 Old Bond Street, W.

ROBERT COCKS AND CO.'S LIST OF NEW MUSIC.

DANSES CARACTERISTIQUES, par THEODORE KULLAK. No. 1. Four Polonaise, pour piano, 3s.; No. 2. Valse Impromptu, pour piano, 4s. Two pianoforte pieces in the dance style, marked by this composer's peculiar elegance.

LA CZARINA. Mazurka de Salon, pour Piano.
"Light, brilliant, and varied. The passages are clear and open, and adapted to moderate players."—Atlas.

SOUVENANCE. By HENRI LITOLF. Impromptu, pour piano, 2s. 6d.: Ballade, pour piano, by Henri Litolf, 3s. 6d.; Valse Elégante, pour piano, by Aenri Litolf, 2s. 6d. Polka Caractéristique, pour piano, by Henri Litolf, 2s. 6d. Four pieces of great merit.

LOUISE. Nocturne. Pour Piano. By BRINLEY RICHARDS, 3s.

SANTA LUCIA. Barcarolle for Piano, arranged by G. F. West, 3s.

NEW PIANO MUSIC, by W. VINCENT WALLACE:—La Luvisella, Neapolitan Melody, 3s.; Chorus of Dervishes, 3s.; Fantasia on the Ruins of Athens, 4s.; Good News from Home, varied, 3s.; Come where my Love lies Dreaming, 3s.; Croyez-moi, romance, 2s. 6d.; The Shepherd's Roundelay, 4s.; March of the Volunteer Rifles, 2s. 6d.: La Plainte du Berger, 3s.

279TH EDITION of HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE, enlarged and fingered by CZERNY, with the addition of New and Original Preludes and Arrangements by W. VINCENT WALLACE, BRINLEY RICHARDS, and A. LEDUC. Large folio plates, 70 pages, 4s. Contents:—Rudiments of Musical Notation, Sections 1 to 18—Exercises and Scales, Nos. 1 to 119—Lessons with Preludes, in various keys, Nos. 1 to 72—Twelve Single and Double Chants—Four Vocal Pieces, with Piano Accompaniment.
"A complete library for the learner at the pianoforte."
London: ROBERT COCKS and Co., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, W., and of all Musicsellers and Booksellers.

MADAME OURY'S BRILLIANT FANTASIA on Jacobite Airs. 4s.—Madame Oury's Souvenirs d'Ecosse. 4s.—Madame Oury's "Auld Robin Gray." 4s.
[Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, and Patterson & Sons, Edinburgh.

BOOSEY & SONS' LIST OF POPULAR PIANO, FORTE and DANCE MUSIC, by the most celebrated Composers.]
N.B.—The Dance Music is all illustrated in Colours by BRANDARD and PACKER.

BRINLEY RICHARDS.
'Twas He my only Thought, from Bianca.
Gold Rules the World, from Bianca.
What Sunshine Bright, from Bianca.
The Marriage of Georgette.
The Skipper and his Boy.
Come into the Garden Maud.
Santa Maria, from Dinorah.
The Shadow Air, from Dinorah.
The Power of Love, from Satanella.
Thou art so Near, (Reichardt).

KUHE.
Bianca, Fantaisie Brillante.
Bianca, Galop de Bravura.
Dinorah, Fantaisie de Concert.
Dinorah, Fantaisie Brillante.
Satanella, Valse de Concert.
Satanella, Fantaisie Brillante.
Zampa, Fantaisie Brillante.
Domino Noir, Fantaisie Brillante.
Robert le Diable, Fantaisie Brillante.
Rigoletto, Fantaisie Brillante.
Schubert's Ave Maria.
Schubert's Serenade.

ASCHER.
Toujours Gai, Galop Brillant.
Les Cloches du Village.
Thou art so Near (Reichardt).
Dinorah, Illustration.
Les Vepres Siciliennes, ditto.
Un Ballo in Maschera, (Nocturne).

T. MAUSS.
Merrily over the Snow (Schloesser).
De Corsaire Galop Brillant.
Nourmahal, (Nocturne).

EMILE BERGER.
Notre Dame Romance, Illustrated.
Campanella Mazurka.
Fantaisie on Balfe's Bianca.
Selection from Bianca, Illustrated.
Selection from Satanella, ditto.
Selection from Dinorah, ditto.
Selection from Martha, ditto.

MADAME OURY.
Bianca Fantaisie Brillante.
Santa Lucia.
Auld Robin Gray.
Souvenirs d'Ecosse.
Fantaisie on Jacobite Airs.

BENEDICT.
Albion, Fantaisie on English Airs.
Erin, Fantaisie on Irish Airs.
Caledonia, Fantaisie on Scotch Airs.

TALEXY.
Satanella Polka Mazurka.
Dinorah Polka Mazurka.
Eva Polka Mazurka.

NORDMANN.
Evening with Meyerbeer,
Evening with Balfe.
Evening with Christy's Minstrels.

LAURENT.
Bianca Waltz, Illustrated.
Bianca Quadrille, ditto.
Bianca Polka, ditto.
Bianca Galop, ditto.
Spring Buds Waltz, ditto.
Margaretta Waltz, ditto.
Daisy Waltz, ditto.
Christmas Waits Quadrille, ditto.
Lord Lovel's Waltz, ditto.
Beloved Star Waltz, on Thou art so near.

BURCKHARDT.
New Year's Quadrille, Illustrated.
Ramsgate Sands Quadrille, ditto.
Serpentine Quadrille, ditto.
Bal Masque Quadrille, ditto.
Knickerbocker's Polka, ditto.
Dream of the Rose Waltz.

MARRIOTT.
Colleen Bawn Waltz, Illustrated.
Woman in White Waltz, ditto.
Don Pasquale Waltz.
Waterfall Galop.

Digitized by Google

Evans' Cottage Harmonium at Six Guineas,

In a French Polished Pine Case, has the full compass, Five Octaves, and a soft, subdued agreeable quality of tone—designed expressly for a cottage or small sitting room.

Evans' Harmonium at Ten Guineas,

Is in a handsome French Polished Oak Case, and possesses that rich organ-like quality of tone so peculiar to all Evans' Instruments.

Evans' English Harmoniums.

An Illustrated Catalogue of the whole of these well-known Instruments, with one and two Rows of Keys, the Percussion Action and Pedals, at prices ranging from Six Guineas to 140 Guineas—may now be had upon application to the Manufacturers, BOOSEY AND CHING, Holles Street, London.

Case's Patent English Concertina,

As used by Signor Regondi and other eminent Professors, still maintain their pre-eminent position as Concert and Drawing-room Instruments. The Four-Guinea Concertina has the Full Compass and Double-Action. The Patent Concert Concertina, in Amboyna or Bird's-Eye Maple, possesses every Modern Improvement that can possibly be introduced into the Concertina. A large stock of Second Hand Concertinas for Sale or Hire.

BOOSEY AND CHING, Manufacturers, 24 Holles Street, London.

CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE, No. 1,

price 1s., containing THIRTEEN SONGS by BALFE, with Pianoforte Accompaniment:—

1. The sweet guitar.
2. We 'll meet again.
3. I dreamt that I dwelt.
4. Then you 'll remember me.
5. In this old chair.
6. When all around.
7. Love smiles but to deceive.
8. Sorrows of the heart.
9. Don't let the roses.
10. Distant land.
11. The Gondolier.
12. When this enchantment.
13. Go, Memory, go!

CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE,

No. 2. Price 1s.
TEN SONGS by the Hon. Mrs. NORTON.

1. The Fairy Bells.
2. The Officer's Funeral.
3. Voice of music.
4. Oh! take me back to Switzerland.
5. The Emigrant Mother.
6. The Careless Word.
7. None remember thee.
8. I do not love thee.
9. I have left my quiet home.
10. Pray for those at Sea.

CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE,

No. 3. Price 1s.
TEN SONGS by WALLACE.

1. Lily Bells. (Sung by Mdlle. Parepa.)
2. Sweet Evening Star.
3. Pretty things young lovers say.
4. Old Friendship's Smile.
5. Florence Vane.
6. Come! smile again.
7. I mourn thee but I love not.
8. 'Tis pleasant to be young.
9. Where shall we meet?
10. It is the happy summer time.

CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE,

No. 4. Price 1s.
TEN SONGS BY MOZART, with Italian and English Words.

1. L'addio.
2. Voi che sapete.
3. Vedrai carino.
4. Batti, batti.
5. Deh vieni.
6. S'altro che lagrime.
7. Deh vieni, non tardar.
8. Porgi Amor.
9. Komm lieber mai.
10. I moderni cavalieri.

CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE,

No. 5. Price 1s.
TWELVE SACRED SONGS by J. BARNETT, G. BARKER, GLOVER, &c.

1. Thy Will be done.
2. For evermore.
3. Oh, distant stars!
4. The Missionary's Grave.
5. No more Sea.
6. The Angel's Voice.
7. Not lost, but gone before.
8. He that gathereth in summer.
9. The Sabbath Morn.
10. The Sabbath Eve.
11. The Orphan's Prayer.
12. Eve's Lamentation.

CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE,

No. 6. Price 1s.
TWELVE SONGS by HANDEL.
Easy Accompaniments by Macfarren.

1. I know that my Redeemer.
2. Lord remember David.
3. He shall feed his flock.
4. He was despised.
5. Pious orgies.
6. How beautiful are thy feet.
7. But thou didst not leave.
8. Return, O God.
9. Holy, holy.
10. Angels ever bright.
11. Comfort ye, my people.
12. Let the bright seraphim.

CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE,

No. 7. Price 1s.
TEN SETS OF QUADRILLES by D'ALBERT, &c.

1. Edinburgh—D'Albert.
2. Grenada Ditto.
3. Paris Ditto.
4. Heidelberg Ditto.
5. Part du Diable—Ditto.
6. Favorita—D'Albert.
7. Agnes Sorel—Leduc.
8. German Quadrille.
9. La Chevaleresque.
10. The Original Lancers.

CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE,

No. 8. Price 1s.
FORTY POLKAS by D'ALBERT, JULLIEN, KOENIG, &c., including D'Albert's Circassian, English, Coquette, French, Linnet, Helena, Isabella, and other favourites, with various popular ones by Strauss, Lanner, Labitzky, Jullien, Koenig, &c., &c.

CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE,

No. 9. Price 1s.
FIFTY POPULAR WALTZES by D'ALBERT, &c., including D'Albert's Dewdrop, Belle Suisse, Queen of the Ball, Star of the Night, Margarita, and other Popular Sets by Strauss, Lanner, Labitzky, Gungl, Ettling, &c.

CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE,

No. 10. Price 1s.
NINE PIANOFORTE PIECES by BRINLEY RICHARDS.

1. The Fairy's Dream.
2. Sybil.
3. Fro Peccatis.
4. Picciola.
5. The Vesper Hymn.
6. La Preciosa Valse.
7. The First Violet (Mendelssohn).
8. O wert thou in the cauld blast? (Mendelssohn).
9. Greeting (Medelssohn).

CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE,

No. 11. Price 1s.
SIX PIANOFORTE PIECES, by W. V. WALLACE.

1. La Gondola.
2. Le Tyrol.
3. Ange si pur.
4. Au bord de la mer.
5. Mélodie Peruvienne.
6. Fantasia on Lucrezia Borgia.

CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE,

No. 12. Price 1s.
BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS.
Edited and Fingered by C. HALLE.
This number contains Nos. 1 and 2 of the Sonatas, dedicated to Haydn, complete.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening, C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.
Their Catalogues, which contain a great variety of Music calculated for teaching purposes, may be had, post-free, on application.
London: 18 Hanover Square.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish.
Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, January 19, 1861.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 39—No. 4 SATURDAY, JANUARY 26, 1861 PRICE {4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE NINTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON
(50TH OF THE SERIES),

WILL TAKE PLACE

ON MONDAY EVENING, JANUARY 28, 1861,

On which occasion the celebrated Violinist,

M. VIEUXTEMPS

(Who has been expressly engaged for these Concerts),

Will make his Fourth Appearance in London, after an absence of Eight Years.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Ottet in E flat, Op. 20, for four violins, two tenors, and two violoncellos, M. VIEUXTEMPS, Herr RIES, M. CARRODUS, M. GOFFRIE, M. SCHREURS, Mr. WEBB, M. PAQUE and Signor PIATTI—Mendelssohn; song, "O cara imagine," Mr. TENNANT—Mozart; song, "On music's softest pinions," Mme. LOUISA VINNING—Mendelssohn; duet, "Per valli, per boschi," Mme. LOUISA VINNING and Mr. TENNANT—Biangini; sonata in D major, for pianoforte alone, Mr. CHARLES HALLE—Clementi (first time at the Monday Popular Concerts).

PART II.—Sonata in A, for pianoforte and violin, Mr. CHARLES HALLE and M. VIEUXTEMPS—Mozart; song, "Estelle," Mme. LAURA BAXTER—Henry Smart; duet, "Pure, ciel tranquille notte," Mme. LOUISA VINNING and Mme. LAURA BAXTER—Paer; quartet in G, Op. 18, No. 2, for two violins, viola, and violoncello, M. VIEUXTEMPS, Herr RIES, M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI—Beethoven.

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT. To commence at Eight o'Clock precisely.

Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s.

Notice.—It is particularly requested that those persons who are not anxious to remain till the end of the concert, will leave either before the commencement of the last instrumental piece, or between any of the movements of the same, so that those who wish to hear the whole of the performance may do so without interruption.

Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28 Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co., Hammond, Addison and Co., Schott and Co., Ewer and Co., Simpson, and Oetzmann and Co., Regent Street; Bradberry's, London Crystal Palace, Oxford Street; Duff and Co., 65 Oxford Street; Prowse, Hanway Street; Chidley, 195 High Holborn; Purday, 50 St. Paul's Church Yard; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48 Cheapside, Turner, 19 Cornhill; Cook and Co., 6 Finsbury Place, South; Humfress, 4 Old Church Street, Paddington Green; Fabian, Circus Road, St. John's Wood; Ransford and Son, 2 Princes Street, Cavendish Square; Ivory, 275 Euston Road; Mitchell, Leader and Co., Ollivier, Campbell, Hopwood and Crewe, and Willis, Bond Street; And CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond Street.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

By permission of Miss LOUISA PYNE and Mr. W. HARRISON, the use of the Theatre has been granted for a Grand

ORCHESTRAL MORNING CONCERT,

Which will be given on MONDAY, FEBRUARY 4th, 1861, in aid of the

HULLAH FUND,

Under the following distinguished patronage:

Her Grace the Duchess of St. Albans, her Grace the Duchess of Argyll, her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland, the Lady Auckland, the Lady Lyndhurst, the Lady Hatherton, Baroness Lionel de Rothschild, Lady Molesworth, of Pencarrow, Lady Pakington, Lady Page Wood, Lady Flower, Mrs. W. E. Gladstone, Mrs. Malcolm.

The following Artists have kindly offered their services:

Mad. CATHERINE HAYES, Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, Mrs. SIMS REEVES, Mad. LAURA BAXTER, Mr. SIMS REEVES, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. HALLE, M. SAINTON, and the entire Orchestra of the Royal English Opera.

Conductor ... ... Mr. ALFRED MELLON.

The Programme will include Beethoven's and Meyerbeer's Overtures to Prometheus and Dinorah, Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in G minor, and a Fantasia for the Violin.

Notwithstanding the great attraction offered, the Prices of Admission to all parts of the Theatre will remain unchanged. Boxes and places can be secured at the Box Office of the Theatre, as usual.

Stalls, 7s. Private Boxes, £4 4s., £3 3s., £2 2s., £1 11s. 6d., and £1 1s.
Dress Circle, 5s. Amphitheatre Stalls, 3s. Pit, 2s. 6d. Amphitheatre, 1s.
The doors will be opened at Two o'clock, the Concert will commence at half-past Two, and Carriages should be ordered at half-past Four.

E. J. FRASER, Hon. Sec.

26, Craven Street, Charing Cross.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Mr. HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.

Second Concert. FRIDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 1st. To commence at half-past Eight. The programme will include "HOLYROOD," a cantata (first time of performance). Words by HENRY F. CHORLEY, set to music by HENRY LESLIE. Principal parts sung by Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, Miss PALMER, Mr. WILBYE COOPER and Mr. WEISS. The Orchestra will be complete in every department. Bennett's CAPRICE, for pianoforte, with orchestral accompaniments. Pianoforte, Miss CAZALY. Mendelssohn's 43rd PSALM, for an eight-part choir, &c.—Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 2s. 6d.; area, 1s. Persons subscribing are entitled to one extra ticket for this Concert. Subscriptions 21s. and 10s. 6d.

Addison, Hollier & Lucas, 210 Regent Street; Cramer, Beale & Co., 201 Regent Street; Mr. Austin, Ticket Office, St. James's Hall; and at Keith, Prouse & Co.'s, 48 Cheapside.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—HULLAH FUND

PERFORMANCE. TUESDAY, JANUARY 29th, at Eight. Mr. Benedict's new Lyrical Legend, "UNDINE," and M. Vieuxtemps' FANTASIA APPASSIONATA, for Violin and full Orchestra. Violin, M. VIEUXTEMPS; Mlle. PAREPA, Mad. WEISS, Miss BANKS, Miss PALMER, Mr. WILBYE COOPER, and Mr. WEISS. Band and Choir of 250 Performers. Conductor, Mr. BENEDICT.

Sofa Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Balcony Stalls, 7s. 6d. and 5s.; Reserve, Area, numbered, 5s.; Unreserved Area and Balcony, 3s. and 2s., at St. James's Hall.

GLEES, MADRIGALS, and OLD BALLADS.—

DUDLEY GALLERY, EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY.—Positively the LAST WEEK of THE LONDON GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION—Miss J. WELLS and Miss EYLES, Mr. BAXTER, Mr. W. CUMMINGS, Mr. LAND, and Mr. LAWLER, under the direction of Mr. LAND, with Literary Illustrations by J. OLIPHANT, Esq. This being the last week, the Programme (which will be varied during the week), will consist of the choicest Selections, and Performances will be given every afternoon and evening, terminating on Saturday evening, February 2nd. Afternoons, at half-past Three; evenings, at half-past Eight.

Reserved seats, 3s.; unreserved, 2s. A few Fauteuils, 5s. each, which may be secured at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33 Old Bond Street, W.

MR. and MRS. LOCKEY beg to inform their Friends, Pupils, and the Public, they have removed to Prospect Villas, Forest Hill, S.E

MR. and MADAME R. SIDNEY PRATTEN beg to announce, that they have removed to 38 Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, W., where they will continue to give lessons on the Flute, Guitar, and Concertina.

MISS AUGUSTA THOMSON begs to announce that she has REMOVED to 38 Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, W.

MR. GEORGE FORBES begs to inform his Friends and Pupils that he has REMOVED to 22 PORTSDOWN ROAD, Maida Hill, W.

MR. ALEXANDER THORNLEY, BASS PUPIL of the late CRIVELLI, may be ENGAGED for Concerts, Oratorios, &c.—Address to 17 Winchester Place, Pentonville, N.

MESSRS. KLINDWORTH, H. BLAGROVE, and DAUBERT'S THREE CONCERTS of CHAMBER MUSIC, at the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS, Tuesday evenings, February 19th, March 5th and 19th, at Half-past Eight o'clock. The Programmes illustrated by Mr. G. A. MACFARREN. Subscription Tickets, or Tickets for Three, One Guinea; Single Tickets, Half a Guinea, to be had of Mr. Klindworth, 9 Manchester Street, Manchester Square; Mr. H. Blagrove, 11 Hinde Street, Manchester Square; Mr. Daubert, 89 Charlotte Street, Fitzroy Square; and of Messrs. Cramer, Chappell, Ewer, Schott and Betts.

MADAME OURY'S BRILLIANT FANTASIA on Jacobite Airs, 4s.—Madame Oury's Souvenirs d'Ecosse, 4s.—Madame Oury's "Auld Robin Gray," 4s.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, and Patterson & Sons, Edinburgh.

MISS HELEN HOGARTH (Teacher of Singing) begs to inform her pupils and the public that she has RETURNED to town for the season, and has removed from Weymouth Street to No. 71 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square.

MR. HENRY JOHN LINCOLN will deliver TWO LECTURES (with Vocal and Instrumental Illustrations), "On the GENIUS and WORKS of MOZART and WEBER," at the Philosophical Institution, Edinburgh, on February 12th and 15th; and at the Queen's Rooms, Glasgow, on February 13th and 16th.

Digitized by Google

BOOSEY & SONS'
CHEAP PUBLICATIONS.

Operas in English.

Dinorah, 12s.; Il Trovatore, 12s.; Satanella, 15s.; La Traviata, 12s.; Don Juan, 18s.; Figaro, 16s.; Sonnambula, 12s. 6d.; Norma, 10s. 6d.; Lucrezia, 16s.; Iphigenia in Tauris, 8s.; Faust, 12s. 6d.; Fidelio, 15s.; Der Freischütz, 12s. 6d.; Ernani, 16s.; Il Barbière, 10s.; Zauberflote, 12s. 6d. These Operas are complete for Voice and Pianoforte, with English Words, and the original Foreign Text, in handsome cloth volumes. BOOSEYS' Editions must be ordered.

Operas, Solo.

Dinorah, 7s. 6d.; Satanella, 5s; La Traviata, 5s.; Il Trovatore, 5s.; Rigoletto, 5s.; Ernani, 5s.; Vêpres Siciliennes, 7s. 6d.; Crown Diamonds, 6s.; Don Pasquale, 5s.; Martha, 5s.; Luisa Miller, 5s.; Les Huguenots, 7s. 6d.; Don Juan, 5s.; Fra Diavolo, 5s.; Fille du Regiment, 4s.; Lucia di Lammermoor, 5s.; Lucrezia Borgia, 4s.; Puritani, 6s.; Norma, 4s.; Sonnambula, 4s. These Operas are complete for Pianoforte, in cloth, gilt letters, each with a beautiful Frontispiece, printed on India paper, and an Introduction describing the plot and music. BOOSEYS' Editions must be ordered.

Operas for Violin.

Il Trovatore, The Bohemian Girl, La Traviata, Rigoletto, Maritana, Le Prophetè, La Fille du Regiment, Luisa Miller, Martha, Satanella, Dinorah, La Sonnambula, Lucrezia Borgia, Norma, Elisire d'amore, Lucia di Lammermoor, Ernani, Masaniello, Don Pasquale, I Puritani, Les Huguenots, Il Barbiere, Don Juan.

Each Opera complete, price 1s.

Operas for Flute.

Les Huguenots, Robert le Diable, Masaniello, Ernani, Rigoletto, Puritani, Sonnambula, Norma, Lucia, Lucrezia, Il Trovatore, Don Juan.

Each Opera arranged by Clinton, price 1s.

Beethoven's Sonatas.

New Library Edition of the whole of the Sonatas complete in two volumes, handsomely bound, 10s. 6d. each, with Life and Portrait. Edited by W. DORRELL.

"There are many editions of Beethoven's sonatas, German, French, and English; but there is not one that we have seen, from which, taking all things into account—correctness and clearness of the text, elegance of form, and moderation of price—we have derived so much satisfaction as from the edition now before us. The text, after undergoing the revision of so able an editor as Mr. Dorrell, may be expected to be immaculate; and so, after a close examination, we find it to be; and the clearness and beauty of the paper and printing are not to be excelled. The value of the edition is much enhanced by an able and interesting essay on the life and works of Beethoven from the pen of Mr. G. A. Macfarren; and there is, moreover, an excellent portrait of the composer.—Daily News.

Pianoforte Works.

Chopin's Mazurkas for pianoforte, complete, edited by J. W. DAVISON, with Life and Portrait, 8s.; Mendelssohn's Songs, without words, complete, edited by J. W. DAVISON, with Preface and Portrait, 7s. 6d.; Mozart's Twelfth Mass for pianoforte, by H. SMART, complete, 2s.; Rossini's Stabat Mater, ditto, ditto, 3s.; Boosey's 100 Waltzes, by STRAUSS, LANNER and LABITZKY, 3s. 6d.; Boosey's National Dance Book, containing 100 Reels, Country Dances, &c., 2s. 6d.; Moore's 73 Irish Melodies for pianoforte, by NORDMANN, 2s. 6d.; the Operatic Album, containing 100 gems for the pianoforte, price 7s. 6d., in cloth.

Harmonium Music.

Boosey's 50 short Voluntaries, from the works of the great masters, 3s. 6d., cloth; Boosey's 250 Chants, 3s. 6d., cloth; the Harmonium Museum, containing 100 Sacred and Secular Subjects, by the great masters, 7s. 6d., cloth; the Harmonium Operatic Album, containing 60 favourite Airs, 7s. 6d.

Violin Music.

De Beriot's 7 Airs, with variations, 1s.; Kreutzer's 40 Studies, 1s. 6d.; Rode's 25 Studies, 1s. 6d.; Fiorillo's 36 Caprices, 1s. 6d.; Boosey's 100 Dances (No. 1), 1s.; 100 Dances (No. 2), 1s.; 100 Reels and Country Dances, 1s.; 100 Ballads, 1s.; 100 Operatic Airs, 1s.; 100 German Waltzes, 1s.; 10 standard Overtures, 1s.; 100 Exercises and Studies, by the great masters, 1s. Order BOOSEYS' Editions.

Flute Music.

100 Exercises and Studies, by the great masters, 1s.; 100 Dances, 1s.; 100 Operatic Airs, 1s. Arranged by PRATTEN.

Cornet Music.

25 Duets for two cornets, 1s.; 100 Dances, 1s.; 100 Operatic Airs, 1s. Arranged by THOMAS HARPER.

Concertina Music.

100 Sacred Melodies, 1s.; 100 Popular Melodies, 1s.; 100 Dances, 1s.; also, for the German concertina, 100 Dances and Songs, 1s.

Tutors.

BOOSEY'S SHILLING TUTORS, for the Pianoforte, Violin, Flute, Cornet à Pistons, English and German Concertinas, Harmonium and the Voice, all full size, containing from 26 to 36 pages each, edited by the most celebrated Professors.

BOOSEY & SONS, HOLLES STREET.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY'S PUBLICATIONS.

JOHN FIELD'S SIX CELEBRATED NOCTURNES. Edited by FRANZ LISZT. Price 2s. each.

"Each of these Nocturnes is a model that the student may examine to his advantage. They are less suited as a whole for the capricious player than for those who, having acquired a certain command of the instrument, possess a taste too good to be satisfied with common airs, which grow into absolute irksomeness by a string of still more common variations. It is, therefore, to pianoforte players who admire the products of a fertile imagination, regulated by a correct taste, that these Nocturnes will be always welcome."—The Critic.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

SCHUBERT'S IMPROMPTU in B Flat (played by Mr. Charles Hallé). Price 3s. 6d.

"The impromptu in B flat presents capital practice for the moderately advanced performer, and abounds with passages that will be sure to enchain the cultivated ear, and delight the refined taste."—The Critic.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

SCHUBERT'S IMPROMPTU in E flat. Price 4s.

"The theme is florid yet light; the episode gives scope for expression in cantabile phrases, set off according to the modern fashion. This is a piece to attempt in public without being too difficult for amateurs."—Athenæum.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE KULLAK. LES ARPEGES. Price 5s.

"After the exhibitions of mere difficulty, dissonance, and noise adopted by many pianoforte writers of the day, it is grateful to come in contact with music that embodies such skill in construction that a great end may be achieved by tolerably facile means. Those who are ambitious to soar beyond the commonplace may find in this something to aid their flight."—The Critic.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

E. SILAS. TARENTELLE. Price 4s.

"Scarcely any kind of composition has found more votaries among the highest musicians than that of the Tarentelle; Auber, Rossini, Chopin, Stephen Heller, Pauer, have all contributed to it from the rich stores of their imagination, and this of M. Silas may fairly take its place by the side of any of them for its strength and originality. It has the wildness and rollicking vivacity so characteristic of the dance, with a certain roughness that is not unpleasing, and gives it considerable force and vigour. It is a piece that will certainly become popular, the more so, as while being effective and striking, it has the advantage of not being overwhelmingly difficult."—Manchester Guardian.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. LISZT'S Arrangement of the MARCH from Richard Wagner's "Tannhäuser." Price 4s.

"Liszt's arrangement is in his own usual excellent style. He treats the air as a jeweller would a precious gem, surrounding it with a setting, rich, varied, and brilliant, in admirable taste and keeping, from which the subject stands out clear and well defined. It does not present any especial difficulty to a good performer, and is a highly effective, brilliant piece."—Manchester Guardian.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. LISZT'S SOIRÉES DE VIENNE. Nine Valses-Caprices. Price 3s. to 5s. each.

These celebrated Caprices, on Waltzes of Franz Schubert, have been played with extraordinary success by Mr. Charles Hallé, Herr Rubinstein and other distinguished pianists.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. ERGMANN'S RONDO APPASSIONATO. Dédié à Madame Davison, née Goddard. Price 4s.

"The theme of this Rondo is spirited and biting, a thing to tempt a pianist who commands humour and piquancy."—Athenæum.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. ERGMANN'S REMINISCENCES D'OBERON. Price 3s.

"Overdone, as we are, with arrangements of operatic airs, it is quite refreshing to meet with any so good as these "Reminiscences" of M. Ergmann. Although easy enough to make scarcely any pretensions beyond being a school piece, it is so well written,—the subjects are managed with so much grace and finish, there is so much spirit and variety in it, that the composer may well expect it to become extensively popular. It is founded on three of the favourite airs of Weber's charming opera, two of which are most ingeniously interwoven together."—Manchester Guardian.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN AND PARRY

(Successors to Wessel and Co.),

18 HANOVER SQUARE.

MUSICAL WORLD

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"Romance;" "Impromptu à la Mazurka;" "Tarantelle;" Ops. 48, 50, and 51—for the pianoforte, by E. SILAS. (Ashdown and Parry.)

LIKE a great deal more of the music of the same composer with which from time to time we have made acquaintance, these little pieces, though interesting, are disappointing. Mr. Silas almost always raises expectation at the beginning of a composition, even where his original thought is meagre, by a certain richness of ingenuity in the setting. The "Romance" (in F major) is a case in point; for though the melody has no intrinsic charm, as may be seen—it is so clothed that it is really made much of. But out of this muchness very little springs, except a pedal-point on the dominant (page 3), which leads back to the theme, and is, after all, more pretentious than beautiful. The "Impromptu à la Mazurka" (in G major) opens prettily and without effort, besides, moreover, being well carried on. The effect of the crotchet pauses, in the second section of the first part (page 2), is quaint and happy. The first episode (vivo), in the minor tonic, also sets out well; and the last (page 6), where a new subject is introduced by the left hand, imitated by the right, with the accompaniment in the bass, and again vice versâ, is decidedly ingenious. And yet there is a certain dryness about the whole, which can only be attributed to a poverty of melodic invention. The "Tarantelle" (in B flat minor) is at first sight, without exception, the least inviting movement of its class that we can remember; and yet the theme promises fairly:— and there is a decided character (apart from its cleverness) about the rest, always excepting the episodic remplissage, commencing in B minor, at page 4, and resumed at page 9, which receives a development it in no way merits. The real episode, in D flat (page 4), is vigorous, if not brilliant. Nevertheless, again, the whole, as a whole, is dry. The tunes are not amiable; they neither catch the ear, nor win the heart. "Nous sommes bien fâchés; mais c'est comme ça." (Voltaire).

"Christmas Hymn" ("Hark, the herald angels sing"), by GEORGE H. LAKE (Addison and Co.), is a pure, melodious, and really devotional piece of vocal four-part writing, which does credit to the composer.

"New Tunes to Choice Words," music by T. MURBY (Groombridge and Co.), proceed much in the same manner in which they began. "Intended for use in schools and homes," they may, or may not, find their way to a good many. They can do no harm wherever they may chance to penetrate; and that is something now-a-days.

The Hymns and Canticles of the United Church of England and Ireland, with the Easter Anthems and Athanasian Creed, marked and pointed for Chanting, by EDWARD J. SPARK (Novello, J. H. and J. Parker), will be found of some utility.

"We Two,"—duettino, words by J. P. DOUGLAS, music by HENRY SMART (Cramer, Beale, and Co.), is one of those graceful, highly finished, and at the same time spontaneously melodious little pieces which this elegant composer knows so well how to write, and of which he has produced so many admirable specimens. It is for soprano and baritone voices, the latter of which commences with a phrase marked alike by breadth of expression and genuine tunefulness. The duet progresses as it begins, the interest increasing as it advances, and sustained till the end, at which point the ear feels greatly disappointed that its function is no longer in request. "Come, let us go to the land,"—duettino, words by BARRY CORNWALL, music by HENRY SMART (same publishers), is, if possible, even better. This is for mezzo-soprano and tenor. The gentleman takes the initiative again, and with the subjoined most engaging phrase of melody:—

The phrase given to the lady is even more beautiful, but too extended for quotation. The point on the words, "O'er the waters, over the snow," where the key of E major is, as it were, caressed, until it is perforce relinquished for the dominant of the original key F), thence to glide back to the tonic ("Let's go thither"), is as fresh and lovely as it is ingenious. But if we were able to pick out all the beauties in this charming piece, we (short as it is) should fill a page with music type. "Come back to me, love,"—words by CHARLES HOARE, music by HENRY SMART (Chappell and Co.), is perhaps best of all. The inborn grace of melody and harmony could hardly be exemplified more felicitously than in this unpretending and exquisite ballad. The poetry of Mr. Hoare is, we are glad to be able to add, almost worthy to be allied with music so "pure and undefiled." Nothing could possibly be more simple, and nothing more refined and less commonplace:—

"I am so weary, life is so dreary,
Come back to me, love, thy presence is spring;
Grief it will banish, sorrow will vanish,
Sunshine again to this bosom 't will bring,—
Come back to me, love, come back to me,
Only this heart knows how welcome you'll be."

The third and fourth lines would be better, if less harmonious, with three "'t wills," thus:—

"Grief 't will make vanish, sorrow 't will banish, Sunshine again to this bosom 't will bring."

At any rate, the third line is clumsy as it stands. The second stanza is as follows:—

"May was just budding, Love was just flooding
Life with delights, ere I parted from thee;
Cruel, unheeding, they slighted thy pleading,
But still thy heart lingers, I know, love, with me.
Come back to me, love," &c. &c.

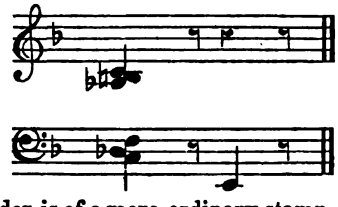
Digitized by Google

The only difficulty is to guess whether he left her, or she left him; and in either case why either left other. When we listen to Mr. Smart's music, however, we feel sure that the composer has divined the secrets, and under that spell imagine we know it ourselves (though we positively don't).

"Florence"—nocturne for the pianoforte—by BRINLEY RICHARDS (Chappell and Co.). We wish Mr. Richards, who writes with such elegance, correctness and fluency, would give out a few more such graceful effusions as this nocturne in E flat, which is in every sense attractive—as good, in short, as his Ethel, and worthy to be entitled Agnes. Was Mr. Richards immersed in the enchanting pages of David Copperfield when he conceived it? Our columns are open to any explanation it may be agreeable to furnish. At all events we are extremely curious to know why this nocturne was not christened after Mr. Dickens's most charming and unselfish heroine—a sort of Laura Pendennis, who would hardly have been cruel to Fanny, the kind and pretty nurse of her darling Arthur.

"Buona notte, nocturne;" Ronde des Pêcheurs, scène caractéristique; "Valeska"—Mazurka de Salon; pour le piano; op. 70,71, and 72—A. SCHLOESSER (Chappell and Co).

There is merit in each of these pieces, which are as healthy specimens of what is styled drawing-room music as could be well desired. Nevertheless, the one which in our opinion entirely distances its companions is the mazurka—"Valeska"—which has three good themes (well contrasted), decided character, is thoroughly well written (as indeed they are all), and is brilliant without being difficult. The nocturne, with its eternal crossings of the left hand over the right, is somewhat over sentimental, while not ungraceful. The Ronde des Pêcheurs has an extremely pretty episode (à la Auber) which comes in F at page 3, and in A flat at page 8; besides a chord to which we have taken a liking:—



The remainder is of a more ordinary stamp. Herr Schloesser, by the way, does enough to be rated for not doing more.

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

CHAPPELL & CO.
PIANOFORTE.
GANZ (WILHELM).—"Guillaume Tell," grand duo.
Ditto. "Oberon," ditto.
Ditto. "Paroles d'amour."
Ditto. "Le bonheur suprême."

ADDISON, HOLLIER & LUCAS.
PIANOFORTE.
SCHULTHES (WILHELM).—"Maria Stella." Barcarolle.

ROBERT COCKS & CO.
VOCAL.
MORLEY (H. K.).—"Linger, linger gentle maiden."

CLARK.
VOCAL.
MORLEY (H. K.).—"O sister, sing the song I love.'

EMERY & CO.
VOCAL.
CRUMP (ARTHUR).—"Sing, sweet harp."

DUNCAN, DAVISON & CO.
VOCAL.
MORLEY (H. K.).—"I never knew how dear thou wert."

JEWELL.
VOCAL.
GILBERT (BENNETT).—"The bondman."
Ditto. "Fairies' song."
Ditto. "Farewell."
PIANOFORTE.
GILBERT (BENNETT).—"Scales and chords in all the major and minor keys.'
Ditto. "Souvenir de Cambria."
Ditto. "Esmeralda Schottische."

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent).

January 23.

THERE is nothing I have to tell you this week equal in importance to the production of the new opera by Verdi at the Théâtre Italien last Sunday week. Un Ballo in Maschera is precisely identical in subject with the Gustavus III. of Auber; but M. Somma, the young poet to whom the libretto is due, has not followed Scribe's example in writing a ballet-opera, but has simply composed a lyrical drama, to the perfection of which neither dance music, nor the legs, nor the arms of choregraphs are required. This same M. Somma was once what is called regisseur at the Trieste theatre, but has given himself up since to the muses collectively, and has produced, it is said, many good things, among which is cited Parasina, a tragedy composed for Madame Ristori. But to our opera. Originally it was to have been brought out at the San Carlo in Naples for the carnival of 1858; but the authorities then and there could no more abide conspirators than Dame Quickly could abide swaggerers, and so teased and plagued the composer during the rehearsals, wanting this dramatic effect, and that burst of emotion to be sacrificed to police squeamishness, that one fine day he rolled up his score, put it in his pocket, and walked home, defying the threatened law proceedings of the manager, who modestly laid his damages at 10,000*l*. The proceedings in the suit of Garibaldi and others versus Francis Bomba having commenced in the meanwhile, and not being likely to terminate favourably to the defendant, the manager's action has been postponed sine die. After a year's interval the composer spied a chance for his work at the Apollo Theatre in Rome. Here too the censorship had to be reckoned with; and, to conciliate the papal government, the action of the piece was transferred to Boston in America, of all places in the world where since its first foundation by the Puritan forefathers of its present inhabitants, there never yet in all likelihood was seen even a single masquerader. The King of Sweden was changed into an English governor, and in this shape the work was represented at the carnival of 1859 with the most complete success. The principal singers on that occasion were M. Fraschini (the tenor of "the curse," as he used to be called in 1847, when he screamed in the interest of Mr. Lumley at her Majesty's Theatre, at the commencement of the formidable opposition at Covent Garden), Geraldini, a baritone now in St. Petersburg, Mad. Julienne Dejean (at Covent Garden in 1849, where she made a sensation with Signor Tamberlik in the famous duet in Donizetti's Martiri),* Mlle. Sbriscia, and Mlle. Scotti. The critics here have a way of regarding everything produced on a Sunday to be as good as damned before it has seen the lights, the managers being supposed to reserve their most doubtful attempts for that day. But M. Calzado has reversed this state of things, and seems to have adopted the maxim, the better the day the better the deed; for he could not have entertained any doubt that Verdi's opera would turn out as it has done, a thorough success. The cast of the characters comprehends the names of Mads. Alboni and Penco, Mlle. Batta, and MM. Graziani and Mario, all of whom, with the exception perhaps of the last named, who is labouring under illness, exerted themselves with marked effect. The latest work of the Italian composer is pronounced by those who are better entitled to be heard on the subject than your humble correspondent to rank with his best works, and in some respects to surpass them notably in the orchestration, which is more careful, and evinces more signs of thoughtful elaboration than is usual with Verdi. The general character of the opera is something between the Trovatore and the Traviata, having much of the vigour of the former blended with the lighter graces of the latter.

The Théâtre Lyrique has just given to the world a new opéra comique in one act, the composition of M. H. Louis Lacombe. The title of this production is La Madone, and the libretto, the work of M. Carmouche, is absurd, even beyond the large limits of toleration allowed to operatic writers. A painter wants a model for a madonna, which is to be placed in the Vatican, and finds a suitable subject in a peasant girl, whom he induces to sit to him

* The lyrical version of Corneille's Polyeucte, in which Rachel's "Je crois" made the good folks in England believe she really had herself apostacised.

Digitized by Google

in his studies. The girl, however, has a lover who is frightfully jealous, and comes and makes a scene in the painter's room, after singing a barcarole outside, to let them know he is coming. He is just threatening his intended with instant death, when the painter appears and explains the affair, and offers his sitter the price he is to receive for the picture. Thereupon a general shaking of hands and embracing. M. Lacombe's music is a fit match for this ridiculously empty nonsense. It is as dull as one of the composer's symphonies which it resembles, indeed, far more than an opera. M. Louis Lacombe has evidently no other vocation than that he has previously proved to the world the perpetration of unendurable symphonies, and crabbed digital performances on the pianoforte. Let him adhere to it.

We are in the full tide of concert giving. Heaven save the mark! The most important given during the past week have been those of M. Magnus, a composer and pianist; of M. Hans Seeling, also a composer and pianist, both honourable men, and lastly of young Henri Ketten, really a very clever boy, as many of your readers well know, for he has already been twice to London where he played at the Hanover Square Rooms. M. Vincent Adler has also given a concert.

I have a few items of foreign news touching musical matters, which may prove interesting, and therefore I proceed to impart. The fascinating Madame Castellan has been delighting the citizens of Hamburg with her beauty and her vocal and histrionic talents, as a member of an Italian troupe conducted by MM. Lasina. They only played for six nights, and are off to Mainz. Madame Castellan's greatest success was in Lucrezia Borgia, in which she proved herself an actress and a singer of equally distinguished merit. The bland, suave, and ever-buoyant ex-director of her Majesty's Theatre, London, Lumley, is at the head of an Italian operatic company, who have just amalgamated with that of the Regio Theatre in Turin, through the intervention, it is said, of an exalted personage. Verily, Lumley, thou art the petted Benjamin of Dame Fortune, who, if she occasionally cuff thee in her tantrums, rewardeth thee straightway with some lucky card, which thou playest with skill! From Turin let us speed—well wrapped in furs—to St. Petersburg, city of sad memory, that bereft us of our beloved Bosio, and on which, therefore, I could find it in my heart to pour out the imprecations of Camille on Rome, but that they would remind me of another mournful loss. The subscribers to the Italian Opera in the northern capital are, it appears, not over-satisfied with the manner in which they are being treated. Many of the artists engaged—Mongini among the number—have not yet been heard, and Madame Fioretti is thrust forward night after night. This lady is said to be most extravagantly rewarded for her services, but the fact is not so bad as was reported. She does not receive 70,000 francs per month, but 45,000, which is quite enough, especially as others in the company are so poorly paid as to have scarcely means enough to pay for warming their rooms—an indispensable necessity when the thermometer marks 15° below zero. The very thought is enough to turn one into solid Wenham; so let us quickly thaw our imaginations, and slide down this meridian to the latitude of Madrid, where we shall find an excellent Italian Opera company playing Verdi's opera Simon Boccanegra, which, as it has never yet been heard in London, will, I trust, prove an agreeable novelty. The principal male singers are MM. Fraschini (he of "the curse"), Geraldini, and Bouché. I am sorry that the prima donna is no better gifted or higher skilled a person than Mlle. Sarolta, who did not shed brilliancy over the inception of Mr. E. T. Smith's first season at her Majesty's. If the Court of Madrid admires her, however, what can humble folk do? Talking about non-talented artists, let me give you, from a Paris theatrical paper, a pithy announcement of who the successor of Graziani is to be next year. Thus it runs:—"M. Beneventano de la Piana, del Bosco, barone, is engaged at the Italian Theatre in Paris for next year." Nous rirons. (What fun!) The exclamation is wonderfully natural and germane to the matter, as every one will agree who has any experience of the artist in question. He had the impudence to display his blobby and unctuous person in the character of Don Juan once at her Majesty's. One felt inclined to ask Leporello "who's your fat friend?" I like this blunt, frank, outspoken expression of opinion on the part of some of the critics here—the unpaid. Your English critics are all unpaid: why, then, are they so inconceivably mealy mouthed? There is one gentleman, M. Alexis Rodet, who exercises the office of dramatic critic to a theatrical paper, and whose freedom of hand in ripping up delinquents is perfectly admirable. There is a grim humour in his style of dissecting a subject, and he seems to grin a ghastly grin throughout the operation at every slash. I will give you a specimen of his modus operandi in the matter of a new piece at the Gymnase, in four acts, entitled La Famille de Puimené. The critic starts off with "Heaven forgive me, but I do believe M. Edouard Foussier (the author) calls this a comedy. Well, call it a comedy if you will. But if the hussey chastises the manners of the time, it is not ridendo I'll be sworn. It is dark, gloomy, and lugubrious as a fourth-class funeral equipage, monotonous as a desert, and tiresome as M. Augier's Effrontés. (Admire this pinking of two poor fellows at one thrust!) Then he shows how the materials of the piece are all used up and worn out, and wonders how the Gymnase ever came to give shelter to such a stingy indigestible production, which he afterwards likens to a bear escaped from the Vaudeville under its former management, and calls it old and ugly. He then sums up the hacknied programme of dramatic interest on which it is based, thus:—

"The mother who comes to require her son of the courtesan."
"The courtesan who possesses a family secret and makes the mother tremble."
"The mother who confesses her offence to the son."
"The son who pardons his mother."
"The courtesan who frightens all the family with 'a promise of marriage' of the son!"

It would seem that there is no action for breach of promise in French law, and so the critic laughs at the author for his ignorance of the code, and derides the Bœotian simplicity of the family he has invented, who allow themselves to be alarmed by such a legal scarecrow. As the last two acts turn entirely on this gross improbability, the piece is thus pretty completely out of court; and the exclamation which winds up the analysis of the plot—"an accommodating dénoûment—a gentleman who was thought to be dead, and who is not!!!"—becomes unecessary even as a coup de grâce. But the critic's work isn't finished yet; for he manages to give his prostrate and lifeless victim another kick or two in praising the actress who played the courtesan. The character and the actress are thus described at one stroke:—"She is the bugbear of the piece; a host of atrocities, each blacker than the other, are gratuitously laid to her charge; there is a certain abstraction of jewellery which I am even now unable to explain; but she has a good broad back, and she perks up against it in a very natural and dignified manner." This is the way to make war against dunces and incapables.

Frederic Lemaître is still, advanced in years as he must be, the monarch of all he surveys in the field of melodrame. Victor Sejour's André Gerard, the original, I believe, of Dion Boucicault's Janet Pride, was revived at the Gaîté the other night, and this splendid veteran made his audience weep and shudder with a gesture, an accent, an expression of countenance precisely as in his palmiest days. Mlle. Lia Felix, who plays in the same drama, bids fair, though in a lower arena, to approach the glorious achievements of her sister, the lamented Rachel. Mlle. Tordeus, a new tragic actress, made her début in the Ciel at the Odéon. She is very accomplished in her art, but does not seem endowed with the true stuff of a great actress. Molière's fête was kept, according to custom, on the first day of the year, at the Comédie Française. The pieces played were Tartufe and Le Malade Imaginaire, followed by the ceremony, in which every member of the company places a wreath of laurels at the foot of the pedestal on which is placed the bust of the great man.

I do not know that I have anything more to tell you this week, except that M. de Mirecourt, the well-known biographer of contemporary celebrities, is not, as was fondly supposed by those ungrateful folks who owe their "lives" to him, dead. He is, some one writes to say, on the contrary, fat and well, and has been in no danger of starving, as was said. Men like M. de Mirecourt do not starve, says his friend. What does he mean? I should say insinuate, but that it is his friend who speaks. To counterbalance the resuscitation of this literary notoriety, the world of art and letters have experienced a severe loss in the death of Mad. Menne-chet de Barival, a generous and enlightened patroness. A grand musical service was performed over her remains in the church of Notre Dame de Lorette.

Digitized by Google

M. Nabich, the celebrated trombonist, is now in Paris, as his neighbours, wherever he is living, will pretty soon learn to their sorrow. When he was in London he lived in Newman Street, where his memory will be for ever embalmed in the curses of the inhabitants at his furious blasts when practising to retain his mastery over that dolorous implement of torture. The shaky mansions of that gloomy thoroughfare were imperilled as by an earthquake (a trombonement de terre) or a tornado, for the man blew a hurricane through his brazen tube. Some thought it was the crack of doom, and an old applewoman at the corner fell down on her knees, and confessed her sins aloud. Nabich is in Paris.

VIENNA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Jan. 15, 1861.

Two operas, not hitherto given in London, have been performed during the last week at the Kärntnerthor Theatre. On Thursday Don Sebastian, by Donizetti, and on Saturday The Merry Wives of Windsor, by G. Otto Nicolai.

Donizetti's is a work of great pretensions, but of inferior merit compared to his other operas. It is in the ultra-Italian style, consisting of pompous recitatives, lengthy andantes, and noisy common-place "caballettas." The solos of the tenor and baritone (known to the concert-going public of England as "In terra sola" and "O Lisbona"), a funeral march, and a septet in the fourth act, are the only morceaux worthy of notice. The rest of the opera presents nothing remarkable either in melody or composition. The instrumentation is careful throughout, but not so effective as usual with modern composers. The libretto is a combination of the historical and romantic. Don Sebastian, King of Portugal (Herr Ander), pardons and releases Zayda, an African maiden (Mad. Caillag), from the hands of the executioners, as he is leaving Lisbon on an expedition against the Arabs. Zayda follows the king into Africa, and saves his life by interceding with her countrymen, by whom he has been overcome in battle. The king is allowed to escape, and returns to Portugal, where, during his absence, the conspirators, Don Antonio (Herr Campe), and Don Juan (Herr Drachler), have usurped the throne, and declared the king to have been slain in Africa. The funeral rites are being performed at the moment of Don Sebastian's return. He forbids their progress, but is arrested by command of the conspirators, and condemned to death. Zayda, who has secretly followed him, again intercedes for his life, but this time in vain, and is also sentenced to execution by the Inquisition. In the last act both are found awaiting their fate. A paper is brought for the king's signature; it gives both their liberty, upon the condition that Don Sebastian will assign the throne of Portugal to Philip II. of Spain. The condition is refused, and death seems inevitable, when the voice of Camoens (Herr Beck), a minstrel and faithful attendant of the king, is heard outside the walls of the prison. Camoens appears, and offers means of escape. Flight is attempted, but the fugitives are discovered and shot by the soldiery of the usurpers. Such is a rough outline of the plot. Many of the situations are very telling; for instance, the appearance of Zayda before the Inquisition, the return of Don Sebastian to Lisbon during the celebration of the funeral rites, &c.

Mad. Caillag displays much dramatic talent in her impersonation of Zayda, a part which she may be said to have "created," according to the French expression. Herr Beck sings the music of Camoens admirably, and Herr Ander ably represents the hero of the story.

The Merry Wives of Windsor, by Nicolai, is altogether in a different style from Donizetti's opera. The music is graceful and melodious throughout, and well adapted to the amusing incidents of the popular comedy which has been taken for the libretto. Some of the motifs remind the hearer of Bellini and Rossini, but their skilful and musicianlike treatment goes a long way to excuse their questionable originality. The overture consists of many of the subjects which occur in the opera, and is very brilliant. Among the most charming morceaux d'ensemble, and there are many, can be mentioned the first duet between the two ladies and the finale to the third act; also a duet for tenor and soprano, with violin accompaniment, which certainly gives the composer a very great claim to novelty of construction and instrumentation.

Herr Schmid was somewhat too serious as Sir John Falstaff, but his powerful voice and excellent "make up" gave an importance to the part such as, with a little more jollity, would have left nothing to be desired. Mad. Wildauer was vivacious and fascinating as Mrs. Ford. Herr Mayerhofer, certainly one of the most painstaking and efficient members of the Kärntnerthor company—a conscientious artist in every respect—performed the jealous husband, and sang the music allotted to the part to perfection.

It is surprising that this opera of Nicolai has not yet been given in England. Whether on the Italian or English stage, it is almost certain of success. Balfe, it is true, has tried the same libretto, but that surely is no reason why this version should not be heard.

On Sunday the second Philharmonic Concert of the season, of which the programme was as follows:—

Mendelssohn,—overture, Athalia.
Bach,—Suite; air, "Bownée Gigue," in D.
Handel,—"O ruddier than the cherry," sung by Herr Mayerhofer.
Cherubini,—overture, Medea.
Schumann,—symphony in B flat.

Truly a model programme, and one which I commend to the notice of the London societies. The performance of Mendelssohn's overture was a treat seldom to be equalled, and never surpassed. Greater precision and verve cannot possibly be imagined. It was a performance to be recollected by all who had the good fortune to hear it, and one which a lover of Mendelssohn may envy. Although the Philharmonic Concerts are given in the Kärntnerthor theatre, and by the Kärntnerthor theatre orchestra, the Imperial edict prohibiting encores is not enforced. The audience is on these occasions allowed to have its own way. On Sunday, consequently, the air in Bach's Suite was obliged to be repeated, and well the compliment was deserved. Whether intentionally or by accident selected, I know not; but the two first morceaux of the programme were most admirably adapted for the display of the great strength of the Kärntnerthor band, which consists in the stringed instruments. The violins in the Athalia had a most thrilling effect, as also in the second movement of Bach's Suite. Herr Mayerhofer sang the Polyphemean love-song after the manner of his master, Staudigl, pronouncing the English words with a distinctness which would put many of our native basses to the blush. The execution of Cherubini's overture was an exception to the general perfection of the performances by the band. It would perhaps have been almost too much to have expected the same irreproachable ensemble as distinguished the two first. Not that there was any decided fault to find, but the preceding perfection of execution made the slightest indecision and falling off in this instance apparent. Schumann's symphony is an important work. The first movement, somewhat trivial in its subject and instrumentation, is not worthy of the two last, which evince the sentiment and depth of thought of a true musician. It was admirably rendered.

ANTRATER.

PESTH.

January 18*th*, 1861.

AND why not? A letter from Hungary will perhaps have the advantage of novelty to the reader of the MUSICAL WORLD, although it may not contain more information about the music going on here than can be acquired in a hurried visit of two days. Let us see what there is to say about this hotbed of revolutions, this city of the Magyars, and at once the pride and fear of their oppressors. The journey hither—no, it would require the pen and experience of a McClintock to make a description of that on a winter night interesting. To my unobservant nature it seemed monotonous enough.

Put into a comfortable carriage at the Vienna Railway Station, at seven o'clock in the evening, I was told to get out of the same at Pesth at five o'clock the next morning. No remarkable incident having occurred during the interval, except an occasional attempt to look through the frozen window panes at the country covered with snow, which glittered in the bright moonlight. The usual unpleasant consequences of arriving in any town at five o'clock on a winter morning were not wanting in this instance. Porters half asleep; drivers and horses quite ditto; gas-lamps looking sickly, as if they were tired of being alight; the long delay at the hotel door; the sullen reception by the surly, sleepy concierge, who wanders about in his shirt and trousers, with candle in one hand, and bunch of clanking keys in the other, to find you a vacant room; the dreary appearance of the apartment; the difficulty of getting warm in that small bed between the peculiar continental substitutes for sheets; in short, all the little miseries of night travelling followed in their turn, and had to be endured. They were, however, forgotten by breakfast time, when some good coffee and half a dozen made dishes (representatives of the tea and toast, two eggs, and a slice of ham of England) gave strength to encounter the sight-seeing labours of the day. A quick walk (sauntering this weather is out of the question) through the principal streets, which are all as broad as Portland Place, convinced me that Pesth is a beautiful city, containing fine public buildings and handsome well-built houses. Covered with snow, it has a clean appearance. Of its natural colour I cannot speak, or whether, in common with other cities, it has its own peculiar odour, I am unable to say. Snow and frost conceal both, and so far Pesth is seen under favourable circumstances in the winter. According to the advice of the landlord of the Jäger Horn (an hotel which, in the words of Bradshaw, contains every accommodation for large and small families), my first visit was to the new Museum; and a very pleasant time I passed there, in company with a poorly-clad but well-informed intelligent old gentleman, one of the resident Panizzi of the institution. The building is imposing in appearance. It would not suffer in comparison with its sister in Great Russell Street, and there is a striking family likeness between the two.

Digitized by Google

One of the principal galleries is used as a hall for public meetings. The contents of the museum, which are both numerous and interesting, are not yet put in order or catalogued. They include some good statuary, ancient and modern, a large collection of armoury, mostly belonging to Hungary, old jewels, &c. &c. Among other things, I saw a pianoforte, said to have been made in the 16th century, which would make William Chappell's mouth water to look at. It's a question for "Notes and Queries," whether an instrument of such an age exists in England. The size of the one in question is about that of a harpsichord, while in form, it is exactly similar to a grand piano of the present day. The case is elaborately decorated with the armorial bearings of the family (Karoly) to which it belonged, showing the great value set upon the instrument. It is in excellent preservation.

Another object of interest to which my amiable companion called my particular attention, was the skeleton of an ancient knight, which had been dug up near the city. Judging from the coins and his armour, discovered near the remains, the old warrior was buried during the 9th century. In the skull is a large aperture, which, during life, had evidently been covered by the silver plate found at its side. "This is interesting, said my friend," as it shows that the remedy for a broken head is not of such modern invention as the present doctors suppose. I nodded assent, thinking what an intolerable headache the old knight must have had; returned to my pianoforte, regretting William Chappell more and more, knowing how much he could say upon such a subject.

It was five o'clock before I could get away from the museum. A hasty dinner, and then to the German theatre, which begins at 6·30. There are two theatres in Pesth, one, at which the performances are in the Hungarian language, and another where they are given in German. At the latter, Wachtel the tenor, dismissed from Vienna, has had immense success. The opera was Le Postillon de Lonjumeau. Not a very remarkable performance in any respect. It reminded me forcibly of an Italian opera at Manchester, with a local band and chorus, and was neither better nor worse. The house was crammed, about 4000 persons present. After each act, the fortunate tenor was kept bowing and scraping his acknowledgments of the enthusiastic "Eljens" of the delighted audience for ten or fifteen minutes, and at the end, was buried alive in wreathes and bouquets.

So much for the first day in Pesth.

On the second and last I was told to visit Kaiserbad, a bathing establishment some five miles from the city, on the opposite side of the Danube. An agreeable drive through the celebrated fortress of Ofen—which fortress, by the way, is a town in itself—brought me to Kaiserbad, a handsome stack of buildings erected for bathing purposes near eleven hot springs, which give an inexhaustible supply of mineral water. Here are baths of all sorts for every class—the Volksbad, the bath for the rich, the swimming-bath, —in fact, baths in every shape and size that can be imagined. During the summer a ball-room connected with the establishment is open, in which a band plays night and day; concerts are given; roulette tables, cards, and every amusement provided which can promote the pleasure of the visitors.

Having seen Kaiserbad, I was not to forget the new synagogue, one of the handsomest temples in Europe. Curiosity being excited by such a description, upon returning to Pesth, I repaired thither. The building justified its reputation. It is magnificent. In the Moorish style of architecture and decoration, it is just such a structure as Owen Jones, with unlimited funds at his command, would erect. It will accommodate from 8,000 to 10,000 persons, and has been but recently thrown open.

My last evening in Pesth I passed at the Hungarian Theatre, listening to a very capital performance of Donizetti's Belisario. The principal singers were excellent; the baritone indeed very first-rate; the band and chorus efficient and complete; the scenery and dresses admirable, quite refreshing after the worn-out dirty canvas and rags to which I have been lately accustomed at the Opera House in Vienna. The Hungarians have without exception donned their national costume in spite of its having been forbidden by the Austrians since 1848. The gay colours of the ladies' dresses, the jaunty jackets of every shade worn by the men, give a theatre or any other place of public resort in Hungary a very much gayer appearance than can be seen in our country.

Thus ends the account of my visit to Pesth. If not interesting, it is not very long; and so alázotos szolgája.

ANTEATER.

Letters to the Editor.

THE DOUBLE FLAT.

SIR,—Your correspondent "Philharmonic" does not seem to be aware that the celebrated Hummel, in his valuable Pianoforte School, proposed a new character for the double flat. At page 18 of this work Hummel says:—"As the character for the double flat hitherto in use is apt to confuse the eyes, particularly in chords with several flats placed over each other, and as we have already an appropriate and simple mark for the double sharp, it were to be wished that the double flat should also be expressed by a single character. I venture to propose for this purpose 𝄫. Should any person invent and introduce a character still more convenient, the musical world will be indebted to him for doing so."—Boosey's edition.

I think the above an improvement on those proposed by "Philharmonic."

Your obedient servant,

January 23rd, 1861. W. H. C.

MR. WALLWORTH AS GRIFFIN.

SIR,—May I correct an error in your report of Victorine at the Royal English Opera? You say the parts were played by the same artists as last year, except in the cases of Victorine and Julian. There was another exception, the important part of Griffin played last year by Mr. Honey. I played it this season for the first time, with what success I leave to the judgment of others. Apologising for troubling you with this, I am, Sir, yours very respectfully,

T. A. WALLWORTH.

81, Park Street, Grosvenor Square,
Jan. 22, 1861.

ERRATUM.—In our notice of the Sacred Harmonic Society last week, omit the second sentence, which destroys the sense of the latter portion of the article.—By desire of our Reporter.

An Italian correspondent of the Morning Post mentions with commendation two singers — Signora Casoni, a contralto, and Signor Cima, a baritone—who have lately returned from Rio.

Digitized by Google

Birth.

On Wednesday morning, the 23rd inst., Mad. Sainton-Dolby (wife of Prosper Sainton, Esq.), of a son.

Advertisements.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—THIS EVENING will be performed Balfe's popular Opera of THE BOHEMIAN GIRL. Thaddeus, Mr. SWIFT; Florestine, Mr. TERROTT; Devilshoof, Mr. BARTLEMAN; Count Arnheim, Mr. SANTLEY; Queen of the Gipsies, Mad. LEMAIRE; and Arline, Mlle. PAREPA. Concluding with the Children's great successful comic pantomime, entitled HARLEQUIN AND TOM THUMB; or, Merlin the Magician and the good Fairies of the Court of King Arthur. The gorgeous new scenery and effects by Beverley. Harlequin, Clown, Pantaloon, and Columbine, by the celebrated Laurl Family. Sprites by the tribe of Arabs. On which occasion the Rocky Mountain Wonders and Flying Americans will appear. Doors open at half-past 6, commences at 7 o'clock each evening. Carriages to be ordered for half-past 11. Box-office open daily from 10 to 5, where places may be secured. Notice.—SIMS REEVES will make his reappearance in the favourite character of Robin Hood on Tuesday the 5th of February. In active preparation, a new grand romantic opera, entitled THE AMBER WITCH (the music composed expressly for this theatre, by W. V. WALLACE). The last Grand Morning Performance of the children's Pantomime, TOM THUMB, to-day (Saturday), at 2 o'clock.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH. THIS EVENING (Saturday) Her Majesty's servants will perform the new comedy, entitled THE ADVENTURES OF A BILLET-DOUX. The new grand Comic Christmas Pantomime of PETER WILKINS Scenery by Beverley. The opening by Blanchard. Produced under the superintendence of Robert Roxby. Harlequins, Mr. Cormack and Mr. St. Maine; Columbines, the Misses Guiness; Pantaloons, Mr. Naylor and Mr. E. R. Martin; Clowns, Mr. Huline and Mr. R. Power, and a little one in by Young Huline; Sprites, by the celebrated Lavator Lee Family. A Grand Morning Performance of the Children's Pantomime, PETER WILKINS on Wednesday next, commencing at 2 o'clock. Mr. and Mrs. CHARLES KEAN will appear on Monday next, the 28th, in Shakspeare's play of HAMLET. Hamlet, Mr. CHARLES KEAN (his first appearance at this theatre for eighteen years); Gertrude, Mrs. CHARLES KEAN. On Tuesday, MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING. On Wednesday, HAMLET. On Thursday, MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING. On Friday, HAMLET. On Saturday, THE WIFE'S SECRET. Reduced prices as usual. Open at half-past 6; commence at 7 o'clock. Box-office open from 10 till 5.

MR. and Mrs. CHARLES KEAN are engaged at the Theatre Royal, DRURY LANE, for Twenty-four Nights, and will appear for the first time in London, after an absence of eighteen months, on Monday next, the 28th, in Shakspeare's tragedy of HAMLET. Monday, 28th; Wednesday, 30th; and Friday, Feb. 1, HAMLET. Tuesday, 29th, and Thursday, 31st, Shakspeare's comedy of MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING. Saturday, Feb. 2, and Tuesday, 5th, the play of THE WIFE'S SECRET. Wednesday, Feb. 6, LOUIS XI.

NOTICES.

TO ADVERTISERS.—Advertisers are informed, that for the future the Advertising Agency of the THE MUSICAL WORLD is established at the Magazine of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyle Street (First Floor). Advertisements can be received as late as Three o'Clock P.M., on Fridays—but not later. Payment on delivery.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2s. 6d.
Every additional line (10 words) ... ... 6d.

TO PUBLISHERS AND COMPOSERS.—All Music for Review in THE MUSICAL WORLD must henceforward be forwarded to the Editor, care of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street. A List of every Piece sent for Review will appear on the Saturday following in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

TO CONCERT GIVERS.—No Benefit-Concert, or Musical Performance, except of general interest, unless previously Advertised, can be reported in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

The Musical World.
LONDON: SATURDAY, JANUARY 26, 1861.

THAT the subscriptions to the Hullah testimonial already exceed what was anticipated, must prove gratifying to those who wish well to music, no less than to such as desire to see desert remunerated. The long catalogue of names includes not amateurs and professors of the art only, but gentlemen of every grade in private life. One or two of our most celebrated littérateurs have tendered their contributions to Mr. Hullah the man, who perhaps might not have cared greatly for Mr. Hullah the musician, we may naturally conclude, since one placed in so commanding a position must have made friends and acquaintances in all classes of the community; but our proposition remains the same, and the influence of music in an abstract sense is manifested in the powerful array of signatures to the testimonial. A subscription raised for a musician, placed in whatever fortuitous or precarious position, would not, we feel satisfied, some years ago, have created a tithe of the sensation or interest got up in favour of Mr. Hullah on the present occasion. Music has not merely made great progress in England of late, but its importance and value as an art and science have been more generally acknowledged. Time was when the Merus musicus was placed in the same category, by the upper classes in this country, as the Merus Hibernicus by the Saxon invaders of Ireland in the days of the Commonwealth. The times have changed; and both musicians and Irishmen are now allowed to hold their proper position in the social scale. "Art," it has been said, "moves in a circle;" and so indeed it would seem, more particularly in the art of music. The days of the minstrels and troubadours were glorious days for the professors of the divine art. Then indeed such performers on psaltery and harp were esteemed fit companions for the proudest of the land. Their station at feast was nearest the dais; high-born dames admitted them to their secret bowers; their company was sought for in castle and hall; and wealth and renown were their unfailing rewards. What a change came over the fortunes of the minstrels about the period of Henry the Eighth or Elizabeth! How fallen from their pride of place! How miserably sunk! How misused and finally extirpated! In the opening lines of the Lay of the last Minstrel, Sir Walter Scott has drawn a vivid picture of their fallen condition. He is describing the aged minstrel, and thus alludes to the altered state of himself and his caste:—

"The last of all the bards was he,
Who sung of border chivalry.
For, well-a-day! their date was fled,
His tuneful brethren all were dead;
And he, neglected and oppress'd,
Wished to be with them and at rest.
No more, on prancing palfrey borne,
He caroll'd light as lark at morn;
No longer courted and caress'd,
High placed in hall, a welcome guest,
He poured, to lord and lady gay,
His unpremeditated lay:
Old times were chang'd, old manners gone;
A stranger fill'd the Stuart's throne;
The bigots of the iron time
Had called his harmless art a crime.
A wandering harper, scorn'd and poor,
He begg'd his bread from door to door;
And tuned to please a peasant's ear,
The harp a king had lov'd to hear."

With the progress of music as a science came the acknowledgment of music as a high and powerful art, and of its professors as a class qualified to amuse and instruct. The musician, nevertheless, was not yet admitted into the inner shrine of the social temple; his services were accepted; his usefulness and entertaining qualities were recognised; but no fellowship was instituted—no amalgamation took place. The sun of intelligence soon cleared away the mists of ignorance and prejudice, and the professor of the divine art was placed on a level with the professor of medicine, of philosophy, of jurisprudence, of theology. How strange there should have been so many vicissitudes in the profession of music and none in other professions! We shall not pause to inquire into the cause. Enough that our own times have squared all these circles of eccentricity, and that no violence is now offered to opinion and judgment by drawing a strong line of demarcation between the social position of Drs. Mendelssohn and Abernethy, Professors Faraday and Sterndale Bennett.

Digitized by Google

All this, however, has nothing to say to the direct claims of Mr. John Hullah on the public for a testimonial. What good he has effected in originating a new method of instruction; how long, and with what determination he has prosecuted his own invention; to what extent it has succeeded, and what influence it has exercised, are all patent to the world. As a promoter of good and healthy music no less than a devoted apostle, Mr. Hullah is entitled to the highest consideration. Sacred oratorios were almost a sealed book to the general public until Mr. Hullah, at St. Martin's Hall, first adventured his performances of the great masterpieces of Handel, Haydn, Mendelssohn, &c., at cheap prices. Mr. Hullah, in short, proved himself a thorough and uncompromising reformer, and the middle classes, above all, are indebted to his exertions and determination in their behalf. We are, therefore, far from surprised that the subscription to the Hullah testimonial should have surpassed expectation. It is pleasing to know that gratitude is paramount, and that the endeavour to accomplish a good, is remembered at the right moment. The recollection may stimulate the least energetic of us all to do something which the world will not willingly let sink into oblivion.

WE learn from the musical journals in Paris that the Society of Concerts is about to give Mendelssohn's Lobgesang or Symphonie avec Chœurs, as it is styled over there, at the next performance (the second of the season) in the Conservatoire. The Lobgesang was to have been played at the first concert, but the indisposition of a principal singer necessitated its postponement. This magnificent work has never yet been heard by our neighbours, and as we are given to understand that the members of the orchestra are in raptures with it, let us hope it may fare better than did the Walpurgisnacht, some two years ago. Our readers may perhaps remember that the Walpurgisnacht was presented with words that had no resemblance whatever even to the subject of Goethe's legendary poem, which suggested the undertaking to Mendelssohn, and to which he set his picturesque and enchanting music. A totally different theme was selected, and a French poem prepared for the occasion. Thus not a single piece in the work had any definite meaning, and the wonderful scene where the Druids, by feigned incantations, scare away the Roman soldiers, so as to be enabled to perform their idolatrous rites and ceremonies unmolested, was absolutely unintelligible. Why all this "sound and fury signifying nothing?" asked one learned critic (M. Scudo?). The members of the Society, nevertheless (all of them musicians) knew full well the value of Mendelssohn's composition, and setting the subscribers at defiance, repeated the Walpurgisnacht at the concert immediately ensuing. Mime résultat! The subscribers were deaf; the gorgeous "tone-poem" was a failure; and we believe has not been attempted since.

We have some fears about the Lobgesang, although our hopes tend in the opposite direction. Our doubts are based upon the fact that it is announced, not as Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise, but as Mendelssohn's Symphony with Choruses. Now, if the French version of the verbal text happens to possess no more relation to the original than was the case in the instance of the Walpurgisnacht, the subscriberss to the concerts will, in all probability, again be "at sea," and another great work go unappreciated. This would, indeed, be a pity. Mendelssohn is beginning (merely beginning) to be understood and liked in Paris, not alone by artists but by amateurs also, and we should grieve to see another check to their slowly-expanding enthusiasm. The critics, one or two excepted, persist in regarding his music as laboured and dry—the product of much scholarship and little genius. More than twenty years have passed since M. Berlioz reproached them bitterly for their dulness in not at once recognising the imaginative colouring, and poetic beauty of the concert-overture, known severally as the Hebrides, Fingal's Cave, and the Isles of Fingal.* Yet, even at this time, we find a critic of no less prodigious sagacity than M. Viel apostrophising it thus sneeringly:—

"Mendelssohn was represented at the concert on Sunday (2nd Conservatoire) by his overture, La Grotte de Fingal (a fourth nomenclature), page ingenious, almost original (!), which comprises a motive of the most elegant, and which, certes, would produce still more effect without its excessive development. Talk to us of the chorus of genii in Oberon: there is music of a fantasy, of a romanticism adorable, and which nevertheless takes care not to be lost in divagations."

We fear it is M. Viel himself who is "lost in divagations." Nevertheless, although Viel is the anagram of Evil, we are sure M. Viel means searchingly, and trust that the Lobgesang, more fortunate than the Grotte, may please his very exacting taste. What term, by the way, can he find for the development of the first allegro of that? "Excessive" will be a mild epithet, if M. Viel takes to scanning the Lobgesang from the same point of view as the Hebrides. To give "the devils their due," however, all the French critics are not of the same temper as M. Viel, while pairing in with those impervious, self-satisfied old ladies, the subscribers to the Conservatoire, who believe they can fathom Beethoven's No. 9! Our intelligent and amiable confrère, M. Ch. Desolme (of L'Europe Artiste), in noting that, at the concert before named, the audience "did not understand one note" of this fine work, adds, "which does not prevent—quite the contrary, indeed—the said overture of the Grotte de Fingal from being a delicious chef-d'œuvre, quite worthy of the author of A Midsummer Night's Dream." Bravissimo! M. Desolme. We commend the Lobgesang to your care; and ask as a favour (to be reciprocated on demand) that, if at the next concert M. C. Lebouc † allows you the place which, though hitherto withheld, is your unquestionable privilege, in one of the boxes dedicated to the accommodation of the press, you will not be too hard (zu Viel) on Mendelssohn's grand composition, which, now for the first time about to be JUDGED in Paris, was not the less composed for the Birmingham Festival in 1840; is not the less familiar to every amateur in England; has not the less charmed every one of the Germanies, big or small; and not the less been appreciated by our tant soit peu Wagnerised friends across the Atlantic.

The allusion to Wagner reminds us that the Parisians—thanks to some mysterious demi-political caprice—are about to undergo a severe trial. Tännhauser is making rapid strides, and will soon confront them with harp and song (Qy.)—

"Auch ich darf mich so glücklich nennen
Zu schaun, was, Wolfram, du geschaut!"

* This was in one of the musical feuilletons of the Journal des Débats. In one of his letters to M. Stephen Heller, M. Berlioz says—"It was at Rome that, for the first time, I appreciated that fine and delicate musical tissue, variegated with such rich colours, which bears the name of Overture to Fingal's Cave. Mendelssohn had just finished it, and gave me a pretty exact idea of it; such was his prodigious skill in reproducing on the piano the most complicated scores."

† Secretary to the Society of Concerts.

Digitized by Google

We wish them joy, and hope they may be edified. "Amusez-vous, belles. Amusez-vous, bottes vernies—lions—quoi! Amusez-vous tous!" We long to read M. Scudo's article on Tännhauser; we long to see M. Fiorentino's article on Tännhauser; M. de Rovray's; MM. les Escudiers'; we long to see all these articles on Tännhauser; also the article of M. Berlioz; but, above all, we long to see the article of M. Viel—on Tännhauser. May the Furies avert its repostponement, sine die! Let there be rather, at the Académie Impériale de Musique et de Danse a month's "relâche," a month's silence. Tännhauser will atone for it in a single night. "Par la grande vertu que Dieu a mis au hanap"—said Huon de Bordeaux to the Admiral—"ceux qui ne boivent pas dans un hébichet en goûteront." Tännhauser will be brought out with great magnificence; that is certain. Tännhauser will—must—succeed; that is equally certain. Paris must swallow its harmonious waters, without a wince. Tout le monde en est abreuvé. Ask Paul Smith.

Happy M. Achille Fould! He respects the coulisses, and drinks out of a hebichet. Unhappy M. Walewski! He rehaunts the coulisses, and drinks out of a hanap. Is M. Walewski aware that Lohengrin is a secondary of Tännhauser; Tristan and Iseult a tertiary of Tännhauser, and secondary of Lohengrin; the Niebelungen a quaternary of Tännhauser, tertiary of Lohengrin, and secondary of Tristan and Iseult? We can scarcely believe it, but put entire faith in a report, now stirring, that Friar Liszt is bound for Paris, where his pen will be laid at the separate feet of MM. Léon and Marie Escudier—a nib for each brother; the right nib for La France, the left nib for L'Art. It is notorious that Liszt can do anything, even write two articles about Tännhauser, on two different sheets, simultaneously, each article with a single nib, and the one article more stuffed with "esprit" than the other—"esprit" de Liszt.

Plinius (because the French say "Pline," we will not say Pliny)—Plinius called the Vandals Vindils; "appellat Vindilos" (J. J.). We shall call the Parisians getæ—that is, if they snub our Lobgesang. Meanwhile we have appealed to M. Desolme, who will not fail us at the pinch.

THE Oratorio at St. Paul's Cathedral has produced very much the effect anticipated. The precise nature of that effect, however, it must be left to our reporter to describe. The subject will "keep;" and the natural impatience of our readers must be restrained until next week, when a detailed account will appear. Meanwhile a comment or two may not be unacceptable.

The performance was announced to the public as follows:

"ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—Opening of the magnificent New Organ, Friday morning, Jan. 25th, the Festival of the Conversion of St. Paul, a Grand Performance, under the Dome, of Handel's Messiah, in Aid of the Cathedral Fund, especially the purchase and erection of the new organ. Principal vocalists—Madame Lemmens Sherrington, Mrs. Lockey, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Lockey, Mr. Francis, Mr. H. Buckland, Mr. Winn, Mr. Lewis Thomas. Conductor, Mr. Goss. Organist, Mr. G. Cooper. Band and chorus of 600 performers. Tickets, under the dome, 1*l.* 1*s.*; transept, 10*s.* 6*d.*; nave, 5*s.*, &c."

Now the first thing that must strike any ordinary intelligence is the fact of a "magnificent new organ" being "opened" without any organ-playing. The inconsistency is glaring. How an organ could be exhibited through the medium of an oratorio, with band, chorus, and solo singers, it was difficult to imagine. A few "grunts" during the choruses, and perhaps the accustomed booming noise between the parts, as accompaniment to the re-tuning of the orchestral instruments, was all that could possibly be looked for. A brilliant display for an "opening" truly.

That the "new" organ is a splendid instrument, we have admitted more than once, and our admission can hardly fail to have enjoyed the warm concurrence of those who had heard the masterly performances of Mr. W. T. Best; and after Mr. Best's secession (for excellent reasons) of Mr. Edmund Chipp, whose secession (for excellent reasons) left the hundred-voiced Goliath of the Panopticon temporarily speechless. At that time, by the way, the organ could boast a case, which, sightly in itself, was also thoroughly in keeping with the building where it stood. In the Cathedral, however, its aspect is unsightly to a measure. And no wonder. The instrument is at present caseless, and therefore, little better than an "eyesore." But it is notorious that we manage all kinds and degrees of church-decoration as badly as possible in England—and this notwithstanding (as Pappus of Birkenhead, in a punning mood, would say) that we rejoice in the inestimable advantage of a foreign ruling dy-nasty.

The worst part of the whole proceeding, nevertheless, is the shallow pretext under which the public has been invited to St. Paul's Cathedral, to listen to a performance of the Messiah, while there was no probability of its equalling in precision and effect what is constantly provided by the Sacred Harmonic Society, at Exeter Hall. The "opening of the magnificent new organ" has resolved itself into an oratorio "under the dome"—which might be construed an oratorio under the Dean, or an oratorio under difficulties. There was no organ-playing, and constantly no organ-opening, in the strict acceptation of the compound; and this, too, with Mr. Goss and Mr. George Cooper at hand. The affair should have been advertised as a performance of Handel's Messiah "in aid," &c. &c.

Another word. Is St. Paul's Cathedral so poorly endowed, are the trustees so hard pushed, that they cannot find money enough to pay 800*l.* or 1,000*l.* (we have heard the amount diversely specified) for a new organ? Is there not a penny for repairs? Must the public furnish the wherewithal for everything that is required, from time to time, within the precincts of a church? On the other hand, have the authorities at St. Paul's—who "suspended" (if not virtually abolished) the meetings of the charity children which, once a year, used to elicit the enthusiastic admiration of thousands of metropolitans, and attract other thousands to the Cathedral from far and wide—a very substantial claim on public sympathy?—a very feasible right to invoke public aid for any of their undertakings? We think not; and, least of all, for an undertaking that solely concerns the charge with which they are entrusted, and should manifestly be paid for out of the funds at their command.

Where are the Ecclesiastical Commissioners? Echo knows—and answers, "Where?" UBI (to emphasise the question) the Ecclesiastical Commissioners? The Dean and Chapter know—and answer, "UBI."

To conclude. Would not Mendelssohn's St. Paul have better suited the anniversary of the Festival of St. Paul's (or Saul's) conversion? Answer—decidedly not. The Messiah draws more money; the Dean and Chapter want money; they don't want St. Paul; St. Paul won't pay Mr. E. T. Smith; the Messiah will (perhaps).

HERR MOLIQUE'S ABRAHAM.—Our readers will be delighted to hear that Herr Molique's Abraham is to be given this spring on a scale of thorough completeness, at Exeter Hall—not for the benefit of the Sacred Harmonic Society, but for that of the Middlesex Hospital. Herr Molique himself will conduct.

Digitized by Google

THE MESSIAH AT ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

FOR the first time since its erection by Sir Christopher Wren an oratorio has been heard in our magnificent metropolitan cathedral. The occasion, as our readers need hardly be informed, was in aid of the funds for the purchase of the large, and equally fine organ, which formerly did duty at the Panopticon—or Alhambra, as it is styled by the present proprietor. In addition to this, money is also wanted for the completion of the decorations now in progress; and the capitular chest being (according to official statements) at remarkably low ebb, an appeal to the general public, in the shape of a grand musical performance, was deemed the most fitting method of replenishing it, and thereby aiding the "good work." The intention may be, and undoubtedly is, excellent; but whether the means adopted were the best for the end, may be a question for future consideration. At present, we can do little more than chronicle the event of yesterday (Friday), and must reserve details until our next.

On the whole, the performance of the Messiah agreeably disappointed us, as we had expected, from the enormous size of the building and the immense height of the cupola, a somewhat similar result to that of the "festivals" at the Crystal Palace.

This was, however, far from being the case. We heard every note as distinctly as if it had been at Exeter or St. James's Hall. In more remote parts of the cathedral it might have been different. Those, for instance, who were ranged along the nave might have lost much of the effect of the solos; but still the fact is proved beyond dispute (and we speak with some experience of cathedrals and music-halls) that stone is unquestionably a better medium for the concentration of sound than glass and iron. The new organ—respecting the placing of which some curious information is afforded in the official programme—is fixed at the back of the south transept, the chorus and band extending to its boundary and junction with the nave; the body of the church immediately beneath the cupola being absorbed by the reserved seats, the southern transept also occupied by the audience, seats in the nave, extending to the western entrance, also completely filled, and some few persons in the choir—from four to five thousand forming the total present.

Mr. Goss, the accomplished organist of the cathedral, wielded the bâton over the six hundred who composed the band and chorus; and, taken altogether, a more solemn and impressive rendering of the master-piece of Handel, which assuredly was "not for an age, but for all time," has never been heard in the metropolis. True that in some places, critically speaking, there was a tendency to retard the times, but with the present vivid impression on our minds, we are not disposed to take exceptions, and must rather speak in laudatory terms of the performance in its entirety. Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, to whom was allotted the whole of the principal soprano music, sang charmingly, her particularly clear and distinct enunciation of the words being especially worthy of praise. The whole of the tenor part was given to Mr. Sims Reeves, who more than ever distinguished himself, being in remarkably fine voice, and infusing all the pathos, tenderness, and energy of which he is so thorough a master, into his singing from first to last. Mr. Lockey's wonderfully rich voice, which of late we have had too few opportunities of admiring, was heard to eminent advantage in the contralto music; and to Messrs. Lewis Thomas, and Winn, who divided the bass parts, we have nothing but commendation for the conscientious and artistic manner in which they acquitted themselves. The choruses, with some few exceptions, were impressively given—"All we like sheep," the "Hallelujah" (during which the audience rose), and the final "Amen," being remarkable for vigour and sonority. With these few general remarks we must conclude for the present, reserving for our next the further particulars which the importance of the festival demands. C.

HEREFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—It is decided that the Hereford Musical Festival shall be held this year, under the direction, as usual, of Mr. Townshend Smith, on the 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th of December.

MR. STANLEY LUCAS.—On Thursday week, Mr. Stanley Lucas was elected secretary of the Royal Society of Musicians, in place of the late Mr. Ireland. Mr. W. Chalmers Master, Mr. J. Reynolds, and Mr. Clinton, were the other canditates.

MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—The third season of this flourishing society was brilliantly inaugurated on Wednesday evening last, by a numerously attended conversazione of the members at St. James's Hall. The sister arts of painting and sculpture were well represented, several choice oil and water-colours, statues, and various choice articles of vertu profusely decorating the room. In front of the organ busts of Michael Angelo, Raphael, Shakspeare, Handel, Beethoven, were placed, while in various parts were distributed portraits and casts of almost every known musical celebrity. Quaint antique instruments, remarkable gongs, Indian tomtoms, wonderfully ancient harpsichords and spinets, microscopes, stereoscopes, photographs, autograph letters (Handel and Garibaldi amongst others), a manuscript exercise in the handwriting of Beethoven, a quartet in that of Spohr, sonatas in the hand of Mozart, full suits of handsome armour, music-books of Henry VIII. and Earl of Leicester, manuscript music of Matthew Locke, and a host more objects of greater or less interest served to occupy the attention of visitors for some hours; nor while the eyes were feasted did the ears remain ungratified—madrigals and part-songs, under the able direction of Mr. Henry Smart, pianoforte pieces by Mad. Silas, a duo concertante by MM. Adolphe and Ries, vocal music by Mlle. Parepa, Mr. Santley and Mr. Allan Irving, &c., &c., all contributed to the making up of a very pleasant evening.* We would, however, suggest that at future conversaziones a better arrangement should be made of the various articles exhibited; classifying them under the names of the contributors, alphabetically disposed, affording no sort of clue to the finding of any particular object. The first orchestral concert of the society is announced for February 27th.

HULLAH FUND PERFORMANCE.—The first concert under the direct auspices of the committee of the Hullah Fund will take place at St. James's Hall, on Tuesday evening, January 29. Two features in the performance deserve especial notice, viz., M. Benedict's new lyrical legend, Undine, and M. Vieuxtemps' fantasia appassionata, for violin and full orchestra, this will be the first appearance of M. Vieuxtemps in a performance with full orchestra these eight years. The band will be entirely professional, and selected from the principal artists of her Majesty's Theatre and the Royal Italian Opera. It is believed that the host of Mr. Hullah's pupils and friends will manifest their esteem for him by attending this performance, and thereby enjoy an intellectual treat, and at the same time serve a worthy man.

PECKHAM AMATEUR MUSICAL UNION.—The fifth concert of the season took place on Saturday, January 5th, when a number of madrigals, glees, &c., were excellently rendered by Messrs. Fielding, Montem Smith, Shoubridge, and Winn. The only lady singer was Miss Rose Hersee, a very youthful but clever artist, who was highly successful in "Non ti fidare," and in the solo of "La Carita," sung with the ladies of the choir. The Misses Clinton, daughters of the well-known flautist, made very promising débuts in a grand duo for pianoforte, by G. A. Osborne.—The following were encored; Miss Rose Hersee ("Cherry Ripe"), Mr. Montem Smith "The maid I love," Mr. Winn ("The Token"), Mr. H. J. Wood (Flute Solo), and the concert appeared to give the highest satisfaction to an audience of more than 400 of the élite of the neighbourhood.

In the Court of Exchequer, on Monday, a Miss Fricker obtained a verdict of 25*l*., as damages for a breach of promise of marriage, against Mr. Von Holst, a musical gentleman residing near Worcester.

* The following was the musical programme:—Madrigal, "I saw lovely Philis," Pearsall; part-song, "The Shepherd's farewell" (Henry Smart); Romance in F, Impromptu in D minor, solo pianoforte, Mad. Silas (E. Silas, and Schumann); serenade, "I arise from dreams of thee," Mr. Allan Irving (C. Salaman); air, "Allons, prenons patience, Cheval de Bronze, Miss Augusta Thomson (Auber); part-song, "A song for the seasons" (Henry Smart); Duo concertante, pianoforte and violin, Oberon, Messrs. Adolphe and Louis Ries (Wolff and Vieuxtemps); Duo, Mlle. Parepa and Miss Stanley; air, Mlle. Parepa; solo trumpet, "The soldier tired," Mr. Thomas Harper (Dr. Arne); part-song, "Opening buds" (Mendelssohn). Director of the chorus, Mr. Henry Smart; Accompanist, Mr. Charles Salaman.

Digitized by Google

DISSOLUTION OF THE AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY.

(From an occasional Contributor.)

THIS society has, in conformity with a resolution passed at a general meeting held on Tuesday last, at the Hanover Square Rooms, ceased to exist. The causes which have led to this result are mentioned below; but it must be a source of regret that the mere shadow of non-success should have caused such a step, though we have no doubt the committee have not. The society was established in 1846 by Lord Gerald Fitzgerald, Sir A. K. Macdonald, Bart., and Mr. E. Jekyll—Mr. Henry Leslie undertaking the duties of honorary secretary—and was formed for the purpose of performing (according to the circular issued at that date).

Amongst the earliest members enrolled were his Royal Highness the Prince Consort, who has been a constant supporter of the society up to the present time, and his late Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge. The orchestra included the principal amateurs, both noblemen and gentlemen, of which this metropolis, or, we may say country, could boast.

It has been the means of making the amateurs of London acquainted with the details of the highest order of orchestral music, and undoubtedly rendered them capable of appreciating the performances of a professional band, which has shown itself in the establishment of numerous suburban societies, as well as private meetings. The first season was under the direction of Mr. Balfe, and the rehearsals, twelve in number, were held in Store Street, Bedford Square, a concert being given to private friends at the termination of the season. The second year the bâton was wielded by Mr. C. Lucas, and the concerts were given at the Hanover Square Rooms, to which place, on Mr. Lucas's withdrawal, Mr. Negri was appointed conductor, who was afterwards succeeded by Mr. G. A. Osborne. In the year 1855 Mr. Henry Leslie was requested to undertake the duties of conductor. On his accession to the office the committee was extended, and the honorary secretaryship of the society was entrusted to Mr. Stanley Lucas. The society continued to give during each season eight concerts and rehearsals, but at the termination of the last it was thought advisable to reduce the number to six. The committee, however, having deemed it necessary to draw the attention of the orchestral members to the diminution of the subscribers, and finding the apathy which existed amongst the former, felt it necessary to call a general meeting of the society, which determined that the most dignified course to take under the circumstances was to dissolve the society. Trusting the objects for which it was established have in some measure been fulfilled, it is felt that the blank which it will make in the musical circles of London will be difficult to fill up, as it is much easier to pull down than it is to raise an amateur society in such metropolis as ours.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.—The forty-ninth concert attracted an audience which filled every corner of St. James's Hall, and was altogether one of the best ever given. The instrumental pieces were of the highest order, as may be seen by the subjoined:—

Quintet in C, Beethoven; Suite de pieces in E, Handel; Sonata in B flat, viola and pianoforte, Vieuxtemps; Trio in D minor, pianoforte, violin and violoncello, Mendelssohn.

The quintet of Beethoven (heard for the third time at these concerts) is one of the most remarkable works of the great "tone-poet," and from the first bar of the allegro to the last of the marvellous presto was listened to with wrapt attention. That the playing of M. Vieuxtemps, supported as he was by Messrs. Ries, Schreurs, Webb and Patti, should have elicited the warmest enthusiasm, is not surprising. Grander execution was never heard. The sonata for viola and pianoforte was welcome for more reasons than one. The tenor, except in the orchestra, has been unaccountably neglected considering what a superb instrument it becomes in the hands of a skilled performer. Standing midway between its sister the violin and big brother the violoncello—combining, too, in some measure the qualities of both, it is capable of an endless variety of effect. M. Vieuxtemps' mastery of the viola is as complete as his command of the violin, and the sonata possessed a double interest from the fact of its being his own composition. Of the three movements, the andante in G minor, barcarolla, created the most marked impression. The mechanical difficulties presented by the whole work are such that none but a performer of the first class should attempt it; but independently of this it is something more than a vehicle for display. Although the pianoforte part is to some extent subordinate, it is both complex and difficult. Miss Arabella Goddard, however, who recognises no difficulties, played it to perfection from end to end, and the two instruments were as one.

Handel's Suite, (the fifth performance at these concerts), created a furore. It was rendered by the young and gifted pianist, with a grace and ease, that were nothing short of fascinating, and a delicacy of touch that M. Fiorentino would liken to "gossamer." The familiar theme of the "Harmonious Blacksmith" was sung as sweetly as though "Kitty Stephens" had come back again with the keyboard for a voice, and the variations executed with an evenness, fluency, and exquisite gradation of tone, that Alboni or Sontag might have envied. But of all the good things of the evening, the last was unquestionably the best, and as Mr. Benedict again addressed the audience—politely requesting those who did not intend remaining to the end, either to leave before the commencement or between the movements, the consequence was that Mendelssohn's marvellous composition was heard without interruption, nearly the whole of the assemblage stopping for the very last note. In the range of pianoforte music, we know nothing to surpass the trio in D minor for freshness, vigour, and spontaniety. What it was in the hands of Miss Arabella Goddard, M. Vieuxtemps and Signor Piatti, we may leave our readers to imagine,—those who were fortunate enough to be present had a treat they are not likely to forget, and we sincerely hope, that before the termination of M. Vieuxtemps' engagement, Mr. S. Arthur Chappell may be induced either to repeat the work, or at least allow the public to hear by the same performers its superb sister trio in C minor (No. 2.) Opposed as we are to encores in general, there are times when we cannot quarrel with the public for insisting upon a repetition of that which has afforded them gratification, at once genuine and unanimous; and if anything were wanting on the present occasion to indicate the perfect sincerity of the audience, it was proved by the fact, that at half-past ten o'clock, the third movement of Mendelssohn's trio was, without a dissentient voice or sign, enthusiastically redemanded. Never perhaps was the scherzo taken at such a true Mendelssohnian speed. Not a note was wanting, however (not one, to quote Mozart, "fell under the desk"); and the critic's office became a sinecure.

The vocal music must be briefly dismissed. Two pretty trios by Herr Schloesser and the late Curschmann, a very intelligent reading of Beethoven's song of the "Quail," by Mr. Tennant, "Lascia ch'io pianga," (from Handel's Rinaldo), charmingly sung by Mad. Laura Baxter, and Mendelssohn's "First Violet," given with real expression by Mad. Louisa Vinning—composed the programme.

At the next concert, Mendelssohn's Octet is promised, M. Vieuxtemps of course to lead.

THE OPERA COMIQUE.

ITS ORIGIN AND PROGRESS.

(Continued from page 38.)

ELLEVIOU.

HIS voice seemed at first of a dull quality. His second début was in Paul et Virginie, by Kreutzer, in which he played the part of the negro. He worked at his head notes, and by his studies displaced the range of his voice, which gained in the upper part the notes which it lost in the lower. From a baritone he thus became a tenor. His face and figure predisposed one in his favour, and accordingly the parts of young lovers, and especially of officers, suited him admirably. He won his spurs, in 1792, in the part of Philippe, in Dalayrac's opera of Philippe et Georgette. The law of forced service removed him from his dramatic labours, but he remained only a short time in the army. He soon returned to

Digitized by Google

Paris, through the influence of his friend, General Moreau. Leagued with the reactionary party, and a member of the Société des Muscadins, Elleviou used to beat the watch, and play all manner of nocturnal pranks, in company with his associates. Being looked after by the police, he fled to Strasburg in 1795, and it was at the theatre of that city that he brought to perfection his talents as a comedian. When recalled to the Comédie Italienne, where he brought back, as I have before mentioned, comedies interspersed with ariettes, Elleviou gave a fresh vogue to the operas of Grétry. We shall throw a glance subsequently at the principal parts created by him. As he grew older he devoted himself by choice to parts requiring sentiment, and thus it was he succeeded so admirably in the characters of Blondel, in Richard Cœur de Lion; of Azor, of Felix, and finally of Joseph, in Méhul's opera. He distinguished himself also in buffo operas, such as Picaros et Diego and L'Irato. His pretensions were at the least quite as exaggerated as the most popular tenors of our own day. There is nothing new under the sun. When the Favart Theatre was amalgamated with the Feydeau he became one of the managers of the Opéra Comique. His salary was already nearly 85,000 fr. (3,400*l*.), a sum which at that time represented at least twice as much as the 100,000 fr. (4,000*l*.) since paid to Duprez. Not satisfied with this figure, Elleviou demanded a salary of 4,800*l*. The Emperor, to whose ears these fresh exactions came, would not allow the other associates to comply with them, and declared that, on the contrary, his salary ought to be reduced. Elleviou, who had for some time entertained the design of taking leave of the public, whose idol he was, before they should take leave of him, seized on this occasion to give his farewell performance. It was on the 10th of March, 1813, that he bade farewell to the stage in Adolphe et Clara, and in Felix, the character in which he was wont to move the most strongly the sympathies of his audience. He was triumphantly received, and retired to rest on his laurels on his estate of Les Roncières, near Villefranche, in the department of the Rhone. Elleviou wrote a few libretti ofcomic operas—Delia et Werdi-kan, Le Vaisseau Amiral, and L'Auberge de Bagnères, which were played at the Feydeau, the first in 1805, and the two others in 1807. After having filled the post of mayor in his commune, and becoming a member of the Conseil-General, Elleviou was seized with apoplexy during a visit to Paris, and while he was in the office of the Charivari, on the 5th of May, 1842.

J. B. MARTIN.

His comrade, Jean Blaise Martin, was born in Paris on the 14th of October, 1769. He was a better musician than Elleviou, and if the latter was received with at least an equal degree of favour with Martin, although he perhaps did not deserve it as a singer, it is that a tenor voice has always been of all male voices that most agreeable to the public. Martin's father, a painter of considerable talent, died when Blaise was only four years old. The child, who was educated by an uncle, who made him begin music as soon as he was seven years of age, rapidly became a good reader. His pure and high voice made him sought after, and he sang soprano solos at private concerts. When his voice broke he learned the violin. As a violinist young Martin was enabled to earn some sort of livelihood, and it was in that capacity that he sought at first to gain admission into the orchestra of the Opera while his voice was forming itself. His admirable voice soon assumed a brilliant quality and a marvellous reach—two octaves and a third from the lower F to the A sharp of the tenor. It was not found sufficiently powerful however for the Opera. Martin got himself known at first by singing at concerts, where the manager of the Theatre de Monsieur noticed and engaged him as a baritone. He came out on that stage in 1788, in an opera by Paesiello, translated into French under the title of Le Marquis Tulipano. Both the work and the singer obtained a great success. Martin was not as yet at home on the stage, and, very different from Elleviou, was more admired as a musician than as an actor. He succeeded, however, in the end in playing with ease and animation, and especially with a very amusing bluntness of manner, in the valets, Crispin, in Champein's Nouveau Don Quichotte, and Frontin in Devienne's Visitandines, established his reputation. The Feydeau Theatre, which already possessed several artists, such as Elleviou and Mad. St. Aubin, won over Martin to complete its excellent company, and he made his first appearance there in 1794. The Opéra Comique was at that time in possession of really singers, and not, as in Monsigny's and Phillidor's time, actors just able to acquit themselves agreeably of a vaudeville; and the composers who wrote for such interpreters, the Nicolos, Méhuls, Boieldieus, were as much at their ease with them as the Italian composers of the same period, with whom they might hold rivalry. Martin remained on the stage after the retirement of Elleviou, and we shall see that he created the greater part of the pieces produced at this theatre during the first twenty years of the century. He manifested the wish to retire the moment he perceived his voice was no longer so flexible as formerly. This was in 1822; but his manager persuaded him to remain, offering him a bonus of 30,000 francs. Viewing the matter, however, in the same light as his friend Elleviou, he was unwilling ever to come to the point of seeking plaudits from the indulgence of those who remembered him in his youth, and on the 31st of March, 1823, he withdrew from the profession, after having exercised it for thirty-five years. In 1824 he was appointed to a professorship in the Conservatoire. In 1826 the Opéra Comique invited him to return to the stage, and he was again brilliantly received. He was less fortunate, perhaps, in 1834, when he came to the assistance of a theatre threatened with bankruptcy. M. Halévy wrote a pasticcio for him, entitled La Vieillesse de Lafleur, in which were introduced the greater part of the airs which had won him his former triumphs. He was still applauded, although his old admirers found an immense difference between what he had been and what he was. According to the verdict of certain judicious connoisseurs of that time, his vocalisation was not of the highest character, but the incomparable qualities with which nature had endowed him were all-sufficient. In concerted pieces his deep, powerful, and nervous voice produced an admirable effect, and it was thus that in the quatuor in Méhul's Irato he monopolised the attention of the audience. While Elleviou, in his latter days, turned dramatic author, Martin became a composer. He had received instructions from Caudeille.* An opéra comique was produced by him at the Feydeau, called Les Oiseaux de Mer, which deserves only a passing mention. Martin was then in declining health, and his illness had grown worse after the death of his daughter (the grand-daughter of Piccini, the publisher, a venerable octogenarian, who, as well as Martin's widow, is still in the enjoyment of perfect health). The renowned singer thought that a change of air would do him good, and retired to Roncières, the residence of his old friend and comrade, Elleviou, where he died shortly after, on the 18th of October, 1837. His mortal remains were transported to Paris, and a funeral service was performed over them, on the 12th of November, by the members of the Conservatoire, in the presence of a large concourse of friends and brother artists. Martin was four times married.

Provincial.

THAT BRADFORD is behind few towns in the kingdom as regards musical enterprise we have had more than one occasion to point out. Recently, the great woollen mart has taken the initiative in offering prizes for written discourses on the art, and the subject, "The influence of Popular Concerts on the Social Condition of the People," being given out, brought in seven essays.

Mr. Christopher Ellison, of Bradford, obtained the first prize, and Mr. John Plummer, of Kettering, Northamptonshire, the second. The Bradford Review has printed Mr. Ellison's paper entire, which, as the subject is at this moment so interesting, we may venture to reproduce in a future column. The same journal has a glowing account of Mad. Lancia's performance in Mr. Willott's entertainment, Light and Shade; or, Photography and Spirit Rapping, and speaks well of Mr. Augustus Braham's singing. "The celebrated war-song from Verdi's Attila," writes the Review, "sung by Mad. Lancia in character, was rendered with exquisite finish."

The third Subscription Concert, given in the Victoria Hall, LEEDS, on Monday night, under the direction of Mr. Burton and Mr. Charles Hallé, was noticeable for the appearance of Mr. Sims Reeves, who was received with unbounded enthusiasm.

* A dramatic composer, and the writer of several grand operas, the greater number of which were never performed; born 1774, died 1825.

Digitized by Google

"Mr. Sims Reeves," says the Leeds Mercury, "was unquestionably the great attraction. On his appearance in the orchestra he received a hearty Yorkshire welcome, which must have been very gratifying to him. The singular purity and power of his voice were displayed as strikingly, perhaps, as on any previous appearance of the great tenor before a Leeds audience. The first piece allotted to him was the song, 'Adelaida' (Beethoven), but the effect upon the audience was not very great, owing, perhaps, to the adoption of the Italian version instead of the English, which was printed in the book of words. In a sweet ballad from Macfarren's Robin Hood, 'The Guiding Star,' however, the enthusiasm was unmistakeable, and the encore which followed was but a just compliment to Mr. Reeves' inimitable execution."

That Mr. Reeves' singing of "Adelaida" should not have transported the audience can only be explained by supposing the audience not sufficiently refined to appreciate it. Mr. Hallé too, was loudly cheered in his performances, which included a sonata by Beethoven and some pieces by Mendelssohn. The Yorkshire Choral Union assisted with some of their choice choruses, and were as effective as usual.—Miss Maria Wilson, and Messrs. Plowman, Hird, Hudson, Holmes, and Turner, pupils from the Wilberforce School for the Blind, at York, were engaged on Saturday night by the Leeds Town Hall Concert Society. The programme embraced many old and familiar ballads, glees, &c., which were sung with considerable effect. The audience was highly pleased. Mr. Turner accompanied on the pianoforte.—It is stated in the local papers that Mr. Burton has been appointed chorus master in connection with the proposed Musical Festival in the autumn.

The Organ Concerts in St. George's Hall, LIVERPOOL, being entirely sui generis, are entitled to notice, more especially as they are of unvarying excellence, as can scarcely be doubted when it is known they are entrusted to such an eminent musician as Mr. W. T. Best. With the following remarks, àpropos of the performance and performers at the concert on Saturday last, which appeared in the Liverpool Albion, we entirely agree:—

"While alluding to these concerts, and enforcing their claims on public attention, it may not be out of place to remark that they were first commenced about five or six years ago, and at once established themselves in the favour of the musical, and also in that of the general, public. That they should have done so was a clear indication of the musical erudition, admirable skill, and good taste of the organist, Mr. W. T. Best. From the fact that the whole effects and burden of the concerts have to be maintained by such means an an adept in instrumentation can secure from the skilful use of one instrument alone, it is necessary that the performer should be thoroughly acquainted with the styles—modes of musical thought, indeed—of the best composers, and that he has made himself familiar with these, in the widest sense of the term, has been evinced in more ways than one by the able organist who gives these concerts. He has, however, displayed a great deal more than that, he has shown himself to be fully acquainted not only with the general principles and powers of the organ, but he has made himself completely master of the great range of resources which belong to the noble instrument placed under his charge. With these qualifications, added to the enthusiasm which animates him in all that relates to the science and practice of his art, it is no wonder that he has succeeded in rendering these concerts generally popular."

The following comments on the report of the Committee of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society have been communicated to the journal from which we have just quoted:—

"The committee have issued their report for the past year, and we shall offer a few remarks on behalf of the subscribers. The society owes 1100*l*. Now, a numerous section of the subscribers are anxious to be out of debt, and are in favour of a sale of a portion of the 250 stalls, say at about ten guineas each, for the limit of the society (eighteen guineas) is unattainable. The greater success of the past season is attributed to the vocal selections being of a more varied, cheerful, and, perhaps, intelligible character. The committee are inconsistent. They go back two or three centuries for a glee, but they reluctantly go back fifty years for a national song. A majority of the subscribers are in favour of that class of music, but a majority of the selection committee are opposed to them. The remedy rests with the subscribers. It is a fact, ludicrous as it may seem, that solo instrumental music was recently given which neither the band nor the committee could explain the ideas sought to be interpreted; no musician could do so unless he had heard it a dozen times. How fatiguing to the audience who heard it for the first time. And this is what is termed classical music."

A few evenings since M. Hallé played at Manchester Beethoven's sonata in E minor, Op. 90, and the Manchester Guardian, reviewing the concert, says:—

"Conjecture is often lost in determining the groundwork of those of Beethoven's sonatas which are evidently based upon definite and predetermined ideas, apart from thematic development. There is, however, no doubt about this one, since Beethoven himself has revealed it. Count Lichnousky, it would appear, an amateur and an intimate friend of the composer, on the loss of his wife, became enamoured with a very accomplished opera singer, and withal a very virtuous and amiable lady, to whom the Count offered his hand. His proud and princely family, however, objected to the marriage, and much anxiety and distress was the consequence. They were, however, united, and lived long and happily together. Beethoven, who knew all the circumstances of the case, shortly after the marriage composed the sonata, and sent it to his friend; and on being pressed to explain its meaning, said it was intended to depict the prince's passion for his second wife, and that if he wished titles for the two movements of which the sonata is composed, he might call the first, 'Struggle between head and heart,' and the second, 'Conversation with the beloved one.' With this key, the work is easily understood, and marvellously expressive it is."

Of course it is, and the Liverpool Philharmonic Society ought to give its subscribers a key, or explanation, of the themes of the various symphonies, overtures, sonatas, &c.

As an experiment, the inauguration of the Monday Popular Concerts, at the Free Trade Hall, MANCHESTER, on Saturday week, must be pronounced successful in a pre-eminent degree. Nearly 2000 persons were present, and at no former concert in the same locality does the audience seem to have been more attentive, discriminating, and enthusiastic. The programme was the same as that given during the week in other parts of the provinces. Of all the pieces in the selection, Dussek's sonata in B flat*, Op. 69, No. 1, for pianoforte and violin, appears to have created the greatest sensation. Of this delicious sonata (which is making its way to the pianoforte of every amateur), the Manchester Examiner and Times speaks in the following eulogistic terms:—

"The composition is bright and genial in character—the adagio an outpouring of tenderness, and the rondo redolent of gaiety, as if the sighs of the past were forgotten in the happy present. There is much originality in Dussek's compositions, and consequently they bring with them a feeling of healthy vivacity; a freshness as of spring-time. This sonata, particularly the last movement, stirred the people, and secured for its performance one of the most enthusiastic and decided of encores."

It reflects no small honour on the Musical Association of EDINBURGH to have performed so colossal a work as the Eroica symphony of Beethoven in so creditable a manner as is reported by the Scottish metropolitan press in their notices of the fourth concert, which took place at the Music Hall on Saturday. The programme in other respects was excellent, and included Mozart's quintet, in E flat, for piano, oboe, clarionet, horn, and bassoon; Mr. Benedict's overture to The Minnesinger, and Auber's overture to The Crown Diamonds. The vocal music was sustained by Miss Clari Fraser and Mr. Weiss. The lady, already a favourite in Edinburgh, appears to have created no common sensation.

"Considerable interest," writes the Scottish Press, "was felt in the appearance of Miss Clari Fraser, who sang, 'My mother bids me bind my hair,' 'Sweet spirit, hear my prayer,' from Lurline, and, with Mr. Weiss, the duet from Figaro, 'Crudel, perche finora,' with exquisite sweetness and expression. Miss Fraser is greatly improved since we last heard her in Edinburgh a few years since. She sings with much simplicity—trusting to the delicacies of the composer rather than to mere artistic ornamentation, and reaping applause as a tribute to the grace and witchery of her tones, not to the meretricious display of musical elaboration. Haydn's canzonet met with a hearty encore—which both the song and duet also deserves."

Mr. Weiss—our admirable English basso, who has recently been taking the provinces by storm—is also highly complimented both for his voice and singing. M. Vieuxtemps, Signor Piatti, M. Hallé, Mad. Louisa Vinning, and Mr. Tennant are engaged for the next meeting, which we have no doubt will resolve itself—although on a Saturday—into a so-called Monday Popular Concert.

* No. 1 of the Monday Popular Concerts' Library (Instrumental).

Digitized by Google

Evans' Cottage Harmonium at Six Guineas,

In a French Polished Pine Case, has the full compass, Five Octaves, and a soft, subdued agreeable quality of tone—designed expressly for a cottage or small sitting room.

Evans' Harmonium at Ten Guineas,

Is in a handsome French Polished Oak Case, and possesses that rich organ-like quality of tone so peculiar to all Evans' Instruments.

Evans' English Harmoniums.

An Illustrated Catalogue of the whole of these well-known Instruments, with one and two Rows of Keys, the Percussion Action and Pedals, at prices ranging from Six Guineas to 140 Guineas—may now be had upon application to the Manufacturers, BOOSEY AND CHING, Holles Street, London.

Case's Patent English Concertina,

As used by Signor Regondi and other eminent Professors, still maintain their pre-eminent position as Concert and Drawing-room Instruments. The Four-Guinea Concertina has the Full Compass and Double-Action. The Patent Concert Concertina, in Amboyna or Bird's-Eye Maple, possesses every Modern Improvement that can possibly be introduced into the Concertina. A large stock of Second Hand Concertinas for Sale or Hire.

BOOSEY AND CHING, Manufacturers, 24 Holles Street, London.

NEW PUBLICATIONS
OF
DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.,
244 REGENT STREET. (JUST OUT.)

"SCHOTTISH D'AMOUR," by EUGENE MONIOT. Composer of "A Summer's Day," for the piano, price 2s. (Orchestral parts, 5s.)

"SANTA LUCIA," by EUGENE MONIOT, Neapolitan melody, arranged (without octaves), for young pianists, by Eugène Moniot, price 1s.

R. F. HARVEY'S NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
"Cupid's Repose" (Melody)	3	0
"Pensez à moi" (Rêverie)	3	0

"THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER," as a Piano Duet, arranged with variations by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew. Price 3s.

NEW SONG—"That Handsome Volunteer," sung by Miss Emma Stanley in her popular entertainment of the "Seven Ages of Woman," composed especially for her by Emile Berger, price 2s. 6d. (Sung also by Miss Catharine Lucette, in her original entertainment, and Captain Morton Price, at the Prince of Wales's Hall, Regent Street, and by Mrs. A. J. Sutton, of Birmingham.)

BALFE'S NEWEST and most POPULAR SONGS.

	s.	d.
"I love you" (Sung by Sims Reeves)	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose" (Ditto)	3	0
"If I could change as others change" (Sung by Laura Baxter)	2	6
"I'm not in love, remember" (Sung by Miss Parepa)	2	6
"Oh! take me to thy heart again" (Sung by Miss Poole)	2	0

"GOOD NIGHT," (Cradle Song—Wiegenlied) composed by ALEXANDER REICHARDT, price 2s. 6d.

A SONG FOR THE SEASON.—"THE CHRISTMAS ROSE." (Poetry by M. A. STODART.) Composed by LOVELL PHILLIPS. Price 2s. 6d.

NEW HARP MUSIC by C. OBERTHUR, "Thou art so near and yet so far." Reichardt's popular song transcribed for the Harp by C. Oberthür. Price 3s.

MR. WEISS'S NEW SONG—"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL." (Poetry by J. P. DOUGLAS.) Composed and sung by Mr. W. H. Weiss. Price 3s.

NEW BALLAD.—"IN A LEAFY GARDEN," by GEORGE LODER. Sung with great success by Mr. RICHARD SEYMOUR, is just published, price 2s. 6d.

"MAY."—New Duettino for equal Voices, by HENRY SMART. Price 2s. 6d.

NEW ORGAN MUSIC by HENRY SMART.—"Fugue in E minor," from Handel's "Lessons." Arranged for the Organ by HENRY SMART. Price 2s.

"THIS WORLD IS A GARDEN."—Song by GEORGE LODER. Words by J. STIRLING COYNE. Sung every evening by Mr. ROUSE, and enthusiastically encored, at the Lyceum Theatre, in the successful Operetta of "THE PETS OF THE PARTERRE." Price 3s.

NEW WALTZ, "The Woman in White," Valse mystérieuse, by Charles Marriott, dedicated to Wilkie Collins, Esq. Price 4s.

MEYERBEER'S ROYAL WEDDING MARCH (Quatrième Marche aux Flambeaux), composed in honour of the Marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, which was played with such immense effect by the Band of the Guides at the Fête of the Orphéonistes at the Crystal Palace, is published for the Pianoforte, price 5s.

"FRESH AS A ROSE," sung by SIMS REEVES, and enthusiastically encored at Mr HOWARD GLOVER'S Concert, St. James's Hall, was composed expressly for the occasion by BALFE, and is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

A PROFESSOR of MUSIC (Piano and Organ) wishes to employ a few hours daily in a Music Shop, either in trying music, pianos, or as he may otherwise be required.
Address E. W. B. Cribb, Bookseller, Westbourne Grove, W.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.
Their Catalogues, which contain a great variety of Music calculated for teaching purposes, may be had, post-free, on application.
London: 18 Hanover Square.

JUST PUBLISHED, MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S NEW SONGS. The "Hawking Song," 3s.; "Rest," 2s. 6d.; "Now," 3s. The music composed expressly by VIRGINIA GABRIEL.
C. LONSDALE, 26 Old Bond Street.

JUST PUBLISHED, "MAUREEN," Irish Ballad, 2s. 6d.; "The Forsaken," Ballad, 3s. Sung with enthusiastic applause by Madame CATHERINE HAYES, for whom they were expressly composed by VIRGINIA GABRIEL.
C. LONSDALE'S Musical Circulating Library, 26 Old Bond Street.

TO BE PUBLISHED BY SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MUSIC, a new work; being Three Essays which appeared in the MUSICAL WORLD. By JOSEPH GODDARD. Readers of the MUSICAL WORLD and the Public, wishing to encourage the publication of the above, may do so by forwarding their names to Mr. J. GODDARD, 8 St. Paul's Crescent, Camden Square, N.W. Price 5s. For further particulars, see the MUSICAL WORLD of Dec. 15th, 1860.

CHOIR BOYS Wanted for a West End Chapel.—Services Sunday morning and afternoon.
Address, stating terms, to Organist, Mr. Beaver's, 98 Jermyn Street, London.

A PIANOFORTE PLAYER is desirous of an ENGAGEMENT for a few hours a day, at an Instrument Warehouse, to Show and Try Pianofortes.
I. K., Macmichael's Library, 207 King's Road, Chelsea, S.W.

TO MUSIC SELLERS.—WANTED, by a young Man of good address, and an experienced Salesman, a Situation as ASSISTANT in a general Music Warehouse; has some knowledge of repairs. Good recommendations.—Address B., 2 Cottage Place, Cheltenham.

Digitized by Google

MESSRS. CONACHER AND CO.

Have the honour of announcing that they have made arrangements with

E. J. HOPKINS, ESQ.,

ORGANIST OF THE TEMPLE CHURCH, LONDON,

TO GIVE

A GRAND PERFORMANCE OF

ORGAN MUSIC,

On THURSDAY, the 31st Instant,

ON THE LARGE ORGAN ERECTED BY THE

IN THE FREE WESLEYAN CHURCH, HUDDERSFIELD.

A COLLECTION WILL BE MADE AT THE CLOSE, IN AID OF THE CHOIR FUND.

The Doors will be opened at Half-past Six, and the Performance commence at Seven o'clock precisely.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.

"Te Deum"	GRAUN.
Slow Movement in G.	MOZART.
"Hush, ye pretty warbling choir"	HANDEL.
"Wretched lovers"
"When this scene of trouble"	SPOHR.
"Sing, O ye heavens!"	HANDEL.

PART II.

"Marvellous, Lord, are Thy works"	HAYDN.
"Benedictus"	MOZART.
Fugue in E Minor	BACH.
Slow Movement in G.	BEETHOVEN.
"Hallelujah"	BEETHOVEN.

An interval of fifteen minutes between the Parts.

DESCRIPTION OF THE ORGAN.

Great Organ, CC to G, 56 Notes.

1. Bourdon.
2. Tenoroon.
3. Open Diapason—large scale.
4. Open Diapason.
5. Stop Diapason.
6. Flute.
7. Principal.
8. Twelfth.
9. Fifteenth.
10. Sesquialtera.
11. Mixture.
12. Trumpet.
13. Clarion.

Choir Organ, CC to G, 56 Notes.

14. Opera Diapason.
15. Keraulophon.
16. Dulciana.
17. Stop Diapason—Bass.
18. Stop Diapason—Treble.
19. Voix Celeste.
20. Claribel Flute.
21. Principal.
22. Piccolo.
23. Cremona.

Swell Organ, CC to G, 56 Notes.

24. Bourdon.
25. Open Diapason.
26. Viol di Gamba.
27. Stop Diapason.
28. Gemshorn.
29. Flute.
30. Fifteenth.
31. Mixture.
32. Horn.
33. Hautboy.
34. Clarion.
35. Tremulant.

Pedal Organ, CCC to E, 29 Notes.

36. Double Open Diapason, 16 ft.
37. Violone 16 ft.
38. Octave 8 ft.

Couplets.

39. Swell to Great.
40. Choir to Great.
41. Swell to Pedals.
42. Great to Pedals.
43. Choir to Pedals.

ORGAN MANUFACTORY, HUDDERSFIELD.

Printed by GEOR E ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, January 26, 1861.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 39—No. 5 SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1861 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

ASHDOWN AND PARRY'S PUBLICATIONS.

JOHN FIELD'S SIX CELEBRATED NOCTURNES. Edited by FRANZ LISZT. Price 2s. each.

"Each of these Nocturnes is a model that the student may examine to his advantage. They are less suited as a whole for the capricious player than for those who, having acquired a certain command of the instrument, possess a taste too good to be satisfied with common airs, which grow into absolute irksomeness by a string of still more common variations. It is, therefore, to pianoforte players who admire the products of a fertile imagination, regulated by a correct taste, that these Nocturnes will be always welcome."—The Critic.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

SCHUBERT'S IMPROMPTU in B Flat (played by Mr. Charles Hallé). Price 3s. 6d.

"The impromptu in B flat presents capital practice for the moderately advanced performer, and abounds with passages that will be sure to enchain the cultivated ear, and delight the refined taste."—The Critic.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

SCHUBERT'S IMPROMPTU in E flat. Price 4s.

"The theme is florid yet light; the episode gives scope for expression in cantabile phrases, set off according to the modern fashion. This is a piece to attempt in public without being too difficult for amateurs."—Athenæum.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE KULLAK. LES ARPEGES. Price 5s.

"After the exhibitions of mere difficulty, dissonance, and noise adopted by many pianoforte writers of the day, it is grateful to come in contact with music that embodies such skill in construction that a great end may be achieved by tolerably facile means. Those who are ambitious to soar beyond the commonplace may find in this something to aid their flight."—The Critic.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

E. SILAS. TARENTELLE. Price 4s.

"Scarcely any kind of composition has found more votaries among the highest musicians than that of the Tarentelle; Auber, Rossini, Chopin, Stephen Heller, Pauer, have all contributed to it from the rich stores of their imagination, and this of M. Silas may fairly take its place by the side of any of them for its strength and originality. It has the wildness and rollicking vivacity so characteristic of the dance, with a certain roughness that is not unpleasing, and gives it considerable force and vigour. It is a piece that will certainly become popular, the more so, as while being effective and striking, it has the advantage of not being overwhelmingly difficult."—Manchester Guardian.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. LISZT'S Arrangement of the MARCH from Richard Wagner's "Tannhäuser." Price 4s.

"Liszt's arrangement is in his own usual excellent style. He treats the air as a jeweller would a precious gem, surrounding it with a setting, rich, varied, and brilliant, in admirable taste and keeping, from which the subject stands out clear and well defined. It does not present any especial difficulty to a good performer, and is a highly effective, brilliant piece."—Manchester Guardian.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. LISZT'S SOIREES DE VIENNE. Nine Valses-Caprices. Price 3s. to 5s. each.

These celebrated Caprices, on Waltzes of Franz Schubert, have been played with extraordinary success by Mr. Charles Hallé, Herr Rubinstein and other distinguished pianists.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. ERGMANN'S RONDO APPASSIONATO. Dédié à Madame Davison, née Goddard. Price 4s.

"The theme of this Rondo is spirited and biting, a thing to tempt a pianist who commands humour and piquancy."—Athenæum.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. ERGMANN'S REMINISCENCES D'OBERON. Price 3s.

"Overdone, as we are, with arrangements of operatic airs, it is quite refreshing to meet with any so good as these "Reminiscences" of M. Ergmann. Although easy enough to make scarcely any pretensions beyond being a school piece, it is so well written,—the subjects are managed with so much grace and finish, there is so much spirit and variety in it, that the composer may well expect it to become extensively popular. It is founded on three of the favourite airs of Weber's charming opera, two of which are most ingeniously interwoven together."—Manchester Guardian.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN AND PARRY

(Successors to Wessel and Co.),

18 HANOVER SQUARE.

MR. and MADAME R. SIDNEY PRATTEN beg to announce, that they have removed to 38 Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, W., where they will continue to give lessons on the Flute, Guitar, and Concertina.

MISS AUGUSTA THOMSON begs to announce that she has REMOVED to 38 Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, W.

MADAME OURY'S BRILLIANT FANTASIA on Jacobite Airs, 4s.—Madame Oury's Souvenirs d'Ecosse, 4s.—Madame Oury's "Auld Robin Gray," 4s.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, and Patterson & Sons, Edinburgh.

MISS HELEN HOGARTH (Teacher of Singing) begs to inform her pupils and the public that she has RETURNED to town for the season, and has removed from Weymouth Street to No. 71 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square.

MR. HENRY JOHN LINCOLN will deliver TWO LECTURES (with Vocal and Instrumental Illustrations), "On the GENIUS and WORKS of MOZART and WEBER," at the Philosophical Institution, Edinburgh, on February 12th and 15th; and at the Queen's Rooms, Glasgow, on February 13th and 16th.

PECKHAM AMATEUR MUSICAL UNION.—Seventh Concert, Saturday, February 2nd, 1861.—The following artists will appear:—Miss ELIZA HUGHES, Miss LEFFLER, Mlle. ANNIE C^es, Mr. GEORGE PERREN, Mr. PURKESS, Mr. LEONARD. Pianoforte, Miss ELLEN HENDERSON; concertina, Mr. G. H. LAKE; conductor, Mr. F. OSBORNE WILLIAMS. To commence at 7.

HENRY HERSEE, Jun., Brunswick Terrace, Camberwell, President.
HORACE QUARE, 4 Camberwell Grove, } Honorary
WALTER CHEESMAN, Queen's Road, Peckham, } Secretaries.

ORGAN PERFORMANCE.—Mr. F. ARCHER will give a Performance on Monday evening, the 4th instant, at half-past 7 o'clock, upon the Organ built for the Church of St. John the Evangelist by Mr. W. Hedgeland, 38 Upper Gower Street, Bedford Square.

CONCERT SEASON, 1861.

MR. C. M. SHEE respectfully intimates to the Musical Profession, that having returned from the Management of a highly successful Operatic and Concert Tour, he is now prepared to undertake the ARRANGEMENT of Concerts, Matinées, Soirées, &c., at his usual moderate charges.—Address, J. Miles and Co., 165 Wardour Street, or 6 Lower John Street, Golden Square, W.

WALLWORTH'S ART OF SINGING. Second Edition, just out, full music size, price 7s. A new and modern method for cultivating the Voice, and for gaining a perfect vocalisation—a practical work.—Contains 35 pages of music. With a true method of acquiring the Shake, now for the first time introduced in a Singing Tutor. By T. A. WALLWORTH, Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.

Published by A. W. Hammond (late Jullien), 214 Regent Street; and may also be had of the Author at his residence, 81 Park Street, Grosvenor Square, W., where Pupils are also received.

ORGANIST WANTED, for the Independent Chapel Maldon, Essex. Salary £25.—Apply to "T. J.," Maldon.

Digitized by Google

BOOSEY & SONS'
CHEAP PUBLICATIONS.

Operas in English.

Dinorah, 12s.; Il Trovatore, 12s.; Satanella, 15s.; La Traviata, 12s.; Don Juan, 18s.; Figaro, 16s.; Sonnambula, 12s. 6d.; Norma, 10s. 6d.; Lucrezia, 16s.; Iphigenia in Tauris, 8s.; Faust, 12s. 6d.; Fidelio, 15s.; Der Freischütz, 12s. 6d.; Ernani, 15s.; Il Barbière, 10s.; Zauberflote, 12s. 6d. These Operas are complete for Voice and Pianoforte, with English Words, and the original Foreign Text, in handsome cloth volumes. BOOSEYS' Editions must be ordered.

Operas, Solo.

Dinorah, 7s. 6d.; Satanella, 5s; La Traviata, 5s.; Il Trovatore, 5s.; Rigoletto, 5s.; Ernani, 5s.; Vêpres Siciliennes, 7s. 6d.; Crown Diamonds, 6s.; Don Pasquale, 5s.; Martha, 5s.; Luisa Miller, 5s.; Les Huguenots, 7s. 6d.; Don Juan, 5s.; Fra Diavolo, 5s.; Fille du Regiment, 4s.; Lucia di Lammermoor, 5s.; Lucrezia Borgia, 4s.; Puritani, 6s.; Norma, 4s.; Sonnambula, 4s. These Operas are complete for Pianoforte, in cloth, gilt letters, each with a beautiful Frontispiece, printed on India paper, and an Introduction describing the plot and music. BOOSEYS' Editions must be ordered.

Operas for Violin.

Il Trovatore, The Bohemian Girl, La Traviata, Rigoletto, Maritana, Le Prophete, La Fille du Regiment, Luisa Miller, Martha, Satanella, Dinorah, La Sonnambula, Lucrezia Borgia, Norma, Elisire d'amore, Lucia di Lammermoor, Ernani, Masaniello, Don Pasquale, I Puritani, Les Huguenots, Il Barbiere, Don Juan.

Each Opera complete, price 1s.

Operas for Flute.

Les Huguenots, Robert le Diable, Masaniello, Ernani, Rigoletto, Puritani, Sonnambula, Norma, Lucia, Lucrezia, Il Trovatore, Don Juan.

Each Opera arranged by Clinton, price 1s.

Beethoven's Sonatas.

New Library Edition of the whole of the Sonatas complete in two volumes, handsomely bound, 10s. 6d. each, with Life and Portrait. Edited by W. DORRELL.

"There are many editions of Beethoven's sonatas, German, French, and English; but there is not one that we have seen, from which, taking all things into account—correctness and clearness of the text, elegance of form, and moderation of price—we have derived so much satisfaction as from the edition now before us. The text, after undergoing the revision of so able an editor as Mr. Dorrell, may be expected to be immaculate; and so, after a close examination, we find it to be; and the clearness and beauty of the paper and printing are not to be excelled. The value of the edition is much enhanced by an able and interesting essay on the life and works of Beethoven from the pen of Mr. G. A. Macfarren; and there is, moreover, an excellent portrait of the composer.—Daily News.

Pianoforte Works.

Chopin's Mazurkas for pianoforte, complete, edited by J. W. DAVISON, with Life and Portrait, 8s.; Mendelssohn's Songs, without words, complete, edited by J. W. DAVISON, with Preface and Portrait, 7s. 6d.; Mozart's Twelfth Mass for pianoforte, by H. SMART, complete, 3s.; Rossini's Stabat Mater, ditto, ditto, 3s.; Boosey's 100 Waltzes, by STRAUSS, LANNER and LABITZKY, 3s. 6d.; Boosey's National Dance Book, containing 100 Reels, Country Dances, &c., 2s. 6d.; Moore's 78 Irish Melodies for pianoforte, by NORDMANN, 2s. 6d.; the Operatic Album, containing 100 gems for the pianoforte, price 7s. 6d., in cloth.

Harmonium Music.

Boosey's 50 short Voluntaries, from the works of the great masters, 3s. 6d., cloth; Boosey's 250 Chants, 2s. 6d., cloth; the Harmonium Museum, containing 100 Sacred and Secular Subjects, by the great masters, 7s. 6d., cloth; the Harmonium Operatic Album, containing 60 favourite Airs, 7s. 6d.

Violin Music.

De Beriot's 7 Airs, with variations, 1s.; Kreutzer's 40 Studies, 1s. 6d.; Rode's 25 Studies, 1s. 6d.; Fiorillo's 36 Caprices, 1s. 6d.; Boosey's 100 Dances (No. 1), 1s.; 100 Dances (No. 2), 1s.; 100 Reels and Country Dances, 1s.; 100 Ballads, 1s.; 100 Operatic Airs, 1s.; 100 German Waltzes, 1s.; 10 standard Overtures, 1s.; 100 Exercises and Studies, by the great masters, 1s. Order BOOSEYS' Editions.

Flute Music.

100 Exercises and Studies, by the great masters, 1s.; 100 Dances, 1s.; 100 Operatic Airs, 1s. Arranged by PRATTEN.

Cornet Music.

25 Duets for two cornets, 1s.; 100 Dances, 1s.; 100 Operatic Airs, 1s. Arranged by THOMAS HARPER.

Concertina Music.

100 Sacred Melodies, 1s.; 100 Popular Melodies, 1s.; 100 Dances, 1s.; also, for the German concertina, 100 Dances and Songs, 1s.

Tutors.

BOOSEY'S SHILLING TUTORS, for the Pianoforte, Violin, Flute, Cornet à Pistons, English and German Concertinas, Harmonium and the Voice, all full size, containing from 26 to 36 pages each, edited by the most celebrated Professors.

BOOSEY & SONS, HOLLES STREET.

MUSICAL WORLD

HIGHLY IMPORTANT MUSICAL PROPERTIES.

MESSRS. PUTTICK and SIMPSON, Auctioneers of Literary Property, will SELL by AUCTION at their HOUSE, 47 Leicester Square, W.C., the following highly important MUSICAL PROPERTIES, viz.:—

February 4th and 5th.—A large collection of Miscellaneous Music, vocal and instrumental, including the Library of the late Robert Spinney, Esq., of Gloucester; Engraved Music Plates from the stock of Mr. Z. T. Purday; important assemblage of Musical Instruments—20 Pianofortes, also Harmoniums, Harps by Erard, Violins, Violoncellos, Double Bass, Wind Instruments, &c.

In February.—Surplus Stock of an eminent Music publisher, including Engraved Music Plates of Copyright Works, unpublished MSS. by eminent composers, Printed Stock, Works of Classical Writers, original and modern editions, &c.

Early in the Season.—The entire and valuable Stock of imported Music of Messrs. Boosey & Sons, of Holles Street (who are relinquishing this portion of their business), comprising the Works of most Foreign Composers of celebrity in the various classes of Orchestral Music, Overtures, Symphonies, full Scores; Solos and Concerted Music for various instruments, wind and stringed; Pianoforte and Organ Music; Vocal Music, sacred and secular, in scores and parts; German, French, and Italian Songs; Operas and Oratorios; Works on the History and Theory of Music; Instruction Books, &c.

Early in the Season.—An important assemblage of Violins, Tenors, and Violoncellos, the property of a well-known collector, comprising some very celebrated and well-known instruments by Stradiuarius, Guarnerius, Amati, Carlo Bergonzi Maggini, Ruggerius, Gagliano, Sancto Seraphin, Vuillaume, and other eminent makers. Among them are Paganini's celebrated Guarneriss, known as the Gian; Amatis of the grand modèle, &c., with bows and cases.

 SALES of Music and Instruments are held generally once a Month during the Season (from November to August), for which occasions, Consignments, large or small, can be received. Books, and other literary property, or Works of Art, inserted in appropriate sales, thus affording to the owner of a few lots the same advantages as are offered to the possessor of a large collection.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.

Their Catalogues, which contain a great variety of Music calculated for teaching purposes, may be had, post-free, on application.

London: 18 Hanover Square.

MR. HOWARD GLOVER'S CONCERT.—Mr. Howard Glover's "annual monster concert" took place as usual at St. James's Hall. The most distinguished vocal and instrumental artists in London (whose names even we have not room to cite) appeared, and the hall was completely filled. Even the inclement weather, of which most people were beginning to tire, and which threatened, if it continued long, to incapacitate singers for all exercise of their talents, did not daunt the courage of those eager lovers of music whom the many attractions of the long programme had drawn from their warm firesides. The selection was the bill of fare of a perfect Lord Mayor's feast of music. There were between forty and fifty pieces, many of them instrumental performances of considerable length. And we must add, that the programme, though it presented little novelty, and consisted chiefly of things well known to the musical public, was marked throughout by taste and judgment, and displayed to the best advantage the gifts and qualities of the several performers. The hall was crowded, and the principal performances were received with warm demonstrations of approbation and pleasure. At the head of the programme appeared the names of Mr. Sims Reeves—a host in himself—and Miss Arabella Goddard. The great tenor sang with even more than his usual expression in a new ballad, "Fresh as a rose," composed expressly for this occason by Mr. Balfe, and was enthusiastically encored. In "Adelaida" he had the advantage of being accompanied by Miss Goddard; and the fair pianist delighted the audience with her exquisite performance of Benedict's fantasia on "Where the bee sucks," and also of Thalberg's "Last rose of summer" (in obedience to the unanimous encore). The London Glee and Madrigal Union, consisting of Mr. Baxter, Mr. Cummings, Mr. Land and Mr. Lawler, sang two of their most effective part-songs; and Prince Galitzin conducted two sacred choral pieces, the first a composition by Bortnniansky, the second by Makaroff, a Russian composer, as yet, we believe, unknown and unheard of in this country. The concert lasted nearly four hours, but yet, in spite of its great length, its chief fault was a sin of omission—not one composition by Mr. Howard Glover himself was performed. At his next we hope to hear Comala, Tam o' Shanter, or some other of the thoughtful, poetical, and musician-like productions which have proceeded from his facile pen. His only excuse for disappointing his patrons and the public generally on the present occasion (at least the only one we can think of) was probably the entire occupation of his leisure by the opera of Ruy Blas, to the production of which at the Royal English Opera our musical amateurs are anxiously looking forward

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"Schubert's Impromptu in B flat"—for the pianoforte, edited by Charles Halle (Chappell and Co.).

The more we know of Schubert's pianoforte music the more we wish to know. The "Impromptu in B flat" stands as Op. 142, and is one of the most recent of the posthumous publications. It consists of an air ingeniously varied. How refreshingly simple and unaffected is the theme may be judged from the first section, which is all we can make room for:—

Mr. Hallé's editing amounts to something more than merely inspecting the proof-sheets, the fingering inserted to every passage that stands in need of it being as useful as it is judicious.

"Now Summer has departed"—canzonet—words by John Oxenford, music by Dussek (Chappell and Co.).

Another valuable addition to the "Monday Popular Concert Library" (vocal department), and another revival which will be welcomed by every lover of good music. "Now Summer has departed" has been taken in hand by Mr. Sims Reeves, just as "Name the glad day" was taken in hand by Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington. So much the better for its progress (or rather re-progress) on the road towards popularity. Four of Dussek's canzonets, including the charming duettino, "Thy pardon, dearest treasure," are now included in the "Monday Popular Concert Library." The sooner the remaining two are added the better.

"L'Etoile du Soir"—romance from Richard Wagner's Tannhäuser—transcribed by F. Liszt (Duncan Davison and Co.).

M. Liszt's idea of "transcription" is peculiar to himself, and the present example of its application would in all probability surprise the composer of Tannhäuser himself; nevertheless it accommodates itself to a certain taste of the day, which looks upon a pianoforte piece as nothing if not gymnastic. Thus the "melody," if such it may be called, from that essentially unmelodious opera, is put through the accepted ordeal, and the amateur "virtuoso" will have much ado to get hold of it glibly. It is, however, difficult even for M. Liszt to make something out of nothing, and that such has been his task in this instance may be divined from a mere glance at the theme he has had (gymnastically) to treat:—

What a difference between such tune and that of Schubert's Impromptu!

"March from Tannhäuser," arranged for the pianoforte—by Franz Liszt (Ashdown and Parry).

We have more than once alluded to this march as one of the most intelligible pieces in Tannhäuser, and further as a composition that, had it proceeded from any other pen than that of Wagner, would scarcely have excited a moment's attention. To speak plainly, the march is well and spirited enough, but does not contain an original bar. M. Liszt has led it through a series of gymnastics far more elaborate and troublesome than those to which he has submitted the romance just mentioned. The process, however, if successfully accomplished, can hardly fail to create a sort of pleasing wonder almost akin to genuine enjoyment.

"Laxenburg"—impromptu in B flat, for the pianoforte, performed by M. Charles Halle—composed by Franz Schubert (Ashdown and Parry).

Why "Laxenburg"? This is another (and a very good) edition of the same impromptu noticed elsewhere, as edited by M. Charles Hallé. For what reason it should, at one house, be called "Laxenburg," and at another house merely "Impromptu in B flat," perhaps Messrs. Ashdown and Parry—or rather Messrs. Chappell—or rather (Schubert being dead) M. Charles Hallé, will politely explain. "Laxenburg! What is "Laxenburg"?—a town?—a hero?—a cheese?—or an impromptu? Why "Laxenburg"? Qu'est-ce?

"Impromptu in E flat," for the pianoforte, Op. 90, No. 2, by Franz Schubert (Ashdown and Parry).

A la bonheur! Here we have no "Laxenburg," but a very excellent edition of a very excellent impromptu, which, if our judgment may be accepted, in pure musical interest, equals two such impromptus as the "Impromptu in B flat"—"Laxenburg," or no "Laxenburg." This impromptu in E flat is worth hearing at the Monday Popular Concerts, and should ere this have elicited the attention of Mr. Arthur Chappell, who is not in the habit of letting really fine things escape him.

"The O. D. C. Polka"—composed (for the members of the Oxford Dramatic Club) by J. Purkess (Charles Jefferys),—is pretty, spirited, and rhythmical.

"This World is a Garden," comic song; "In a leafy Garden," ballad; composed by George Loder (Duncan Davison, and Co.).

"This World is a Garden" is the well-known and popular song, introduced with such invariable success by Mr. John Rouse, in Stirling Coyne's lively operetta, The Pets of the Parterre," in which Miss Lydia Thomson was so much and justly admired. As all our readers must have heard, and hearing, applauded it, it is enough to say that we entirely coincide with their unanimously favourable verdict. "In a leafy Garden," composed for that careful and promising tenor, Mr. Richard Seymour, is in a different style, and shows that the composer, Mr. George Loder (the talented conductor of the Lyceum orchestra) can give musical expression to sentiment, no less than to humour. It is graceful, well written, and last, not least, essentially vocal.

"May," duettino for equal voices, composed by Henry Smart (Duncan Davison, and Co.).

Mr. Henry Smart, in this melodious and truly exquisite little duet, has, if possible, even surpassed in elegance and feeling, in tuneful phrase, and eminently vocal finish, the pieces so warmly eulogised in our last impression. Had we space, we should like to quote in extenso the melodies allotted to each voice; but as we are circumscribed, our readers must be satisfied with an inkling of the first.

Digitized by Google

Allegretto.
I hail thee May, 'Midst smiles so gay, - - And song and sun - ny hours; 'Tis sweet to stray At close of day - To cull thy dainty dainty flowers.

What could be more fresh, and at the same time more unpretending?

"Louise," nocturne, pour piano, composée par BRINLEY RICHARDS (Cocks and Co.).

Another—another "Ethel," we were almost going to say, but that the uncommon grace of that most graceful of romances starts up to remind us that it is not to be paralleled easily. If not another "Ethel," however, another "Agnes,"—the name which we suggested should have been assigned to Mr. Richards' most recently engraved nocturne ("Florence," examined two numbers since). Mr. Richards appears to have a special gift for this class of composition, and his "Louise" is a fit companion to the rest. Let him persevere and he will have worthily apostrophised in music all the most interesting and womanly heroines of modern English fiction; having done which he may bestow a glance on Sophy, Amelia, Fanny, and other bright creations of our Fielding. "La Czarina" mazurka de salon, par BRINLEY RICHARDS, (same publishers).—A work of a very different cast, but hardly less engaging in its way, the attraction of which is twofold, inasmuch as, if performed with correctness and precision it may serve not merely as an effective and moderately difficult show-piece, but as a spirited and insinuating accompaniment to the characteristic Polish dance which gives it a name. But—(but!) why does our South-western English BRINLEY print his title-pages in the Gallic tongue? "Cherry Ripe," arranged for the pianoforte, by BRINLEY RICHARDS, (same publishers). Bravo! (that's Italian by the way). "Cherry Ripe" sounds far better than would "Cerise mure," as may be judged:—

"Cerise mure! Cerise mure!
Mure! Mure! Je cri-e," &c.

Horn's delicious tune could not have been more unaffectedly and reverentially "transcribed." One objection we have to make:—

Why repeat the first phrase an octave higher? When the E is reached at bar 7, the melody is completely spoiled by the leap of an octave down again, as, on weighing this slight objection, Mr. Brinley Richards will be the very first to admit. All the rest is irreproachable.

"Thy Voice is near," song—words by Mrs. AYLMER, music by W. T. WRIGHTON (Cocks and Co.).

The "voice" of conscience will perhaps whisper to Mr. Wrighton to be more tender and complacent with the harmony of the six-four—a most useful and unoffending harmony—a very lamb of a chord.

"Away! vain dreams of pleasure," ballad—by the composer of "The Shells of Ocean" (Cocks and Co.).

"Away!" indeed. Vainer "dreams" of "pleasure" could scarcely be dreamed, unless under the influence of nightmare.

"'Gentle maids, in time beware'—the Gipsy-song, adapted to Mercadante's admired cavatina, 'De qu'ai soavi palpite,' opera, Oragi e Curiagi, sung by Signora Freggolini, by R. ANDREWS" (J. H. Jewell).

We have transcribed the title-page in extenso—not à la Liszt, but literatim et notatim. Did Mercadante, composer of Oragi e Curiagi, and of the cavatina sung by Freggolini, ever, at any period of his career, write down such a progression as this?—

"Gentle" adaptors, "in time beware."

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY.

PIANOFORTE.

AGUILAR (EMANUEL) "The birds at sunset."
GANZ (WILHELM) "Santa Lucia."
SCHLOESSER (ADOLPH) "Don Juan" (duet).

ROBERT COCKS AND CO.

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE.

THURNAM (EDWARD) "Romance."

VOCAL.

WEINER (CARL) "Ave Maria" (quartet).

LEADER AND COCK.

PIANOFORTE.

THREE SKETCHES, Books 1 and 2.

Digitized by Google

; OLLIVIER.

PIANOFORTE.

SHEPPARD (S. A.) "The summer shower" and "The joy of the moon."
Ditto. "The flight of the fairies" and "The fairies return."

VOCAL.

SHEPPARD (S. A.) "The voice of the grass" (duet).
Ditto. "How sweet is the music of faith."
Ditto. "David's Consolation."
Ditto. "Now thou art gone."
S. A. H. "A happy year."
Ditto. "Remembrance."
Ditto. "An aspiration."

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent).

January 30.

EVERY one here who has anything to say to music, is eagerly loooking forward to the production of Tannhäuser, which is to be the next novelty at the Grand Opera, and is being rehearsed with activity. Mad. Tedesco having met with a slight accident lately, it was said that we should not hear Wagner's much-talked of opera for some time to come, but this I believe is not true. The production of the opera will not be retarded for any such cause, and may be surely looked for about the third or fourth week in February.

Verdi's new opera, Un ballo in Maschera, grows upon the public taste, and is received with warmer applause than on the first night. The three first acts are, however, evidently better liked than the rest of the work.

Mlle. St. Urbain, who appeared in 1857 as Gilda in Rigoletto, and was then particularly remarkable for singing out of tune, rather than for any distinguished aptitude for her profession, has just made an essay on the stage of the Opéra Comique in the Fille du Regiment. With such reminiscences as are evoked by this opera, the attempt was a bold one, but nevertheless the young artist acquitted herself better than was perhaps to be expected. In the first place, the defects of intonation observable during her Italian campaign have disappeared. Mlle. St. Urbain's voice is a soprano of pure and tolerably vibratory quality, and she sings like a musician. A great point in her favour also is, that she is still very young. From her nervousness, it was impossible to judge how far she is suited as an actress to the Opéra Comique. She sang many parts of the opera indifferently well, but was not quite up to the famous Salut à la France, which Cabel used to throw off with such jaunting ease and superiority.

There has been an abominably stupid little one-act produced at the Lyrique, under the title of Astaroti. It is all about a drunkard who has a bad dream, in which the foul fiend appears to him, and he is so frightened that he gets up, not only sober, but a model of temperance and teetotalism. The composer who has had to find fitting strains for this would not be much advantaged by the mention of his name.

We have had, and are having, some capital chamber music, notwithstanding the common opinion current in London that we are behindhand here in this particular. The Salle Pleyel, from its more social and comfortable dimensions, is the chosen arena for this branch of the art, rich in so many chefs-d'œuvre, and boasts of no less than three quartet societies — those headed respectively by MM. Alard, Maurin, and Armingaud. Around these distinguished leaders rallies periodically a select public, to enjoy, apart from the din and glare of the theatre and the monster concert-room, the refined pleasure afforded by the purest expression of musical art. The first concert of MM. Maurin, Chevillard, and Viguier, who devote themselves exclusively to Beethoven, and whose society was founded especially for the performances of his latest works, took place on the 17th inst. The grand trio in B flat (Op. 97), was remarkably well executed by MM. Maurin and Chevillard, with young Theodore Ritter, the pianist, whose share in the performance, however, was to a certain extent tainted by what is here called "virtuosity." The sense attached to this expression will be understood by the following excellent remarks elicited from a critic by the very performance in point:—"It is essential, in the execution of this fine work, that each should steadfastly remain within the limits of his part; it is a triumvirate in which the province of each is well defined, and he must not step out of it on any pretext; it is in concerted music that the principle of equality should especially prevail, and M. Ritter was possessed with certain ambitious tendencies which he will do wisely to stifle." The programme terminated with the 16th quartet, in C sharp minor, which was most brilliantly played. On the following Sunday, the society, presided over by the celebrated violinist, M. Alard, and the no less celebrated M. Franchomme, the violoncellist, occupied the Pleyel room. Theirs is a sort of miniature Société des Concerts, and is restricted to a selection from the works of Hadyn, Mozart, and Beethoven. On Wednesday, the 23rd, on the same platform, appeared MM. Armingaud, Jacquard, Lalo, and Mas, constituting a society which has been in existence for the last six years, and was first instituted to spread a knowledge of the instrumental works of Mendelssohn, and it has so effectually accomplished its appointed task, that the name of the great composer figures in every concert programme, and Mendelssohn now holds in France the pre-eminent rank which is allotted to him in every musical country in Europe. These societies continue to enjoy the highest favour, a result which is due as much to the zeal with which they have fulfilled their original object, as to the constant desire they evince to break up hitherto untouched ground, by the production of unknown works of Bach, Schumann, and others.

The Société des Jeunes Artistes gave its first concert last week. This musical society holds the same position towards the Conservatoire concerts as your new Philharmonic Society does, or was intended to hold, towards the old. It is to give opportunities for the performance of works by modern and rising composers, which are only very sparingly, and with great jealousy, afforded by its elder sister. Among the pieces of this special class given, was the overture to Ossian, by the Danish composer, M. Gade, whose early promise has remained so singularly unfulfilled. This work was produced at the Philharmonic Concerts in London. Its coldness and deficiency of inspiration was equally observed then, as it was on the present occasion. The chorus of bacchantes, from M. Gounod's opera, Philémon et Baucis, which is full of warm colouring, very lively, and tolerably graceful, on the other hand obtained the honour of being re-demanded.

The sole remarkable fact in theatrical affairs, is the appearance at the Odéon, for the first time, of a new comedy in five acts, by M. Ernest Capendu, entitled Les Frelons. I confess a secret fear of the five-act comedies now produced at the Odéon, since the quarrels of MM. Emile Augier and Ponsard with the Théâtre Français have been made up. I thought, therefore, before venturing, I would wait to see what the critics had to say of it, particularly the candid and fearless Aristarchus I quoted in my last letter. I am sure, after his account of it, I don't meant to trouble my head about it any more; and after I have given you, at second hand, M. Alexis Rodet's judgment of this production, I am quite sure you will think me right. This is what he says:—"First of all, there is an eloquent outburst against the realism of the modern school of drama; the constant pictures of all the grovelling miseries of life; the cankering sorrows under the bright surface of society. The 'young men, hard up,' who go without a dinner to be able to wear white kid gloves at an evening party; the banker, just on the eve of failure, and who tears his hair through four acts, looking in vain for a kind friend momentarily absent; the scoundrel who gets rich by cheating speculations, and who is kicked and spurned at by other scoundrels who have been less successful in their villanies, &c. &c." After this enumeration, our critic exclaims, "In mercy let us have a little imagination—a little fancy—a little light-hearted gaiety—in mercy!" Then he predicts that a reaction must surely come, and he believes it will be so fierce and uncompromising, that at the words "figure," "money," "credit," "trade," "banking," "stock exchange," a shower of hisses will descend, and for ever banish them from the stage. Now he addresses himself to M. Capendu, who has been waiting, shivering like a culprit school-boy, well knowing that the merciful rule, "no preachee and floggee, too," will not be observed, and that the vehemence of the sermon will not preclude the severity of the castigation. Thus does he get it:—"M. Capendu has fallen into the prevalent fault of the day (a pity, after Les faux Bonhommes). He, too, has sought to depict an honest banker threatened with failure, and closing his ears to the dishonourable proposals of a scoundrel who wants to save him. This honest banker is, by the by, quite a character in his way; he curses the friends who forsake him, and sends about his business his adopted son, who offers him three hundred thousand francs. I confess I am unable to appreciate this nice shade of delicacy. As to the dénouement, I shall not say what it is—you would not believe me." After this, I think I was better at home than at the Odéon, listening to the Frelons of M. Capendu. Hornets! indeed, the author has fallen into a nest of the worst of all ink-hornets.

Digitized by Google

THE MUSIC OF THE FUTURE.

FIRST LETTER.

"The Music of the Future; a Letter to a French Friend, as a Preface to a prose Translation (into French!) of his operatic Poems," is the title of a pamphlet, which has recently appeared, by Richard Wagner. The object of the pamphlet is, as the author himself declares, to enlighten the Parisian art-critics with regard to his point of view as a composer, and "to dissipate a large amount of error and prejudice," in order, at the approaching representation of Tannhäuser, to divert the judgment of the public from "an apparently suspicious theory," wholly and solely to the work itself. As the pamphlet, which is tolerably short, contains the pith of Wagner's views, and as it is not very probable that the majority of the public has been enabled to become acquainted with them from his former long-winded books, allow me to direct, on the one hand, the attention of your readers to these views, and, on the other, to subjoin a few observations to as concise an analysis as possible of them.

Wagner's Letter, to all intents and purposes, is divided into two parts, although these are somewhat jumbled up together in a not inartistic manner. In the first place, it contains the author's views on the development of music, as well as his opinion of some of the greatest masters and the principal schools of national art, with, further, an explanation of his own development and present point of view. As it is not my intention to produce a new edition of the pamphlet, with marginal notes, I will take the liberty of compressing as much as possible Wagner's opinions concerning the historical portion of our art, and of then passing on to his individual point of view, although it is in the nature of things that the opinions which guide an artist in his productions are most intimately connected with those which he has adopted concerning the development of his art and the most striking specimens of it.

"Among the Greeks we know music only as the companion of dancing; the motion of the latter gave music, as well as the poem sung by the singer to a dance-tune, the laws of rhythm, which laws determined so decisively the verse and the melody, that Greek music (under which term poetry was nearly always implied) can be regarded only as dancing expressing itself in tones and words."

I willingly leave persons more learned than myself to come to an understanding with Wagner concerning these assertions. As we are told, the choruses in Greek tragedies, as well as, moreover, most of the magnificent songs of the Hellenic poets, were sung in a certain manner, and even sung with instrumental accompaniment, though this singing may have been of only a declamatory description!—if the immortal poems of the Greeks were in reality only dances expressed in tune and words, the fact presupposes a kind of dance more wonderful than all the great things antiquity has bequeathed us.

But let us return to Wagner's development. These Greek dance-tunes, he proceeds to say, were employed by Christian congregations in Divine service, after they had been stript, on account of the solemnity of the ceremony, of their rhythmical ornamentation, and thus endowed with the character of our present choral. That such transformations were effected, at the period of the Reformation, with the popular national songs, is an undoubted fact; but it is, perhaps, less convincingly proved that the first Christians pursued the same course with the songs employed at heathen festivals. Be this, however, as it may, Wagner is guilty of a piece of injustice to the Greeks, in all other cases so highly honoured by him, when he dwells on the "uncommonly small expression in antique melody, after it had been deprived of the ornamentation of rhythm;" for the rhythm is not the ornamentation of a melody, but a considerable part of its individuality. In the most concise manner possible (against which no objection can be made) Wagner comes to the employment of harmony and polyphony in the music of the Christian Church, and speaks in terms of enthusiastic laudation of the "highly-consecrated" (hochgeweihten) masters of the old Italian school. The views to which he now gives utterance concerning the further development of Italian music are, however, so incomprehensible, that we must quote them textually, in order not to cause those versed in such matters to suppose we have misunderstood our author:—

"The decadence of this art in Italy, simultaneously with the development of operatic melody on the part of the Italians, I cannot designate otherwise than as a relapse into paganism. When, with the decay of the Church, the worldly desire for the employment of music gained the upper hand among the Italians, they gratified their wish most easily by restoring to melody its original rhythmical quality, and using it for singing just as it had formerly been used for dancing. I will not here stop to notice especially the striking instances of incongruity between modern verse—developed in accordance with Christian melody—and this dance-melody imposed on it; I would merely direct your attention to the fact that this melody has nearly always been kept quite indifferent to this verse, and that, lastly, its variation-like movement has been solely dictated by the vocal virtuoso. But what, more than aught else, induces us to designate the development of this melody as a relapse, and not as a step in advance, is that most indisputably it could not turn to account the extraordinarily important invention of Christian music: harmony, and polyphony, which embodied it. On an harmonic foundation of such scantiness, that it can conveniently dispense with all accompaniment, Italian operatic melody, even as regards the disposition and connection of its parts, has been contented with so poor a periodical structure, that the educated musician of our own time contemplates with sorrowful astonishment this meagre and almost childish form of art, whose narrow limits condemn even the most genial composer, when he has aught to do with it, to a complete formal standstill."

In the face of this statement we read in the history of the music of the last two or three hundred years, as follows:—In the beginning of the 17th century, opera sprang up in Florence from a wish to resuscitate Greek tragedy. It was soon felt that polyphonic song, which alone prevailed at that period, as a form of art, and employed pretty well the same style for the Church and for poetry (in the madrigal), could not be retained, since the object in view was to exhibit, musically, events and persons, and allow them to express themselves. Hence the composer cultivated monophonic song, accompanied by instruments, both in the freest declamatory form (the recitative), and in the fixed, melodically-marked form of the aria and concerted pieces. It was thus that music began to enter on the task which one feels inclined to claim for it, nowadays, almost exclusively, namely: to be the interpreter of human passion—out of the style of the old church music, obeying the most restrictive laws of harmony and rhythm, however great results it may have effected in its way, nothing could have been produced bearing the remotest resemblance to modern music. Though from the important part assigned to the solo singer, vocal virtuosity has attained to the most objectionable abuse of its strength, and even though Italian serious opera may have long been ossified, the comic opera of the Italians (the opera buffa), on the other hand, laid the foundation for the entire rich development of modern music. The greatest composers, Handel, Gluck, Haydn, and Mozart, have to thank the Italian school principally for the expansion of their powers. Not only would there have been no Don Juan without this "relapse into paganism," but we should have no sonatas by Bach, no symphony by Beethoven, and no Tannhäuser by Wagner. That which we nowadays term melody, and which constitutes the soul of music, could not, by any means, have been obtained without the "original rythmical quality;" and if we owe this also to heathendom (a fact, however, anything but proved), we have reason to be more grateful to it than we imagined, even after all the treasures it has lavished upon us. As matters stand, we cannot, without being altogether unjust, deny the extraordinary, and, in the main, happy influence which the Italians have exerted upon the development of music. Even the Oratorio, which, at a later period, was raised by a certain Handel (whom Wagner passes over without naming) to importance in the history of civilisation, took its rise among the Italians; nay, even in the domain of instrumental music, the Italians have not only given great impulses to others, but have produced considerable works themselves.

Digitized by Google

When Wagner, with daring strides, comes to speak of Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, the three pillars of instrumental music, he again puts forward, with exaggerated one-sidedness, the influence of "dance-melody" upon the wonderful productions of this kind of composition. It is not to be denied that many dance-poems and rhythms are at the bottom of these productions (for the dance, to which belongs the march, is that pure music which is most intimately connected with our most primitive life-utterances); it was not, however, only the other forms of art, such as the fugue, &c., also mentioned by Wagner, but likewise the developed forms of vocal music, the employment of the orchestra in the lyric drama, and, finally, the free invention of the more considerable instrumental performers, which together constituted the base on which to raise a branch of art which is able, nowadays, to bring forth such extraordinary effects.

These effects are appreciated by Wagner according to all their mysterious strength, and he expresses the opinion that the "conventional development of languages," which scarcely any longer furnish "purely human feeling" with the organ necessary for its expression, are, perhaps, the reason that this feeling in Beethoven's instrumental music opened itself, as it were, a new road by which it might uninterruptedly flow forth. We would pass over the question of languages—a very difficult one at the present day—did it not lead Wagner to a conclusion which cannot well be given otherwise than in his own words:—

"In the face of this irrefutable recognition," he exclaims, "there can henceforth be only two modes of development open to poetry: either an entire passing-over into the domain of the Abstract, a pure combination of ideas and a representation of the world by an explanation of the logical laws of the process of thinking—and this poetry does as philosophy—or intimate blending with music, but with that music whose endless power has been laid open to us by the Beethovenian symphony."

This is pretty nearly tantamount to a death sentence on poetry, for what poetry (?) does as philosophy is no longer poetry (or is not philosophy)—while if it is confined to the blending with music, it is altogether deprived of independence, and can no longer speak as a mental art, pure and free, to our mind. This assertion of Wagner's proceeds, however, so directly from the views which most peculiarly individualise him, that the present is the proper time to pass on to those passages of his Letter which he has dedicated to the inward, and, although with very modest brevity, to the outward course of his development.

I am acquainted with no great composer who did not feel, in his tenderest age, attracted, almost with the force of instinct, to music, and who did not, in his earliest youth, in one way or another, by singing, playing, or composing, manifest the musical capabilities with which he was gifted. It is a very important fact, if we would understand Wagner's individuality, that matters took a completely different course with him. Although he felt a certain taste for music, and was greatly fascinated by certain productions, especially by those of Weber, it was not till later, and then, too, through poetry, especially dramatic poetry, that he came to devote himself more carefully to the study of music. He had written a tragedy, for which he wished to compose music to be played between the acts, &c., and so he took lessons in harmony and thorough-bass. The taste for composing or playing music for its own sake alone had been denied his youth. He had never, with uncritical ingenuousness buried himself in the treasures of our instrumental compositions; purely musical thought, although, at first, seldom anything else than the reproduction of what has been learnt, played, or heard, never became a habit with him. From the very commencement, he beheld in music the companion, or rather, perhaps, the higher interpreter of poetry, and, moreover, of dramatic poetry, and as soon as he had learnt sufficient to achieve "technical independence," he set about composing the music for the librettos he had written.

When he had arrived thus far, he found much to annoy him, in opera generally, as well as in the condition of the German operatic stage. It is a mournful truth, but we Germans possess no German opera, although we have produced the greatest operatic composers. Whether it results from the still prevailing taste for what is foreign, or from the management, destitute of all national feeling, of our lyrical stage, such is the fact. A Mozart, a Beethoven, and a Weber produced half-a-dozen masterpieces; but an opera, built on a foundation of genuine patriotic thought and feeling, and developing itself full of life, such an opera as not Italy alone, but France also, possesses (in her Opéra Comique), entirely fails us. Every author who writes an opera-book, and every composer who sets it to music, begins, if he does not borrow French or Italian forms, with the whole structure of the work, so to speak, from the very commencement. That, on this plan, a creation of great originality now and then is produced, is quite as undeniable as that such isolated creations do not suffice to form a decided taste, or, indeed, any taste at all, and that, in the confused medley offered them, the great mass of the public must be deprived of any point of support, and any opinion.

A man of passionately artistic nature, like Wagner, must have been affected by this state of things in a doubly disagreeable manner. As musical director at various theatres, he was placed in the very midst of all these miserable doings, and compelled to busy himself, down to the minutest details, with the flattest and most vapid trash. What he says on this head will, as far as Germany is concerned, certainly meet with the most general assent. So many repulsive impressions did not, however, render him blind to isolated instances of what was beautiful; many of the works of Spontini and Weber, and, especially, the performances of Mad. Schröder-Devrient, filled him with enthusiasm, and prevented him from losing sight of his ideal of a dramatico-musical work of art. Greek tragedy, in its religiously poetical magnificence, was present to his mind; but it is in vain that he seeks, at the present day, for an Athenian public. He has stated his views concerning the connection between politico-social and artistic matters, in a small work, entitled Art and Revolution. We cannot well blame him for contenting himself, in the midst of imperial Paris, with this much, and not saying any more on the subject to his French friend.

To the attention paid by him to the Greek theatre, Wagner connects the ideas which led him to compose that one of his works which—by the title at least—is most generally known, namely, Das Kunstwerk der Zukunft. He sees the decadence of the Greek theatre principally in the endeavour of the various arts to be regarded as so many separate ones, instead of remaining united, and thus producing the greatest possible effect upon the stage. But was this union, to the extent Wagner attributes to it, ever found in Greek tragedy? Were the propylæa a theatre? Did Phidias work for Sophocles? Was not the magnificence of the Greek theatre merely one of the blossoms of the wonderful civilisation of the Greeks? And did it not perish, because an eternal law ordains that even what is most beautiful springs into life but to die?

No matter! At all events, Wagner is indisputably right when he attributes to the connection of certain arts a most particular collective result; not only the past but the present is continually furnishing us with proofs that, from the earliest times, every one was of this opinion. We decorate profane and religious edifices with the works of painting and sculpture; we perform music in churches; and the most intimate connection of poetry with music has been, since the very commencement of civilisation, felt to be requisite by man. Opera, too, although, according to Wagner's statement, bearing the same relation to his ideal, "as an ape to a human being"—opera, since its birth, has always kept in view this union of the arts in the connection of dramatic poetry with dancing, music, painting, and architecture. Wherein, therefore, lies "the fundamental faultiness of operatic composition," in which Wagner does not find even "prepared" the ideal of such a dramatic work of art as the greatest minds have attempted to realise? It lies, in his opinion, in the insignificance of the drama (libretto) offered by the poet to the musician. The poet, he tells us, found certain fixed musical forms, with which he thought he must not interfere, ready to his hand, and their restrictive power restrained him from anything in the shape of a really important creation, while not permitting, as a rule, "really great poets" to have any connection with opera. "The ideal perfection of opera is dependent on a total change of the character of the poet's participation in the work of art." The poet himself, we are furthermore informed, must be finally conducted, by his endeavour to work more and more purely and immediately on the feelings, to the limits of his "branch of art," "and, therefore, that work must be considered by us as the poet's most successful one, which, in its last degree of completion, becomes wholly music." "The ideal subject," we are informed, "is to be found in the myth, and only the extraordinarily rich development, unknown to former centuries, to which music has attained in our day," can render possible the execution of the work of art. In this course of thought, which, however, is only implied, lie the strength and the weakness of Wagner's views.

Digitized by Google

FERDINAND HILLER.

(To be continued.)

MLLE. POCCHINI.—We are delighted to inform our readers that the rumour of the death of this accomplished danseuse is unfounded. We shall give particulars of the cause which led to the report in our next.

MR. HENRY LINCOLN.—Musical amateurs as well as professors will be delighted to hear that this accomplished musician is about to resume those lectures on musical subjects which some years ago were so deservedly and generally popular. No one before the musical world is more thoroughly fitted in every respect for the satisfactory performance of such a task than Mr. Lincoln, who, being a musician as well as a scholar, can illustrate precept by example.

CHURCH OF ST. GEORGE THE MARTYR, QUEEN'S SQUARE.—On Sunday last Mr. Wilmot, who has obtained the situation of organist to the above church, entered upon his duties. He is totally blind, and was chosen from eighteen candidates by Mr. Turle, of Westminster Abbey, as the most efficient performer.

Birth.

On Friday, the 25th ultimo, at 2 Kildare Terrace, Westbourne Park, the wife of Desmond Ryan, Esq., of a son.

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

RE-ENGAGEMENT OF M. VIEUXTEMPS,

Who will make his Fourth Appearance at

THE TENTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON

WHICH WILL TAKE PLACE

ON MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 4, 1861,

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Quartet, in D minor, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (repeated by unanimous desire), M. VIEUXTEMPS, Herr RIES, M. SCHARFUS, and Signor PIATTI—Schubert; song, "In questa tomba 'scura," Miss LASCELLES"—Beethoven; song, "Now summer has departed," Mme. LOUISA VINNING—Dussek; Suite de Pièces, in F major, Fugue, with pianoforte solos (first time at the Monday Popular Concerts), Miss ARABELLA GODDARD—Handel.

PART II.—Sonata for violin, "Il trillo del Diavolo," M. VIEUXTEMPS—Tartini; song, "Come back to me," Miss LASCELLES—Henry Smart; song, "The Mermaid's Song," Mme. LOUISA VINNING—Haydn; trio, in C minor, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, Miss ARABELLA GODDARD, M. VIEUXTEMPS, and Signor PIATTI—Mendelssohn.

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT. To commence at Eight o'Clock precisely.

Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s.

NOTICE.—It is respectfully requested that such persons as may not be anxious to remain till the end of the performance will leave either before the commencement of the last instrumental piece, or between any two of the movements, so that those who are desirous of hearing the whole may do so without interruption.

Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28 Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co., Hammond, Addison and Co., Schott and Co., Ewer and Co., Simpson, and Oetzmann and Co., Regent Street; Bradberry's, London Crystal Palace, Oxford Street; Duff and Co., 65 Oxford Street; Prowse, Hanway Street; J. H. Jewell, 104 Great Russell Street; Chidley, 195 High Holborn; Purday, 50 St. Paul's Church Yard; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48 Cheapside; Turner, 19 Cornhill; Cook and Co., 6 Finsbury Place, South; Humfress, 4 Old Church Street, Paddington Green; Fabian, Circus Road, St. John's Wood; Ransford and Son, 2 Princes Street, Cavendish Square; Ivory, 275 Euston Road; Mitchell, Leader and Co., Ollivier, Campbell, Hopwood and Crewe, and Willis, Bond Street;

And CHAPPELL and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

NOTICES.

TO ADVERTISERS.—Advertisers are informed, that for the future the Advertising Agency of the THE MUSICAL WORLD is established at the Magazine of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyle Street (First Floor). Advertisements can be received as late as Three o'Clock P.M., on Fridays—but not later. Payment on delivery.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2s. 6d.
Every additional line (10 words) ... ... 6d.

TO PUBLISHERS AND COMPOSERS.—All Music for Review in THE MUSICAL WORLD must henceforward be forwarded to the Editor, care of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street. A List of every Piece sent for Review will appear on the Saturday following in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

TO CONCERT GIVERS.—No Benefit-Concert, or Musical Performance, except of general interest, unless previously Advertised, can be reported in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1861.

ANOTHER Russian concert, and another great success! Whether it be the "touch of pain," which, to quote an eloquent contemporary,* is in every Russian melody; or whether it be the something new and fresh which strikes the ear and heart of every listener who is neither Russian, nor has lived in Russia, we cannot presume to decide; but certain it is that the concerts held by Prince George Galitzin in St. James's Hall, are among the most welcome and charming entertainments that, for many years, have been heard in London. The illustrious amateur, whose parent, honoured, as he deserved to be honoured, the most illustrious musician of his epoch, may fairly apply to himself the superb dictum of Cæsar, "Veni, vidi, vici;" for he has improvised the conquest of Great Britain quite as easily as the Roman autocrat of old, and with far more pleasant weapons. The Prince's cohorts were the sons and daughters of Euterpe, who besieged us with their voices and their instruments, and ravishing our senses, subdued us without a struggle to their harmonious despotism.

The names of Bortnianski, Lamakin, and others—but, before all, that of Glinka, "The Russian Mozart," who died at Berlin, as recently as 1857—will, if Prince Galitzin continues to sojourn and give concerts in London, soon become as much "household words" among us, as those of the gifted musical composers of other countries, with whose works we have long been familiar. Tant mieux. We have evidently been unjust to the Russians, not only as musical appreciators, but as musical producers. The more we know of their composers, the more we desire to know; for we feel convinced by what has already been introduced to us, that they are as genial as they are individual, and as able as they are aspiring. Prince Galitzin, in the very interesting comments that accompany his programme, cites no less than fifteen native composers for the church—besides Glinka, who was chiefly a dramatic or secular writer, and Bortnianski, almost exclusively sacred—as more or less worthy to be known.† With each and every of these, we

* "In listening to all this Russian music, we were much struck with the strain of sadness which pervades it. Almost every melody is in a minor key; and even the liveliest dance-tune has some touch of pain, which shows that there is grief in the Russian heart even in its gayest moments. We were reminded of Moore's remark on the national melody of Ireland."—Daily News, Jan. 31st.

† Lamakin, Dargomijsky, Teroff, Verstovsky, Villoua, Liadoff, Bachmetieff, Ignatieff, Rajenoff, Bogretzoff, Vinogradoff, Essaouloff, Davidoff, Makaroff, Dechtereff, and Beresovsky.

Digitized by Google

would willingly make acquaintance. Mr. Sutherland Edwards, in his new and valuable book, entitled The Russians at Home (Chapter X.—"Operatic and other Music"), reminds us that the music of the Russian church was in esteem long since, attracting the attention during their residence in St. Petersburg and Moscow, of some of the most renowned composers of the last and the early part of the present century. With reference to Bortnianski the Prince himself, who cites the testimony of Mr. Sutherland Edwards, gives some interesting particulars, which space however will only allow us to reprint in a very condensed form:—

"Bortniansky, born in the Ukraine in 1752, was a serf. As a rule, a peasant in his position, however great his genius, would be without the necessary means and opportunities of developing it. Fortunately for himself and posterity, Bortniansky had a generous master, who sent him to Italy, where he studied under Galuppi, a composer who, as the readers of Dr. Burney may remember, was for some years musical director at the Russian Court. Galuppi went to St. Petersburg in 1766 (at which time Bortniansky was only 14), and had just returned when Dr. Burney met him at Venice. While in Italy Bortniansky devoted much attention and study to the works of Haydn, and composed operas, symphonies, sonatas, and vocal and instrumental pieces of all kinds. On his return to St. Petersburg he was appointed chorus-master to the Imperial Chapel, of which he afterwards became director, retaining that post until his death. At the Imperial Chapel Bortniansky confined himself entirely to sacred music, writing, among other pieces, thirty-six vocal cantatas, each founded on one of the Psalms of David, and eight 'Cherubim's Songs.' He was replaced at the Imperial Chapel by Lvoff's father, the father of Lvoff by Lvoff himself, while Lvoff is now making way for Lvoff's brother. The illustrious Glinka was once associated with Lvoff in the direction of the Imperial Chapel, but only remained there a few months. It is evident that this establishment is destined to remain in the hands of the Lvoffs, and it is not surprising that it should get worse and worse every day."

About these same Lvoffs—one of whom composed the so-called "Russian Hymn," for which Prince Galitzin, not merely in his Russian Quadrille but on other occasions, invariably substitutes the far more impressive and striking melody of Glinka*—we have a few remarks to offer, which must be postponed until another occasion. Meanwhile we take leave of the Russian concerts, sincerely wishing them and their noble conductor all the success they so justly merit.

THE sharpness of winter is past, the theatres are beginning again to fill, and every one who takes an interest in such things is asking every one else (whether interested in them or not), why during the Christmas holidays, now happily at an end, all the playhouses, operatic as well as dramatic, fared so badly? According to the Times, half the ordinary theatrical public stayed at home, while the other half went to skate, or to see the skating, on the Serpentine. Doubtless the "skating scene" in Hyde Park had its attractions, and by thousands would have been preferred to the pas des patineurs in the Prophète; and it must, moreover, be remembered that if "Christmas comes but once a year" (resembling in that respect a good many other annual festivals), solid, trustworthy ice comes but once in five or six. It was natural then that "Harlequin Jack Frost," and the various open-air pantomimes in which that magician figured as presiding genius, should be the most popular of the holiday spectacles produced this Christmas.

We seldom visit dramatic theatres; but we can testify, of our own knowledge, that neither of our English opera-houses did a very flourishing business during the cold weather. One curious effect of the frost was to nip, wither, and utterly destroy two feeble, delicate plants, reared in the hothouses of Paris by that skilful operatic gardener, Victor Massé, and which it was sought to naturalise in this country. The Marriage of Georgette, a pale but graceful little flower, and which, when it was first shown to the public, was found to be not without freshness, enjoyed for some weeks a really brilliant existence, thanks to the affectionate and intelligent kindness with which it was tended by Miss Louisa Pyne. The Covent Garden specimen was superior, from its very simplicity, to the one afterwards exhibited in the Haymarket. La Reine Topaze, though Miss Parepa took it up tenderly, and sang it with care, was without perfume—which is what chiefly distinguishes natural from artificial flowers—and, though undoubtedly showy, possessed no beauty of form. Of course the late frost, which, according to the Registrar-General, killed so many delicate beings in whom the action of the heart was weak, paralysed Topaze and Georgette in no time. They are now no more. Peace to their floridities!

Man, says an amiable philosopher, is distinguished from the inferior animals by a belief in the immortality of the soul and a taste for alcoholic drinks. Is it the lofty or the low tendency of man's nature, we wonder, that takes him to music halls? Is it the soul-elevating melody or the animal-spirit-elevating, brain-confusing, body-disturbing gin, whiskey, and brandy that he seeks in these caverns, to which true music is as much a stranger as it was to the infernal regions before they were visited by Orpheus in search of a wife? We find, to our surprise, that we have already answered our question. But, seriously, the increase in the number of these singing saloons, taverns, pot-houses, or whatever they are called, is becoming a terrible nuisance. At present we have an intelligent and respectable musical public. If the mania for Canterbury Halls lasts much longer, we shall soon have nothing but a quantity of musical "publics."

The barbarousness of the music of Music Halls reminds us of a suggestion made to us last week, which, if it had reached us in time, we should have forwarded to the Secretary of the Musical Society of London. Mr. Walter Thornbury, artist by inclination, Spaniard, Turk, and descriptive essayist by profession, musical amateur by fits and starts, is of opinion that the instruments of semi-cultivated, and, above all, savage nations, have not been sufficiently studied; and that at the soirées of the Musical Society of London should be exhibited not only ancient harpsichords and modern gongs, but also the balalaika of the Russians, the guzla of the Slavonian provinces on the Danube, the Turkish instruments which Mr. Thornbury has himself so well described, and, last of all, though foremost in importance, the orchestral wonders of the Arabs, the Persians, the Hindoos, the Chinese, the Japanese, the natives of the islands in the Pacific, &c., &c. He is convinced that in Otaheite a new wind instrument might be found, of which the novel

* "As a conclusion to my quadrille," says the Prince, "I have introduced the real Russian Hymn. The word real requires an explanation. The Emperor Nicholas, at the beginning of his reign, ordered the composition of a National Russian Hymn, for until that time, at all state ceremonials, "God save the Queen" was played. Foremost in the list of competitors appeared the names of the Colonel of Gendarmerie, Lvoff, and Michael Glinka. Glinka, a composer of conscience and of genius, created a National Hymn, whereas Mr. Lvoff found it much more simple to borrow one. Glinka's Hymn is formed out of Slavonian elements; that of Lvoff disfigured from the hymn of the 'Sicilian Mariners.' But Lvoff had the advantage over Glinka of being not only a composer but also a servant of the State, and the Emperor Nicholas thought more of what Lvoff had borrowed than of what Glinka had created. Thus we have two hymns,—one false, the other real. Glinka took a noble revenge in placing his composition at the end of his Life for the Tzar, and I have done myself the honour of adding it to my Russian Quadrille." timbre would throw M. Berlioz into ecstacies. Let the Musical Society and M. Berlioz also look to this.

Digitized by Google

In the meanwhile a concert of music, which possessed all the charm of novelty, though executed on perfectly well-known instruments, was given by Prince Galitzin on the 30th of last month at St. James's Hall. The programme comprisesd specimens of Russian popular ballads, of the melodies sung by the Moscow gipsies, and of Russian church music, together with selections from Glinka's operas, and the "Kamarinskaia," a Russian national dance-tune of the most simple character, which Glinka has harmonised in the most varied manner, in arranging it for a full orchestra. Mr. Walter Thornbury should have gone to the St. James's Hall on the 30th. It was not so far as Otaheite, and in his search for musical novelty, he might have fouud it more interesting.

THE public, in many instances, are but too apt to forget, with time, what benefits have been conferred on them. Distance, which "lends enchantment to the view," has quite the contrary effect on the memory of good deeds. A vague notion may be retained that something desirable has been accomplished, some real boon has been bestowed; but the mind requires to be stirred continually to keep remembrance alive, or the next breath of distrust may blow away all record of the past. How many, for example, of all those who hear and read about the Hullah Testimonial Fund, and discuss the matter, it may be, in different moods and with different feelings, can recall exactly what Mr. Hullah has done to merit the unusual demonstration which has been made in his behalf? We will waive the consideration of whether he is, or is not, the originator of the system which goes by his name, and which has had so powerful an influence in teaching the masses to sing, and overlooking the importance of the now world-famous work, The Manual of Vocal Music, which, though founded on Wilhem's "method," is so much superior, and has become the lesson-book to thousands of adults and children all over the kingdom, proceed to show what he has done to excite so much interest, and to make his name be sounded in every mouth.

It is something, it will be granted, to introduce singers to the public who subsequently have enrolled themselves among the popular artists of the day, and a few of whom have obtained the highest honours. Among the ladies who have come out under Mr. Hullah's direction at St. Martin's Hall, since 1850, we may specify Miss Sherrington (now Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington), Miss Banks, Miss Palmer, Miss Fanny Rowland, Mrs. Endersson, Miss Kemble, Mlle. de Villar, Mlle. Behrens, Miss Kearns, Miss Alleyne, Miss Dethridge, Miss Martin, Miss Carrodus, Miss Bradshaw, &c. Of these, Misses Banks, Palmer, Martin, Carrodus, and Bradshaw, were pupils of Mr. Hullah. The gentlemen who first made their bow to the public under his control, were Messrs. Augustus Braham, Thomas, Winn, Santley, G. Calkin, Atkinson, &c. Moreover, Mr. Hullah was the first to introduce Mr. Sims Reeves as an oratorio singer to the public, in Judas Maccabæus, at Exeter Hall, February 10, 1848, as he also did Mr. Weiss in Elijah. This is surely effecting something for the vocal art; and singers, at all events, are largely indebted to him.

Let us now see what Mr. Hullah has achieved in presenting new works, foreign and domestic, and how far he has impressed other directors in reviving compositions of eminent writers, which, but for him, might never have been heard in this country. The following have been produced at St. Martin's Hall, under his direction, since 1850:—Mr. Henry Leslie's Festival Anthem, and Oratorio of Immanuel; Mr. Frank Mori's cantata, Fridolin; Mendelssohn's 114th Psalm, and "Lauda Sion" (the same composer's 95th Psalm, and Walpurgisnacht, were also performed, but had been given elsewhere); Mr. Bartholomew's oratorio The Nativity; Herr Reinthaler's oratorio Jephtha; Herr Hager's oratorio John the Baptist; Sebastian Bach's "Credo," from the Mass in B minor; Carissimi's Jephtha; Mr. C. Fitzwilliam's sacred cantata, "O incomprehensible Creator;" M. Gounod's "St. Cecile" Mass, and other works, &c. &c. Mr. Hullah also introduced for the first time to a London audience, Professor Bennett's May Queen, which had previously been performed ed once in the provinces, besides performing Mr. Macfarren's May Day, the second act of Gluck's Orfeo, &c. &c. &c.

Without going into the educational question,—although, of course, that must necessarily constitute Mr. Hullah's principal claim to the testimonial—we have in the above a goodly array of benefits conferred on the art, which cannot be ignored without the charge of gross ingratitude falling on the general public. Some of the works produced by Mr. Hullah have turned out indifferent; some of the singers he has introduced may not have proved first-rate; but these are exceptions to the rule; and if we measure what he has done by results, we must accord him the highest consideration. To his countrymen, more especially, he has shown himself a real benefactor, ever ready to lend a helping hand to talent, and not always waiting for the verdict of the public, or the tribunals, before producing a work. To his countrymen, therefore, he naturally looks for a helping hand in return, in his hour of tribulation, and, we are glad to say, has not looked in vain. The subscriptions to the testimonial continue to progress rapidly; the concert at St. James's Hall on Tuesday was an eminent success; and it is to be hoped that the Grand Orchestral Morning Concert, to take place on Monday at the Royal English Opera, in aid of the Fund—which is given under the most distinguished patronage, and at which the very first talent in London will assist, including Mr. and Mrs. Sims Reeves, Mesdames Catharine Hayes, Lemmens-Sherrington, and Laura Baxter, Mr. Lewis Thomas, MM. Charles Hallé, and Sainton, &c., with the band and chorus of the theatre, under the direction of Mr. Alfred Mellon—may prove the crowning triumph of the Hullah demonstration.

"A ladder," writes Mr. Charles Dickens, in his article on Mr. John Hullah's classes, in All the Year Round, "with the Latin motto, 'Per scalam ascendimus,' mounting by the scale (or ladder), stood over the fireplaces of St. Martin's Hall, lately destroyed by fire. The master of that hall was Mr. John Hullah, the most effectual musical reformer whose good influence has been felt by the people of England in our day, or in any day before it. His energetic hand has held the ladder by which other men have mounted; but it has been to him no ladder of fortune. Even before he was burnt out by fire the other day, he was burnt out by zeal."

To the above indirect but expressive appeal nothing can be added. The illustrious author of Pickwick and David Copperfield has in a few words exhausted the whole force and gist of the argument which can be adduced in Mr. Hullah's favour. We cannot do better than leave Mr. Hullah to the eloquent pleading of Mr. C. Dickens. R.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The report which has gone abroad that Mlle. Titiens and Signor Giuglini were engaged for the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, in the ensuing season, has been contradicted by Mr. Smith, the lessee of her Majesty's, who says both Mlle. Titiens and Giuglini are engaged by him, and also the following phalanx of talent:—Mesdames Borghi-Mamo, Alboni, Lotti, Gassier, and Grisi; Signori Mario, Mongini, Bélart, Gassier, Everardi, Ciampi, Vialetti.

Digitized by Google

VIENNA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Jan. 26, 1861.

HERR TAUSIG, a very clever pianist-pupil of Liszt, gave a concert on Sunday, the programme of which consisted exclusively of his master's compositions. The result was not flattering to the "music of the future," which, if its reception on this occasion be any criterion, is still far beyond ("the farther the better," some one wickedly remarked,) the comprehension or appreciation of an audience of the present day. The Viennese papers do not hesitate to say that Liszt possesses no talent for composition—that he is but a servile imitator of Wagner. Whether this be right or wrong, the music performed on Sunday made no favourable impression. It was a public trial; there were others besides the bigoted disciples of Wagner present, and they regretted that Herr Tausig had not selected better means for the display of his remarkable skill.

This reminds me of a story which is just now en vogue. A rich tailor's wife, being at a public ball, was asked by one of the maîtres de ceremonies why she would not dance? "The company is so very different from that to which I am accustomed," replied the lady, with an air. "Good heavens! madame," exclaimed the maître, a witty fellow, "surely you could not expect us to be all tailors." In like manner Liszt may console his pupil, Herr Tausig, that the audience could not be expected to have been all Wagners. The comparison is somewhat odious, but let that pass.

At the Opera House, Auber's "Des Teufels Antheil (La part du Diable), and the ballet Der Verliebte Teufel (Le Diable amoureux), have been reproduced. Mlle. Lieblart was very successful in the opera, and evinced more dramatic talent than I had supposed her to possess. The ballet created a furore. The house was crammed, as usual, with military; even the Emperor honoured the performance with his presence. "He never comes to the opera," growled one of the singers, as she brought the rara avis within the focus of her lorgnette. Mlle. Couqui danced admirably. A pas de fascination, by this graceful artiste, accompanied by Helmesberger, the first violin, in a great measure compensated for the devotion of an entire evening to such a dreary amusement as a ballet at the Kärntnerthor theatre.

Plans for the New Opera House are now exhibited. They are thirty-three in number, by different architects. Of these, six have been selected by the committee of taste appointed by government, as the most worthy of consideration. Among them, one sent in by the architect of Covent Garden has a very good chance of being decided upon as the best. Architects of all countries have competed, and the designs are generally, as far as I am able to judge, very good. Nothing seems to be wanting for the erection of a magnificent theatre except the money,—and where is that to come from?

The weather has changed, and a rapid thaw set in. Great fears are felt for the safety of the Leopoldstadt, which is threatened with a deluge from the Danube. Boats are placed in the streets, and materials for the erection of impromptu bridges are to be found before every house. It is officially announced in the papers of to-day that the breaking of the ice in the upper river will be made known to the inhabitants of the imperilled Vorstadt by the firing of cannon on the Bieber Bastei. The danger seems to be imminent, and those who live or have friends in the Leopoldstadt are in the greatest anxiety.

ANTEATER.

CELEBRATION OF CARL MARIA VON WEBER'S BIRTHDAY.*

THE fifth Gesellschafts Concert, in the Gürzenich, Cologne, on the 18th December, Carl Maria Von Weber's birthday, commenced with the overture to the Beherrscher der Geister, a work of the composer's youth, and which he wrote at the time he occupied the post of a Musikdirector at Breslau (from 1804 to 1806). It was intended for the opera of Rübezahl, the libretto of which was furnished by Professor Rohde. The opera was not however, completed; we as yet know nothing of a quintet, which is said to have been printed. Although the overture is inferior to Weber's more masterly efforts in the same style, it is still a specimen of music far above mediocrity, and by the dash of its ideas and intentional contrasts, exhibits the germ of that genius which was afterwards so gloriously developed. (We, in England, are accustomed to regard the overture entitled The Ruler of th Spir its as one of Weber's very best.)

The next pieces contained in the programme, as proofs of Weber's importance as a pianoforte composer and player, were the Concertstück with band, and the E flat major rondo, Op. 62, both admirably performed by Herr Edward Franck, from Berne, formerly our fellow-townsman. In consequence of the still lively recollection of his exertions at the Conservatory here, as well as generally in the cause of musical matters in Cologne, this gentleman was greeted with the loudest and most hearty expression of that esteem which he has gained for himself both as an artist and a man. In addition to noticing his performance at this concert, we would especially mention the high treat he afforded us at the last meeting of the Musical Society, on the 16th December, by his rendering of J. S. Bach's pianoforte concerto in D minor, in the first allegro of which he introduced a cadence that satisfied the highest requirements of art, both as regards its elevated style and masterly execution.

Between the two pianoforte pieces Mlle. Genast sang two songs by Weber, "Wenn's Kindlein süssen Schlummers Ruh?" and "Unbefangenheit." The last especially she gave in a most charming manner, the composition itself being one of the most graceful songs to be found in the exceedingly copious list of works of this description, and by its natural character far surpassing all the samples of modern affectation intended to imitate it.

The pianoforte rondo was followed by a selection from the opera of Oberon. After a spirited performance of the overture, Mlle. Amalie Rottmeyer, a young actress at the theatre here, spoke some verses written for the occasion by Professor L. Bischoff, the elfin chorus in F major (Introduction No. 2) being appropriately introduced. After the verses, the chorus for male voices, No. 8, the arietta, "Arabiens einsam Kind," No. 10, and the finale to the second act, beginning with the song of the mermaids, were very excellently rendered. The chorus especially distinguished itself by the precision and great delicacy with which it gave the light, fairy-like strains entrusted to it.

The second part of the concert was filled up with the music to the play of Preciosa, music which Weber, in a letter to one of his friends, declared he considered a worthy forerunner of his Der Freischütz. The first performance took place on the 14th March, 1820, in Berlin, and excited real enthusiasm, and not merely that kind of newspaper enthusiasm so popular now-a-days. The characteristic style of the music, the natural freshness of the choruses, the wonderfully beautiful melodies of the melodramatic portions and of the romances, the charming instrumentation, distinguished by a simplicity, in the means employed, not heard since Mozart, not one of all these various elements failed to produce its accustomed effect even in the concert-room, far from all the illusions of the stage. On the contrary, the audience were entranced, and worked up to a pitch of enthusiasm, especially as at no theatre probably are the choruses executed by such fresh and youthful voices as those at the command of our concert-givers.

Mlle. Rottmeyer spoke the melodramatic scenes with deep feeling, which, joined to her graceful appearance, did not fail to produce a strong impression. The poem by C. O. Sternau, explaining very successfully the action of the play, and uniting the various pieces of music into one complete whole, was delivered by Herr Laddey in an intelligent and expressive manner, enhanced by a sonorous voice.

* From the Niederrheinische Musikzeitung.

AN ACTRESS WITH FIVE HUSBANDS.—An extraordinary case of bigamy has just been developed in Dublin. Kate Collins, a ballet dancer, who has for some time been bewitching the residents in the Irish capital, suddenly vanished, her object being to escape from the clutches of the law; the gentle Kitty being charged with marrying no less than five husbands, each of whom had been remitting her weekly sums for her support. The discovery was made by the unexpected meeting of three of the duped Benedicts at her residence.

Digitized by Google

DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN.

NEED we inform our readers who "Dr. Mark and his Little Men" are? We trust not, or there is no significance in our front advertisement columns. The fame of the learned Teutonic Doctor and his English pupils is far spread. It has resounded in the four quarters, and has been echoed through the length and breadth of the land. What the Doctor has effected in the musical education of the youthful branches of the community in this country, has been recorded times out of mind. The highest patronage has been bestowed upon master and pupils. Her most Gracious Majesty herself, after hearing the performance of the "Little Men" at Windsor Castle, took a decided interest in their progress; and, if we are informed aright, advised their appearance in London. Acting upon this right royal hint, the Doctor undertook to exhibit his "Little Men" in a series of concerts at St. James's Hall, the first of which came off on Saturday, the 12th ultimo, and was continued through the two following weeks. Their first appearance was completely successful; and this was followed by a succession of triumphs. Dr. Mark's head-quarters are at Manchester, where he has an establishment for the reception of juveniles of musical promise, the pupils being boarded, clothed, and instructed at the expense of the Doctor, his remuneration being obtained from the proceeds of the concerts given with the more advanced students, and from the sale of musical works which he has published.

The performances of the "Little Men" must not be measured by the customary standard of criticism, but must rather be regarded as specimens of what may be done both collectively and individually, with youths who display any aptitude for music. Doubtless the cordial applause which was bestowed upon the efforts of the students, and which, we may presume, proceeds from every audience that listens to their interesting performances, will not have the baneful effect of rendering them self-satisfied, for the execution of the music is by no means free from shortcomings, and the worthy Doctor will be careful to point out to his young charges that the approbation expressed is not awarded with the same motive that would dictate the plaudits bestowed upon experienced artists. A detailed notice of the performances is not called for. It is enough to state that the "Little Men" are nearly forty in number, and that their instruments are the violin, flute, piccolo, cornet-à-pistons, saxhorn, concertina, double bass, &c., for which selections from operas and other pieces are arranged. A pot-pourri from Il Trovatore, Jullien's "Semiramide Quadrille," and a capital "Post-horn Galop," composed by Dr. Mark, were among the "Little Men's" most admirable achievements. Solos were executed by Masters E. Sturge (cornet), Osborne Sturge (violin), and Donovan (sax-bass), with considerable effect, and the extremely juvenile portion of the corps was represented by Corporal Bob Smith, Arnold, Leigh, and Kay, who gave simple melodies on the cornet, piccolo, violin, and concertina, to the extreme delight of the audience. Dr. Mark presided at the pianoforte, and a Mr. Frank Reed sang some tenor songs very pleasingly.

The success of the "Little Men" at St. James's Hall will, no doubt, have the effect of inducing the doctor to pay another artistic visit to London, when we may reckon upon his still further inoculating us with the merits of his tiny minstrels.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.—A man at forty years of age is generally said to be "in the prime of life." At fifty the meridian is past, and if incipient signs of the decadence of his powers begin to manifest themselves from that date, no surprise is expressed, it is looked upon as the ordinary decay of nature, and impaired energy and lessened powers may be expected as a matter of course. Here and there we may find exceptions; but still, as a general rule, at fifty the hey-day is over, the rapid pace has settled into the steady jog-trot; from that time the speed slackens, until by and by the race is ended and the motion stops altogether. With the Monday Popular Concerts, however, the exact converse of this proposition holds good, for the series having reached the exceedingly respectable number of fifty, and being now at the ninth Concert of the third season, far from any symptoms of weakness, much less of decay are visible: each Concert seems to gain in vigour, and there is every probability that at the hundredth "Monday Popular" the strength will be as great or greater than in the youthful days of these pleasant gatherings. Certain it is that so long as Mr. Arthur Chappell provides such excellent fare, his patrons—not the titled few—the "oiled and curled darlings" of fame and fortune,—but the many, the really great public, who, after all, are the only real supporters to look to, will continue to fill St. James's Hall to repletion, as they did last Monday, many previous Mondays, and unquestionably will for many Mondays to come.

Those who know Mendelssohn's glorious Ottet in E flat for four violins, two tenors, and two violoncellos (given here for the first time in April, 1859) looked forward with pleasure to its repetition, and their anticipations were more than realised, for under the leadership of M. Vieuxtemps it was, without exception, one of the most magnificent performances ever heard. Undoubtedly one of the noblest instrumental chamber compositions in existence (although written when Mendelssohn was only fifteen years of age), its beauties are so vast and so varied that it would require far more than our limited space to attempt anything like a faint outline of their enumeration. To those who are acquainted with the work it would be idle to descant upon its merits, to those who have the misfortune not to know it, words would be equally idle to pretend to give anything like an idea of its merits. Suffice it to say then, that the execution was worthy of the music, and we have the nearest description of perfection attainable. But it would be injustice to those gentleman who so ably conduced to this end to omit their names—and we have only to mention Messrs. Ries, Carrodus, Watson, Schreurs, Webb, Paque and Piatti, as a guarantee that our praise is not misplaced. Not content with such a superb "pièce de résistance," quite sufficient attraction in itself one would have thought, two novelties were also given. A sonata in D major of Clementi, played by Mr. Charles Hallé, in his most masterly style, and a sonata of Mozart in A major, not to be confounded with another sonata from the same pen in the same key but in two movements only. In this M. Vieuxtemps' violin playing was as remarkable as the pianoforte playing of Mr. Charles Hallé, and both performers retired amidst the well earned plaudits of an audience which had been already roused to such enthusiasm as to demand the repetition of the wonderful "scherzo" in the Ottet. We have, however, one fault to find with the concert (and after such frequent repetition of praise it is refreshing to be able to find fault sometimes):—it was too long, it being ten o'clock when the first piece in the second part had concluded, leaving then two vocal pieces and a long quartet of Beethoven to complete the programme. Music of this class requires serious and fixed attention for its thorough appreciation, and, however enthusiastic one may be, at a late hour of the evening, after listening to so much that is excellent the mind is incapable of doing justice to a great work. We therefore did not stop for the Beethoven quartet (in G major—Op. 18), although we have no doubt that it was equally well executed as all that had preceded it.

Mesdames Louisa Vinning and Laura Baxter, with Mr. Tennant divided the vocal music, the first named lady singing Mendelssohn's charming song "On Music's softest Pinion," joining Mr. Tennant in Blangini's duet "Per valli, per boschi," and Madame Baxter in Paer's "Puro ciel." The last lady also sung Henry Smart's beautiful "Estelle," with admirable expression. Mr. Tennant's solo being the "Cara imagine."

HULLAH FUND.—The audience at St. James's Hall on Tuesday evening in aid of the committee of the above fund was far from being so numerous as we could have wished, or indeed expected, under the circumstances; for, apart from the excellency of the object, there was a most attractive programme which in itself should have been sufficient to command a full room. Let us hope, however, that most of the places we saw vacant were taken, and if their owners did not think fit to attend the loss was theirs. The concert was divided into three parts, the most remarkable feature in the first being M. Vieuxtemps' performance of his own Fantasia Appassionata, with orchestral accompaniments, consisting of an introduction, largo, tema con variazioni and saltarello, each movement in the highest degree characteristic, and the whole stamped with thorough originality. The whole performance was received with great enthusiasm—the entire orchestra most heartily greeted the accomplished virtuoso, and would not rest satisfied until he had returned to the platform and again bowed his acknowledgments. Mr. Benedict's Undine, conducted by the composer, occupied the second part. Upon its production at Norwich Festival last year, we had occasion to speak of its merits at length, and again subsequently when it was given for the first time in London at Clara Novello's Farewell Concert. There is, therefore, no need to enlarge upon the details of this really charming work, which gains upon each hearing, and bids fair to become as popular as Dr. Sterndale Bennett's May Queen or Mr. Macfarren's May Day—indeed we have already heard hinted in a reliable quarter the probability of its forming one of the principal features at the next Hereford Festival. It was a graceful act to assign the soprano and contralto parts to Miss Banks and Miss Palmer, both ladies having made their first appearance under the auspices of Mr. Hullah. Despite a little nervousness at first, Miss Banks did full justice to the music, and her liquid sympathetic voice told so well in the exquisite song, with chorus, "Mark the waves that rippling play," that an irresistible encore was the result. Miss Palmer, too, acquitted herself admirably, while Mr. Weiss fine voice and artistic style were all that could be desired, eminently contributing to the general effect. The tenor part found a most efficient representative in Mr. Wilbye Cooper, who delivered the trying scena, "From worldly cares," with a vigour and energy for which we were hardly prepared, and indeed sang throughout in a most finished manner. The execution of the whole cantata, or "Lyrical Legend" as it is styled, was altogether praiseworthy, and deservedly evoked the plaudits of the assembly. Two overtures, Weber's Ruler of the Spirits, and Mendelssohn's Ruy Blas, with Meyerbeer's Coronation March from the Prophète, and a variety of miscellaneous vocal pieces, made up the remainder of the programme, which must not be dismissed without a special word of praise to Mad. Weiss for her very fine delivery of the great air "I will extol thee," from Herr Molique's Abraham—an oratorio which we hope to hear in London this season. C.

Digitized by Google

CHELSEA VOCAL ASSOCIATION.—An evening concert was given in the New Vestry Hall, King's Road, on Thursday the 24th ult., at which the following artists assisted:—Miss Julia Bleaden, Miss Jessica Howard, Miss Poole, Miss Ellen Stuart, Miss Emma Stuart, Mr. Smeaton, Mr. Tempest, Mr. Frederic Penna, vocalists; Dr. Bennett Gilbert, horn; Miss Rosa Brinsmead, pianoforte; and Mr. J. Parry Cole, pianoforte, instrumentalists. Miss Poole, as a matter of course, distinguished herself among the vocalists, singing the two Irish ballads, "Forget not your Kathleen," and "Barney O'Hea," in her most fascinating manner, and obtaining a rapturous encore in the latter. The choir gave the following part-songs: — Purcell's "In these delightful pleasant groves;" Festa's "Soon as I careless strayed;" Mr. Martin's "Our Saxon fathers," "The last Rose of Summer," and Mendelssohn's "The Lark," and were encored in the last and Mr. Martin's "Saxon fathers." They also gave Lord Mornington's glee, "Here in cool grot," so excellently as to necessitate its repetition. Miss Rosa Brinsmead created a decided sensation by her performance on the pianoforte of a German national air by Chopin, and being encored, played Weber's rondo, "Il Moto Continuo," with admirable effect. This young lady's talent must not be concealed under a bushel.

Provincial.

THE provincial season just now is superlatively dull. Accounts from our correspondents and notices in the papers are of the most meagre kind. Nothing of importance has taken place recently at any of the large towns, and musical entertainment in the country seems like a ship becalmed between two seas, which, nevertheless, the next instant may float on the summit of the highest wave. No doubt touring parties are making active preparations, and will appear seasonably with spring onions and radishes throughout the length and breadth of the land. Mr. Willert Beale, above all, is plotting some tremendous musical raid, or inroad, into the heart of the kingdom, and, unless we are greatly mistaken, is furnished with some startling novelties. The sensation created by the Monday Popular Concerts in the provinces has been identical in all places, and calls imperatively for a renewal. To this, doubtless, when time serves, the Director will not be averse. At present, however, it would be difficult, even independent of the Monday Popular Concerts at St. James's Hall on the regular day, which could not be interfered with, to obtain the necessary executants in London, and convey them to the provinces. Our country cousins, therefore, will have to wait, however great their anxiety may be, and put up with moderate fare in the mean time.

A WINDSOR correspondent informs us that the fourth and last of the second series of the People's Concerts took place on Tuesday evening week (22nd ult.), and attracted a large audience. The vocalists were Miss St. Clair, Miss Jarrett, Mr. Dyson, and Mr. Lambert; the instrumentalists, Mr. H. Snelling, clarionet, and Mr. Goss Costard, pianist. The concert was in three compartments, like a modern iron frigate, the first and third parts being miscellaneous, the second devoted to the old masters. The directors were determined the "People" should have their money's worth. The same party subsequently gave a concert at the Town Hall of GREAT MARLOW, which appears to have been no less successful than that at Windsor.

It was rather a bold attempt at innovation, we think, to give a dramatic reading at the Saturday Concerts at the Free Trade Hall, MANCHESTER. Mr. Walter Montgomery, however, seems a special favourite in the cotton-and-hose-speculating city, and attracted an usually large attendance, we learn, to hear him read the scene from King John between Hubert and Prince Arthur, Tennyson's "Charge of the Light Brigade," and a poem entitled "Shamus O'Brien." Mr. Walter Montgomery, it would seem, is about to make his début in London, and is engaged to come out at the Lyceum, which fact may be ascertained by reference to an advertisement in the Times, wherein it is set forth, that "Mr. Walter Montgomery has the honour to announce to his friends and the public generally that his appearance at the Royal Lyceum Theatre is unavoidably postponed." The musical part of the entertainment introduced Miss Armstrong, Mlle. Merei, Mr. Delavanti, Mr. de Jong, and the band of the 84th Regiment. Mlle. Merei obtained a loud encore in the ballad, "On the banks of Allan Water," and appears to have made a hit.

The Huddersfield Examiner gives a lengthy account of an "Organ opening," or "Inauguration," which took place last week at Lane Independent Chapel, Holmfirth. We append an extract from the notice, purposely abridged, which we consider sufficiently interesting to present to our readers: —

"The day being fine, the attendance was large, and the chapel was densely crowded in the evening, every available inch of space in the pews, aisles, and pulpit stairs being occupied. Such a scene is not often witnessed in Holmfirth, and it was most pleasing and impressive. The Rev. Brewin Grant, B.A., of Sheffield, was the preacher both afternoon and evening, and very admirable were the discourses delivered. Mr. Richard Mellor, organist at Ramsden Street Chapel, Huddersfield, presided at the organ, and was supported by an efficient staff of singers, the principals being Mrs. Hirst, Mr. T. Hinchcliffe, Mr. Whitehead, Mr. Etchells, and Mr. Gledhill. In the afternoon the recitative, Comfort ye, my people,' and the air 'Every valley shall be exalted,' were sung in excellent style by Mr. Whitehead. The chorus, 'And the glory,' was delivered with great effect. The anthem, 'Judge me, O Lord' (Mozart), was also ably executed. Mr. Etchells acquitting himself ably in the 'O thou that tellest.' In the evening, the service commenced with the hymn 'Rise my soul,' set to music by Mr. Mellor. Dr. Clarke's anthem, 'O praise God in His holiness,' was admirably performed, the solo—'Praise Him in the sound of the trumpet,' being sung by Mr. Hinchcliffe, and 'Praise Him in the cymbals,' by Mrs. Hirst. Mr. Hinchcliffe also rendered 'For behold darkness,' and 'The people that walked in darkness.' The succeeding chorus, 'For unto us a child is born,' from the Messiah, very trying both to singers and organist, was splendidly performed. The time was accurately kept, and the delicate alternations of light and shade were marked with great precision. Mr. Whitehead sang 'Lord, what is man?' evidencing powers which cannot fail, if properly developed, to lead him to eminence. The 'Hallelujah' chorus was next given with great effect. This concluded the performances during service; but after the benediction had been pronounced, Mrs. Hirst sang 'But thou didst not leave,' and the chorus, 'Lift up your heads,' and 'Worthy is the Lamb.' This brought to a close one of the most satisfactory performances of the kind it was ever our lot to attend. The music had been rendered as only Yorkshire singers can give it, and the organist accompanied and sustained them with great ability. Immense improvements have been, in recent years, made in organs, and organ playing in certain kinds of music; but we have seldom heard Handel's glorious music so well played as on this occasion. The most perfect understanding appeared to exist between the singers and the organist, and the result was in the highest degree satisfactory. We felt proud of the district which could furnish such thoroughly efficient performers of sacred music, and on every hand we heard the warmest eulogies pronounced on the day's proceedings. The following is a description of the instrument, which in its outward appearance harmonises well with the other parts of the chapel, and greatly improves it:—

Digitized by Google

SWELL ORGAN.	GREAT ORGAN.
Cornopean	Sesquialtra
Piccolo Flute	Fifteenth
Principal	Flute
Stop Diapason	Principal
Open Diapason	Viol di Gamba
Double Stop Diapason	Stop Diapason, Bass
	Clariabella Treble
Couplers, Swell to Great	Large Open Diapason
Great to Pedals	Small do. do.
Bourdon Pedal Pipes

The organ does credit to its builder, and for its size is a very complete and efficient instrument. The diapasons are rich and full, and the flute remarkably clear and sweet; the viol di gamba is also a very beautiful stop. The chorus stops harmonise well, and are sufficiently brilliant without being noisy. The swell, as described above, contains six stops, which are remarkably effective.

A ST. LEONARD'S correspondent writes about the concert of Mr. W. H. Acraman and Herr Carl Deichman, which took place recently at the Assembly Room. The concert-givers were assisted by Mad. Jenny Bauer and Mr. Harold Thomas. The programme was almost entirely devoted to classical music, and furnished an unusual treat to a brilliant and numerous audience. Our correspondent is enthusiastic about the whole performances, particularly so with regard to a clever trio, the composition of Mr. Acraman, but is somewhat scanty of information respecting the keys and numbers of the various pieces. Signor Piatti especially is complimented for his refined and finished playing.

Accounts from an IPSWICH correspondent relate that the second and third monthly series of the Wednesday and Saturday popular concerts was a great success. A selection from Professor Sterndale Bennett's May Queen, including the overture, was given, the singers being Miss Bacon, May Queen, Lover, Mr. Bowles, and Robin Hood, Mr. E. Matt. A selection was also given from Macfarren's Robin Hood. The third series was brought to a triumphant conclusion on Saturday evening last. The overtures were Beethoven's Men of Prometheus, and Auber's Crown Diamonds. The leading vocalist was Miss Matt. The greatest attraction, however, has been the performance of the Messiah. The new patent Minima organ by the Messrs. Stidolph of Ipswich was used. —The people's concerts are given on the same evenings as the above, and have been better attended since the return of the East Suffolk Artillery Band from Portsmouth a few weeks since. Mr. Charles Gunning, the master, is painstaking and energetic, and fully qualified for his position. He has taken the best of his own band, and the best from the First Suffolk Rifle Corps band, and formed into one good brass band. Holding the two concerts on the same evening is altogether wrong, inasmuch as those who might be disposed to attend both, are prevented. The musicians ought to come to an understanding with each other, and not allow themselves or their "art" to be made the playthings of those who care not for either.

A correspondent writes that "The directors of the Birkenhead Music Hall Company having invited architects] to furnish designs for the building of a Music Hall in that town. About sixteen were sent in, and after careful examination, the directors awarded the premium of twenty guineas to one contributed under the distinctive mark of a circle within a circle, and which proved to be by Mr. Walter Scott, architect, Liverpool. The building is to be at once proceeded with under his superintendence. It is to be placed at the corner of Claugh's Road and Atherton Street, and will have handsome fronts to each. The Music Hall, which is a handsome, well proportioned room, will seat 600 persons. There are capital cloak rooms with lavatories for ladies and gentlemen, four rooms for singers and musicians. An excellent supper room, forty-eight by thirty feet, with large serving room and kitchen adjoining, ticket office, hall keeper's home, room and other convenience. The supper room will be admirably adapted for tea parties, soirées, dinners, public meetings, &c., and the Music Hall will serve for large meetings, balls, &c. The whole building will meet wants long felt in Birkenhead, and is expected to be opened by the first of November next.

Our own correspondent from LEEDS informs us that Mr. Henry Smart appeared there last Saturday to conduct Handel's Judas Maccabæus. The spirit infused into the whole performance roused the audience to great enthusiasm. The chorus singers, comprising one hundred members of the Leeds Madrigal Society, were in ecstacies with Mr. Smart's mode of conducting, and they followed his behest con amore. The principal performers were Miss Helena Walker, an excellent unpainstaking soprana; Miss Carrodus, sister of the talented violinist; Mr. Wilson, Mr. Brandon, and Mr. Spark, the latter playing the organ accompaniments in an admirable manner. Our correspondent hints that Mr. Smart will in all probability again visit Leeds shortly, to conduct a recital of Der Freischütz, in the Town Hall.

Our Leeds correspondent also informs us that the arrangements for the Triennial Musical Festival are fast progressing. On Saturday last Professor Bennett, the conductor elect, met the committee at the Festival Rooms, in the Town Hall, when several important matters were discussed. It was decided that the festival shall be held during the first week of September, commencing on Tuesday. There are to be four morning and three evening performances; and, on the second morning, Professor Bennett's new sacred work will be given. I have heard that this work is fast approaching completion; but its character, and the scriptural subject it illustrates, are still kept secret. It is said, however, that this latest effort of the Professor's will partake more of the cantata than the oratorio form, and that it will occupy only a portion of one morning's performance. Mr. R. S. Burton, who occupied the post of chorus-master in 1858, has been re-appointed to that office. The guarantee fund already reaches the liberal sum of 5,500l. For the first Leeds Festival, in 1858, it was not until June that the guarantee fund reached this amount.—Last Monday week a dress concert was given in the Town Hall, at which the only solo vocalist was Mr. Sims Reeves. He was, however, assisted by Mr. Charles Hallé and a chorus of about 200 voices. The great tenor was in the most splendid voice, and was frequently encored, when he readily repeated his songs, thereby proving himself unfaithful to the principle of resisting such demands, which it was hoped he had fairly commenced. Mr. Hallé was likewise "drawn upon." The chorus sang several glees and part-songs excellently.

On Thursday, the 17th ult., a handsome gold watch and chain and a purse of sovereigns were presented to Mr. E. J. Spark on the occasion of his retirement from the office of choir-master at the parish church of Bury, which he had held for nine years. The rector of Bury presided on the occasion, and made the presentation on behalf of the clergy, choir, and congregation of the parish church.

The annual meeting of the members of the LIVERPOOL Philharmonic Society was held on Wednesday in the Cotton Sales-room Exchange Buildings, Mr. Cruttenden presiding. The annual statement of accounts was accepted as satisfactory, and the report showed that the taste for music was spreading rapidly in the city. The committee for the year was appointed, and the number of concerts and charges for admission were fixed.

The Edinburgh Courant furnishes us with an account of the thirteenth Saturday Evening Concert, at which Miss Clari Fraser and Mr. George Buckland sang. The lady introduced the popular song of "Huntingtower"—one of her most excellent achievements —with admirable effect. She also sang "My mother bids me bind my hair," and, with Mr. Buckland, the "Singing Lesson" duet by Fiovaranti. All three were loudly encored.

From the Glasgow Daily Herald of the 21st of January we learn that, notwithstanding the rainy weather at the last Saturday Concert, the City Hall was inconveniently crowded, the great attractions being Mr. and Mad. Weiss and Miss H. Kirk. "Mr. Weiss's splendid vocal powers," writes our contemporary, "need not be criticised here, as they are very well known and appreciated; suffice it to say that, by his magnificent vocalisation, he fully ingratiated himself with a Glasgow audience. Mad. Weiss's fine soprano voice was heard in the most piano parts of the songs at every corner of the hall. 'Angels ever bright and fair' was admirably sung by her, as also the soprano part of the 'Chough and Crow,' 'Meeting of the Waters,' 'Rataplan,' and 'Bonnie Prince Charlie.' Miss Helen Kirk's singing continues to delight the audience, and, in conjunction with Mr. and Mad. Weiss, her success was brilliant. Mr. Banks presided at the piono, and Mr. Lambcth performed on the grand organ in his usual first-class manner."

Digitized by Google

Mr. and Mad. Weiss also assisted at a concert on the 22nd at DUNDEE, in the Corn Exchange Hall, of which the Dundee, Perth, and Cupar Advertiser, gives rather an original account. "We need not say," writes the critic of that journal, "the performances were first class, for the artists were so." In the same strain we have the artists called to task or eulogised. We learn that the airs, "I know that my Redeemer liveth,' and 'Angels ever bright and fair,' are sung by Mad. Weiss "in a style different from that in which these solos are usually given." Mark the why!—

"The difference lay chiefly in the excessive use of the crescendo and diminuendo, which the complete command which she possesses of the vocal organ enables Mad. Weiss to excel in. This, however, like every other excellence, may be misused, and the great contrasts its constant use creates are apt to detract from the grandeur of the subject and the magnificent simplicity of Handel's "setting" by the undue display of the individual abilities of the artist. In a word, Mad. Weiss's singing of these pieces was faulty in its being too fine."!

In a word, the writing of this notice is faulty in its being too fine. But poor Mlle. Bertha Brousil receives a terrible castigation from the classical stylum of the severe journalist for daring to play a fantasia on the fiddle:—

"In the first part Mlle. Bertha played an andante movement to the satisfaction of all her audience, and was deservedly recalled, when she gave—what?—ye spirits of Handel and Haydn hear it not?—"Il Carnavale" a la Paganini. This is to be regretted, for the bad taste shown in playing such musical trash amongst the masterpieces preceding and following it was not a little shocking to the musical taste. Besides, Mlle. Bertha should be above condescending to charlatanism—the leading feature of our modern school of instrumental solo playing. She does not require to do so, for her talents are far too good to be so prostituted. Let her leave such buffoonery to mere India-rubber finger clowns of the day whose whole aim is to catch the penny. Her course is upwards in the region of art, where all is pure, lovely, and genuine. We have no wish to be unkind, but when we see such talent as Mlle. Bertha's drawn into the vortex of sham and claptrap, we must give a word of warning at the risk of inflicting pain. If our best artists are so to forget their legitimate calling, we can see the ultimate triumph of the false over the real, a result the fair performer is bound to do all she can to avert, as well for the art as for herself as an artist."

The same party appeared at ARBROATH on the 25th, and we believe the same critic accompanied them. Hear the Arbroath Guide again, in re Mlle. Bertha Brousil:—"Miss Bertha Brousil's music is as charming as ever, and the elegance of her bowing is only second to the beautiful notes she extracts from her Cremona." The writer must wind up his remarks with an æsthetic sentence:—"Now that good music is shown to be well patronised in Arbroath," he propounds, "we trust Mr. Methven (the concert-giver) will not forget to include our town in his arrangements of the circuit of the leading artists he may hereafter engage." The writer, nevertheless, does every justice to the singing of Mr. and Mad. Weiss, who were encored in everything they sang.

A correspondent from DUBLIN sends us a detailed notice of the concert of the Ancient Concert Society, upon which he bestows unqualified praise. The features of the programme were Mr. Benedict's cantata, Undine, and Mendelssohn's Walpurgisnacht. Both were received with unbounded applause. The principal singers were Miss Palmer, Miss Julia Cruise, Mr. R. Smith, and Mr. Cumming. The Evening Mail pronounces the concert worthy the best days of the society.

We learn from a DUBLIN paper, that Mad. Catherine Hayes is about to make a tour through Ireland. The date of her visit to Dublin will be about the 19th of February. She will be accompanied by an efficient party—Miss Lascelles, contralto; Mr. Tennant, tenor; Signor Burdini, bass; Herr Becker, violinist. M. Francisco Berger accompanies the party as conductor. Mad. Hayes and party will visit in succession Kilkenny, Waterford, Cork, Limerick, Belfast, Armagh, Ballymena, Derry, Enniskillen, and Galway.

From the Limerick Chronicle of January 26th we gather that Mad. Rudersdorff and her party were giving a series of Italian operas in the city famed for its girls, its gloves, and its gallantry. M. Durand, it would appear, with a courage not to be overestimated, had undertaken the part of the hero, a trifle out of his line; and Mad. Rudersdorff, of course, sustained the part of Donna Anna. Of some of the other characters we are permitted to form our own conjectures, since all we are informed of two of the leading personages is, that "Signor Tito Palmieri and M. Morelle were accorded the merit due to their talent and ability." Martha was also given, and Signor Palmieri's singing of "M' appari" is spoken of in raptures. No doubt he is much improved since he left the Crystal Palace. On Saturday, the 25th, Mad. Rudersdorff took her benefit, and selected the Traviata. The opera was a great success, or, as the Hibernian journalist has it, "the performance was first-rate from an enraptured assemblage."

HOBART TOWN.—The long expected Italian Opera Company arrived in Hobart Town, from Launceston, and opened a short campaign at the Theatre Royal, on the evening of the 22nd ultimo. The company consisted of Signor and Signora Bianchi, M. Paltzer, Mr. and Mrs. Hancock, Messrs. J. Gregg, Megson, and Winterbottom, the well-known bassoon-player. They remained only a week, and although they introduced, and well performed, some of the choicest works of the modern lyric drama, they were not patronised so liberally as they deserved to be.—Hobart Town Mercury Puff, Nov. 22.

ROME.—You were lately informed of the demonstration that took place at the Apollo Theatre each night that the Trovatore was performed, when the chorus of soldiers sang about "la nostra bandiera." The lines in question are sung twice in the commencement of the third act, and each time there was a short but vehement burst of applause from the audience. This could do very little harm; it might have been considered puerile and silly, were it not that such small means are all that are left to the Romans whereby to signify their dislike of their present rulers, and their adherence to the national cause. It certainly was not worth the interference of the executive, but the nature and habits of the Papal Government are essentially meddlesome and vexatious. A few nights ago, by order of a certain Pasqualone, who is chief policeman under Monsignore Matteucci, the twelve police inspectors, or commissaries, of the twelve rioni, or districts, into which, Rome is divided, went to the theatre, each one of them accompanied by a sergeant in plain clothes, to observe the demonstration. An unfortunate Jew, named Gratiano Piperno, who was there with his wife, was arrested and sent to prison, where he is to remain, according to the reply reported to have been given by one of the chief sbirri to a question on the subject, until Victor Emmanuel shall come to release him. Let us hope, and not for the sake of the poor Israelite alone, that his deliverance may not be long delayed. Meanwhile, a family of eight persons, dependent for support on some small traffic he carried on, may beg or starve. It is reported that other arrests were made, and this is possible, and even probable, for such things are of frequent occurrence here; but I have no positive information of them. Fifteen young men who were at the theatre that night were prohibited, under pains and penalties, from returning thither. The demonstration has been discontinued.

THE KING AND THE DANCER.—The municipality of Turin being anxious to present King Victor Emmanuel with a gold circlet, and Italian jewellers being unable to get one ready in time, a Jew presented himself, and offered them a magnificent diadem for 250*l*. His offer was accepted, and the money paid; but lo! the discovery was afterwards made that the circlet in question had been bought at the sale of the effects of Fanny Elsler, the celebrated danseuse, and, as proved by an inscription inside, that it was given to her after a performance in London, by an Englishman, who was a fanatical admirer of her dancing.

Digitized by Google

Evans' Cottage Harmonium at Six Guineas,

In a French Polished Pine Case, has the full compass, Five Octaves, and a soft, subdued agreeable quality of tone—designed expressly for a cottage or small sitting room.

Evans' Harmonium at Ten Guineas,

Is in a handsome French Polished Oak Case, and possesses that rich organ-like quality of tone so peculiar to all Evans' Instruments.

Evans' English Harmoniums.

An Illustrated Catalogue of the whole of these well-known Instruments, with one and two Rows of Keys, the Percussion Action and Pedals, at prices ranging from Six Guineas to 140 Guineas—may now be had upon application to the Manufacturers, BOOSEY AND CHING, Holles Street, London.

Case's Patent English Concertina,

As used by Signor Regondi and other eminent Professors, still maintain their pre-eminent position as Concert and Drawing-room Instruments. The Four-Guinea Concertina has the Full Compass and Double-Action. The Patent Concert Concertina, in Amboyna or Bird's-Eye Maple, possesses every Modern Improvement that can possibly be introduced into the Concertina. A large stock of Second Hand Concertinas for Sale or Hire.

BOOSEY AND CHING, Manufacturers, 24 Holles Street, London.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

OF

DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.,

244 REGENT STREET. (JUST OUT.)

"SCHOTTISH D'AMOUR," by EUGENE MONIOT. Composer of "A Summer's Day," for the piano, price 2s. (Orchestral parts, 5s.)

"THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER," as a Piano Duet, arranged with variations by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew. Price 2s.

NEW SONG—"That Handsome Volunteer," sung by Miss Emma Stanley in her popular entertainment of the "Seven Ages of Woman," composed especially for her by Emile Berger, price 2s. 6d. (Sung also by Miss Catharine Lucette, in her original entertainment, and Captain Mortou Price, at the Prince of Wales's Hall, Regent Street, and by Mrs. A. J. Sutton, of Birmingham.)

BALFE'S NEWEST and most POPULAR SONGS.

	s.	d.
"I love you" (Sung by Sims Reeves)	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose" (Ditto)	3	0
"If I could change as others change" (Sung by Laura Baxter)	2	6
"I'm not in love, remember" (Sung by Miss Pareps)	2	6
"Oh! take me to thy heart again" (Sung by Miss Poole)	2	0

"GOOD NIGHT," (Cradle Song—Wiegenlied) composed by ALEXANDER REICHARDT, price 2s. 6d.

NEW HARP MUSIC by C. OBERTHUR, "Thou art so near and yet so far." Reichardt's popular song transcribed for the Harp by C. Oberthür. Price 3s.

MR. WEISS'S NEW SONG—"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL." (Poetry by J. P. DOUGLAS.) Composed and sung by Mr. W. H. WEISS. Price 3s.

NEW BALLAD.—"IN A LEAFY GARDEN," by GEORGE LODER. Sung with great success by Mr. RICHARD SEYMOUR, is just published, price 2s. 6d.

"MAY."—New Duettino for equal Voices, by HENRY SMART. Price 2s. 6d.

"THIS WORLD IS A GARDEN."—Song by GEORGE LODER. Words by J. STIRLING COYNE. Sung every evening by Mr. ROUSE, and enthusiastically encored, at the Lyceum Theatre, in the successful Operetta of "THE PETS OF THE PARTERRE." Price 3s.

MEYERBEER'S ROYAL WEDDING MARCH (Quatrième Marche aux Flambeaux), composed in honour of the Marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, which was played with such immense effect by the Band of the Guides at the Fête of the Orphéonistes at the Crystal Palace, is published for the Pianoforte, price 5s.

"FRESH AS A ROSE," sung by SIMS REEVES, and enthusiastically encored at Mr HOWARD GLOVER'S Concert, St. James's Hall, was composed expressly for the occasion by BALFE, and is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE BANNER OF ST. GEORGE."—The new National Song, composed by BALFE, the words by JOHN BROUGHAM, Esq., written for and inscribed to the St. George's Rifle Corps, is published, beautifully illustrated, price 3s.

"OLD ENGLAND'S STAR IS GLEAMING."—New Patriotic Song, just published, words by J. W. MELLOR; music composed and dedicated, by permission, to Lieut.-Colonel Deakin, and the Officers of the 28th Lancashire (2nd Manchester) Rifle Volunteers, by BENJAMIN SWIFT (private in the 3rd Company), the pianoforte accompaniment arranged by G. FREEMANTLE, price 2s.

NEW SONG by JESSIE M. THOMSON, "MUSIC BREATHES IN EVERYTHING," sung by Mad. FERRARI, the words by A. J. SYMINGTON, Esq., from "Harebell Chimes;" the music composed and dedicated to Mr. Hugh Colquhoun by JESSIE M. THOMSON.

"I'M NOT IN LOVE, REMEMBER," music by BALFE, poetry by JESSICA RANKIN (sung with such great success by Mad. JENNY BAUR at Mr. Acraman's Concert, Hastings, is published, price 2s. 6d.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY for 1861 is NOW READY, price 1s. 6d., per post 1s. 8d. Professors and the Trade are respectfully requested to forward their names and addresses, at their earliest convenience, to ensure their appearance in the next Volume.—London: Rudall, Rose, Carte and Co., 20 Charing Cross; and Keith, Prowse and Co., 48 Cheapside.

PATERSON and SONS' Guinea Edition of the VOCAL MELODIES of SCOTLAND, edited by the late FINLAY DUN and the late JOHN THOMSON, Esq., containing 144 Songs, full sized Music Plates, Four Volumes in One, elegantly Bound and Gilt, 21s.; in rich Fancy Bindings, from 25s., free by post for 2s. extra.

"Among the really cheap musical publications which are now almost continuously issuing from the press, one of the most remarkable is the work now before us.—Scotsman.

Paterson and Sons, Musicsellers, Edinburgh and Glasgow.

WANTED, a CONDUCTOR for the PRESBYTERIAN MUSICAL ASSOCIATION, BELFAST. He must be competent to give Instruction in the theory and practice of Congregational Psalmody and in the higher departments of Sacred Music. The situation is an eligible one, as the services of a first-class teacher are required not only in Belfast and its neighbourhood, but throughout the entire Presbyterian community in Ireland.

Further information may be obtained on application to the Rev. W. C. M'Cullagh, Secretary of the Association, and Convener of the General Assembly's Psalmody Committee, Ballysillan Manse, Belfast.

January 28th, 1861.

TO BE PUBLISHED BY SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MUSIC, a new work; being Three Essays which appeared in the MUSICAL WORLD. By JOSEPH GODDARD. Readers of the MUSICAL WORLD and the Public, wishing to encourage the publication of the above, may do so by forwarding their names to Mr. J. GODDARD, 3 St. Paul's Crescent, Camden Square, N.W. Price 5s. For further particulars, see the MUSICAL WORLD of Dec. 15th, 1860.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, February 2, 1861.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 39—No. 6 SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1861 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

EWER & CO.'S LIST OF NEW PUBLICATIONS.

	s.	d.
BENEDICT, J. MALCOLM, Marche Triomphale	4	0
BERGER, FRANCESCO, Bon repos, chérie, Nocturne	2	0
,, Lena, Serenade	2	0
GAUDE, LOUIS DE LA, Evelyn, Polka Mazurka	2	0
GARIBALDI, Viva Italia, March and National Hymn (with Italian words)	2	0
JUNGMANN, A., Souvenance	2	6
KRUGER, W., Les Cloches du Soir	4	0
LISZT, J., Grand Paraphrase sur Il Trovatore	6	0
,, Rigoletto	6	0
,, Ernani	6	0
MAGNUS, H., Carnaval Napolitain	4	0
PACHER, J. A., Op. 9, La Harpe	4	0
,, Op. 34, Le Ruisseau	3	0
,, Op. 50, Twelve Melodious Studies	7	6
,, Op. 53, Tendresse	3	0
SCHULTHES, W., Op. 27, Stella Matutina, mélod. rélig.	2	6
SILAS, E., Op. 49, Costanza Impromptu	3	0
SPINDLER, F., L'Oisillon	2	6
WOLLENHAUPT, H. A., Op. 19, Grande Marche de Concert ...	3	0
,, Op. 23, La Gazelle	3	0
,, Op. 24, Galop di Bravura	4	0
,, Op. 26, Hélène. Grand Valse Brillante ...	4	0
,, Cordelia. Schottisch	3	0
,, La Violette. Polka de Concert	3	0

MOLIQUE'S ORATORIO—"ABRAHAM."

Soprano Airs.—I will extol Thee, my God	...	...	...	4	0
,, Hear my prayer, O Lord	...	...	...	3	0
,, Unto Thee lift I up mine eyes	...	...	...	4	6
Contralto Air.—They kept not the law	...	...	...	1	6
Tenor Airs.—Who walketh uprightly	...	...	...	2	6
,, Pour out thy heart before the Lord	...	...	...	2	6
Baritone Airs.—Lead me, O Lord, in Thy righteousness	...	...	...	3	0
,, Let there be no strife	...	...	...	2	6
,, The joy of my heart is ceased	...	...	...	4	0
,, Lord have mercy upon me	...	...	...	4	6
Duets.—Cast out this bondwoman. Alto and Baritone	...	...	...	4	6
,, It is of the Lord's great mercies. Soprano and Baritone	...	...	...	3	0
Trio.—Alto, Tenor, and Bass. Let all those rejoice	...	...	...	3	0
Quartet.—S. A. T. & B. Go in peace before the Lord	...	...	...	4	6
March.—Arranged for Pianoforte Solo	...	...	...	2	6
,, ,, ,, Duet	...	...	...	4	0
,, ,, ,, Organ (arranged by W. T. BEST)	...	...	...	3	0

EWER & CO. 97 REGENT STREET,

Universal Circulating Musical Library.

MESSRS. KLINDWORTH, H. BLAGROVE, and DAUBERT'S THREE CONCERTS of CHAMBER MUSIC, At the Hanover Square Rooms, Tuesday Evenings, February 19th, March 5th and 19th, at half-past 8.

The Programmes Illustrated by Mr. G. A. MACFARREN.

Subscription Tickets, or Tickets for Three, One Guinea; Single Tickets, Half a Guinea; to be had of Mr. Klindworth, 9 Manchester Street, Manchester Square; Mr. Blagrove, 11 Hinde Street, Manchester Square; Mr. Daubert, 89 Charlotte Street, Fitzroy Square; and of Messrs. Cramer, Cappell, Ewer, Schott and Betts.

TO BE PUBLISHED BY SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MUSIC, a new work; being Three Essays which appeared in the MUSICAL WORLD. By JOSEPH GODDARD. Readers of the MUSICAL WORLD and the Public, wishing to encourage the publication of the above, may do so by forwarding their names to Mr. J. GODDARD, 3 St. Paul's Crescent, Camden Square, N.W. Price 5s. For further particulars, see the MUSICAL WORLD of Dec. 15th, 1860.

FATHER KEMP'S OLD FOLKS' CONCERT COMPANY from America, consisting of THIRTY LADIES and GENTLEMEN, with their New England Orchestra, all of whom will appear in COSTUMES of ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO. First Appearance in London of EMMA J. NICHOLS, the favourite young American Vocalist. St. JAMES'S HALL, Piccadilly, MONDAY EVENING, February 11, 1861, and every night during the week. MORNING PERFORMANCES on Wednesday and Saturday at 3 o'clock. Admission—Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. Concert at 8.

MR. and MADAME R. SIDNEY PRATTEN beg to announce, that they have removed to 38 Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, W., where they will continue to give lessons on the Flute, Guitar, and Concertina.

MADAME OURY'S BRILLIANT FANTASIA on Jacobite Airs, 4s.—Madame Oury's Souvenirs d'Ecosse, 4s.—Madame Oury's "Auld Robin Gray," 4s.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, and Patterson & Sons, Edinburgh.

MISS HELEN HOGARTH (Teacher of Singing) begs to inform her pupils and the public that she has RETURNED to town for the season, and has removed from Weymouth Street to No. 71 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square.

SIGNOR GIULIO REGONDI begs to announce that he has REMOVED to 27 Berner's Street, Oxford Street, W.

THE MISSES ELTON (Duet Singers) beg to announce that they have RETURNED to Town for the season.

All communications respecting engagements to be made to their agents, Messrs. Hopwood and Crew, 86 New Bond Street.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—MR. HENRY BAUMER'S PIANOFORTE CLASSES, every Thursday Morning, commencing February 28th.—Address, 6 Hilldrop Crescent, Tufnell Park, N.; or Dulwich College, S.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.

Their Catalogues, which contain a great variety of Music calculated for teaching purposes, may be had, post-free, on application.

London: 18 Hanover Square.

A PROFESSOR of MUSIC and ORGANIST in a Parish Church, where there is a fine organ, full choral service, surpliced choir, has an extensive TEACHING BUSINESS in one of the largest towns in England, wishes to DISPOSE of it either by Sale or Contract of Exchange with another Organist. Brighton and the south preferred, the illness of a member of the family being the consideration. Satisfactory reference.—Apply, C. Z., Office of this Paper.

BOOSEY'S MONTHLY VIOLINIST, price 6d.—The First Number of this Publication will appear March 1st, and will contain a Selection of 13 Airs from Balfe's new opera, "Bianca;" Laurent's Daisy Waltzes on the Buckleys' Songs; Burckhardt's Knickerbocker Polka; Laurent's Christmas Waltz Quadrille; La Chatelaine Valse, Petchiti Polka, and Flocon de Neige Galop. Boosey's Monthly Violinist will comprise the newest and most popular Music of the day, short Airs, with Variations, forming a most attractive Miscellany for Amateurs.

IN THE PRESS,

HOWARD GLOVER'S OPERA, "RUY BLAS," shortly to be performed at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

T. MAUSS.—LE CORSAIRE GALOP BRILLANT, for Pianoforte. Second edition, price 3s.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

T. MAUSS.—"MERRILY OVER THE SNOW," the popular Song, arranged brilliantly for Pianoforte, price 3s.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S ORCHESTRAL OVERTURES, arranged by LAMOTTE. Price 8s. each for full band; 5s. each for small band.

1. Crown Diamonds, Auber.
2. Zampa, Herold.
3. Zanetta, Auber.
4. Oberon, Weber.
5. Fra Diavolo, Auber.
6. Der Freischütz, Weber.
7. Domino Noir, Auber.
8. Gazza Ladra, Rossini.
9. Dame Blanche, Boieldieu.
10. Masaniello, Auber.
11. Part du Diable, Auber.
12. Guillaume Tell, Rossini.

KUHE'S NEW TRANSCRIPTION of SCHUBERT'S FAVOURITE MELODIES, as short and effective Pieces for the Pianoforte, price 2s. 6d. each.

1. Serenade.
2. Ave Maria.
3. Adieu.
4. The Wanderer.
5. The praise of Tears.
6. Thine is my heart.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

Digitized by Google

ASHDOWN AND PARRY'S PUBLICATIONS.

JOHN FIELD'S SIX CELEBRATED NOCTURNES. Edited by FRANZ LISZT. Price 2s. each.

"Each of these Nocturnes is a model that the student may examine to his advantage. They are less suited as a whole for the capricious player than for those who, having acquired a certain command of the instrument, possess a taste too good to be satisfied with common airs, which grow into absolute irksomeness by a string of still more common variations. It is, therefore, to pianoforte players who admire the products of a fertile imagination, regulated by a correct taste, that these Nocturnes will be always welcome."—The Critic.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

SCHUBERT'S IMPROMPTU in B Flat (played by Mr. Charles Hallé). Price 3s. 6d.

"The impromptu in B flat presents capital practice for the moderately advanced performer, and abounds with passages that will be sure to enchain the cultivated ear, and delight the refined taste."—The Critic.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

SCHUBERT'S IMPROMPTU in E flat. Price 4s.

"The theme is florid yet light; the episode gives scope for expression in cantabile phrases, set off according to the modern fashion. This is a piece to attempt in public without being too difficult for amateurs."—Athenæum.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE KULLAK. LES ARPEGES. Price 5s.

"After the exhibitions of mere difficulty, dissonance, and noise adopted by many pianoforte writers of the day, it is grateful to come in contact with music that embodies such skill in construction that a great end may be achieved by tolerably facile means. Those who are ambitious to soar beyond the commonplace may find in this something to aid their flight."—The Critic.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

E. SILAS. TARENTELLE. Price 4s.

"Scarcely any kind of composition has found more votaries among the highest musicians than that of the Tarentelle; Auber, Rossini, Chopin, Stephen Heller, Pauer, have all contributed to it from the rich stores of their imagination, and this of M. Silas may fairly take its place by the side of any of them for its strength and originality. It has the wildness and rollicking vivacity so characteristic of the dance, with a certain roughness that is not unpleasing, and gives it considerable force and vigour. It is a piece that will certainly become popular, the more so, as while being effective and striking, it has the advantage of not being overwhelmingly difficult."—Manchester Guardian.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. LISZT'S Arrangement of the MARCH from Richard Wagner's "Tannhäuser." Price 4s.

"Liszt's arrangement is in his own usual excellent style. He treats the air as a jeweller would a precious gem, surrounding it with a setting, rich, varied, and brilliant, in admirable taste and keeping, from which the subject stands out clear and well defined. It does not present any especial difficulty to a good performer, and is a highly effective, brilliant piece."—Manchester Guardian.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. LISZT'S SOIREES DE VIENNE. Nine Valses-Caprices. Price 3s. to 5s. each.

These celebrated Caprices, on Waltzes of Franz Schubert, have been played with extraordinary success by Mr. Charles Hallé, Herr Rubinstein and other distinguished pianists.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. ERGMANN'S RONDO APPASSIONATO. Dédié à Madame Davison, née Goddard. Price 4s.

"The theme of this Rondo is spirited and biting, a thing to tempt a pianist who commands humour and piquancy."—Athenæum.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. ERGMANN'S REMINISCENCES D'OBERON. Price 3s.

"Overdone, as we are, with arrangements of operatic airs, it is quite refreshing to meet with any so good as these "Reminiscences" of M. Ergmann. Although easy enough to make scarcely any pretensions beyond being a school piece, it is so well written,—the subjects are managed with so much grace and finish, there is so much spirit and variety in it, that the composer may well expect it to become extensively popular. It is founded on three of the favourite airs of Weber's charming opera, two of which are most ingeniously interwoven together."—Manchester Guardian.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN AND PARRY

(Successors to Wessel and Co.),

18 HANOVER SQUARE.

BOOSEY & SONS' CHEAP PUBLICATIONS.

Operas in English.

Dinorah, 12s.; Il Trovatore, 12s.; Satanella, 15s.; La Traviata, 12s.; Don Juan, 18s.; Figaro, 16s.; Sonnambula, 12s. 6d.; Norma, 10s. 6d.; Lucrezia, 16s.; Iphigenia in Tauris, 8s.; Faust, 12s. 6d.; Fidelio, 15s.; Der Freischütz, 12s. 6d.; Ernani, 15s.; Il Barbière, 10s.; Zauberflote, 12s. 6d. These Operas are complete for Voice and Pianoforte, with English Words, and the original Foreign Text, in handsome cloth volumes. BOOSEYS' Editions must be ordered.

Operas, Solo.

Dinorah, 7s. 6d.; Satanella, 5s.; La Traviata, 5s.; Il Trovatore, 5s.; Rigoletto, 5s.; Ernani, 5s.; Vêpres Siciliennes, 7s. 6d.; Crown Diamonds, 6s.; Don Pasquale, 5s.; Martha, 5s.; Luisa Miller, 5s.; Les Huguenots, 7s. 6d.; Don Juan, 5s.; Fra Diavolo, 5s.; Fille du Regiment, 4s.; Lucia di Lammermoor, 5s.; Lucrezia Borgia, 4s.; Puritani, 6s.; Norma, 4s.; Sonnambula, 4s. These Operas are complete for Pianoforte in cloth, gilt letters, each with a beautiful Frontispiece, printed on India paper, and an Introduction describing the plot and music. BOOSEYS' Editions must be ordered.

Operas for Violin.

Il Trovatore, The Bohemian Girl, La Traviata, Rigoletto, Maritana, Le Prophète, La Fille du Regiment, Luisa Miller, Martha, Satanella, Dinorah, La Sonnambula, Lucrezia Borgia, Norma, Elisire d'amore, Lucia di Lammermoor, Ernani, Masaniello, Don Pasquale, I Puritani, Les Huguenots, Il Barbiere, Don Juan.

Each Opera complete, price 1s.

Operas for Flute.

Les Huguenots, Robert le Diable, Masaniello, Ernani, Rigoletto, Puritani, Sonnambula, Norma, Lucia, Lucrezia, Il Trovatore, Don Juan.

Each Opera arranged by Clinton, price 1s.

Beethoven's Sonatas.

New Library Edition of the whole of the Sonatas complete in two volumes, handsomely bound, 10s. 6d. each, with Life and Portrait. Edited by W. DORRELL.

"There are many editions of Beethoven's sonatas, German, French, and English, but there is not one that we have seen, from which, taking all things into account—correctness and clearness of the text, elegance of form, and moderation of price—we have derived so much satisfaction as from the edition now before us. The text, after undergoing the revision of so able an editor as Mr. Dorrell, may be expected to be immaculate; and so, after a close examination, we find it to be; and the clearness and beauty of the paper and printing are not to be excelled. The value of the edition is much enhanced by an able and interesting essay on the life and works of Beethoven from the pen of Mr. G. A. Macfarren; and there is, moreover, an excellent portrait of the composer."—Daily News.

Pianoforte Works.

Chopin's Mazurkas for pianoforte, complete, edited by J. W. DAVISON, with Life and Portrait, 8s.; Mendelssohn's Songs, without words, complete, edited by J. W. DAVISON, with Preface and Portrait, 7s. 6d.; Mozart's Twelfth Mass for pianoforte, by H. SMART, complete, 3s.; Rossini's Stabat Mater, ditto, ditto, 2s.; Boosey's 101 Waltzes, by STRAUSS, LANNER and LABITZKY, 2s. 6d.; Boosey's National Dance Book, containing 100 Reels, Country Dances, &c., 2s. 6d.; Moore's 78 Irish Melodies for pianoforte, by NORDMANN, 2s. 6d.; the Operatic Album, containing 100 gems for the pianoforte, price 7s. 6d., in cloth.

Harmonium Music.

Boosey's 50 short Voluntaries, from the works of the great masters, 3s. 6d., cloth; Boosey's 250 Chants, 3s. 6d., cloth; the Harmonium Museum, containing 100 Sacred and Secular Subjects, by the great masters, 7s. 6d., cloth; the Harmonium Operatic Album, containing 60 favourite Airs, 7s. 6d.

Violin Music.

De Beriot's 7 Airs, with variations, 1s.; Kreutzer's 40 Studies, 1s. 6d.; Rode's 25 Studies, 1s. 6d.; Florillo's 36 Caprices, 1s. 6d.; Boosey's 100 Dances (No. 1), 1s.; 100 Dances (No. 2), 1s.; 100 Reels and Country Dances, 1s.; 100 Ballads, 1s.; 100 Operatic Airs, 1s.; 100 German Waltzes, 1s.; 10 standard Overtures, 1s.; 100 Exercises and Studies, by the great masters, 1s. Order BOOSEYS' Editions.

Flute Music.

100 Exercises and Studies, by the great masters, 1s.; 100 Dances, 1s.; 100 Operatic Airs, 1s. Arranged by PRATTEN.

Cornet Music.

25 Duets for two cornets, 1s.; 100 Dances, 1s.; 100 Operatic Airs, 1s. Arranged by THOMAS HARPER.

Concertina Music.

100 Sacred Melodies, 1s.; 100 Popular Melodies, 1s.; 100 Dances, 1s.; also, for the German concertina, 100 Dances and Songs, 1s.

Tutors.

BOOSEY'S SHILLING TUTORS, for the Pianoforte, Violin, Flute, Cornet à Pistons, English and German Concertinas, Harmonium and the Voice, all full size, containing from 26 to 36 pages each, edited by the most celebrated Professors.

BOOSEY & SONS, HOLLES STREET

MUSICAL WORLD

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"'Merrily, merrily over the Snow,'—Schloesser's celebrated song, arranged as a brilliant piece for the pianoforte by T. MAUSS" (Boosey and Sons). We were not aware of the celebrity attached to this song, though we acknowledge its prettiness (as who would not that is acquainted with a certain chorus in Guillaume Tell?) Herr Mauss has turned it into a pianoforte solo which is showy without being over difficult. "'Le Corsaire,' galop brillant pour le Piano," same composer (same publishers), is, however, immeasurably superior as a piece, and besides this, has a more legitimate claim to be styled "brilliant." The second theme, in A flat, is well displayed for the instrument, and would be still more welcome did it not bear so strong a resemblance to the cabaletta of "Ernani involami" from Ernani, which reminds us, by the way, that Verdi is a much more prolific inventor of tune than is generally credited. But for a somewhat awkward jumble between the keys of G minor and E flat (caused by an A flat in bar 1, line 3, page 3), "'Nourmahal,' nocturne de Salon," same composer (same publishers), would be an elegant and agreeable movement of its class, notwithstanding the free notions Herr Mauss evidently entertains with reference to what are termed "passing notes."

Mr. Balfe's new opera of Bianca, the Bravo's Bride, has furnished pianoforte arrangers, transcribers, fantasy-makers, and dance-manufacturers with copious and rich materials for the exercise of their craft. First, and certainly not least welcome, are the "Favourite Airs, admirably (and conveniently) arranged as pianoforte solos, in three books, by the experienced hand of RUDOLPH NORDMANN (Boosey and Sons). This presents both the readiest and the pleasantest means of becoming thoroughly "well up" in the beauties of a work; and in the instance of Bianca, the superfluous elaborations and difficulties of the orchestral score have been most skilfully modified by the arranger, without altering the composer's harmonies or otherwise interfering with his design. "Three gems," from the same opera, exhibit Mr. BRINLEY RICHARDS, the most elegant of "arrangers," at his best. The "gems" are, as it happens, really gems (not too systematically the plan, by the way—"gems" being prepared for the market out of all sorts of materials). The first is the graceful ballad, which its own expressive tune and Miss Louisa Pyne's exquisite singing have made so popular—Bianca's "Power of Love," in short, "'Twas he, my only thought." The second is the animated song of "Gold rules the world," only a degree less popular than the other. The third and last (why the last, Mr. Brinley?) is "What sunshine bright,"—the vocal brilliancy of which has been most happily caught and transferred to the key-board by the expert practitioner, who never loses sight of an effect, while never sacrificing the genuine characteristic requirements of the universal instrument for which he composes. Mr. Richards, indeed, writes well for the pianoforte—no insignificant talent now-a-days. "Fantaisie Brillante," by JULES BRISSAC (same publishers), is a clever and showy piece, constructed upon two of the most striking melodies, and foremost of the two (as might have been anticipated), "'Twas he, my only thought," upon which the fantasist has built a remarkably graceful, and at the same time telling variation. The genial song of "Glorious wine," which Mr. Harrison delivers with such vigour and animation, follows in due order, and is treated with no less felicity. This is a good, honest piece, fulfilling all the conditions of "fantasia." "A Brilliant Fantasia," by G. A. OSBORNE (same publishers), trenches on other ground, and with eminent success. How greatly Mr. Osborne excels in this kind of writing, what a skilful pianist, and what a practised musician he is, our readers need scarcely be reminded. His utmost care has seemingly been bestowed upon the fantasia before us, one of the most agreeable and striking points in which, is the very happy use he has made of the broad phrase of melody ("From my childhood didst thou pray me") which Miss Pyne delivers in the grand duet with the Duke, in the third act of the opera. All the rest, however is to match, and the peroration is as animated as the introduction is imposing. "Fantaisie de Boudoir," by W. KUHE (same publishers), is, perhaps, second to none of the foregoing in interest. Three of the most popular motivi, "He was my only thought," "Glorious Wine," and "What sunshine bright" (the theme of the rondo finale, one of the most sparkling that ever dropped from Mr. Balfe's "untired plume") are knit together with a grace and facility peculiar to Herr Kuhe, who has rarely displayed more tact, or more successfully, to employ a familiar phrase, "hit the nail upon the head." This boudoir fantasy, moreover, flattering as it is to the pianist, has the advantage of being unusually accommodating to the fingers. "Galop Brillant," for the piano, by the same expert arranger (same publishers) is a thoroughly honest, but not the less vigorous, transcription of the galop (so cleverly contrived by M. Petit) in the last act—a galop which for vivacity, freshness, and entrain has only been surpassed by Auber, since Auber wrote the famous galop of Gustave III. Add to these the "Bianca Polka," the "Bianca Galop," the "Bianca Quadrille," and the "Bianca Waltz," by HENRI LAURENT (same publishers)—all effectively written, the themes well selected, the spirit of the original retained, and the fingers of the player accommodated, while the ear of the listener is fascinated, (how, indeed, could this be otherwise with M. Henri Laurent as the arranger?) and our Bianca-budget, certainly a most acceptable budget in every particular, is exhausted. There must be genuine, lively, and original tune in an opera to allow of so many and such diverse transformations without loss. This, however, as all the world knows, is the enviable gift of Mr. Balfe, who has rarely used it to better purpose than in Bianca.

"'Notre Dame,' romance for the pianoforte"—by EMILE BERGER (Boosey and Sons)—is an extremely attractive little piece, illustrating, as it were, in music a story of devotion. We have the "Angelus," supposed to be accompanied on the organ; the "Ave Maria," and the "Prière à la Vierge." The themes are from Pergolesi; but the treatment, which is both ingenious and happy, is M. Emile Berger's own property, and worth being any one's copyright.

"'Toujours gai,' Galop brillant pour le Piano"—JOSEPH ASCHER (Boosey and Sons)—is one of this clever and fashionable pianist's most animated productions, and thoroughly bears out the signification of its title. It is appropriately ascribed to M. Leopold de Meyer, himself a marvellous hand (or marvellous hands) at a galop. We should like to hear him play it, although M. Ascher himself would be quite brilliant enough on an emergency.

"Schubert's Serenade," and "Schubert's 'Ave Maria'"—by KUHE (Boosey and Sons). These are arrangements or "transcriptions" of two of Schubert's most beautiful lieder, in the form of short, brilliant, and moderately difficult caprices. They are remarkably well done. Four more are announced—the "Adieu," the "Wanderer," the "Praise of Tears," and "Thine is my heart." Ils seront les bienvenus.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY.

PIANOFORTE.

ERGMANN (A.) "Oberon."
SCHLOESSER (A.) "The mermaid's song."
Ditto. "Vedral Carini."
Ditto. "Battle, battle."

ADDISON, HOLLIER, AND LUCAS.

PIANOFORTE.

BERGER (FRANCESCO) "Attendez moi."
SUMMERS (J. LEA) "Two Musical Sketches."

VOCAL.

BERGER (FRANCESCO) "When evening's twilight."
Ditto. "Three Sacred Songs."

ROBERT COCKS AND CO.

PIANOFORTE.

FOWLER (CHARLES) "Allegro Moderato from Sonata."

EWER AND CO.

VOCAL.

BERGER (FRANCESCO) "There's rest for thee."

DUNCAN DAVISON AND CO.

PIANOFORTE.

JOEL (J. VON) "The Silver Cord Waltz."

VOCAL.

BALFE (M. W.) "The Banner of St. George."
SWIFT (B.) "Old England's Star is gleaming."

HOPWOOD AND CREW.

PIANOFORTE.

GANZ (W.) "Souviens Toi."

C. JEFFERYS.

BERGER (FRANCESCO) Reminiscences of Loder's "Night Dancers."

LEADER AND COCK.

BARNETT (JOHN FRANCIS) THREE SKETCHES, Books 1 and 2.

OLLIVIER.

PIANOFORTE.

BERGER (FRANCESCO) "Caledonia."
THOMAS (HAROLD) "Dream of a far off land."
Ditto. "Promenade Solitaire."
Ditto. "Across country."
Ditto. "Wave spray."
Ditto. "Album leaves."

RANSFORD AND SON.

VOCAL.

MORGAN (JOHN) "My love is on the sea."

SCHOTT AND CO.

GERER (JOSEPH) "Le Départ" (Violin and Piano).

J. WILLIAMS.

VOCAL.

ATKINSON (FREDERIC) Six Secular Songs.

PIANOFORTE.

BERGER (FRANCESCO) "The Defiance Galop."

Also the following pieces by ARISTIDES VERRI:—

VOCAL.

"The Lord's Prayer" (Author—Southampton).
"Ruth" (J. H. de Monti—Glasgow).
"The Bride of Freedom" (Ditto ditto).

INSTRUMENTAL.

"Auld Robin Gray" (J. H. de Monti—Glasgow).
"A Chant for the Fingers" (John Adams—Southampton).

Also by GEORGE LINDLEY:—

VOCAL.

"Metrical Annals of the Kings and Queens of England." } Addison, Hollier, and Lucas.

And the "Early History of the Theory and Practice of Vocal Music," By James J. Geskin (George Emery).

INSOLVENT DEBTOR'S COURT.—Mr. Frederick Chatterton, the harpist, applied under the Protection Act. The debts were not considerable, and the proceedings showed that the insolvent had been struggling for years with difficulties, which had been increased by illness and the decline of harp music. No creditors appeared in opposition, and Mr. Sargood watched the case on the part of the petitioner. On the schedule was an item of 20*l.* as a loss by a benefit which he had taken at St. Martin's Hall, in the hope of getting him out of his difficulties. Mr. Commissioner Nichols inspected the schedule, and put no questions. He appointed a sitting for the final order, with renewed protection.

TURIN.—Mr. Lumley's Italian company, consisting of Mlle. Tietjens, Mlle. Casaloni, and Signors Giuglini and Cima, have been performing the Trovatore, at the Théâtre Regio. Norma was intended to follow soon after, and a new tenor, Signor Sirchia, also belonging to the troupe, was expected to make his début very short.

LEOPOLD DE MEYER.—Letters from Vienna bring the welcome intelligence that this celebrated virtuoso is entirely restored to health.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent).

February 6, 1861.

AT present the concerts furnish the most important and noteworthy part of the musical doings in Paris. I shall therefore continue the few observations I made last week on their chief features of interest. By far the most prominent event of this class has been the concert given by M. Jules Schulhoff, whose recent arrival here from Germany I announced to you some time since. A considerable interval had elapsed since this artist was first heard in Paris, during which he has been recruiting his health in his native air, and though well known, and even popular by his compositions, many of the existing musical public had never heard his performances as a pianist. Consequently, the greatest curiosity prevailed among those who knew him as a virtuoso, to note what progress, if any, he had made, and among those to whom his pianoforte playing was unknown, to judge whether it deserved the encomiums bestowed on it. Schulhoff does not stand distinguished for the mere brilliancy and perfecting of his mechanism, in which, however, he may claim the highest rank, it is in the exquisite quality of the tone he produces, in which respect he has been likened to Chopin, and in the variety, grace, and truthfulness of his expression. Besides several of his own compositions, the Capriccio, Souvenir de Venise, Polonaise, Ondine, &c., most of which are recent works, Schulhoff played the Sonate Caractérisque of Beethoven, and the pianoforte part in the trio in C by Haydn, in a manner to satisfy as well as charm the severest critics. The success of the pianist composer was, in fact, in every respect, of the most flattering description. The other concerts I have to mention are altogether of far inferior interest to this, which may be said to have made quite a sensation in musical circles. There is that of M. Perelli—Gennaro Perelli—to complete his nomenclature, a rising pianist of the fast and flashy school, whose ambition is set upon startling transitions, passages of lightning rapidity, energetic octave-smitings, and other quasi-acrobatic digito-metacar palisms—if "Petipace" will allow me the expression. With the exception of the sonata in A flat by Weber, in which M. Perelli showed more comprehension of the higher purposes of music than might have been expected from his chosen path, the pieces in which he exhibited himself were chiefly of his own elaboration, and numbered, among others, a scherzo pastoral and a fantaisie dramatique, both with orchestral accompaniments, of which all that can be said is, that if there should arise, by any chance, a question as to M. Perelli's comparative merits as a composer and as a pianist, the balance would incline to the latter. A concert by Mlle. Marie Darjou, a pupil of M. Emile Prudent, and another by Mlle. Elvira del Bianco, may be merely mentioned as bringing forward two female pianists of decided ability. I ought, perhaps, not to omit a concert given by four yo ung ladies rejoici in the honoured name of Clauss, though I bel ieve in no way r lated to the clever Mad. Szazvady. Two of these draw sounds from violins, one bestrides a violoncello, and the fourth trusts to the mingled powers of her fingers and her larynx, being both pianist and vocalist—truly a polyphonous sisterhood.

Of operatic news I have little or none. Semiramis and the grand ballet, Le Papillon, have alternately furnished forth the entertainment afforded to the public by the Grand Opera during the past week. Of the one the sisters Marchisio, and of the other the graceful Emma Livry, are the pièces de résistance, and nobly support the cut-and-come-again principle on which the fulcrum of a feast should ever repose—if "Petipace" will once more indulge my euphuistic humour. In the meanwhile, the approaching production of Tannhäuser greatly occupies the attention of all classes of folk here—dilettanti, professional and lay. Anticipation, indeed, produces a greater commotion of the public mind and spirits than the accomplished fact, be it what it may, is likely to do. Philosophy, German and other, will easily account for this—so will common sense uncommonly enough. First of all there is the natural anxiety of all the artists who are to take share in the execution of the much-talked off work, which is communicated to their friends and supporters, and thus spreads out in a wide circle of emotional out-looking. I grow quite Teutonic on this subject. Then beyond this divulgated individualism (patience, "Petipace"!)

Digitized by Google

as it were, there is the eagerly and fiercely expectant attitude of the two camps into which the musical public at large is divided — the Wagnerites, and the antagonists of the transcendental music prophet. Lastly, like a croaking chorus from the frogs of Aristophanes, whose βρεκεκεξ κρωαξ is hardly more dissonant than their excited exclamations, there are the German residents, who enthusiastically back up their countryman, and extol his pretensions beyond probably their real credence, simply because the fatherland claims him. I am informed, moreover, that there is actually an immigration astir, a sort of eruption of barbarian hordes—the hirsute clansmen and acolytes of Wagner—who will thunder at the gates of the Parisian temple of fame to gain admittance for him, as erst the Germanic warrior tribes thundered at the gates of Rome to bear in Genseric upon their human tide. As Paris criticism vaunts its independence with great pride and jealousy, it is not likely to allow its judgment to be carried by storm in this way, and there is accordingly a very pretty chance of a "row," which will carry Wagner's fame higher than ever, unless the anti-German feeling thus aroused should lead to the precipitate realisation of the projects the Emperor of France is said to entertain respecting the Rhenish frontier, and so bring about a European commotion, Wagner's fortune will be made.

Of theatrical intelligence I have but a mite, which is that at the Ambigu Comique a drama is in preparation of "peculiar interest" as English managers have it. It is to be called l'Ange de Minuit, and the authors are MM. Theodore Barrière and Edouard Plouvier, approved good men both. Much expensive scenery is to enhance its effectiveness, and it will give occasion for several débuts, among them, that of Mlle. Méa, who made a sensation lately in the part of Andromaque at the Odéon, though as much by her beauty as anything else.

You will have shortly to add a new item to your weekly budget of musical notes and records, under the head of Chinese music. The Celestial Empire is not only now thrown open to commercial interchange, but to the higher mutuality of art. It is said that the literary mandarin, Lu Ling, who is the Jullien of China, is about to visit Europe to gain some insight into the musical absurdities of the barbarians, and to shed the light of true musical principles for the first time upon them. He will bring with him an orchestra composed of the most skilful musicians of Pekin, who will execute his own magnificent compositions, as well as those of Fo-Hi, a contemporary of Noah and Pscheng Fo-Tsi, who is the Rossini of the Chinese, and lived some two hundred and twenty years ago. Chinese music resembles in nothing our own, and this suggests a curious idea. Suppose it should be found that Wagner and Lu-Ling were come to Paris pretty much on the same errand, and that after all the music of the future, which is to establish the true principles of the art, is only the music of the past—of Noah, Jubal, and Fo-hi. Nous verrons.

VIENNA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Feb. 3, 1861.

As I anticipated, no impresario has been found courageous enough to speculate in the Kärntnerthor Theatre, and subscribe to the extravagant conditions upon which it was to let. It is to continue in the hands of Government, and the Emperor has within the last few days appointed Signor Salvi director, to replace the provisional committee by which the theatre has lately been managed. Signor Salvi is well known in Vienna as a singing-master, and as having been now and then associated in theatrical undertakings. He would appear to have great influence at court, having been chosen in preference to many other applicants, some of whom are said to be more competent to fill the position. The director or manager of the Kärntnerthor Theatre receives 4000 guilders a year. On Sunday last the second Philharmonic Concert of the season was given, the programme of which consisted of Mozart's symphony in D and Mendelssohn's music to the Midsummer Night's Dream. To listen to such well-known strains, so admirably rendered by the Philharmonic Band, was "A delight as sweet

As that of lovers when they meet."

The old symphony came with a friendly greeting, while the fairy-like music of Mendelssohn sparkled more joyously than ever. Both individually and collectively the members of the orchestra did every justice to these master-works. Nothing could be more exquisite than the delicacy of light and shade—the refinement of colouring with which particularly Mendelssohn's music was given; the performance, in fact, was an honour to every instrumentalist concerned, as well as to their talented conductor, Herr Dessoff. Of the vocalists, both chorus and soloists, perhaps the less said the better.

Sunday (may the Puritans pardon me for recording the fact!) was altogether a fête-day at the Opera House. The Philharmonic Concert just mentioned, in the morning, was followed by Mozart's Nozze di Figaro in the evening. Could the most rabid "Fanatico" desire a better bill of fare? The opera was sung as well, and by the same vocalists, as when I mentioned it in a former letter.

But one step from the sublime to the ridiculous, and so but one line from Mozart and Mendelssohn to Offenbach—from Don Giovanni and Elijah to the Bouffes Parisiens. Offenbach is in Vienna. A large multitude assembled to see him conduct his own operettas at the Treumann Theatre on Monday night. He was received with imperial honours, the band playing a tune equivalent to our "See the conquering hero comes," when he took his place in the orchestra. Perhaps you won't believe it, and suppose I'm joking, as did the critic in Berlin last week, when he announced that the proposition to erect a statue to the composer of Barkouf (Offenbach's last opera) had unexpectedly met with a few opponents; but no, the successful composer of Tschin-Tschin, Orpheus, Le Mariage aux Lanternes, and a hundred other pretty trifles, has been, and is, most extravagantly fêted by the Viennese public, as well as by the Viennese managers, whose fortunes, indeed, he has during the past year redeemed, Offenbach's pieces being the most attractive that have been produced for a very long time. They are, perhaps, more popular here than in their native Paris.

The text has been freely dealt with by the German adapters, and made the medium of reference to passing local events. The music is melodious. Why does not Mr. Harris try an Offenbach Bouffe at the Princess's Theatre? Who knows but that he would sing "See the conquering hero comes," as did Herr Treumann, when the spirit of the Passage Choiseul deigned to wing its way to Oxford Street?

I have seen Ernst this week. He is slowly recovering, and speaks hopefully of seeing his friends in England soon again. Joachim has announced a concert for the 6th. It appears he is en route to Pesth to visit his family. The concerts are less numerous this year than ever, while balls and dancing parties are considerably increased in number. A good valse or a pretty polka is better appreciated by the Viennese than almost any other class of music. A select few attend the quartet performances by Hellmesberger and others, but they are very few, and there must be some novelty even to attract them.

The Bürger ball, in the Redonten Saal, last Wednesday, Jan. 30, was well attended, but did not go off with great éclat. The Emperor greatly disappointed the visitors. He has never yet been seen in public except in uniform, and was humbly solicited by the citizens to do them the honour of appearing at their ball in evening dress. The request was unheeded. His Majesty paraded the rooms in his usual military habiliments, and thereby threw a very good chance away of increasing his popularity, which is just now nothing to boast of.

ANTBATER.

NATIONAL CHORUS SOCIETY.—This society gave a performance of the Messiah, on Wednesday evening, at Exeter Hall, under the direction of Mr. G. W. Martin, in aid of the funds for the relief of the Coventry weavers. The performance took place under the patronage of Her Majesty, the Prince Consort, the Duchess of Sutherland, the Bishop of London, the Archdeacon of Coventry, and several city firms. There was a large attendance, and the execution of the Oratorio was on the whole highly creditable to the choir, which mustered 500 strong for the occasion. The principal solo singers were Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mrs. Lockey, Mr. George Perren, and Mr. Lewis Thomas.

Digitized by Google

THE MUSIC OF THE FUTURE.*

SECOND LETTER.

(Continued from page 72.)

Is it possible for a poet, following quite freely and without any obstruction his poetic fancy, to produce a dramatic work of art, which shall, in the highest sense of the words, require the aid of music (musikbedürftig ist)? This is plainly not possible; even if released from all consideration for so-called musical forms, he must restrict himself to those regions which, as a rule, still contain sensations expressible by music. Can a composer, when he sets about the composition of an opera, proceed with the same freedom, limited only by the nature of the laws of music, as if he were composing a symphony? Certainly not; he must satisfy the internal and external dramatic requirements of the subject, and lay aside the purely musical standard. As we see, it is an alliance between two powers, which, in order to co-operate, are compelled to make reciprocal concessions. The determination of the measure of these concessions is just the question which, since the time of Gluck, has so often thrown men's minds in commotion. When stript of a mass of empty phrases and secondary details, it forms the pith of the noisy Wagner-question, which sets so many pens going. The real answer to it can be given only by works of art, and not by æsthetical conflicts of words. To conceive a drama in which the struggles represented are, in the main, confined to such as proceed from the world of sensations; whose action shall, with "circumspect swiftness," so proceed as to keep the sympathies of the audience always alive, without, in consequence, preventing the music from being developed with the requisite breadth; whose poetical dialogue, finally, shall not express so much as to render music superfluous, or so little as to render it impossible, and whose diction shall not, by its superabundant beauty—or platitude—reduce the composer to despair, is certainly no easy task, but, at the same time, it is not one which has never hitherto been accomplished. Nor is it an easy task for the composer—while striving in his expression to do justice to each situation, each character, and each word, as well as to the general tone of the drama—to avoid depriving his work of musical beauty, and, while doing so much for the poem, not to impinge upon the rights of his own art. Wagner's complaint against opera hitherto (and, in far too many instances, he is certainly not wrong), is that the musician has demanded too great concessions, which the poet has but too willingly made; our complaint against Wagner is, that he has often, somewhat criminally, attacked music, and the deepest conditions of its existence, in favour of the stage. His followers may not allow this; we, however, cannot agree with the assertion that the most important operas hitherto produced, not with regard to the music alone, but to the poems as well, hold the same relative value to his works (for it is only by means of these that we get anything like an idea of his ideal), that "the ape does to a human being,"—and if there has been, in many quarters, so strong an opposition against him, one principal reason for this is to be found in the fanatical exuberance of many of his partisans, who endeavour to raise him to an eminence to which he had no claim.

The peculiar and genial feature in Wagner's character consists in the varied nature of his talent. When he produced his Tannhäuser in Dresden (people were then far from making a kind of poetically musical Messiah of him), every person who left the theatre must have said to himself, that, despite all objections that might be raised, the most sincere recognition of his ability was due to the man who had conceived the subject of such an opera, who had worked it out, both linguistically and musically, and who, lastly, had so admirably got up and produced the work upon the stage. From this, however, to a combination of the powers of a Shakspeare with those of a Beethoven, in a single head, was a great stride; and, while every educated person allowed that Wagner's poem rose, by its conception and execution, above the operatic writing prevalent in Germany, it could as little be considered a literary production of the first rank, as the music, despite much that was interesting and effective, could be placed by the side of what our great composers have done, while in those parts which many have praised as the most important in the opera, people saw deficiency rather than progress: in other words, a frequent immolation of the truly musical in favour of the declamatory element, a fact on which I must speak somewhat at length.

The theories of an artist have their first and deepest roots in the powers and inclinations with which he was born. We have seen that, from the very commencement, Wagner was filled with a passionate impulse for the stage; but an impulse in which music did not find a place till afterwards. He is deficient in the primitive and instinctive delight in what is purely musical, however full he may be of the creations of Beethoven. The Letter we are now discussing points often enough to this fact. The so-called "opera melody" he always treats with sovereign contempt; while, on the other hand, he goes into raptures with "the endless melody." There is, not, however, any endless melody, any more than there are special opera melodies. There are musical thoughts which flow with a more rapid or broader stream, which are constructed after some model, or originally, and which are expressive or inexpressive, trivial or noble. But a recognisable form must possess some musical thoughts, if it would combine in itself character and sensual charm. Wagner may still continue to see an "idealised dance-form" in the wonderful structure in which a man like Beethoven connects and carries out his ideas, repeating them in the most animated turns. It is a fact, however, that the freest of all masters was so great in this, because he knew how to give his melodies a form as strong and firm as though they had been cast in bronze. But a Beethovenian composition is by no means "a single melody, accurately connected;" it is a chain of melodies, carried out into a work of art full of unity. That most primitive gift of musical invention, which is granted to all men of great musical genius, and which, above all things, is manifested in the creation of such, so to speak, palpable motives, is the weakest side of Wagner's talent. It is, however, a piece of ingratitude in him to be so evilly-disposed towards the "opera melody;" for in his operas, it is to those pieces in which he has managed to give us melodies, and, consequently, "opera melodies," such, for instance, as the chorus of pilgrims and the festive march in Tannhäuser, that, in spite of everything that can be said, he owes his greatest musical success.

In stating that Wagner had been denied the power of purely receiving pure music, I was led to the assertion by some other passages in his Letter. For instance, after speaking of the symphony as "a revelation from another world," which forces itself upon us with such overpowering force, and determines our feelings with such certainty, that our logicising reason is totally confused (?) and disarmed (?) by it, he says, shortly afterwards, that the question about the "Wherefore" is not completely silenced, even at the hearing of a symphonic composition, but is actually productive of "a confusion in the causal conceptive power of the hearer, a confusion not only capable of disturbing him, but of becoming the ground of a false judgment." The mysterious element in the impression produced by the higher kind of instrumental music, may and should urge the philosopher to seek the "Wherefore;" that the unmusical hearer, but one not destitute of fancy, may start the question not as to the "Wherefore," but as to "What does that mean?" may pass; but that the musical hearer, and much more the musician, should not receive a symphony by Beethoven as a creation perfect and complete in itself, and completely satisfying musical logic, the only logic with which we have here aught to do, is scarcely credible. Whoever, after the enjoyment of such a work, asks for any kind of explanation, may possess a highly educated mind, but decidedly no really musical nature.

"To answer this disturbing, and yet so indispensable, question, in such a manner that it may be eluded by the silencing of certain measures, can be only the work of the poet," Wagner goes on to say, adding that this must be done in the drama.

"The drama, at the moment of its being really scenically represented, immediately awakes in the spectator an intimate interest in an action so truly imitated, at least as far as is possible, from actual life, that in this interest man's sympathetic feelings of themselves are worked up to a state of ecstasy, in which he forgets the mysterious 'Wherefore,' and at once, in the greatest excitement, willingly delivers himself up to the guidance of those new laws, in conformity to which music makes

* From the Kölnische Zeitung.

Digitized by Google

itself so wonderfully intelligible, and, in a profound sense, immediately alone answers rightly the 'Wherefore?'"

Or, to express ourselves simply:—When music is sung to words by certain defined individuals, and in clear situations, every one knows what it is meant to express. But little is gained by this; for if the music is not beautiful, no heart is warmed by the "Wherefore" being answered; while if, in its beauty, it exercises its power, the force of this power is as wonderful when the music has a substratum of words as when such is not the case. Nay, it becomes even more wonderful, for the power of words, the highest power on earth, vanishes before it.

Who has not experienced the truth of the very common fact, that the most magnificent poem is incapable of producing any effect in a bad composition, while a middling libretto not only does not injure fine music, but, through it, is actually raised into a higher sphere? It is a truth which cannot by any means be disputed, that, in the connection of poetry with music, the immediate and the stronger effect is produced by the latter. When we reproach Wagner with sacrificing far too frequently the really musical to the declamatory element, even in cases when this, in a certain degree, is not at all rendered necessary by the importance of the words, we find, at the same time, an excuse for him in his double capacity of author as well as composer of his dramas. But we must protest against the result of a totally individual endowment, which may be called simultaneously over-complete and incomplete, being elevated into a law—against deficiency being pronounced advancement. Grant that Wagner's example may tend to better lyrical dramas being offered by better authors to the composer; grant that he has taught those German composers, who did not previously know it, that it is not necessary to work on a French or Italian model for the purpose of producing effect; there is certainly no objection to this; but the composers who have sworn allegiance to his banner may rest assured that they will sink into a bottomless abyss, if they do not present us, even on the stage, with what is independently musically beautiful; for besides, and above all the charm exerted by action, legends, figures, and rhyme, men require, if they do hear music, that it shall be genuine music.

But Wagner's successes speak in his favour; he says so himself. Yes and no. After a great many, mostly superfluous, wordy disputes, Wagner's operas have been received into the repertory, where they find a place among the works of the composers of all nations, without affecting the impressions produced by those works—a proof that, on the one hand, they do not differ so very much from the latter, and, on the other, that they are not sufficiently strong to act in a really reformatory manner upon the public taste. This, by the way, Wagner himself confesses, at least as far as Tannhäuser is concerned; for he says, "If I should have the pleasure of seeing my Tannhäuser favourably received by the public of Paris also, I feel sure that I shall owe my success for the most part to the very evident connection of this opera with those of my predecessors, among whom I will particularly remind you of Weber." (The connection between Lohengrin and Weber is perhaps not much less evident.) He hints, however, that Weber made concessions to the "Gallery," while he himself (Wagner) has abstained from so doing. We cannot here enter into the consideration of these concessions, our only object being at present to state the most material views of our author; but if the refusal to make certain concessions is a proof of courage, it is not always a proof of wisdom.

Wagner will not, however, at any price, allow us to expect from his earlier works "the most stringent" of the conditions resulting from his theoretical maxims; he will permit us to do this only in the case of his newest work, Tristan und Isolde, which, although published, has never been performed. "Not," he tells us, "because I formed it according to my system, because all theory was completely forgotten by me, but because, in this case, at last, I proceeded with the greatest freedom, and the most entire disregard of all theoretical considerations, in such a way that, during its execution, I became aware that I soared far above my system." In this opera he has had recourse to the orchestra of the symphonist, and allowed the poet (himself) to call to him:—

"Stretch out your melody boldly, so that it may flow like an uninterrupted stream through the whole work. In it do you say what I pass over in silence, while you alone can say it, and silently will I say everything, because I lead you by the hand.

"In truth, the greatness of the poet is mostly to be measured by what he passes over in silence, in order to allow us, also silently, to say what is inexpressible; it is the musician who converts this silence into clear tones, and the infallible form of his loud-sounding silence is endless melody."(!)

The orchestra is here to assume towards the drama a relation somewhat similar to that taken by the tragic chorus of the Greeks towards the dramatic action; and yet again this is not so; for the relation of the chorus was of a reflective kind, and stood apart from the action, while the orchestra takes a most lively share in all the motives of the latter, and the great total of this symphonic opera (I am giving only a short but accurate outline of what Wagner says) will produce the impression, which nature, full of life, produces, in the forest for instance, with her thousand voices, on him who gives himself up to her.

The score of Tristan und Isolde has been published, and I have read it through as carefully as I could. I should not think, however, of giving an opinion on it now. What completely distinguishes the music of this opera from all that has hitherto been created in the domain of music, is that it contains only slight indications, not of no model-like "opera melody," but of no vocal melody at all. The orchestra forms an unceasing and very complicated web of tone, and gives us by far the principal part of what the composer is attempting to express. If Wagner succeeds in effectively producing this work, we shall, with reason, be able to say of him, that he has done not only what never has been heard, but also what never has been heard of.

I must now notice several detached observations contained in the Letter. Wagner says he wrote his theoretical works in an "abnormal" state, which "oppressed in a strange manner" his brain; and he almost appears to regret what he has penned. It is possible that his operas (if I may be allowed so to designate his dramatic works) would have met with more impartial appreciation without the works in question, but the appreciation would then have been far less noisy. It is not to be disputed that the critics were partly very much opposed to Wagner, though again, on the other hand, it cannot be denied that his partisans filled the press with their laudations in a manner which had never been witnessed even in the case of the greatest productions. When Wagner says that his known operas were so scurvily treated by the musical critics, partly on account of his theories, although these compositions were written before the appearance of his literary works, he should not forget that these very works have been adduced, by his partisans, as proofs of the excellence of his esthetical views. What is right for the one set of men is just for the other.

As people are accustomed to hear Wagner and Liszt mentioned as obeying the same views, the following apothegm of Wagner's, in reference to Liszt's Symphonische Dichtungen, must appear worthy of remark:—"It is not a programme, which excites more than silences the obstructive question as to the 'Wherefore,' which can, therefore, express the importance of the symphony, but only dramatic action itself, scenically carried out."

The ominous expression, "Music of the Future," which forms the title of the Letter, is treated, quite incidentally, as one erroneously derived from the idea of the Kunstwerk der Zukunft. Every one, who has really the interest of music at heart, will be heartily glad to see "the Spectre of the Music of the Future," as Wagner designates it, disappear, and to return to the simple definitions of good and bad, beautiful and trivial music.

Although I have given utterance to only the most inconsiderable portion of the thoughts that the perusal of Wagner's pamphlet have suggested to my mind, I will conclude my letter, which is already, perhaps, far too long. May these hasty lines in some degree help "to dissipate a large amount of error and prejudice," and to bring people back from extreme views, which are calculated to produce more mischief the longer they obtain.

FERDINAND HILLER.

MR. WILLERT BEALE is returned to London from his continental trip, and is making active preparations for the forthcoming tourneé in the provinces.

Digitized by Google

Advertisements.

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE ELEVENTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON

(52ND CONCERT IN ST. JAMES'S HALL)

WILL TAKE PLACE

ON MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 11, 1861,

When the Programme, Vocal and Instrumental, will be exclusively selected from the Works of

BEETHOVEN.

First Appearance since Christmas of MR. SIMS REEVES.

Fifth Appearance of M. VIEUXTEMPS.

PIANIST:—MISS ARABELLA GODDARD.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Grand quartet in C major, No. 9, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Op. 59—No. 3 of the set dedicated to Razoumowski)—by desire—M. VIEUXTEMPS, Herr RIES, M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI—Beethoven; Lieder Kreis (Circle of Songs addressed by a lover to his mistress)—by desire—Mr. SIMS REEVES—Beethoven; Grand sonata, in C minor (Op. 11), for pianoforte alone (the last Sonata of Beethoven) first time at the Monday Popular Concerts, Miss ARABELLA GODDARD—Beethoven.

PART II.—Trio, in C minor, for violin, viola, and violoncello (first time at the Monday Popular Concerts), M. VIEUXTEMPS, M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI—Beethoven; Song, "The stolen kiss," Mr. SIMS REEVES—Beethoven; Grand sonata, in A (Op. 47), for pianoforte and Violin, dedicated to Kreutzer (by unanimous desire), Miss ARABELLA GODDARD and M. VIEUXTEMPS—Beethoven.

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT. To commence at Eight o'Clock precisely.

NOTICE.—It is respectfully requested that such persons as may not be anxious to remain till the end of the performance will leave either before the commencement of the last instrumental piece, or between any two of the movements, so that those who are desirous of hearing the whole may do so without interruption.

 In answer to many inquiries, Mr. S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL begs to state that Mendelssohn's Ottet will be repeated at the 13th Concert (Third Season), on Monday, Feb. 18th; and that, in obedience to a desire very generally expressed, Spohr's Double Quartet, in D minor, will be performed at the 14th Concert, on Monday, Feb. 25.

Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s.

Of CHAPPELL and Co., 50 New Bond Street, and the principal Music-sellers.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—THIS EVENING will be performed Balfe's Opera entitled THE BOHEMIAN GIRL. Principal characters by Mlle. PAREPA and Mad. LEMAIRE; Messrs. SANTLEY, BARTLEMAN, TERROTT, and SWIFT. Conductor, Mr. C. HALLE. To conclude with the pantomime entitled HARLEQUIN AND TOM THUMB; or, Merlin the Magician. Commence at 7.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH. Engagement of Mr. and Mrs. CHARLES KEAN (for Fourteen Nights only).—THIS EVENING (Saturday) Her Majesty's servants will perform the play entitled LOUIS XI, in which Mr. and Mrs. CHARLES KEAN will appear. To conclude with the new, magnificent, and successful Comic Pantomime of PETER WILKINS. Scenery by Beverley.

Upper gallery, 6d.; lower gallery, 1s.; pit, 2s.; upper boxes, 2s.; first circle, 2s. 6d.; dress circle, 5s; stalls, 6s.; private boxes, three guineas, two guineas, and 10s. 6d. Doors open at half-past 6; commence at 7 o'clock. Box-office open from 10 till 5, under the direction of Mr. C. Nugent.

To Correspondents.

ERRATUM.—In the correspondence from Leeds, for "Miss Helena Walker, an excellent unpainstaking soprana, read "an excellent and painstaking soprano."

M. W. (Oxford).—About the volumes of the MUSICAL WORLD there is a difficulty, the present publishers having only commenced publishing it in 1854. With reference to Her Majesty's Theatre, we should say that just now there was no chance of either of the contingencies hinted at by our correspondent.

G. B. A. (Dublin).—The pieces have not come to hand.

E. B. (Norwich).—The publication alluded to has never reached us.

HARMONICA.—We are acquainted with no special work of the kind, but any primer teaches how to know in what key a piece of music is written; that is, of course, if our correspondent means on paper. If he means by ear, he must consult Providence. That secret is beyond human explanation. The faculty is either born with us, or not—or it comes, sooner or later, or not; but how or why is a mystery. The lady's age may be calculated pretty accurately when it is stated that she was 21 in 1842.

NOTICES.

TO ADVERTISERS.—Advertisers are informed, that for the future the Advertising Agency of the THE MUSICAL WORLD is established at the Magazine of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyle Street (First Floor). Advertisements can be received as late as Three o'Clock P.M., on Fridays—but not later. Payment on delivery.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2s. 6d.
Every additional line (10 words) ... ... 6d.

TO PUBLISHERS AND COMPOSERS.—All Music for Review in THE MUSICAL WORLD must henceforward be forwarded to the Editor, care of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244 Regent Street. A List of every Piece sent for Review will appear on the Saturday following in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

TO CONCERT GIVERS.—No Benefit-Concert, or Musical Performance, except of general interest, unless previously Advertised, can be reported in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1861.

THE new cantata of Messrs. H. F. Chorley and Henry Leslie, produced on the 1st inst., at St. James's Hall, deserves more than the mere record of its success, which will be found in another part of this day's impression. The scene is the court of Mary at Holyrood. The Queen, but lately returned from France, is with difficulty aroused from a fit of melancholy by a concert of vocal music, which the ladies and gentlemen of her retinue impovise for her diversion. Unmoved by the strains of a genuine Scottish ballad from the lips of her favourite, Mary Beatoun (one of the "four Marys"), the royal heart only yields to the persuasive melody of an Italian canzonet which David Rizzio sings in the Italian tongue, so charming the Queen that, inspired herself in turn, she graciously responds to her favourite minstrel with a snatch of the melody of France—a ballad in which the attractions of that "plaisant pays" are set forth one by one in glowing colours. Song, now, at Mary's desire, gives way to dance; and a minuet is executed by the Queen and her associates to the accompaniment of a choral "Fal, lal, la," &c. The cheerful revels are unexpectedly arrested by the sounds of a Puritan psalm from without, the purport of which may be explained in Mr. Chorley's own lines:—

"O thou who sittest on the throne,
And wilt exalt thine horn on high,
While captive men in prison groan,
And women poor of hunger die,
Beware! albeit a Haman proud,
Served by thy slaves on bended knee,
The heaven can speak in thunder loud,
And rent to dust both them and thee."

Mary, paying but little heed to this solemn warning, after a moment's pause, orders the dance to be resumed; which is accordingly done, in quicker step, to music of an animated character, and with laughing chorus, as before. A second time, however, in still more dismal tones, the Puritanic voices are lifted up; and the Queen has scarcely time to express surprise at the intrusion, when she is confronted by the chief of the offenders, the sombre Knox himself. Untouched by the fascination of the royal presence, and indifferent to the blandishments of the Queen—who receives him courteously, as one,

"by name and nature known
For his honest speech unsparing,
For his faith sincere and daring"— the fierce reformer launches his denunciations with unflinch-

Digitized by Google

ing vigour, becoming—like the witches in Macbeth, though in language less mysterious and symbolical—considerably more prophetic than polite. Thus, at Mary's own solicitation, does John Knox sum up her "future":—

"After bridal cometh murder,
Murder of a bridegroom sleeping,
Anguish feigned and wicked weeping
His detested corse beside.

After murder cometh battle,
Battle with a people's anger,
Quick escape from fearful danger,
Shameful rout and midnight ride.

After battle cometh prison,
Prison under Scottish warder,
Prison past proud England's border,
For the pale, thrice-wedded bride.

After prison cometh scaffold,
Scaffold in a castle stranger,
With the axe of the avenger,
Laying low the false one's pride."

These ominous forewarnings, nevertheless, fail of their intended effect. The Queen, instead of consigning the insolent intruder to prison, allows him to depart in peace, and reassures herself with the somewhat vague consolation that his words are but "a cloud unclean." Thus jauntily she dismisses him:—

"Sir, farewell! enough to-day!
You would preach, and we not pray.
* * * * *
Let him go, and hear our laughter!
Mirth to-day, whate'er come after!"

The relentless Puritan departs amid contempt and obloquy, and the cantata terminates with a choral apostrophe to the perfections and fortunes of the Queen—"Scotland's Lily-flower," whom "Darksome care shall fly," and "Time not dare come nigh." In spite of the license which Mr. Chorley has permitted himself with regard to John Knox, an occasional stiffness in the versification,—ex. gra.,—

"A hand of fire was on the wall
To stop Belshazzar's impious feast,
Which told how monarchs' crown must fall,
Because had ancient empire ceased."— and a general leaning towards quaintness of expression in the use of quasi-obsolete words, such as "shaw" for grove —ex. gra.,—

"The mavis carols in the shaw"—

Holyrood is, we think, his best lyric production. The four characters—the Queen, Mary Beatoun, Rizzio, and Knox (soprano, contralto, tenor, and bass)—are skilfully portioned out, and happily contrasted with a view to musical treatment; and had the prophecy of Mary's crimes and fate—which is wholly repulsive to the unexciting (but by no means uninteresting) character of the rest—been omitted, there would be little fault to find. In selecting the period of Mary's innocent life, Mr. Chorley would, we suggest, have done more wisely, and carried out the ends of poetry more legitimately, had he abstained from all hint of the terrible future, and confined the part of John Knox within the limits furnished by history. We should then have had an unsullied picture, and a far more agreeable one, while the composer would not have been saddled with a task from which (with the context in view) Meyerbeer himself would have recoiled.

Mr. Henry Leslie, too, in the music of Holyrood, has written what, in our opinion, if not his most ambitious, is in a great measure decidedly his most genial and spontaneous. As a mere composition, there is very little in the work against which criticism could take exception; while in expression it is invariably unaffected and real, only falling short at that one incident which, as we have already said, had better be left out. He has treated the situation where the Queen's revels are interrupted by the Puritan singers admirably, adding both force and solemnity to the repetition of the psalm-tune (a very good one), by enriching the accompaniment (a so-called "moving bass")—which at first (like the tune itself) is in unison—with harmony. His dance-music in both instances is excellent; the minuet (with its pretty vocal trio, "Fal, lal, la") being as sober and stately as the quick step—appropriately ushered in by an imaginary bagpipe, and introducing, as in duty bound, those "consecutive fifths" recognised as a traditional inheritance of Scottish dance-music—is bustling and lively. The whole of this scene, indeed—to make use of an old phrase—is "musick'd" with an unflagging spirit. The three songs, too, have each their individual merit and marked character. The pretty ballad of Mary Beatoun, "There was once a a maiden," would, however, be just as acceptable without the melodic jerk at the end of each verse, which does not render it a bit more Scotch, or a bit more engaging. Rizzio's canzonet, "Colla stagion novella" (words by L. Carrer), is on a larger plan, and naturally of a more refined character. It consists of a graceful slow movement and vigorous allegro, evidently modelled on the Italian manner, though (in the case of the first especially) rather modern Italian than what may be supposed to have been Italian in the time of Rizzio. But best of all is Mary's French ditty, "In my pleasant land of France," in which are most effectively alternated a plaintive minor theme, and a melody waltz time, ending in the major, the whole set off with a gay and brilliant peroration (coda). The duet for the Queen and Knox, "E'en if earth should wholly fail me," a sequel to the incident of the prophecy, is vocal, melodious, and impressive, a grateful relief, moreover, to the gloomy matter that precedes it. The recitatives, solo or in dialogue, are everywhere well composed, and show Mr. Leslie an adept in the art of putting vocal declamation to music. Equally worthy of praise are the choruses, whether the short and in some degree fragmentary ones, "Will she not listen?" and "Hark! 'tis her foot," the unison psalm-tune of the Puritans, already named, or the more extended pieces which commence and terminate the work—"The mavis carols in the shaw," and "Hence, with evil omen," the first (in three divisions, with solo for contralto, after the Scotch manner) tuneful and eminently pastoral at the outset, expanding in vigorous treatment and interest with the allusions to the Queen—the last appropriately jubilant and lively throughout, both (like all the rest of the cantata, by the way) instrumented for the orchestra with unvarying skill and proportionate effect.

Here we must desist, with a promise to return to the subject. Holyrood is worth a second hearing.

—♦—

IT is a good saying, "the right man in the right place." It is also a good saying, "the right thing in the right place." The managers of both our English Operas have fallen into the mistake that pantomime would succeed in a theatre devoted to musical performances. They have found out their error by this time, and in all probability, in future, the fortunes of Harlequin, Clown, Pantaloon, and Columbine will be transferred in perpetuo from her Majesty's Theatre and Covent Garden to Drury Lane and the minor theatres. Indeed, this is a consummation devoutly to be wished for by all true lovers of music. Already mischief enough has been done to the art by these Christmas baby-shows, excellent entertainments in their place, no doubt, but not at all fit to serve in conjunction with music.

Digitized by Google

What was the immediate effect of the pantomime at her Majesty's Theatre? Mr. Sims Reeves refused to sing; Robin Hood was withdrawn in consequence, in the midst of a triumphant success; some fourth-rate French opera was attempted to be foisted on the public; the natural result of all being a beggarly account of empty boxes. Now, be it understood, this was no fault of the pantomime, which was in every way a good pantomime of its thumps and faces, and which obtained the applause of the entire press. But the whole affair seemed awry to the public mind. The frequenters of the Opera doubtless cared little for the tricks of Harlequin and his troupe, under any conditions, and many would take offence at having music made a stepping-stone to folly and nonsense. There is a great deal, too, in custom. We like champagne in its proper glass, and would not drink ale from pewter. It seemed almost a desecration, in an abstract sense, to behold her Majesty's Theatre converted into a song-room for "hot codlins;" to hear the shrill squeak of Pantaloon where Pasta and Rubini sang; or follow the impossible feats of some muscular family over the same boards, where Taglioni, Carlotta Grisi, and Pocchini swam before the ken. It is impossible to divest ourselves of these associations, and in such regard a theatre may be as sacred as a church. The aristocracy, moreover, when they have waived the banner of their patronage around a place of entertainment, do not like to see it made too common; and what can make a theatre more common than a Christmas pantomime? Mr. E. T. Smith proved himself too much of a reformer, too much of an anti-monopolist? He thought he did everything for the best—everthing to please the general public. This was his error. Her Majesty's Theatre was not constituted to please the general, but the particular, public. Let Mr. Smith try back, to speak in hunting parlance; he may come upon the traces of the game he has lost, and, with his splendid pack, may yet have a long and magnificent run.

What was the immediate effect of the pantomime at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden? The withdrawal of Mr. Balfe's new opera, Bianca, which had been running a most successful career, and promised, like Lurline and Satanella, to make the fortune of the theatre. Did Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison really believe that the pantomime would prove as attractive as Bianca? At the best, it was parting with a certainty for an uncertainty; and now assuredly they regret not having adhered to the opera which everybody was so anxious to hear. It may be said that the success of the pantomime last year warranted the highest expectations this year on the part of the Royal English Opera directors; but even that success was gained at the sacrifice of Mr. Wallace's opera, which, up to the close of the season at Christmas, continued to draw all London, and which, when reproduced towards the end of the run of the pantomime, went comparatively out of favour. The London public does not like to be trifled with and tantalised. What else can we call it when we find managers in the very zenith of a success, when curiosity and anxiety are on the stretch, withdrawing a piece which all praise and every one desires to hear? The pantomime at Covent Garden has been no less injurious than that at her Majesty's Theatre. In both cases the managers have to blame themselves. They set aside a positive attraction to make room for that which could only be doubtful, and reckoned upon the first success being resumed at leisure, though all previous facts had proved the contrary.

What remedy to commend to the directors of the two English Operas, unless an entire repudiation of the Christmas entertainment, we know not. It appears to us that operas and pantomimes are incompatible, not because the sentiments they create are opposite, but because they are antagonistic. The opera appeals to a class of the public the very antipodes of that which pantomime does. No manager can expect to conciliate at the same time two distinct audiences of entirely different tastes and feelings. As well have two separate entertainments at once. Like oil and water, opera and pantomime will not coalesce. By shaking them violently together, they may be made to form a seemingly homogeneous substance of a disagreeable colour; but allow them to rest, the water subsides, the oil ascends, and each retakes the transparency and brightness which constituted its original attraction. Let the managers of the English Operas draw their inference from the meeting and separation of the oil and water.

IN all the biographies of Carl Maria von Weber, the 18th December, 1786, is fixed on as the day of his birth, and it is certain that he himself considered and kept it as such.

The same date is adopted, likewise, in an angry letter written by Weber, then thirteen, on the occasion of his first operatic attempt, Das Waldmädchen, (subsequently worked up into the opera of Sylvana) in Freyberg, to J. G. F., the Cantor, or singing-master of the place. In this letter, Weber replies as follows to an assertion made by the Cantor on the 24th January, 1801:—"That I was born at half-past ten o'clock, p.m., on the 18th December, 1787, is proved by my baptismal certificate; therefore, I am not merely nominally but actually thirteen."—In this instance, by mentioning the year 1787 instead of 1786, he made himself out a year younger. Weber's date agrees, therefore, neither in the day nor year, with the tablet erected against the house where he was born, in the Lübecker Strasse, Eutin, and which was first uncovered on the 12th September, 1853.

The inscription on this tablet runs thus:

"In this house was born
CARL MARIA VON WEBER.
Baptized at Eutin, 20th November, 1786.
Died in London, 5th June, 1826."

On referring to the notice which appeared in No. 533, page 180, of the Illustrirte Zeitung of the 17th September, 1853, we read:—"that the composer's father, Franz Anton von Weber, was summoned to Eutin in 1785, and that, shortly after his appointment there in 1786, his son, Carl Maria, was born. The child's birthday is not, however, mentioned in the parish register, but only the day on which he was christened, namely the 20th November, from which it may be concluded that Carl Maria von Weber was born on the 18th November, because it was then the rule at Eutin that children should be christened on the third day after they were born."

MR JOHN COOPER.—This veteran actor, whom most playgoers, whatever be their age, will recollect as one of the well-tested props of the "legitimate" drama, has at last retired from the stage, which has become to him a second nature through a service of 40 years. But from his other profession, that of a teacher of elocution, in which he has acquired equal celebrity, he does not retire, and he has warned the public not to confound one retirement with the other.

HERR BECKER, the eminent violinist, has returned to London from his native town, Strasburg, where, our readers will be happy to learn, he has been thoroughly cured of the effects of his late serious accident which had almost threatened him with blindness. Herr Becker will again share the post of "leader" with Mr. H. Blagrove at the Philharmonic Concerts.

Digitized by Google

WHAT WAGNER MEANS BY HIS LAST LETTER.

(Communicated.)

IN his last work, "Quatre Poèmes d'opéras, précédés d'une lettre sur la Musique," Libraire Nouvelle, Paris 1861, he clearly explains his views. He maintains that the libretto must be a well written poem,—the poet must have liberty to use whatever verse metre he fancies best suited to the expression of the subject,—the music must express the sentiment of the poem, or rather aid the poem in that expression. He is deep in his admiration of Beethoven, concerning melody; he maintains that the operatic melody should have a symphonic character. ("History of Melody.") Greek music was associated with the dance, the poem and melody were ruled by a dance rhythm.

With the first Christian communities dance rhythm was thrown aside as something profane, hence the monotony of Gregorian chant.

Harmony was introduced later by the school of Italian ecclesiastical music, which gave it a certain accent, as rhythm had done with Greek music. At the rise of the Italian opera, the composers sought rhythm by the easiest means, gave it a dance rhythm, which did not accord with modern verse metre, as that had grown up with the church music without rhythm. Italian opera composers left away harmony, which was a characteristic of the ecclesiastical school. IN Germany, church music developed itself—but harmony was retained. The Germans also reintroduced dance rhythm, such as it had been perpetuated all along in the national dances; from this combination arose the symphony perfected by the immortal Beethoven.

Mozart, Glück, &c., composed operas in the Italian style. German music developed itself in symphony not opera. Wagner now introduces this symphonic system into the opera, which seems to be natural and rational.

P.S.—National dances contain a dramatic action — some love story, and dance that action, true sister of opera—may be idealised ad libitum. Where is modern ballet?

GNAT.

[Bravissimo!—"Gnat."]

HULLAH FUND.

THE concert given on Monday at Covent Garden Theatre, in aid of the Hullah Fund, was much better attended than the entertainment of last week in St. James's Hall. The house was tolerably well filled, and the audience exhibited more enthusiasm than is usually shown at morning performances. The programme, indeed, was of unusual excellence for a benefit concert, and of refreshing shortness. The ladies who gave their services were:—Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, who sang her favourite shadow song from Dinorah, with all her accustomed brilliancy; Mad. Catherine Hayes, who executed the vocal polka from Le Tre Nozze, which Signor Alary has wedded to such strangely inappropriate words, and also her eternal "Last Rose of Summer;" Mad. Laura Baxter, who selected Mozart's "Voi che sapete," the native freshness of which time cannot impair; and the canzonetta, "Fanciulle che il core," from Meyerbeer's last opera; last, not least, Mrs. Sims Reeves, who now never appears in public except on some rare occasion of special interest. It was therefore doubly graceful on her part to come forward in so good a cause as a testimonial to Mr. Hullah, as the audience, by their warm reception, seemed anxious to testify. Mrs. Reeves selected the delicious "Breeze song" from Auber's Haidée, which we have had so few opportunities of hearing since she deserted our concert rooms. Mr. Sims Reeves displayed his taste in choosing the wonderfully expressive air from Gluck's Iphigenia, which he gave with exquisite feeling. His singing was no less admirable, though in opposite style, in "Come, if you dare." He was encored with enthusiasm in Purcell's fine air, but he declined to accept the compliment until the amusing obstinacy of the choristers, who seemed as anxious as the audience to hear the song repeated, and who remained on the stage for that purpose, left him no alternative but to yield. Mr. Thomas, the only other male vocalist, sang "Non più andrai;" M. Sainton played with power and feeling a fantasia of his own, introducing several of the most expressive and touching melodies of Rigoletto; and Mr. Hallé performed with his usual energy the G minor concerto of Mendelssohn, in which, by-the-by, the orchestral accompaniments were so admirably performed that they never for a moment overpowered the touch of the supple-fingered pianist. The instrumentalists had a still better opportunity of displaying, both in the overture Beethoven wrote to the Men of Prometheus—the ballet in which, as some German writer says, the Titan is put into tights, and made to dance—and the elaborate prelude to Dinorah. The thanks of Mr. Hullah's committee are due to Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison for the use of the theatre; to the orchestra and chorus of the establishment, and to Mr. Alfred Mellon, for their kindness in offering their valuable services, no less than to the principal vocalists.

PRINCE GALITZIN'S CONCERTS.

THE concert recently held by Prince George Galitzin in St. James's Hall, was one of remarkable and varied excellence. A first-rate band, led by that practised English violinist, Mr. Willy; a chorus, exclusively of amateurs, giving the music set down, for them as perfectly as though they had been a body of expert professors; and solo singers, thoroughly up to their work, constituted the executive force. The programme had the double merit of being excellent in itself and almost entirely new; and this, combined with the unquestionable talent of Prince Galitzin, whether regarded in the light of composer or conductor, stamped the whole entertainment as one of genuine and uncommon interest.

A large part of the selection consisted of Russian music. Prince Galitzin had already afforded the English public an opportunity of estimating the purely national genius of Bortnianski at its proper value. No. 7 of the Cherubim's Songs was heard with unequivocal satisfaction in June, 1860; and on Wednesday night No. 6 ("Adoramus"), from the same original and striking series, justified all the praises lavished on its companion. The music of the Russian church more than three quarters of a century ago elicited the lively sympathy of foreigners. From Sarti, Cimarosa, Galuppi, and Paesielo—the four most renowned Italians who, by munificent offers, were persuaded to visit and compose for the Russian capital—to Boieldieu, "the French Mozart," as he has been not unfairly styled, and who wrote several operas for the Russian stage, we hear nothing but eulogistic allusions to its simplicity and grandeur. Of all the Russian composers for the church, Bortnianski was the most justly eminent. Although a serf in the Ukraine, he had a generous master, who, struck with his early aptitude, sent him to Rome to study under Galuppi; and not the least merit in Bortnianski was, that after his return from Italy, when appointed chorus-master to the Imperial Chapel, he rendered himself famous by the production of music as unlike that of Galuppi as possible. But this same Bortnianski possessed undoubted genius; and it is a fair question whether, if Galuppi had gone to Russia, to practise with Bortnianski, instead of Bortnianski going to Italy to practise with Galuppi, there would have been much difference in the end. The music of the Russian has an earnestness to which that of the somewhat trivial and (not quite undeservedly) forgotten Italian can lay no pretension. Another Russian composer was brought forward on Wednesday night by Prince Galitzin. We allude to Lamakin, whose works, though for the most part existing in manuscript, are highly esteemed, and—as the well-written and extremely interesting comments on the programme remind us—marked "by a simple and devotional character rarely obtained except by the greatest masters." The chorus of Lamakin presented on this occasion illustrates one of the most solemn incidents of High Mass, and is a very favourable specimen of his manner. The most striking features of Prince Galitzin's proconcert, nevertheless, were the vocal and instrumental selections from Glinka, who, as a musical composer, is to Russia what Mozart is to Germany, Rossini to Italy, Auber to France, Gomez to Spain, and Bishop to England. Glinka is not only the greatest genius of Russia, but universally accepted as the national composer of that country. Of his opera, Life for the Tzar, we have spoken, more than once, and we were positively charmed with the air, "Wittern Warheit," introduced for the first time on the present occasion, and well suited to the magnificent bass voice and energetic delivery of Herr Joseph Hermanns, whose impersonation of the Commendatore at her Majesty's Theatre made so great an impression in the summer. A "Persian chorus"—so called, the melody being pronounced of Persian origin—afforded some idea of Glinka's second opera, Rousslan and Loudmila, which many connoisseurs even go so far as to prefer to his Life for the Tzar. Into this question it is unnecessary to enter, but if all the rest of Rousslan and Loudmila equals the "Persian chorus," it must be a work of a high and imaginative class. The chorus is for women's voices, and the ladies of the choir may be fairly complimented for the unexceptionable style in which it was given. Not satisfied with presenting his favourite as an operatic composer, Prince Galitzin enriched his programme with a "page" from Glinka's instrumental works, in shape of a scherzo for orchestra, entitled Kamarinskaia. This—in its way, as genuine a masterpiece as could be heard—is founded on two national melodies, the one a popular air frequently sung at betrothals, the other an ancient Russian dance-tune. The orchestration is as fanciful as the themes are graceful, piquant, and suggestive, and the conduct of the entire movement just as ingenious. It was played by the band to absolute perfection, enthusiastically redemanded, and repeated. A brighter example of Glinka's skill and invention as a composer for the orchestra could hardly have been picked out, although—as doubtless, in forthcoming concerts, Prince Galitzin will make the English public aware—some of the great Russian musican's so-called "fantasia-overtures" are well worth an attentive hearing. A "selection" from the first act of Life for the Tzar—in which (after the manner of the late M. Jullien's pot-pourris) several of the most striking themes and musical situations are interweaved—and a vocal trio, called "Les quatre soupirs" (sung, and well sung, by Miss Susannah Cole, Miss Lascelles, and Mr. Henry, were the other specimens from Glinka. The "selection," arranged for the orchestra with masterly skill by Prince Galitzin, was splendidly executed, the solos (for flute, oboe, cornet, and ophicleide) by Messrs. Pratten, Lavigne, Levy, and Hughes, being warmly and repeatedly applauded.

Digitized by Google

Some pieces of Prince Galitzin's own composition afforded unequivocal pleasure, and among these may especially be named the Chanson Bohemienne, with solos for contralto voice and oboe (Miss Lascelles and M. Lavigne)—the melody of which strongly recalls the principal theme in the passionate last movement of Beethoven's quartet in A minor—a delicious polka, entitled Lelia, as short and concise as it is sparkling; and the Russian Quadrille, founded on the national airs, "Sontze na zakate" ("The sun is setting"), "Mnié markatso molodieneki," &c.—the last and most vigorous of which, Glinka's own Russian hymn, introduced at the end of his Life for the Tzar, excited the utmost enthusiasm and was unanimously encored. A more effective and brillant production of its class than this Russian Quadrille has not been heard for years, nor could a finer performance have been desired, even by the composer himself.

Last, not least (to end with the beginning), the concert opened with Beethoven's grand and truly superb overture in C major (Op. 124), prepared for the inauguration of the Josephstadt Theatre at Vienna, on the occasion of the Emperor of Austria's fête (1822). This overture was dedicated by Beethoven himself to Prince Nicholas Galitzin (Prince George Galitzin's father); to whom also were inscribed, and for whom were expressly composed, the three renowned quartets ("Posthumous"—as they have been incorrectly styled) in E flat, B flat, and A minor—Op. 127, 130, and 132. The execution of the overture, under the Prince's direction, was quite worthy its transcendent merits, and inaugurated with appropriate "pomp and circumstance" an entertainment which must have interested and throughly satisfied every amateur present. Prince George Galitzin cannot be too highly praised for his manner of conducting, which is at once clear, emphatic, and thoroughly musician-like. He takes rank, in short, with the ablest orchestral directors of the day.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.—If there was less of novelty in the programme of the last concert, the selection was, at any rate, quite as unexceptionable as any that had gone before, and afforded as great gratification to an audience numerous and attentive as ever. Some change in the arrangement was necessitated by the unavoidable absence of Miss Arabella Goddard, the cause of which, we regretted to learn, from a circular in the programme, and from a short and well-delivered speech of Mr. Benedict, was indisposition. Signor Piatti, however, kindly volunteered Bach's prelude, Sarabande and Gavotte, which he has rendered so popular, and which was given, of course, to perfection. We hope, nevertheless, on a future occasion to hear Handel's Suite de Pièces in F major, which had been intended for the pianoforte solo. Mendelssohn's quartet in D major (Op. 44) must be always welcome to the lovers of genuine music, and worthily did duty for the trio (No. 2) in C minor, originally set down as the concluding piece. Schubert's quartet in D minor (given for the first time on January 14th) was again received with all the enthusiasm that a Monday Popular audience so well knows how to express. A second hearing of this work fully confirms our high opinion of its merits. The allegro, the scherzo, the presto, each remarkable for individual beauty, were all played superbly; but it was in the exquisite andante, with variations, where the violoncello of Piatti rivalled the fiddle of Vieuxtemps, that the genius of Schubert was felt in the fullest degree; and long and earnest was the applause that followed the conclusion of this truly expressive movement. It would be an injustice to Messrs. Ries and Schreurs, who held the second violin and viola, not to make honourable mention of their efficient aid in this very fine performance. M. Vieuxtemps, in his solo—Tartini's Trillo del Diavolo—proved himself a veritable magician with his instrument, and the word marvellous could alone express the feeling of all who listened to this extraordinary display of skill. The pianoforte accompaniment (executed by Mad. Vieuxtemps) was faultless. Mad. Louisa Vinning contributed two pieces—Dussek's "Now summer has departed," * heard for the first time (a fresh and charming composition), and Haydn's well-known "Mermaid's Song." Miss Lascelles' rich contralto gave great effect to Beethoven's "In questa tomba oscura," and Henry Smart's delicious ballad, "Come back to me," † the solemnity of the first contrasting effectively with the graceful feeling of the last. Mr. Benedict was, as a matter of course, the conductor. Next Monday's programme is peculiarly rich in attractions, embracing Beethoven's last pianoforte sonata (Op. 111) for Miss Arabella Goddard, the famous Kreutzer sonata by M. Vieuxtemps and the accomplished pianist just named, and the Lieder "Kreis and Adelaide" for Mr. Sims Reeves. C.

MR. HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.—Not merely was the entire programme at the second concert (on Friday evening, Feb. 1st), good, but a sometime promised novelty of more than ordinary pretensions was included, in the shape of a cantata from the pen of Mr. Henry Leslie himself. The title of the new work—which (we may at once record) was entirely successful—is Holyrood. The poem, by Mr. H. F. Chorley, although constructed out of very slight materials, comprises more than one situation well adapted for musical treatment. In another column, however, will be found what we have to say at present both about words and music. It is enough here to mention the flattering reception accorded to Holyrood, and briefly chronicle the merits of the execution. In this first performance of a new composition, the members of Mr. Leslie's Choir covered themselves with honour. Every movement of the conductor's bâton was anxiously observed, and very few points, in consequence, were left open to objection. Mr. Leslie was also lucky in the possession of such accomplished solo singers as Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Palmer, Messrs. Wilbye Cooper, and Weiss, who all did their very best, and were in every instance entitled to the composer's warmest acknowledgments. Madame Sherrington has never sung with more brilliant effect; her French air ("In my pleasant Land of France"), which created a "furore," was a masterpiece of taste and facile execution combined. Miss Palmer gave both her solos, and especially the ballad of Mary Beatoun ("There was once a maiden"), in a style quite irreproachable; Mr. Wilbye Cooper displayed his refined artistic feeling to the greatest advantage in Rizzio's Italian canzonet ("Colla stagion novella"); and the superb bass voice and admirably emphatic delivery of Mr. Weiss brought out the solemn phrases allotted to John Knox, in the prophecy and elsewhere, with a weight and dignity that left nothing to desire.

* "Monday Popular Concerts' Library" (Vocal Department).
† Ibid.

Digitized by Google

The duet for the Queen and the Puritan, ("Even if earth should wholly fail me"), between this gentleman and Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, was altogether faultless, and elicited the most rapturous applause. The success of Holyrood was decided, and the composer who, of course, directed its performance, was unanimously summoned at the end, and enthusiastically applauded by one of the largest audiences ever assembled in St. James's Hall. A few words must suffice for the second part of the concert, which began with a clever performance of Professor Sterndale Bennett's graceful and masterly Caprice in E major for pianoforte with orchestra, the solo player being Miss Cazaly, who though one of the most distinguished members of the Vocal Choir, is also a pianist of equal talent and promise. Mr. Henry Smart's beautiful "Ave Maria," a great favourite here, was sung in the usual manner, and as usual encored; the same honour having been previously conferred upon one of the magnificent sacred pieces composed by Mendelssohn for the Berlin cathedral—a setting of the 43rd Psalm for eight-part choir, the execution of which may be briefly described as the most faultless ever achieved by Mr. Leslie's singers, and probably one of the most faultless ever heard. The enthusiasm created by this performance was unbounded. A quintet from Mozart's Cosi fan tutte, ("Di scrivermi ogni giorno"), in which the principal singers already named, with the addition of Mr. Henry, took part; together with the unaccompanied trio (Mad. Sherrington, Mr. Percy and Miss Palmer) and subsequent chorus from Elijah (rather out of place), completed the programme.

M. MUSARD'S CONCERTS.—A series of Promenade Concerts, to last for one month, was commenced on Saturday night at St. James's Hall, under the direction of M. Musard. Jullien has had no successor, and there seems to be a good opening for a man of enterprise and talent to turn his attention to the organisation of Promenade Concerts, and devote to this one object the enthusiastic energy of that famous chef d'orchestre. We should not overlook Jullien's zeal in ransacking all Europe in search for talent; nor must we forget that he was the first to invite the general public to an acquaintance with the highest forms of musical art. At first sight it would seem that M. Musard is well calculated to succeed his late countryman. All frequenters of Paris must remember the large room of the Hotel d'Osmond, in the Rue Basse du Rempart, in which the "Concerts Musard" nightly took place. This portion, by the by, of the Boulevard des Capucines—opposite the Rue de la Paix—is now a waste of débris, but the spot is shortly to be adorned by the new Académie de Musique and a gigantic carvanserai, to rival the Hôtel du Louvre in magnificence and extent. In the summer months M. Musard's orchestra attracts large numbers to his gaily lighted garden behind the Palace de l'Industrie. Besides the advantages the new candidate may be supposed to have derived from his father's long experience, he has himself had great practice in conducting. But, if we are to judge by the programmes presented during the week, he is not very likely to attain the high position which rewarded Jullien's exertions. He seems, indeed, to be possessed with the erroneous notions of his countrymen on the subject of musical education and taste in England. The programme of any one night is just such a selection as M. Musard would have arranged for his concerts in the Champs Elysées, and the conductor evidently labours under the impression that music —if the "grand pot-pourri" which formed the pièce de résistance of the evening is to be dignified with the name—which is just fit for a Parisian flâneur to listen to as he smokes his cigar on a summer's evening in the open air, is good enough for an English audience at St. James's Hall. Now, he could scarcely have committed a greater mistake. With all their boasted taste, and facility for writing light pieces, our lively neighbours are far behind us in their estimation of good music; and in the second, St. James's Hall is emphatically the most musical place in London. In fact, there is more first class music devoutly listened to in that one room in a month than is performed—and not listened to—in Paris in a whole year. An outline of last week's proceedings will, we imagine, satisfy even M. Musard of the truth of our assertion. On Monday, at the Popular Concerts, the famous Ottetto of Mendelssohn, the mere mechanical difficulty of which prevents its frequent performance, was played in a style which could not possibly be surpassed, and was listened to with an attention and applauded with an enthusiasm that nothing less exciting than the barking of M. Offenbach's Roi Barkouf, the canine hero of his last opera, could have elicited from a miscellaneous audience of the metropolis of France. On Tuesday we had M. Benedict's graceful and charming Undine; on Wednesday the unknown music of Russia received the most earnest attention from the audience, and the most cordial appreciation; and on Friday a new cantata by a talented native musician, and one of the most admirable choral performances ever heard of compositions by Mendelsshon, the greatest genius of our time, and the composer who has, therefore, always failed to command attention in Paris—completed the musical operations of the week.

To detail the various programmes would be a waste of time. They consist, for the most part, of variations for different instruments—in every case executed with very remarkable skill, but tiresome from their constant repetition, and dance music that depends upon some trick for effect. Such, for instance, as the polka entitled "The Kisses," in which that osculatory feat, pleasant though it be in practice seemed to us "very poor wit," when performed by the gentlemen of an orchestra; and the quadrille, "Les Echos," in which the variations for clarionet, cornet-à-pistons, and piccolo appeared repeated by other instruments in some adjoining room. The arrangement of the air "Tu vedrai Sventurata," from Il Pirata, with variations for three trombones in unison, has, at least, the merit of originality. The pieces of most interest and novelty combined, given during the week, were two marches by Richard Wagner — that from Tannhäuser, and that from Lohengrin — called in the programme "March of the Intended,"— comprising the wedding chorus, which was performed by the Philharmonic Society, during Wagner's short-lived reign over that respectable body. The one really classical piece was the overture to Guillaume Tell, the violoncello part of which in the first movement was admirably played by M. Lemoury, and the general performance would have been irreproachable but for the predominance of the brass instruments. There were no less than eighteen instruments of brass and percussion in an orchestra of something over sixty performers,—a large proportion, though not unusual in France. The solo performances of M. Lalliet (oboe), M. de Vroye (flute), M. Barey (piccolo) M. Fabre (clarionet) M. Delpech (cornet-à-piston) M. Moreau (ophecleide), and MM. François, Richir and Quentin (trombones), were all remarkably fine; while M. Legendre's execution on the cornet has scarcely been surpassed. Signor Valsovani sings the Garibaldi Hymn every evening, to the evident satisfaction of the audience.

Letters to the Editor.

SIR,—Passing through a country lane near Hampstead this morning, I was greatly amused by the display of musical talent on the part of a dog's meat vendor, who thus proclaimed his wares:—

I retained the melody for the amusement of your readers, if you like to print it.

As a melodic form, it is really not so bad, and perhaps some learned antiquarian can inform me if it is an old street cry, or what would be still more curious, a display of talent on the part of the purveyor. The long pause and the perfect cadence at the end greatly enhanced the effect.—I am, Sir, yours truly,

CHARLES EDWARD HORSLEY.

St. James's Hall, Feb. 2nd, 1861.

AUGMENTED INTERVALS.

SIR,—As an augmented interval generally is marked 𝄪 or 𝄫, why should a × or 𝄫 not be signed like 𝄪 or 𝄫?—Yours, &c.

Belfast. L. K.

Digitized by Google

The Opera.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The revival of Robin Hood on Tuesday, with Mr. Sims Reeves' reappearance, attracted by far the largest audience since the Christmas holidays. Such an attendance, indeed, must have forcibly presented to Mr. Smith's imagination the loss he had sustained by not giving Mr. Macfarren's opera, in conjunction with the pantomime, up to the present time. That this arrangement was not a part of the managerial system is generally believed; but, whatever the cause, the interruption to Robin Hood injured the theatre, and did good to nobody. Mr. Sims Reeves could not appear in the opera immediately after Christmas, having previously contracted numerous provincial engagements. Had Mr. Macfarren's opera continued its career uninterruptedly from the beginning, it would, we do not doubt, have made a vast difference, in a pecuniary sense, to Mr. Smith, for which reason, if for no other, its temporary suspension was to be regretted. Let us hope, nevertheless, that Robin Hood may obtain a new lease of public favour. Indeed the performance of Tuesday night points to such an issue as not unlikely. The audience were as delighted as ever with the music, and never applauded with greater enthusiasm. Mr. Sims Reeves never sang more superbly, or with more uniform success. "My own, my guiding star," was so vociferously and unanimously redemanded, that the singer was forced into a compromise, and had to come forward to acknowledge the honour. Even then the call for a repetition was persisted in—but in vain. The great tenor's triumph, however, was not confined to his love-song, but equally conspicuous in the national airs, "Englishmen by birth are free," and "The grasping, rasping Norman race," and the grand air in the prison scene, in which he "surpassed himself." Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington appeared to have gained fresh brilliancy and power by her long rest from the fatigues of the stage. She sang throughout with the greatest effect, and created a furor in the grand scena of the same act. The variation on "True love, true love," which constitutes the finale, was warbled with the fluency and sweetness of a lark, and brought down the curtain with immense éclat. Mr. Santley sang splendidly, and Mad. Lemaire was more than usually painstaking in the part of Alice. Mr. Honey's humour in the Sompnour was as genuine and telling as before, and was occasionally provocative of "inextinguishable laughter."

Mr. Vincent Wallace's Amber Witch is underlined as in active preparation, but the date of its production will probably depend on the continued attraction of Robin Hood.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.—On Monday evening a performance of a very novel nature will be given previous to the opera. Mr. Robert Stœpel, a musician of talent and acquirement, and not unknown to our readers, left England some years ago for America, and, when in Boston, set Longfellow's celebrated poem, Hiawatha, to music. It was performed there, in 1859, with great éclat, and subsequently at New York, and other States of the Union, with like success. Mr. Stœpel having returned to England, has determined to try the fortunes of his "Indian Symphony" in this country. Like the Antigone of Mendelssohn, the poem of Hiawatha is partly recited and partly sung, the verses being interspersed with solos and choruses. Mad. Stœpel (Miss Heron), who is a tragédienne of eminence in the United States, will read the poem, and the band and chorus of the Royal English Opera, under the direction of Mr. Alfred Mellon, with some of the principal singers, will execute the music. There is a good deal of curiosity excited about the work, which, according to the transatlantic journals, created a profound sensation, wherever it was heard, in America.

Meanwhile Bianca, or the Bravo's Bride, finds new admirers nightly; the pantomime is to be withdrawn on Monday; Satanella to be given on Tuesday; the Domino Noir (English version) is talked of; and Mr. Howard Glover's Ruy Blas already announced.

GRAND TOUR BY MR. WILLERT BEALE.—The sun of music will shine in the provinces during the month of April and part of the month of May, with beams more than usually golden. Mr. Willert Beale, the most enterprising and imaginative of all impresarios—or, to speak by the card, impresarii—has planned a grand tournée throughout the kingdom, calculated indeed to astonish the natives. At the head of the list of artists stands Marietta Alboni—the brightest star now shining in the musical hemisphere—whose name alone is a tower of strength and a beacon to allure all far-off gazers. Next comes Mlle. Sedlatzek, of whom the London musical public bears such pleasing recollections. With the ladies appear Signor Montanaro, primo tenore of the San Carlo Theatre at Naples, for whom rumour has many a favouring word. He will make his first appearance in England. The instrumentalists are Miss Arabella Goddard and Giulio Regondi. It is not for us to emblazon the reputation of native artists so inimitable as these. Herr Goldberg will be the conductor, and Mr. Land the director-in-chief. A more admirable and attractive troupe we cannot even imagine. Success shines on the very forehead of the enterprise.

Provincial.

THE fifth concert of the EDINBURGH Musical Association, which was to have taken place on Saturday last, was postponed to make way for a second miscalled "Monday" Popular Concert, that given in the Music Hall on the 8th of January having proved so eminently successful as to amount to an imperative encore, which the director, Mr. Arthur Chappell (unlike Sims Reeves), did not think proper to ignore. The following programme was given:—

PART I.—Trio in D minor for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, Mendelssohn; song, "O! cara, imagine," Mozart; canzonet, "Now summer has departed," Dussek; sonata in C (Op. 53), for pianoforte, Beethoven.

PART II.—Tema con variazioni in D, for pianoforte and violoncello, Mendelssohn; canzonet, "The Mermaid's Song," Haydn; sonata for violin, Il Trillo del Diavolo, Tartini; song, "When we are parted," Blumenthal; duet, "Per valli, per boschi," Blangini; sonata in A (Op. 47), for pianoforte and violin, Beethoven.

The instrumentalists were MM. Vieuxtemps and Hallé and Signor Piatti; the singers, Mad. Louisa Vinning and Mr. Tennant. The whole performance, according to the Edinburgh Courant, created a profound sensation, more especially the sonata for pianoforte and violin, the famous "Kreutzer," which the writer declares to be the most admirable performance of the piece ever heard in Edinburgh. "M. Vieuxtemps' playing," he adds, "shows a combination of rich tone and lightness of touch which is by no means common, while his fiery attack and rigid attention to light and shade make him an invaluable assistant in concerted music." A truism is not always unacceptable. The critic, indeed, is not particularly enthusiastic, and does not heed finding fault with the Music Hall for its non-adaptability to the performance of pianoforte music, nor recommending Mad. Louisa Vinning to enunciate her words more distinctly. Mr. Tennant, on the other hand, is stated to have merited the recall he obtained in Herr Blumenthal's song, "for the graceful and unaffected manner in which it was sung." Miss Clari Fraser and Mr. George Buckland appeared a second time at the Saturday Evening Concerts on Saturday last.

The thirtieth series of lectures and entertainments, says the Brighton Guardian, was inaugurated at the Brighton Athenæum on Wednesday evening last, the 30th ultimo, on which occasion the large room of the Town Hall contained a very good attendance to witness Mr. Ransford's new nautical entertainment, entitled Tales of the Sea. The songs were given with a hearty genuine feeling and considerable dramatic effect, and were applauded throughout, particularly the lecturer's own composition, "The King of the Sea," and Dibdin's celebrated ballad, "Tom Bowling."

The Manchester Examiner and Times has a glowing effigy on Mad. Lancia, as she appeared at the Free-trade Hall, on Saturday last, in the new entertainment, "Light and Shade," which is just now making a tour of the provinces. "Mad. Florence Lancia," says the writer, "is an artist in the highest sense of the term,—it is not only that she possesses a pure soprano voice of compass, of delicacy, and power; but she also adds to the charm by grace of action, by truth of declamation, by pathos as well as by passion." At Hull the same entertainment met with a warm reception.

Digitized by Google

A letter from an occasional correspondent at LIVERPOOL contains the subjoined delectable piece of news:—

"We have had another importation from America, in the shape of a company calling themselves 'Father Kemp's Old Folk,'—numbering about thirty. These 'niggers' dress themselves in the costume of New Englanders of the last century, and actually sing hymns! and spiritual songs, together with 'Yankee Doodle,' 'Hail! Columbia,' &c. They began proceedings in this favoured town, and on the first night actually asked the audience to join them in singing the last verse of the hymn! The harmonies they sing are of the most ——— description, and, as they will 'appear' at St. James's Hall in a day or two, you would do the cause of music infinite service by placing these American entertainments in their true light. Although music is the only attraction they can depend upon, the art is invariably degraded by these Yankee exhibitions, which are really a series of the most vulgar displays imaginable."

By the way, an enthusiastic music-seller of Liverpool exhibits at his shop window, in one of the leading thoroughfares of that town, a diminutive bust of the famous chef d'orchestre, with the following inscription underneath:—"MICHEL COSTA, THE GREAT MUSICIAN."

In accordance with a previous announcement, writes a correspondent, the new organ built for the Free Wesleyan Church, HUDDERSFIELD, was on Thursday evening, Jan. 31st, publicly tested by E. J. Hopkins, Esq., the eminent metropolitan organist. The organ (which has cost 700*l.*) contains three complete manuals and pedal organ, and is a very superior instrument; the diapasons are remarkably fine, their principal feature being a singular breadth and roundness of tone without being overpowering to the ear. It is quite refreshing to meet with this character of tone after the miserable abortions under the name of diapason which we so often encounter in various organs. The reeds are very powerful and smooth in the voicing, and several of the solo stops are of delicious quality. Messrs. Conacher and Co. may well be proud of such an instrument, and they certainly have every reason to be satisfied with the manner in which its qualities were displayed by Mr. Hopkins.

The SHEFFIELD Choral and Instrumental Society performed M. Costa's Oratorio Eli on Wednesday evening. "Costa's Eli was the oratorio selected," writes the Sheffield Daily Telegraph, "and as it is a work not yet sufficiently known and appreciated, and being also difficult of concert interpretation, some misgivings might naturally be felt as to its successful performance." The solo vocalists were Mad. Weiss, Miss Crossland, Mr. Weiss, Mr. Wilbye Cooper and Mr. Butterworth. The chorus went well under the direction of Mr. G. H. Smith, and the success of the performance was undoubted.

A correspondent from DUDLEY informs us that on Tuesday evening, a concert of sacred music was given in the Rose Hill School Room to a crowded audience. The popular vocalist, Mrs. Sunderland, was engaged, with Mr. George Mainwaring and other vocalists of the neighbourhood. Mrs. Sunderland in "With verdure clad," "I know that my Redeemer liveth," "If God be for us," and "From Mighty Kings," won universal praise. Mr. George Mainwaring gave "The people that walked in darkness," and "Why do the nations," in excellent style. The choruses conducted by Mr. William Mainwaring gave satisfaction.

The Shrewsbury Journal given us the particulars of Mr. Walter C. Hay's first annual concert. Madame Lemmens-Sherrington was engaged, and by her brillant vocalisation justified the high encomiums which have been lavished upon her by the London press. Miss Fanny Huddart is also a favourite in Shrewsbury. Mr. Weiss obtained an encore in Loder's "Martin, the man-at-arms," and substituted his own song, "The Village Blacksmith," which says our contemporary electrified the audience. Mr. Weiss also sung his new ballad, "The Knight's Vigil." Mr. Lemmens played the harmonium in a style never before heard in Shrewsbury, while it is needless to say that M. Sainton justified his reputation as one of the finest violinists of the day.

It is announced in the Belfast Journal that Mad. Catherine Hayes, having been induced to accept an engagement from the Classical Harmonists' Society, intends to take advantage of the opportunity to visit some of the other Irish provincial towns. "It is safe," writes our contemporary, "to predict for her everywhere a hearty welcome; and one of the heartiest, we are sure, awaits her at Belfast, where her reappearance will be under the auspices of so popular a society, and the direction of so accomplished a musician and composer as its conductor, Mr. G. B. Allen. Under this gentleman's able tuition, the society has attained a degree of proficiency which, together with the merits of the artists engaged, must render their forthcoming concerts eminently attractive."—Several preliminary meetings have been held, with a view to establish, in Belfast, a Musical Association in connection with the congregations belonging to the Presbyterian Church. The object of this organisation is to cultivate the science of sacred music, and to improve congregational psalmody. It has been long felt that a sufficient measure of attention has not been given to this important part of worship; and it is hoped that, by a simultaneous effort, a great improvement may be effected, and a new stimulus given to the practice of psalmody in other parts of the country.

From our own correspondent at BELFAST we have received the following:—

"The Classical Harmonists gave their second subscription concert on the 22nd, when the Dettingen 'Te Deum' was produced for the first time in Belfast. With the exception of one point, the passage for sopranos, unaccompanied, 'We therefore pray thee, help thy servants,' &c, in which the voices got flat, as is indeed usually the case everywhere in this passage, the performance was a very fine one. Mr. Thackeray, tenor, sang 'When thou tookest upon thee,' very nicely, but having only just risen from a bed of sickness, his voice was unequal to his other solos on this and the following night. Mr. Briggs was the bass, and he gave great satisfaction. The second part of the programme was a selection from the last part of the Messiah, beginning with 'Lift up your heads.' The soprano was Miss Whitham, who on this occasion made her first appearance in Belfast. She possesses one of the finest voices we have heard, and her style is substantial and good.

"On the 23rd, another People's Concert was given, when the Creation was sung by the same artists, and as this work gave Miss Whitham a better opportunity for displaying her very considerable powers, a corresponding amount of excitement was raised in the audience, who broke through the rule generally adopted here at oratorios, and demanded an encore of her first piece, 'The marvellous work,' in which her splendid C in alt told with amazing effect. We shall look forward with pleasure to her reappearance here. The whole went well, and gave perhaps greater satisfaction than any performance of the same work given by the Society. The band and chorus numbered upwards of one hundred, and were well up under the hands of Mr. Allen, the conductor, Mr. Loveday leading, and Mr. Edeson presiding at the organ. The Hall was crowded to excess both nights.

"The Society have announced two more concerts the later end of February, for which they have been so fortunate as to secure the services of Mad. Catherine Hayes, Mr. Tennant, and other first-class artists."

A correspondent in DUBLIN writes as follows:—

"Miss Ellen Williams' concert, held in the Great Hall of the Antient Concert Society, was fully and fashionably attended. The concert-giver was assisted by Miss Julia Cruise, Miss Manley, Mr. Croft, and Mr. Dunne, vocalists; and among the instrumentators were Herr Elsner (violoncello), who played the obbligato part to a German lied, charmingly sung by Miss Williams; Signor Barricelli (oboe), who assisted the same lady in the obbligato to a new valse, 'Italia,' composed by Signor Operti; and Herr Oberthur, who played a harp solo entitled 'Bonnie Scotland,' his own composition, in a masterly manner. Besides the talented performance of Miss Williams, Miss Cruise gave, with expression and finish, a new song by Herr Oberthur, entitled 'Dost thou look at even?' His Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant was present. Mr. J. O'Rourke was the conductor."

ROBERT COCKS AND CO.'S NEW MUSIC.

MUSIC for SCHOOLS and the COLONIES, &c. (the 281st edition):—Hamilton's Modern Instructions for the Pianoforte, 4s.; Hamilton's Modern Instructions for Singing, 18th edition, 5s.; Hamilton's Dictionary of 3,500 Musical Terms, 63rd edition, 1s.; Clark's Catechism on the Rudiments of Music, 65th edition, 1s.

N.B.—Gratis and post-free, a Catalogue of New School Music; also a List of New and Second-hand Pianofortes.

THE PIANOFORTE; its Origin, Progress, and Construction. By E. F. RIMBAULT, LL.D., &c. Royal 4to., 436 pp., with Frontispiece in Chromolithography, and 58 Woodcuts and Diagrams. Handsomely bound, cloth boards, 26s. See Daily News of Feb. 5, for a copious analysis of this "able and valuable work;" said also to be executed "in a manner worthy of all praise."

London: Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

Evans' Cottage Harmonium at Six Guineas,

In a French Polished Pine Case, has the full compass, Five Octaves, and a soft, subdued agreeable quality of tone—designed expressly for a cottage or small sitting room.

Evans' Harmonium at Ten Guineas,

Is in a handsome French Polished Oak Case, and possesses that rich organ-like quality of tone so peculiar to all Evans' Instruments.

Evans' English Harmoniums.

An Illustrated Catalogue of the whole of these well-known Instruments, with one and two Rows of Keys, the Percussion Action and Pedals, at prices ranging from Six Guineas to 140 Guineas—may now be had upon application to the Manufacturers, BOOSEY AND CHING, Holles Street, London.

Case's Patent English Concertina,

As used by Signor Regondi and other eminent Professors, still maintain their pre-eminent position as Concert and Drawing-room Instruments. The Four-Guinea Concertina has the Full Compass and Double-Action. The Patent Concert Concertina, in Amboyna or Bird's-Eye Maple, possesses every Modern Improvement that can possibly be introduced into the Concertina. A large stock of Second Hand Concertinas for Sale or Hire.

BOOSEY AND CHING, Manufacturers, 24 Holles Street, London.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

OF

DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.,

244 REGENT STREET. (JUST OUT.)

"MAY."—New Duettino, by HENRY SMART, composed for equal Voices. Price 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Henry Smart, in this melodious and truly exquisite little duet, has, if possible, even surpassed in elegance and vocal finish, the pieces so warmly eulogised in our last impression."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THIS WORLD IS A GARDEN," by GEORGE LODER. Comic song. Price 2s. 6d.

"The well-known and popular song introduced with such invariable success, by Mr. John Rouse, in Stirling Coyne's lively operetta, The Pets of the Parterre. As all our readers must have heard, and hearing, applauded it, it is enough to say that we entirely agree with their unanimously favourable verdict."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"IN A LEAFY GARDEN," by GEORGE LODER. Ballad. Price 2s. 6d.

"Composed for that careful and promising tenor, Mr. Richard Seymour, is in a different style to This World is a Garden, and shows that the composer, Mr. George Loder (the talented conductor of the Lyceum orchestra), can give musical expression to sentiment no less than to humour. It is graceful, well written, and last, not least, essentially vocal."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"L'ETOILE DU SOIR," by FRANZ LISZT. Romance from Richard Wagner's Tannhäuser. Price 2s.

"M. Liszt's idea of 'transcription' is peculiar to himself, and the present example of its application would, in all probability, surprise the composer of Tannhäuser himself; nevertheless, it accommodates itself to a certain taste of the day, which looks upon a pianoforte piece as nothing if not gymnastic."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

MONIOT'S celebrated SCHOTTISH D'AMOUR, played at the Ball of the German Society of Benevolence and Concord, as well as at the Lyceum Theatre every evening, with such great success, is published for Piano, 3s. (Orchestra 5s.) only by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE BANNER OF ST. GEORGE," by BALFE, a new National Song. The words by John Brougham, written for, and dedicated to, THE ST. GEORGE'S RIFLE CORPS, is published, beautifully illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," Révérie by W. Kuhé, on Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), and "I love YOU," Sims Reeves's popular ballad, transcribed for the Piano by Emile Berger, are published, price 3s. each, by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL," by W. H. WEISS, composed and sung by the composer, with the greatest success, as well as by Mr. WINN and other vocalists of celebrity, is published, handsomely illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

BALFE'S NEWEST and most POPULAR SONGS.

	s.	d.
"I love YOU" (Sung by Sims Reeves)	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose" (Ditto)	3	0
"The Banner of St. George" (beautifully illustrated)	3	0
"If I could change" (Sung by Laura Baxter)	2	6
"I'm not in love, remember" (Madame Jenny Bauer)	2	6
"Oh! take me to thy heart again" (by Miss Poole)	2	0

Published by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W., where "I love YOU" may be obtained, transcribed for the Pianoforte by Emile Berger, price 3s.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET: a Library of Vocal, Pianoforte, and Dance Music. In Shilling Books.

NOTICE.—The whole of the Songs have Pianoforte Accompaniments and English Words.

1. Twenty Songs by Mendelssohn, 1s.
2. Twelve Songs by Balfe, 1s.
3. Fourteen Songs by Verdi, 1s.
4. Twenty Christy's Minstrels' Songs (First Selection), 1s.
5. Fifty Popular Waltzes, 1s.
6. Twelve Sets of Quadrilles, 1s.
7. Fifty Polkas and Galops, 1s.
8. Twenty-five Gems by Verdi, 1s.
9. Nine Original Pieces, by J. Ascher, 1s.
10. Ten Nocturnes and Mazurkas de Salon for Pianoforte, by Goria, Talexy, Wely, and Cramer, 1s.
11. Twelve Drawing-room Pianoforte Pieces, 1s.
12. Fifteen Songs by Beethoven, 1s.
13. Twelve Songs by Hatton and Linley, 1s.
14. Twenty Ballads by Popular Composers, 1s.
15. Sixteen Songs by Kücken, 1s.
16. Twelve English Duets by Mendelssohn, Kücken, and Keller, 1s.
17. Mendelssohn's Music to Midsummer Night's Dream, complete, 1s.
18. Twelve Songs by François Schubert, 1s.
19. Twelve Fantasias by Osborne and Brinley Richards, 1s.
20. Twelve Songs by Donizetti, 1s.
21. Dance Music for Christmas, 1s.
22. Sixteen Sacred Songs by Handel, 1s.
23. Six Standard Overtures by Mozart, Rossini, and Beethoven, 1s.
24. Six Four-part Songs by Meyerbeer, Balfe, Smart, Hatton, and Mori, 1s.
25. Twenty Christy's Minstrels' Songs (Second Selection), 1s.
26. Twenty Christy's Minstrels' Songs (Third Selection), 1s.
27. Twenty Buckley's Serenaders' Songs, edited by F. Buckley, 1s.
28. Eighteen Standard English Songs for Gentlemen's Voices, 1s.
29. Sixteen Standard English Songs for Ladies' Voices, 1s.
30. Five Sets of Dance Music, as Pianoforte Duets, 1s.
31. Ten Songs by Bellini, from La Sonnambula, with the Original English Words, 1s.
32. Six Four-part Songs by Meyerbeer, Verdi, Flotow, &c., 1s.
33. Mendelssohn's Songs without Words, Books 1 and 2, complete, 1s.
34. Mendelssohn's Songs without Words, Books 3 and 4, complete, 1s.
35. Mendelssohn's Songs without Words, Books 5 and 6, complete, 1s.

Boosey and Sons, 24 and 28 Holles Street, London.

BIANCA.—BALFE'S NEW OPERA, pronounced by the Press to be the best work of this favourite composer, is published in the following various and attractive forms:—Laurent's Bianca Waltzes, Bianca Quadrilles, Bianca Galop, and Bianca Polka, all splendidly illustrated in colours by Brandard and Packer, 3s. and 4s. each. Brinley Richards' Three Gems from Bianca for Pianoforte, 3s. each. Kuhe's Bianca Galop Brilliant, and Kuhe's Fantasia on Bianca, 3s. each. Three popular Fantasias on Bianca, by Osborne, Brissac, and Berger, 4s. each. Mad. Oury's Grand Fantasia on Bianca, 5s. Nordmann's Airs from Bianca, as Solos and Duets in Two Books, 5s. and 6s. each. All the Songs and Duets in a variety of keys.

"Bianca contains melodies not only beautiful but strikingly original."—Daily News.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, February 9, 1861.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 39—No. 7 SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1861 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

EWER & CO.'S LIST OF NEW PUBLICATIONS.

		s.	d.
BENEDICT, J. MALCOLM,	Marche Triomphale	4	0
BERGER, FRANCESCO,	Bon repos, chérie, Nocturne	2	0
,,	Lena, Serenade	2	0
GAUDE, LOUIS DE LA,	Evelyn, Polka Mazurka	2	0
GARIBALDI,	Viva Italia, March and National Hymn (with Italian words)	2	0
JUNGMANN, A.,	Souvenance	2	6
KRUGER, W.,	Les Cloches du Soir	4	0
LISZT, J.,	Grand Paraphrase sur Il Trovatore	6	0
,,	Rigoletto	6	0
,,	Ernani	6	0
MAGNUS, H.,	Carnaval Napolitain	4	0
PACHER, J. A.,	Op. 9, La Harpe	4	0
,,	Op. 34, Le Ruisseau	3	0
,,	Op. 50, Twelve Melodious Studies	7	6
,,	Op. 53, Tendresse	3	0
SCHULTHES, W.,	Op. 27, Stella Matutina, málod. rélig.	2	6
SILAS, E.,	Op. 49, Costanza Impromptu	3	0
SPINDLER, F.,	L'Oiselllon	2	6
WOLLENHAUPT, H. A.,	Op. 19, Grande Marche de Concert ...	3	0
,,	Op. 23, La Gazelle	3	0
,,	Op. 24, Galop di Bravura	4	0
,,	Op. 26, Helene. Grand Valse Brillante ...	4	0
,,	Cordelia. Schottisch	3	0
,,	La Violette. Polka de Concert	3	0

MOLIQUE'S ORATORIO—"ABRAHAM."

Soprano Airs.—	I will extol Thee, my God	4	0
,,	Hear my prayer, O Lord	3	0
,,	Unto Thee lift I up mine eyes	4	6
Contralto Air.—	They kept not the law	1	6
Tenor Airs.—	Who walketh uprightly	2	6
,,	Pour out thy heart before the Lord	2	6
Baritone Airs.—	Lead me, O Lord, in Thy righteousness	3	0
,,	Let there be no strife	2	6
,,	The joy of my heart is ceased	4	0
,,	Lord have mercy upon me	4	6
Duets.—	Cast out this bondwoman. Alto and Baritone	4	6
,,	It is of the Lord's great mercies. Soprano and Baritone ...	3	0
Trio.—	Alto, Tenor, and Bass. Let all those rejoice	3	0
Quartet.—	S. A. T. & B. Go in peace before the Lord	4	6
March,—	Arranged for Pianoforte Solo	2	6
,, ,,	,, Duet	4	0
,, ,,	,, Organ (arranged by W. T. BEST) ...	3	0

EWER & CO. 87 REGENT STREET,

Universal Circulating Musical Library.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—MR. HENRY BAUMER'S PIANOFORTE CLASSES, every Thursday Morning, commencing February 28th.—Address, 6 Hilldrop Crescent, Tufnell Park, N.; or Dulwich College, S.

FATHER KEMP'S OLD FOLKS' CONCERT COMPANY from America, consisting of THIRTY LADIES and GENTLEMEN, with their New England Orchestra, all of whom will appear in COSTUMES of ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO. Enthusiastic reception of EMMA J. NICHOLS, the favourite young American Vocalist. St. JAMES'S HALL, Piccadilly, every night during the week at 8. MORNING PERFORMANCES on Wednesday and Saturday at 3 o'clock. Admission—Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. Concert at 8.

MESSRS. KLINDWORTH, H. BLAGROVE, and DAUBERT'S First Concert, Tuesday evening next, at half-past 8, at Hanover Rooms.—Trios; Beethoven, in E flat, Op. 70, and Schumann, in F, Op. 80; Sonata, pianoforte and violoncello, Chopin, Op. 65; Chaconne, violin, Bach.—Vocalist, Miss BANKS. Programme illustrated by Mr. G. A. MACFARREN.
Tickets at Cramer's, Ewer's, Schott's, Chappell's, and Bett's Music Warehouses.

WALLWORTH'S ART OF SINGING. Second Edition, just out, full music size, price 7s. A new and modern method for cultivating the Voice, and for gaining a perfect vocalisation—a practical work—Contains 35 pages of music. With a true method of acquiring the Shake, now for the first time introduced in a Singing Tutor. By T. A. WALLWORTH, Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.
Published by A. W. Hammond (late Jullien), 214 Regent Street; and may also be had of the Author at his residence, 81 Park Street, Grosvenor Square, W., where Pupils are also received.

MADAME SCHWAB begs to announce that she has REMOVED to No. 12, Langham Street, Langham Place, W.

MR. and MADAME R. SIDNEY PRATTEN beg to announce, that they have removed to 38 Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, W., where they will continue to give lessons on the Flute, Guitar, and Concertina.

MISS HELEN HOGARTH (Teacher of Singing) begs to inform her pupils and the public that she has RETURNED to town for the season, and has removed from Weymouth Street to No. 71 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square.

SIGNOR GIULIO REGONDI begs to announce that he has REMOVED to 27 Berner's Street, Oxford Street, W.

M. LEMMENS, Professeur au Conservatoire de Bruxelles, will give a Matinée Musicale at Messrs. Gray & Davison's Factory, 370 Euston Road, on Wednesday next, the 20th February, at 3 o'clock, when he will play a selection from his Organ Compositions on the Grand Organ for All Saints Church, Kensington Park.
Tickets, one guinea, may be had of M. Lemmens, 29 Cambridge Terrace, Hyde Park, and at the Manufactory.

MR. MELCHOR WINTER, having RETURNED from a very successful tour in Ireland, as Principal Tenor of Mad. RUDERSDORFF'S Opera Company, is now at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Oratorios, and English Opera.
Address, care of Messrs. Boosey, Holles Street, Cavendish Square, W.

THE LONDON CONCERT SEASON, 1861.—Mr. C. M. SHEE respectfully intimates to the Musical Profession that he continues to undertake the ARRANGEMENT of Concerts (public or private) as heretofore, at very moderate charges.
Address, 105 Wardour Street, or 6 Lower John Street, Golden Square.

CONCERT AGENCY, &c.—Mr. VAN PRAAG begs respectfully to inform his patrons and friends that he has recently RETURNED from the United States of America, and solicits their former patronage, as Agent for Concerts, &c., &c. He is now ready to resume the business, in which for many years he trusts he has afforded satisfaction.
All communications addressed, as heretofore, at Mr. Brettell's, 25 Rupert Street Haymarket, W., will be immediately attended to.

TO PROFESSORS OF SINGING, VIOLIN, &c.—A Single Gentleman (Pianist), residing near Cavendish Square, is desirous of meeting with a Gentleman to board and lodge with him. The apartments are lofty and well furnished, with the use of Grand and Piccolo Pianos.
For address, apply to A. B., 63 New Bond Street.

BASS SINGERS looking out for a Situation, may apply to the Rev. the Precentor of Norwich, Lower Close, Norwich.

MADAME OURY'S BRILLIANT FANTASIA on Jacobite Airs, 4s.—Madame Oury's Souvenirs d'Ecosse, 1s.—Madame Oury's "Auld Robin Gray," 4s.
Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, and Patterson & Sons, Edinburgh.

TO BE PUBLISHED BY SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MUSIC, a new work; being Three Essays which appeared in the MUSICAL WORLD. By JOSEPH GODDARD. Readers of the MUSICAL WORLD and the Public, wishing to encourage the publication of the above, may do so by forwarding their names to Mr. J. GODDARD, 3 St. Paul's Crescent, Camden Square, N.W. Price 5s. For further particulars, see the MUSICAL WORLD of Dec. 15th, 1860.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.
Their Catalogues, which contain a great variety of Music calculated for teaching purposes, may be had, post-free, on application.
London: 18 Hanover Square.

IN THE PRESS,

HOWARD GLOVER'S OPERA, "RUY BLAS," shortly to be performed at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden.
Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

Digitized by Google

NEW AND POPULAR

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY

ASHDOWN AND PARRY, 18 HANOVER SQUARE.

G. A. OSBORNE. LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM. Brilliant Fantasia. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. LES ENFANTS DE LA GARDE. Grande Marche brillante. Price 4s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. VEDRAI CARINO. Transcription (Don Juan). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. BATTI, BATTI. Transcription (Don Juan). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. THE MERMAID'S SONG. Transcription of Haydn's Canzonet. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. PRAEGER. MALBROOK. Brilliant Piece on the old French air. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. PRAEGER. JOCK O' HAZELDEAN. Fantasia. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

WILHELM GANZ. SANTA LUCIA. A brilliant transcription of the popular Neapolitan air. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE MAUSS. PROMETHEUS. Grand Galop brillant. Price 4s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

JULES BRISSAC. THE HARP THAT ONCE THRO' TARA'S HALLS. Transcription. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. JOSEPHINE. Mazurka de Salon. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. LA VALLÉE DES ROSES. Deuxième Mazurka de Salon. Price 3s. 6d.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. LE LANGAGE DES FLEURS. Troisième Mazurka de Salon.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

E. SILAS. ROMANCE. Price 2s. 6d.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

E. SILAS. IMPROMPTU (à la Mazurka). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

EMANUEL AGUILAR. THE BIRDS AT SUNSET. Characteristic Piece. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

STEPHEN HELLER. IN WALD UND FLUR. Troisième Suite de Promenades d'un Solitaire. 6 Nos. Price 3s. and 4s. each.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE KULLAK. LES ARPÈGES. Étude de Concert. Price 5s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE KULLAK. CAPUCINE. Legende. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN AND PARRY

(Successors to Wessel and Co.),

18 HANOVER SQUARE.

THE ENTERPRISING IMPRESARIO.

CHAPTER VII.

But the man with the money would not listen to the demands of the members of the band, who clustered round him like so many bees upon a bag of sugar. They threatened to leave the Gardens, and, perhaps to their surprise, were requested to do so at once —substitutes were at hand, the concert could be given without them. ——, upon taking his place in the orchestra that evening, indulged his passion for speech-making. He excited the sympathy of the audience by telling them how his Sepoys had revolted, and left him, as they supposed, completely helpless. "But these brave men (pointing to the deputies) have helped me like true Englishmen." It was at the time of the Indian rebellion, and the allusion had the desired effect. The audience gave three cheers for ——, and as many groans for the "traitors," who, had they been present would, I dare say, have given their own version of the story.

The Farewell Festival was successful. The "star" of the Surrey Gardens shone brightly meanwhile. Grisi, Alboni, Gassier, and other celebrated artists, who drew large receipts, were engaged, and —— had the credit of bringing the season to a satisfactory termination. For this result he had to thank the energy and activity of a few stanch friends, who spared neither trouble, time, nor capital in his behalf. One of these friends, and perhaps the most devoted, was Mr. ——, whose sad fate in —— has lately caused such universal sorrow. In every undertaking in which he was concerned, and particularly during the last season at the Surrey Gardens (where I had the pleasure of making his acquaintance), Mr. —— evinced as much anxiety, and exerted himself as strenuously, as though his own interests were directly involved. We passed many days together at that time, and had many a hearty laugh, and many a serious consultation, over the various incidents and obstacles which menaced the success of our mutual friend, who would sometimes interfere in our deliberations, and disturb them as much as he did the meetings of the Directors. A word of remonstrance, however, from —— invariably silenced him, and made him leave us, biting his pocket-handkerchief, as if to prevent himself talking. It being known that the arrangements of the programme, &c. of the Farewell Festival were submitted for approbation to Mr. —— before publication, he was, of course, addressed by innumerable aspirants to fame, who are always in search of an opportunity of making an appearance before the public. One letter he brought me, I remember, amused him immensely. It was from a tight-rope dancer. The lady requested, as an especial favour, that she might be allowed to make her "perilous ascent" to the top of the Music Hall, which was to be lighted by fireworks during the feat! —— always expressed his admiration for his friend ——, and indeed no man ever more truly deserved the good will of another. Such a friendship was not merely an outward form, but a sentiment which found expression in deeds of brotherly kindness and generosity—a friendship which knows no selfishness, and ennobles the character of him whose heart is guided by its influence. Such a friendship had —— for ——, as well as for all those with whom he became intimate.

In his likes and dislikes —— was very violent, and could with difficulty be reconciled to anybody with whom he had once quarrelled. He always supposed the cause of the dispute to exist, and invariably returned to the subject whenever opportunity occurred. He, moreover, was convinced that he made the fortune of everybody with whom he became associated; and if a separation happened from some misunderstanding, it was, that having gained experience and knowledge while with him, the seceder wished to avail himself of the same, to his own advantage. —— was, in fact, in his own estimation, the only ladder by which the temple of fame and fortune could be attained. He always cited the case of a well known enterprising impresario with whom he had been connected during the first years of his career in England, and who, if the truth was known, had been as useful to —— as ever —— had been to him. "Voyez-vous, mon cher," he would begin, "when I first knew that man he was poor, he walked to the theatre. The second year he came in a cab; and then on horseback. The fourth year he drove his brougham; and the fifth year, when I taught him to give —— —— under my name, he drove two horses! He walked, he rode in a cab, he drove one, then two horses, and all through me, by ——!' [ANTRATER.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"Moonlight and the Gondola"—by HENRY W. GOODBAN (Metzler and Co.)—is a nocturne for the pianoforte, in the quiet unpretending key of G. Not merely is this a sensible well-written piece, marked by the finish of a conscientious musician; but it has a certain grace of its own, which evinces a capacity in the author both to think and make for himself. A short introduction, constructed out of elegantly-dispersed arpeggios, followed by an andante con espressione, on a really tuneful theme, which is not termed "andante con espressione" without good reason, and which is as appropriately brief as the introduction—voilà tout. Nevertheless, the "tout," unobtrusive as we find it, is so neatly put together that it may be praised without reserve.

"Reminiscences d'Oberon"—by AUGUSTE ERGMANN, Op. 13 (Ashdown and Parry). A clever pasticcio made out of three of the most striking motivi in Weber's English masterpiece. Among these are the cantabile from the overture (the second subject of the allegro, afterwards used in the air for Huon, which Braham ejected and Mongini injected), and the delicious "Song of the Mermaids" (not Mermaid, according to Mr. E. T. Smith.) In contrast we have the savage chorus in unison, supposed to be founded on a genuine Eastern tune. These materials fit well together, and Mr. Ergmann, evidently a practised hand, has made the best of them. If his "Op. 13" is not equal to Beethoven's (the Sonata Patetica) it is interesting nevertheless.

"Two Musical Sketches," for the pianoforte—by JAMES LEA SUMMER (Addison, Hollier, and Lucas)—with a strong leaning towards Mendelssohn and the "Ohne Worte," are at the same time cleverly written, and stamped with real musical feeling. The first, a brilliant allegro in G, exhibits a not very striking melody, ingeniously accompanied throughout, by arpeggios divided between the two hands. The second, an allegro agitato in A minor, is also good; and though, as a whole, inferior to its companion, contains a passage, beginning at bar 8, line 2, page 2, to which the other reveals no parallel—a passage, in short, of genuine prettiness. The "Two Musical Sketches" are inscribed to Mr. Charles Hallé. No wonder that Mr. Summer should write his very best.

"Batti Batti;" "Vedrai Carino"—by ADOLPHE SCHLOESSER (Ashdown and Parry), are as good in these as in such "transcriptions" (to which, where the great masters are concerned, we entertain the strongest possible objection) ordinarily turn out. But what, in the name of Jean de Bethune, Evêque de Cambrai, who prescribed statutes, in the year 1211, for the Confrèrie du Saint Esprit, does Herr Schloesser mean by the andante, commencing in A minor, which he has made the introduction to "Vedrai carino"? It has really as much to say to "Vedrai carino" as "Vedrai carino" to Jean de Merode, Seigneur de Duffel, d'Issiche, &c. "The Mermaid's Song," by ADOLPHE SCHLOESSER (same publishers), is a similar transcription of the well-known canzonet of Haydn, only a little more brilliant, as the character of the original would naturally suggest. It is just as well done as its two companions, but (Haydn being also a "great master,") open to the same objection.

"Souviens Toi, mélodie chantante"—by WILHELM GANZ, (Hopgood and Crew)—is a graceful allegretto, in D flat, waltz measure—with a più mosso, in the subdominant, of a lighter and more brilliant character.

"Le Depart, ballade pour violon, avec piano"—JOSEPH GREEN (Schott and Co.)—though somewhat dry, is clever and not without sentiment. Both instruments are well accommodated.

"Cinq Morceaux caractéristiques, pour piano"—par HAROLD THOMAS (Robert W. Ollivier) — might, considering that Mr. Harold Thomas is an Englishman, have just as decently been entitled "Five Characteristic Pieces, for the Pianoforte, by Harold Thomas" (literal translation). They have merit, like most of the things we have seen from the pen of their author; and, also, like most of them, they are overcharged with concerts of harmony, modulation, and accompaniment. Mr. Thomas is evidently inclined both to Chopin and Stephen Heller, but especially to the latter, as a glance at No. 5—"Across Country,—chasse-étude" (whatever a "chasse-étude" may mean)—a spirited piece in E flat, will show. No. 3—"Wave-Spray, capricietto" (whatever "capricietto" may signify) in A major, is graceful and pretty, though somewhat monotonous. No. 4, "Album-Leaves, a Cycle of waltzes" (whatever "a cycle of waltzes" may suggest)—is also pretty, each of the the three numbers being more or less engaging. No. 1—"Promenade Solitaire, impromptu" ("impromptu" means impromptu)—would be irreproachable, but for the obstinate tonic pedal at the commencement, and its abrupt dismissal as a discord. Nevertheless the opening reminds us vividly of something (we forget what) which Mario is in the habit of singing, in his most passionate style. No. 2—"Dream of a far off land, barcarole" ("barcarole" means barcarole)—is extremely pleasing, but by no means original. The general title for the "Cinq Morceaux" (Five pieces) is "Souvenirs de Hastings" (Reminiscences of Hastings). On reflection, if Mr. Harold Thomas would fix his ideas in less elaborate shells we should be better able to detect their precise melodic worth. As it is, it is very difficult for the most critical pin to approach, much more pick out the periwinkle from its ingenious (almost impervious) enclosure.

"My love is on the sea," words from the Family Herald, music by JOHN MORGAN (Ransford and Sons)—is an ordinary sort of chamber-ballad, which, but for the consecutive fifths, in similar directions, between voice part and bass (Page 2, line 4, bars 3, 4—"wood-side,"—G, F, melody, C, B, bass), might pass muster, as inoffensive.

We like a book out of season. We like a winter book in summer. Nothing, to our mind, is so cooling and refreshing in the dog-days as a volume of Ross or M'Clintock, with their marvellous stories of ice and snow.

In this cold weather we like a summer book, and if any of our readers are of the same taste, would recommend for their perusal the "Thames Angler," by ARTHUR SMITH, who, by the magic of his pen, has converted our arm-chair into a fishing-punt, and, though we are sitting over a roaring fire, has made us, in imagination or anticipation, enjoy all the pleasures of a day upon the river. Delicious sensation—delightful hallucination at this time of year!—what are salmon and cucumber at Christmas compared to such a luxury? Verily, Arthur, thou art a magician!

Have we not, for the last two hours, been led by thee through the pleasant fields of Richmond—a basket slung across our shoulders, fishing-rod in hand, and felt the summer sun scorch our cheeks? Have we not inhaled the gentle breezes, laden with the perfume of new-mown hay;—have we not caught trout, pike, jack and perch innumerable, following thy directions—wondering at the bleak skimming on the surface of the water, because, as thou sayest (inscrutable Arthur!) it is troubled with a worm in its inside; and have we not laughed at the good stories thou hast told us, as we sat watching our floats bobbing up and down?

Digitized by Google

We had known the "Thames Angler" by sight, long before becoming so intimately acquainted as we are at present. Our first impression was not favourable.

That extraordinary red and white peg-top which has lately been seen in every thoroughfare in town, appeared to our sensitive mind as a caricature of the fascinating floats, and made us apprehend that friend Arthur had selected the innocent anglers and their craft as a medium for the display of his wit and humour. Glad were we when the investment of a shilling removed our doubts, and once more proved the fallacy of judging by appearances.

It is a pleasant book, whether for summer or winter; for the arm-chair, or fishing-punt. The epicure will find some good reading in directions for cooking the fish when caught; (they will sharpen his appetite if he reads them before dinner,) and those who can enjoy a joke will not be disappointed. There are many, from which we select the following, for the benefit of those who have not yet placed their shillings at such good interest as the "Thames Angler" offers them. Piscator Smith, with his friends Brown and Jones are on a fishing excursion, and converse:—

"BROWN.—Thank you much; and I will keep my word now, and ask you my piscatorial riddle. You won't have time to guess it, though; for I see now on my left the noble residence of our good Queen. 'When is a fish most out of water?' I shan't trouble you to wait long, for I will give you the answers at once. (JONES is about to hazard, 'When it contains the ashes of the grate,' but suddenly remembers that this has something to do with Westminster Abbey and a kitchen fender.) I say answers, because it has twelve:—

"1. When it's a perch in a bird-cage.
2. When it's a pike on the Epsom-road.
3. When it's a dab at a polka.
4. When it's a sole on a boot.
5. When it's a muscle in a lady's neck.
6. When it's a Chubb in St. Paul's Church-yard.
7. When it's a Jack in a box.
8. When it's bleak on a common.
9. When it's a bar bell.
10. When it's a skate in a cutler's shop.
11. When it's a place on the roof of a 'bus.
12. When it's a Cockle making antibilious pills."

As we have mentioned Arthur Smith's fishing book in our paper, which is not essentially a fishing paper, we must justify our doing so, by calling him to account for the very irreverent manner in which he has mentioned certain music in his book, which is not exactly a music book. However nearly we may coincide with his opinion, we feel bound to caution him to be more careful in future, and to suggest that he treat such a subject as caviare, which can never be on his hook, or caught in the Thames by any bait. In conclusion, we heartily congratulate all fishermen upon this addition to their library, and sincerely pity the fish for whom Arthur Smith has told us how to put our rod in pickle.

ANTBATER.

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY.

VOCAL.

AMES (MRS. HENRY) "Switzerland" (duet).
Ditto. "Good bye to winter" (trio).
OBERTHÜR (C.) "The sun's last smile" (song).

PIANOFORTE.

LIDEL (BLANCHE) "Valse de Salon."
ROECKEL (JOSEPH) "Un mot du cœur."
OBERTHÜR (CHARLES) "Santa Lucia" (Harp solo).

ROBERT COCKS AND CO.

VOCAL.

BUNNETT (C.) "Cantate and Deus Misereatur" (Organ accompaniment).
Ditto. "Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis" (ditto).

DUNCAN DAVISON AND CO.

VOCAL.

BALFE (M. W.) "The Banner of St. George."

PIANOFORTE.

JOEL (J. VON) "The silver cord," Waltz brilliant.

EWER AND CO.

VOCAL.

ABT (FRANZ) "Six two-part Songs" (Op. 174).
ALTHAUS (BERNARD) "The poet's bridal gift" (Wedding Song).
Ditto. "My love wants no jewels."
Ditto. "Thou art gone."
Ditto. "Eileen a roon."
BEYER (ERNEST) "Drowsy Polka" (Voice and Piano).

PIANOFORTE.

PACHER (J. A.) "Twelve Melodious Studies" (Op. 30).
Ditto. "Tendresse" (Op. 53).
Ditto. "Le Ruisseau" (Op. 34).
Ditto. "La Harpe" (Op. 9).
RUBINSTEIN (A.) "Polka Mazurka."
SILAS (E.) "Costanza," Impromptu (Op. 49.)
SPINDLER (FRITZ) "L'Oiselion" (Op. 76).

VIENNA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Feb. 6, 1861.

PIANOFORTE playing is perhaps more general in this country than in any other. It is a common accomplishment of both sexes—one that is cultivated by the members of all classes and professions. I have met military men to whom the compositions of Bach and Beethoven are as familiar as the word of command, and have many a time wondered at the seeming incongruity of a captain booted and spurred, sitting down to the pianoforte, and playing off many a long fantasia, while his charger was neighing impatiently for its rider. All the most eminent pianists, those who by their practical skill and by their writings, have developed the resources of the instrument are, with one or two honourable exceptions, of German origin. And yet in Germany hardly any advance in the structure of the pianoforte has been made for the last fifteen, indeed I might say twenty, years. Those improvements in the mechanism of the instrument which have been introduced at different times by the manufacturers of England and France, and which have tended so considerably to its perfection, have not been adopted by the German makers, from whose factories pianofortes are still produced, remarkable for the primitive simplicity of their action and similarity of tone. It is not that the improvements and recent inventions are unknown or unheeded, but whenever they have been copied, the result has not been favourable; the old principle has always been found the most profitable, and is consequently adhered to. Economy is urged as the chief object of the German manufacturer, and any innovation which increases the expense in making an instrument therefore eschewed. The price of pianos in Germany is considerably less than in England and France, eighty or ninety pounds being as much as can be expected for a grand, and the average charge much lower.

Notwithstanding their adherence to the old system of construction and mechanism, the German makers turn out some very excellent instruments. Those of Bosendörfer are acknowledged to be the best that are made in Vienna. This firm has but lately opened a new establishment, in which are to be found the factory, a magnificent suite of show rooms, a concert room to accommodate 600 or 700 people, and a princely residence for the proprietor, all under the same roof. It is a splendid building, situated in Neu Wien, a Vorstadt consisting entirely of modern houses, which, in point of solidity and appearance, surpass those of Vienna proper. At the invitation of Herr Dachs, a talented pianist of the classical school, who may some day become as well known in England as he is respected in his own country, I visited Bosendörfer's new premises last week. They are admirably fitted up with every possible contrivance for the expeditious manufacture of the pianos in the different stages, from the very commencement to the moment when they are exhibited for sale in the show rooms. There are 300 men employed, who finish, upon the average, 30 pianofortes per week, a small number, perhaps, compared to the supply of such houses as Erard, Broadwood, and Collard, but adequate to the demand, which, it must be remembered, is almost limited to Austria and Southern Germany.

The building is handsomely decorated. In the reception hall stands a colossal statue of Beethoven, as the sole ornament, giving the visitor a favourable impression of the taste of the proprietors, an impression which is confirmed by every object he sees throughout their model establishment.

At the Opera House, Meyerbeer's Etoile du Nord was given on Sunday, Feb. 3rd. With this exception there has been little doing in the way of music since I last wrote.

The chief topic of conversation among musical people, is whether Madame Csillag will return here next autumn. Those who pretend to be good authorities on the subject assert that her engagement with Ullmann has been forfeited by the bankruptcy of that American impresario, and that the lady has had an extraordinary offer of an increased salary (according to the official list she already receives more than any of the other artists) if she will renew her contract at the Kärntnerthor Theatre. Whether this be true or not, it is certain Madame Csillag cannot well be spared from Vienna, and I can easily understand the new director, Signor Salvi, advising his imperial master to induce her to remain. There are few prime donne anywhere with such a répertoire at her command, and no one who is so popular with the Viennese.

Digitized by Google

A new theatre is spoken of, to be erected on the Schotten Glacis. There will be no Italian opera this spring in Vienna.

ANTHATER.

AUBER'S NEW OPERA.*

SPEAKING of the remarkable bust of M. Auber by Danton, jun., we said—and the whole theatrical press has honoured us with a prolonged echo—that the statuary-anatomist had seized the very slightest lines of the physiognomy—so highly intellectual, if ever physiognomy was so—of the author of Le Maçon, the Domino Noir, Fra Diavolo, L'Ambassadrice, Le Cheval de Bronze, La Sirène, and a host of other lyrical masterpieces, become popular not by the vulgarity of their melodies, but by the natural and sparkling rhythm of their smallest musical phrases, and by the stamp they bear of delicacy, good taste, and essentially French esprit. M. Auber, we added, displayed on his lips and in his eyes all the treasures of his music; nay, even in every one of his features, which may be divided and multiplied at pleasure, without losing any portion of their harmony, which is so characteristic. The entire effect, and the thousand details, are what Danton's chisel, inspired to such good purpose, has reproduced with as much talent as admiration for the works and the person of the French musician par excellence. The Circassienne has not failed to prove, once more, how in what an eminent degree M. Auber is really, as we have remarked, the French musician par excellence. In him we possess an unchangeable model, bequeathed by Providence to two generations of composers, with the evident intention of protecting the French school against the fogs of the Music of the Future. Auber will never know aught of the sharp hoar-frosts; autumn will scarcely have touched him with its wing; spring and summer—flowers and fruit—such are the only seasons familiar to him, so that, in one of his most recent feuilletons, M. Fiorentino observed, "Auber is four times twenty years of age—but he is not, and never will be, eighty-four."† M. Auber's eternal youth is a fact in the possession of history, and, for our future Scribes, a perfect libretto in perspective for a comic opera. Unfortunately—at least we cannot help fearing so—the hero of the piece will be no longer here to compose the music for his own history. Let our young musicians, therefore, hasten to derive inspiration from this vivifying model, containing a whole course of instruction in itself, for M. Auber's music proves, in the clearest and most incontestable manner, that not only has the French school not grown old, but that alone it can still charm by speaking, at one and the same time, to our reason, our heart, and our mind, by its truth of expression, and by its variety of form.

Having said thus much, we will at once proceed to analyse the book of the Circassienne,—but without dwelling on the details and wit which M. Scribe has so liberally scattered throughout the three acts, just illustrated by M. Auber with his most youthful, clever, and refined music—music, moreover, admirably adapted for the stage.

During the first two acts the action takes place in Circassia. The curtain rises upon an humble Russian fortress, situate in the midst of snow, and guarded by an advanced post of hussars. In order to kill time, and forget the weather, which is as glacial as can well be imagined, every one is drinking and smoking; stories are related; and the inmates of the fortress are even on the point of getting up a little French opera, Adolphe et Clara, which is brought to the place, at the nick of time, in the valise of a stage-traveller, the painter Lanskoï, a friend of Lieutenant Alexis Zouboff, and charged by the Czar to undertake an artistic exploring expedition in the Caucasus. Zouboff is to play the part of Clara, as the change of costume has already rendered him good service, under certain circumstances, at the villa of a countess, into which he has managed to make his way disguised as a lady's-maid. It would even appear that the brother-in-law of the countess aforesaid, General Orsakoff, a boor and a savage, although a prince and a general, took it into his head, on the occasion referred to, and at the same villa, to fall in love with the false soubrette, who was compelled to disappear from the house in order to escape the general's passion. It was the first love of this Crimean tiger, who previously had entertained a profound aversion for the fair sex. Now the fierce Orsakoff happens to command the troops in the Caucasus, and appears before the fortress at the very moment the rehearsals of the projected entertainment are commencing; at the very moment that Lieutenant Zouboff has just assumed, with more or less elegance, his costume as a fair Circassian. At first the General halloes and raves, menacing both soldiers and officers with the knout, but suddenly recognises his adored soubrette, the beautiful Frascovia. Everything is now all right, and the lieutenant passes himself off as the sister of Alexis Souboff. I must inform my readers, however, that the lieutenant, on his side, is smitten by a certain Olga, a young and rich heiress, the niece and ward of Orsakoff, whom he (the lieutenant) has met in the Crimea, in a château where she resided with her aunt, and where he was nursed when wounded. On being left alone, at the death of her aunt, Olga has come to her uncle, who thinks of placing her in a convent until the end of the campaign. On seeing the young Circassian, Olga thinks he bears a striking resemblance to Alexis. But what is there astonishing in that? He is her brother. To complicate the action still more, the general begs his niece to engage Frascovia as her companion. Frascovia is by no means loath. But the chances of war give a different turn to matters. A band of Circassians invade the fort and carry off Frascovia, which young lady, or rather young gentleman, is annexed to the harem of the Sultan, Aboul-Kazim. On her side, Olga, who also is a prisoner, thanks to the treachery of the guide charged to take her to the convent, particularly charms the eyes of Aboul-Kazim, who will not give her up for any ransom, but names her his chief sultana. Olga and Frascovia have, however, another interview, when the false Circassian maiden falls at Olga's feet, and confesses to being not the sister of Alexis, but Alexis himself. Then comes a little conspiracy got up by the ladies of the harem, seconded, very opportunely, by the arrival of Russian officers and troops, who take possession of the harem and the Circassian village.

The third act transports us to the palace of General Orsakoff at Moscow. The general dreams of nothing but Frascovia, who has disappeared after the taking of the harem. The painter Lanskoï the friend of Alexis, has concocted a letter, in which the Circassian confesses to the general that it is only through excess of love that she has fled from him, and that, unless he does her the honour of making her his wife within three months, she will shut herself up in a convent. As this letter does not reach the general till six months after it is written, he sets about discovering the convent to which his fair correspondent has withdrawn, and, in the mean time, loads with favours his future brother-in-law, Alexis, appointing him captain, aide-de-camp, and colonel, and even consenting to give him the hand of his ward, Olga, on the express condition that the young man, on his part, consents to the union of the general with the beautiful Frascovia. Scarcely, however, has the first of these marriages been solemnised, ere a letter is received by the general. "Your silence reduces me to despair"—so writes Frascovia. "When you read these lines, I shall have ceased to live, and, as a proof, I return you the ring which was to have united us for ever."—After all, there was no other means but the sudden death of the Circassian which could rescue every one from embarrassment, and, as the fair creature has died from love, the vanity, at least, of General Orsakoff is satisfied; he has been loved once in his life .... and he will never be caught again.

As may be surmised from this very meagre sketch of the piece, the first act is that which is best worked out and most full of incident. As a natural consequence, the musician has lavished his talent on it. From the first to the last note, everything charms,

* From the various reports of the first performance of the new opera by MM. Scribe and Auber (very recently brought out at the Opéra Comique in Paris), we select for translation the one which appeared in Le Ménestrel, from the able and practised pen of M. Heugel.

† "Auber, il est vrai, a quatre fois vingt ans, mais il n'aura jamais quatre-vingt."

Digitized by Google

flatters and entrances the ear; solos, choruses, and orchestra combine in the most delightful fashion, multiplying and sparkling deliciously. It is like a perfect bouquet of fireworks. After the overture—which is cut rather short, we will, passing over the introduction of the half-frozen drinkers and smokers, and the couplets of the lieutenant, "O ma maîtresse!" to which the Brigadier Perrot replies: "O ma bouteille!" come to the entrance of the painter, Lanskoï, who instantly proposes to begin the rehearsals of Adolphe et Clara. The reader should see and hear the soldiers giving vent to their feelings in a chorus of "bravos," which was enthusiastically received by the public. M. Scribe foresaw this when he wrote the appropriate words:

"Quel bon public que celui-la."

Without stopping at the heroic air of General Orsakoff:

"Qu'on m'abhorre! qu'on me déteste!
C'est mon plaisir à moi!"

we must direct attention to the trio and the romance of the Circassian: "Si vous m'aimez!" The tender accents of Montaubry, a new Orpheus, are not long before they melt the fierce Orsakoff:

"Tant de charme et tant de grâce!"

exclaims the general in a duet, followed by the delicious quartet which procures us the first appearance of the beautiful Olga: "Au milieu de la Circassie!" How charmingly and how naturally does Mlle. Monrose express, while singing on a syllabic rhythm, her surprise at finding her Lieutenant Alexis in the costume of a fair Circassian! After this quartet, the composer has developed a finale as temperate as full of fire, as simple as complicated, so much does clearness and the art of sonority preside over the combination of melodic ideas and of the progress of harmony.

The second act is quieter. We are in the seraglio of the Circassian chief, Aboul-Kazim, (M. Troy), who sings, soundly and sonorously, a bass air, marked with great rhythmical boldness. The act opens with a chorus of odalisques, in the form of a graceful and poetic introduction—the ladies are dreaming of new dresses—and then, after the bass air already mentioned, the Circassian appears, singing and pacifying the seraglio by a most sweet melody. Like the Circassian, Frascovia, the beautiful Olga also appears a second time, when there is another surprise, rendered, on this occasion, by a duet, which serves to introduce the toilet scene. Next we have a conspiracy of the ladies, and, lastly, the reappearance of Lanskoï and the general, for the requirements of the finale to this second act, which contains, among other pleasing details, the vocal entrances and exits of the eunuch Babel-Boudour (M. Laget), which had previously enlivened, in a singularly effective manner, the finale of the first act. I have forgotten to mention, in this second act, the pas of the "Almées," whom M. Auber sets dancing to a waltz-motive borrowed from his ballet in Marco Spado. There is something wanting as far as regards local colouring, but the motive is so graceful, and will become so popular, that the reason of its introduction is understood.

Let us now proceed to the third act, of which Mlle. Monrose, as Olga, does the honours. She is at home, or, rather, in the house of her uncle and guardian. She is consequently at liberty to indulge in a ballad à vocalises, a grand air, also in the bravura style, and a love duet with Montaubry. These afford an opportunity for feats of strength which the prima donna assoluta generally forces upon the composer. When the lady is sufficiently strong to magnetise her audience, the latter allow her to have her own way, and wait gallantly for the end of a bravura air, and then resume the thread of the action; but if the talent employed is not sufficient for the task, there result "lengths" from which every one suffers; the authors, the artists, and the public. This does not apply absolutely to Mlle. Monrose; however, without injuring the graceful and already brilliant qualities of Duprez's charming pupil, we have reason to fear she does not possess the stuff of a Cinti-Damoreau, or Miolan-Carvalho. Nevertheless, let us reserve the future, and state that the present is of the most agreeable kind. Mlle. Monrose is, moreover, perfectly dazzling with grace and beauty in her three rich costumes, without counting the scenic and vocal capabilities developed by her, especially in the first act, in which her entrance enchanted the whole house. Montaubry was invariably equal to his part. If he sings rather too much with the falsetto and head voice, this results from the character he has to represent in the first two acts. He assumes, moreover, the soprano so easily, that the audience, though regretting the tenor, give themselves up to the pleasure of applauding him. The Circassienne—the "creation" of which does him the greatest honour in every respect—is for him a real success. Barrielle—General Orsakoff—did not absolutely satisfy every one. His air in the third act was condemned; but the judgment was undeserved. There was, at the time, behind the scenes, a certain "double quick"—in the Italian manner but with the French stamp—which carried away the entire audience. The same cannot be asserted of the distant chorus of the betrothal; placed under unfavourable acoustic conditions it would not reach the footlights. What shall we say of Couderc's couplets in the third act! The painter Lanskoï, gives them like a poet and musician; not a word, not a note, not the slightest intention of the literary author or of the composer, was lost. What a formidable encore was the result! Mads. Bosquet and Prevost figure only in the condition of ladies of the seraglio, let us, therefore, proceed to the principal event of the evening: the spontaneous and unanimous call for M. Auber, whose name was on every tongue.

The success of the piece was real; the audience were excited and in raptures; for anybody else the occasion would have been a tempting one. M. Auber hastened to escape from it. This was a fresh act of delicacy—a proof of that exquisite modesty which every person acknowledges him to possess. Some time previous to the first representation of the Circassienne, a friend surprised the gran maestro, at his desk, pen in hand and paper before him, writing quite simply, without the slightest effort, the last few pages of his score. Far from receiving his visitor with the air of a genius, torn away from the devouring fire of inspiration, he thanked him for the agreeable repose his conversation was about to procure him. Taking advantage of this, his friend complimented the maestro by relating all the agreeable things people said of his new opera. "I only hope it may be new!" maliciously replied the maestro, with the smile of a man happy at having found the means of escaping, before betters, the praises which the Circassienne was destined so little to spare him after the first proof. True modesty is so natural to M. Auber that he instinctively avoids being in the house, among the audience, whenever one of his operas is played, even were it for the three hundredth representation. He scarcely appears on the stage, and, if there is any danger of a call, he hastens to confide to the stage-manager the secret of a most simple fugue, conceived in the best taste. Every one was able to judge of this last Saturday, when it was the duty of M. Palianti to say, in a voice full of conviction, if not of sonority:—"Ladies and gentlemen, it is with regret that I inform you that M. Auber has quitted the theatre." The regret was on the part of the public.

THE THEATRE LYRIQUE AND A NEW OPERA BY CLAPISSON.

(From an occasional Correspondent.)

Paris, Feb. 11.

Before proceeding to aught else, it is right that we should notice the incessant efforts made by the management of the Théâtre Lyrique. M. Réty causes one novelty to succeed the other with indefatigable ardour. The revival of the Val d'Andorre was a proof of good taste and intelligence. A month ago there was Les Pêcheurs de Catane; to-day we have the merry Madame Grégoire, presented by MM. Scribe, Boisseaux, and Clapisson. There is no doubt that by thus seeking, and always creating, M. Réty will soon find one of those successes which make the fortune of a theatre. Perhaps he may not have to go very far to attain his object, and the success of the first evening permits us to hope for his new fair acquisition the length of days which her proverbial gaiety promises. To laugh is to live; and Mad. Grégoire laughs in the good old fashion.

Well, would you like to know, in a word or two, what Mad. Grégoire does, while she is laughing thus? She is conspiring, that is all. Her conspiracy, however, is directed against Mad. de Pompadour alone. There are reports of another favourite. The courtiers do not know on which side the new star is about to arise. The Lieutenant of Police, among others, ends by seizing the knot of the intrigue in Mad. Grégoire's own wine-shop. A woman in a mask is there, with a letter from the king, announcing that her reign has begun. The worthy Baron d'Assonvilliers, as blind in his own affairs as all the lieutenants of police, past and to come, attaches himself to the fortune of the presumed queen, lodges her under his own roof, and is bent upon taking her back to the king, and all this without perceiving that it is his own wife, who, to take her refusal personally, has been compelled to quit the conjugal roof; on the evening of Shrove Tuesday, Carnival serves as a pretext for a good many things. All the baron's family — whom he has locked up before going out—are gadding about town; his wife, to remain faithful to him, it is true; his niece Lucette, to accompany her aunt; and his nephew, Gaston, to console himself for the disdain of his cousin, who is, however, secretly in love with him. All these personages come and go, escape from the house — thanks to Mad. Grégoire, the god-daughter of the baroness, and an intimate acquaintance of the baron's secretary — meet at the wine-shop of the Vert Galant, return demurely home by daybreak, and end by coming to a most satisfactory understanding, after having grazed the Bastille, menaced Mad. Pompadour, and, it must be confessed, amused the public during three acts which is not so easy a feat as may be imagined. Mix up with all that has been described a great nobleman in love with the baroness and watching over her; and a Swiss soldier in love with the fair wine-seller, running on her errands, and eaten up by jealousy, and you will have all the elements of this imbroglio, which possesses, in my opinion, the enormous advantage of being an honest comic opera, a kind of thing that, for some time past, has been greatly neglected, but for which our fathers entertained a sincere admiration.

Digitized by Google

M. Clapisson's music, also, is real comic-opera music, and the first act is perhaps the richest in the score. Frank, open melody, and clear instrumentation, easy to catch, without, however, neglecting the researches of art, distinguish this work, and cause us to recognise the happy author of La Fanchonnette. We may mention, as among the pieces which produced the greatest impression on us, the overture, which is worth mentioning on account of its agreeable sonority, and its joyous colouring, free from vulgarity; the grand air of Mad. d'Assonvilliers (Mlle. Moreau); a very pretty trio; Mad. Grégoire's couplets, in which the traditional refrain is introduced very ingeniously; and, lastly, the sestet, "Bon soir," a delicious bit.

In the second act we are at the wine-shop. Here we must notice a chorus of maskers; the rondo on the well-known words of the period, "Cotillon deux, Cotillon trois;" the Tyrolean couplets of the soldier, which were encored; and a finale, too much developed, perhaps, but the peroration of which, on motives from the overture, is brought about in the most admirable manner possible. The third act, which is rather short, both in the words and the music, offers scarcely anything remarkable except a delicious little trio en canon, the effect and arrangement of which are charming. Mad. Grégoire's grand air, which is very difficult of execution, although it did not please us much, procured for Mlle. Roxiès a regular round of applause. We must add, that this young lady displayed intelligence and spirit in her part. Mlle. Moreau adds to her personal charms the charm of a voice remarkable for its extent and purity. She gave evidence of real progress, which merits the warmest encouragement. Mlle. Faivre, MM. Wartel, Delaunay-Riquier, Fromant, Gabriel, and Lesage, co-operated valiantly towards the success of the work, which, let us hope, will prolong the night of Shrove-Tuesday till long after Lent.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—The fifth concert of the season, on Friday the 8th instant, presented Haydn's Creation to the subscribers and public. Many opinions, during the last few years, have been expressed, both by the press and the audiences, in favour of the production of new works, and the discarding of some well-known masterpieces. In the present state of things, this is simply impossible; and, for the same reasons that it is so, it is unadvisable. The Messiah of Handel, and the Elijah of Mendelssohn, are almost the only works that draw audiences again and again to oratorio performances; and, while they are so, the management must be very cautious in hazarding costly novelties in their announcements. Haydn's Creation is almost as sure a "draw" as the two pieces above alluded to; and this year the demand for places is such as to justify a repetition. This may be accounted for by Mad. Sherrington's appearance in the principal soprano part. Haydn's songs, always genial and pleasant, always smacking of his old-world and somewhat periwigged manner, are relished by many who are incapable of soaring to the height of Handel's sublimity, and whose dulness can show no zest for the seraphic beauty of Mendelssohn; and when produced by an artist whose soul, voice, and manner are adapted more peculiarly for all that is light, pleasing, and piquant, are sure of a hearty welcome from any auditory. Mad. Sherrington is progressing rapidly as a classical singer; her voice is gaining strength, her intonation certainty and precision. Her singing is peculiarly suited for the execution of floridities; but we will hear her in some more works before we pronounce as to her power of pathos. Mr. Sims Reeves never sang (which probably amounts to "nobody ever sang") better; his "In native worth," was a marvel of vocalisation and expression. Mr. Weiss was also excellent throughout. The band and chorus conspired to make this performance almost unexceptionable as to accuracy of tune; and the judicious tempi used by Mr. Costa completed the good work. Beethoven in D, Missa Solennis, is in rehearsal. It is six years since it was performed, and it then attracted much attention on account of the extraordinary beauty of some of the movements, and the wild, fantastic, and ghostly spirit of others, as well as on account of its difficulty. The Mass has, we have been informed, suffered "adaptation," (word of uncertain signification), probably at the hands of one of M. Alary's rivals; and when we say we tremble for the result, it is simply out of respect to the memory of Beethoven.

THE BARNSBURY LITERARY AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTE inaugurated their new quarter by giving a concert in Myddleton Hall, under the direction of Mr. Carlo Minasi, when the following artists among others appeared:—Mrs. Harriette Lee, the Misses Jane Palmer, Fitzpatrick, and E. H. Jameson; Messrs. George Tedder, George Allen, Viotti Collins, Leonard, Howard Harris, G. H. Cooke, and G. Hartley. Mr. George Tedder was encored in two of his songs, "The pilgrim of love," and "The death of Nelson;" Mr. Viotti Collins in a violin solo of his own composition; and Mr. Leonard in "Largo al factotum," a compliment, by the by, Mr. Leonard well deserved. Miss Jane Palmer, who sang "Nobil donna" (Les Huguenots) has a voice of nice quality, and deserves a word of praise for the careful way in which she gave Meyerbeer's difficult "cavatina." Miss Fitzpatrick, too, an improving young pianist, must not be passed over without a word of encouragement for her accurate performance of Thalberg's "Home, sweet home." Mr. T. H. Herring and Mr. Minasi, as accompanists at the pianoforte, performed their duties excellently.

THE PECKHAM AMATEUR MUSICAL UNION'S seventh concert of their fifth season was numerously attended. The exertions of the choir were confined to a part song, "The open air," by Mendelssohn, an arrangement of "The blue bells of Scotland," by Mr. Paxton, and Dr. Cooke's glee of "Hark! the lark," all of which went well, under the guidance of Mr. F. Osborne Williams. Two of the most successful pieces of the evening, both of which were encored, were the trio from Balfe's Rose of Castille, "I'm not the queen," sung by Miss Eliza Hughes, Miss Leffler, and Mr. George Perren, and "Largo al factotum," by Mr. Leonard. The other vocalists were a Mlle. Annie C and Mr. Purkess. Miss Ellen Henderson, an improving young pianist, contributed a rondo, by Weber, and a fantasia, La Straniera, by Thalberg; and Mr. F. O. Williams performed the duties of conductor with his accustomed intelligence.

The London Glee and Madrigal Union gave a concert on Thursday week, at the Public Hall, Croydon, which attracted a very large audience.

"It has been reserved for Mr. Land and his accomplished colleagues," writes the Croydon Journal, "to interpret in the very highest style of art gems of music which had long remained latent, and for the revival of which Mr. Thomas Oliphant—so celebrated for his musical erudition—may claim a large share of the honours which they have so justly won. As much as we were prepared for some excellent singing, we scarcely expected to enjoy so unalloyed a treat, or that the unaccompanied human voice, by dint of practice and long and patient rehearsals, could become so faultless. The blending of the various voices was so delicately balanced that at times they resembled the vibrating chords of an instrument."

Digitized by Google

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE TWELFTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON

(53RD CONCERT IN ST. JAMES'S HALL)

WILL TAKE PLACE

ON MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 18, 1861,

The Programme will be selected from the Works of

VARIOUS COMPOSERS.

Second Performance this Season of MENDELSSOHN'S "OTTET."

Sixth Appearance of M. VIEUXTEMPS.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Grand Ottet, for four Violins, two Violas, and two Violoncellos (by unanimous desire) MM. VIEUXTEMPS, RIES, CARRODUS, WATSON, SCHREURS, WEBB, PAQUE, and PIATTI — Mendelssohn; Song, "Estelle," Madame LAURA BAXTER—Henry Smart; Sonata, in C major, Op. 53, dedicated to Count Waldstein, for Pianoforte alone, Mr. CHARLES HALLE—Beethoven.

PART II.—Chaconne, in D minor, for Violin solo, with Pianoforte accompaniment (first time at the Monday Popular Concerts). M. VIEUXTEMPS—Bach; Song, "Gentle Zephyr" Madame LAURA BAXTER — Sterndale Bennett; Quartet, in G minor, for Pianoforte, Violin, Viola, and Violoncello (first time at the Monday Popular Concerts), Mr. CHARLES HALLE, M. VIEUXTEMPS, M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI—Mozart.

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT. To commence at Eight o'Clock precisely.

 In answer to many inquiries, Mr. S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL begs to state that in obedience to a desire very generally expressed, Spohr's Double Quartet, in D minor, will be performed at the 13th Concert, on Monday, Feb. 25.

In consequence of many hundreds of persons having been unable to obtain admission at the 11th Monday Popular Concert, on Feb. 11th, 1861, when the entire programme was chosen from the works of Beethoven, there will be another Beethoven Concert on March 4th, 1861 (14th Concert), when the principal features of the selection which afforded so much gratification on that occasion will be repeated. M. Vieuxtemps will lead (with MM. Ries, Schreurs, and Piatti), the Rasoumowski Quartet in E minor, (No. 2); and the Trio in E flat (No. 1) for Violin, Viola, and Violoncello. Miss Arabella Goddard will again perform the grand Sonata, for Pianoforte alone, in C minor, Op. 111—the 32nd and last sonata of Beethoven; and the Kreutzer Sonata, for Pianoforte and Violin, with M. Vieuxtemps. Mr. Sims Reeves will repeat the Lieder Kreis, and the "Stolen Kiss." Conductor, Mr. Benedict.

NOTICE.—It is respectfully sugested that such persons as are not desirous of remaining till the end of the performance can leave either before the commencement of the last instrumental piece, or between any two of the movements, so that those who wish to hear the whole can do so without interruption.

Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s.

Of CHAPPELL and Co., 50 New Bond Street, and the principal Music-sellers.

MR. and Mrs. CHARLES KEAN'S engagement at the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, will conclude on Thursday, 28th, when RICHARD III. will be performed (for that night only), being for the Benefit of Mr. and Mrs. C. Kean.—THIS EVENING (Saturday, 16th), and Wednesday, 20th, THE WIFE'S SECRET. Tuesday next, 19th, LOUIS XI. Monday next, 18th, and Thursday, 21st, HAMLET. No re-engagement can take place, as Mr. and Mrs. C. Kean are to appear at the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh, on Monday, 4th March.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH. Engagement of Mr. and Mrs. CHARLES KEAN (for Eleven Nights only). The Last Night but Twelve of the most successful Pantomime of the season. This Evening, THE WIFE'S SECRET, in which Mr. and Mrs. CHARLES KEAN will appear. To conclude with the new, magnificent, and successful comic Pantomime of PETER WILKINS. Scenery by Beverley.

Upper gallery, 6d.; lower gallery, 1s.; pit, 2s.; upper boxes, 2s.; first circle, 2s. 6d.; dress circle, 5s; stalls, 6s.; private boxes, three guineas, two guineas, and 10s. 6d. Doors open at half-past 6; to commence at 7 o'clock. Box-office open from 10 till 5, under the direction of Mr. C. Nugent.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—Grand Combined Attraction.—Last Night of the Great Pantomime. —THIS EVENING (Saturday) will be performed Macfarren's successful opera of ROBIN HOOD. Robin Hood, Mr. SIMS REEVES; Allan-a-Dale, Mr. PARKINSON; Hugo (the Sompnour), Mr. HONEY; Sir Reginald (the Sheriff), Mr. SANTLEY; Outlaws, Messrs. PATEY and BARTLEMAN; Alice, Madame LEMAIRE; and Maid Marian, Madame SHERRINGTON. Conductor, Mr. CHARLES HALLE. Concluding each evening with the Children's great successful comic Pantomime, entitled HARLEQUIN AND TOM THUMB; or, Merlin the Magician, and the Good Fairies of the Court of King Arthur. With gorgeous effects by Beverley. Harlequin, Clown, Pantaloon, and Columbine by the celebrated Lauri Family. Sprites by the tribe of Arabs. Doors open at half-past 6, the opera commences at 7 o'clock each evening. Carriages to be ordered for half-past 11. Box-office open daily from 10 to 6, where places may be secured. In active preparation, and will be produced on Saturday, February 23rd, a new grand romantic opera, in four acts, by W. Vincent Wallace, entitled the AMBER WITCH. Principal characters by Mr. SIMS REEVES, Mr. SANTLEY, Mr. PATEY, Mr. BARTLEMAN, Miss FANNY HUDDART, and Madame SHERRINGTON.

Notice.—The Performances at this Theatre will, on and after Monday next, the 18th inst., commence at 8 o'clock at heretofore. The doors will be opened at half-past 7 each evening.

NOTICES.

To ADVERTISERS.—Advertisers are informed, that for the future the Advertising Agency of the THE MUSICAL WORLD is established at the Magazine of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyle Street (First Floor). Advertisements can be received as late as Three o'Clock P.M., on Fridays—but not later. Payment on delivery.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2*s.* 6*d.* / Every additional line (10 words) ... ... 6*d.*

To PUBLISHERS AND COMPOSERS.—All Music for Review in THE MUSICAL WORLD must henceforward be forwarded to the Editor, care of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street. A List of every Piece sent for Review will appear on the Saturday following in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

To CONCERT GIVERS.—No Benefit-Concert, or Musical Performance, except of general interest, unless previously Advertised, can be reported in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1861.

IT was not likely that one so shrewd and intelligent as M. Musard should continue to misappreciate English taste and English feeling for music. The programmes of his first concerts were neither discriminative nor complimentary. The clever Frenchman no doubt implicitly believed that the audiences of the Champs Elysées and St. James's Hall were identical in their requirements and sympathies. He did not know, or had not calculated, how much Jullien had elevated and invigorated the musical mind of the people of England; how he had led them by insensible degrees from apathy to attention, from indifference to admiration; with what art he first allured, then taught, then engaged, and finally enchained them; how all was accomplished by purely legitimate and artistic means; and, how in the end, the prefix of "Promenade" to the concerts became a misnomer, and the word was dropt by universal assent and that of "Jullien" adopted. We can readily understand how M. Musard was instigated to make essay of his concerts in London. He was naturally desirous of becoming the successor of Jullien; he believed that no one else was in the field to start candidate for that high post of honour and emolument; he had faith in his own competence as a conductor and director; and trusted to the supposed supremacy of his band. It was, therefore, natural that M. Musard should come to London to search after a fortune that no other person was looking for. Nobody can blame him. Nevertheless, he might have considered that even Jullien did not jump into popularity in one season; and still more, that Jullien's talents and instinct were of no ordinary kind, and had bequeathed an influence not easily to be eradicated. But M. Musard depended on his Parisian fame, and left the remainder to chance. His reputation in the French capital has not served him in London exactly as he anticipated. He has been judged scrupulously, according to his merits as a conductor and entrepreneur. The former have been variously canvassed; the latter did not prove entirely satisfactory. The programmes of the first concerts were, with one or two exceptions, composed of the veriest trifles; trifles, too, of no interest, selected for no other purpose than to show off the excellence of the solo performers, for which, it must be confessed, M. Musard's orchestra is remarkable. But Jullien invariably found music for his soloists that could not fail to please, and herein he showed one phase of his consummate art as a director of the so-called "Promenade" concerts. Of course Jullien had the advantage over M. Musard of being a far more ready and experienced composer, and was thus enabled to combine music, which would be agreeable to the popular ear, with what would be specially suitable to the instrument written for. The ambitious conductor of the new "Promenade Concerts," however, might, we imagine, have considered the goodness of the music in the first instance, not the excellence of the solo player—a mistake he has evidently fallen into, by not being acquainted with the musical taste of the English people.

Digitized by Google

Moreover, M. Musard fell into a grave error in selecting St. James's Hall for his concerts. Of all places in London—not excepting Exeter Hall or Hanover Square Rooms—the splendid music-room standing midway between Piccadilly and the Quadrant is most redolent of the classic odour. Not merely have the Monday Popular Concerts thrown a halo of antiquity and solemnity around the new hall, but the other entertainments given therein are, for the most part, of a grave and earnest character, and such as demand the profoundest attention on the part of the hearers. No doubt to many who attended M. Musard's concerts the first night, the feeling engendered by the miscellaneous congregation of carelessly attired and rough-looking perambulators, and by the echoes of the dance-tunes, must have been in the highest degree discordant. Had some of the theatres been chosen as the locality instead, no such feeling could have been awakened. The covered pit joined to the stage seems the proper area for the listening crowd at Promenade Concerts; the boxes, private and public, the fittest receptacle for the lookers-on. M. Musard, however, had no preference in the matter; every theatre in the metropolis was in occupation when he came, and his choice fell of necessity on St. James's Hall.

That M. Musard has changed his sentiments respecting the feeling for music in this country we may take for granted by the announcement of a "Mendelssohn Night," à la Jullien, for this evening. That this is a step in the right direction we feel confident the event will prove. As it is never too late to learn, the director of the new Promenade Concerts, by the result of his first classical entertainment, may read a lesson which, if he contemplates paying us a yearly visit, may be worth his while to read attentively. If he hope to establish his concerts as firmly in London as in Paris, he must especially bear in mind three things:—first, that February is about the worst month in the year for such performances; secondly, that St. James's Hall is about the unfittest possible place in the metropolis in which they could be given; and thirdly, that the English public is not behind, but in advance of, the French public in musical feeling and intelligence. Let M. Musard take these three propositions into his serious consideration, and they may serve him to good purpose on his next visit to London.

WHATEVER else the people of the United States may be, we do not think they have any title to be considered a musical nation. We believe they have a fine Opera House at New York, which they have foolishly named the "Royal Academy of Music;" and a still finer one at Philadelphia, of which the appellation is not known to us. Then an American hatter, with the madness for which persons of his calling have long been proverbial, paid a larger sum than was ever paid before or afterwards by any one else for the privilege of hearing Jenny Lind. Lastly, and seriously, the New Yorkers fully appreciated Mad. Bosio's singing before that charming vocalist had gained a tithe of the reputation which she afterwards enjoyed in the chief capitals of Europe, and which she retained undiminished until the moment of her death.

On the other hand, the Americans have musical faults, both of omission and of commission, to answer for. Why (with the exception of Mr. Bristow, and that very eccentric musical critic and very uncritical musician, Mr. Fay) have they produced no composers of the slightest pretensions? Why, above all, have they paid so much attention to nigger music, and written such quantities of those vapid commonplaces, known as "nigger melodies" (we speak here not of genuine nigger airs, which are bad enough in themselves, but of imitations thereof, which are a hundred times worse)? Russia, the youngest of all the great European states, has had its periods of infancy and childhood, and its moments of naïve inspiration, such as are met with only in youth. It has its thousands of popular proverbs; it possesses an inexhaustibly rich mine of national melodies; it boasts of an ancient ballad literature; and, naturally, it has its poets and its composers. But the country whose greatest bard is Longfellow (one from whose works we have only to strike out what he has borrowed from Germany and Finland, and nothing will remain), and whose national air is a low, comic tune, fit only to be associated with ribald words—this land of ready-made, transplanted citizens, without local traditions, without a peasantry to cherish them even if they existed—in short, without any of the elements of poetry in its past or present conditions of life—can hardly be expected to bring forth anything good in the way of music. If the Americans were content to adopt the early traditions of England it would be different; but these, as a rule, their national vanity, not to say their very nature, compels them to reject.

The above reflections were suggested by the announcement that, on Monday last, Prof. Longfellow's poem of Hiawatha, with music by Herr Robert Stoepel, would be recited, and the music performed at the Royal English Opera. The first American composer for the stage ever heard of in this country was Mr. Bristow, who wrote an opera on the subject of Rip van Winkle.* He was a genuine Yankee, we believe, but had been educated in England, and was a pupil of Mr. Macfarren. The second is a German who, thinking no doubt to please the Americans by composing music to one of their most popular poems, selected for that purpose a work founded on an Indian story, and imitated closely as to form and style from the great Finnish epic, the Kalewald!†

What sort of national character, we wondered, had Mr Robert Stoepel given to his music? None at all? or Finnish combined with Red Indian—the whole flavoured with Yankee? The most appropriate kind of music for the "national" American poem of Hiawatha (a very beautiful poem we admit—though that has really nothing to do with the question we are considering) would consist of Indian melodies, harmonised in the style of the Finns, and sung through the nose after the manner of the Americans. E.

THE chief, if not indeed the only, medium for the expression of political opinion of which the citizens of Rome can boast, in these days of impending transition, seems to be the opera. Demonstrations against the government — as we

* So often announced, though never produced, by the managers of the Royal English Opera. The late M. Jullien—that prince of musical ecclectis — gave the English public a specimen of Mr. Bristow's talent, some years ago, in the shape of select movements from an orchestral symphony.

† For a highly interesting account of this poem see the first number of Temple Bar.

Digitized by Google

gather from the letters of all our correspondents from the south, south-west, and south-east of the Italian peninsula—take place nightly in each of the Roman theatres. The Trovatore, of which the plot is usually considered unintelligible, has been prohibited, because the incidents, in various places, have been discovered to have a deep political signification. The Traviata, immoral though the subject may be, was considered unobjectionable enough in a political sense, and yet now even the Traviata is not allowed to be performed. The public found out that the following sentence, uttered by the physician of the dying heroine in the last act, might well be applied to the Papal Government:—"La tisi non ti accorda che poche ore." "Consumption leaves thee only a few hours to live."

This speech was vociferously applauded at a recent performance. The representative of the Doctor seemed to fancy, for a few seconds, that he had, by some mistake, been singing in tune, and that the audience were applauding him; but the police understood what was going on in a moment. Several of the chief political claqueurs were arrested on the spot, and at present the Traviata is in the Pope's Index expurgatorius. The Minister of Police has issued a document in which he "trusts that the Ballo in Maschera will not cause a similar scandal."

Poor Venice! What is her medium of political expression? Nothing reaches us on this head. Are her pleasant theatres closed?—her lively singers dumb? Or are they open and eloquent for the exclusive benefit of Croat long-thrusts and swashbucklers from Bohemia? That the Venetians themselves do not attend the theatres now, may be taken for granted. They are for the moment prostrate and browbeaten; and will remain so until some one—one whose name is on—every lip—waiting to be shouted forth—the Hercules of his age, cleanser of Bourbonian stables, and what not?—shall approach with undaunted step and knock at the gates of Venice. When that looked-for period arrives, the Venetians will again be tongue-loosed, again be musical; and instead of "Parigi O cara!" their song will be "Giuseppe O caro!"—

"Who's dat knockin' at de door?
Garibaldi! Garibaldi!
De Gen'ral Garibaldi!
'Tis Old Jo' knockin' at de door!"

Verdi (in his way, another Hercules) will adapt this to his loudest and most strident unisons. All Venice will utter it. All Italy will echo it with lungs of brass. All France ——but we are trenching on politics. Taisons-nous. The preachers of harmony, the disciples of concord, the advocates of sweet sounds, the followers of the "Divine Art," have nothing to say to politics. Flutes and clarionets, fiddles and bassoons, are our instruments of predilection; drums and fifes and trumpets are but accessories. Moreover, we prefer a round to a canon, and a fugue to a field-marshal. P.

PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.—This day, at 11 a.m., the band of the Philharmonic Society—with FORTY-SEVEN new players, to replace the FORTY-SEVEN (involuntary) seceders—meet in the Hanover Square Rooms, to try their strength, under the honoured bâton of Conductor Sterndale Bennett. Noblesse oblige. Professor Bennett must not (will not) drop a leaf from his laurel crown.

MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—At the General Meeting which took place last week the annual report of the council was read by Mr. Secretary Salaman, and the financial statement it contained, together with the general account of the business of the society for the past year, afforded unanimous satisfaction to the fellows and associates assembled. There was some discussion on points of no public interest, but all objections were satisfactorily answered, and the meeting, which was more than ordinarily well-attended, separated with votes of thanks to the secretary, the chairman (Mr. John Simon), Mr. Henry Smart, choral director, and other officers connected with the business of the society. We may state here that the instrumental pieces to be performed at the first Orchestral Concert are Spohr's symphony in D minor (No. 2); Beethoven's violin concerto (M. Vieuxtemps; the overtures to Ruy Blas (Mendelssohn); The Tempest (Benedict), and Le Philtre (Auber).

THE SISTERS MARCHISIO.—A Parisian journal states that Rossini has just composed two duets and two solos for the Sisters Marchisio—a piece of intelligence, if true, as significant as interesting.

MUSARD'S CONCERTS.—The selections have been varied nightly during the week, and Mad. Louisa Vinning has been added to the attractions. To-night the programme will be devoted entirely to the works of Mendelssohn.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The winter concerts, which had been suspended during the holidays, were resumed on Saturday, the 2nd instant, and proved highly attractive. The programme exhibited the usual care and taste on the part of Mr. Augustus Manns who, were that possible, appeared more than ever zealous and energetic. The symphony was one of Haydn's, in D, the overture Weber's Preciosa; and Herr Pauer played Mendelssohn's pianoforte concerto (No. 2) in D minor. Miss Banks and Mad. Laura Baxter were the vocalists, each lady selecting an Italian air and an English ballad, and joining in two duets. The concert on the 9th surpassed the former one in almost every respect. The programme was selected entirely from the works of Beethoven. The Eroica symphony was given, and the band reinforced to confer due honour on that stupendous work, the execution of which, indeed, reflected infinite credit on Mr. Manns and his instrumentalists. The pianoforte concerto in E flat, a composition vieing in splendour and grandeur with the symphony itself, was played in the most brilliant and magnificent manner by Miss Arabella Goddard, whose performance from first to last created a profound sensation, and who was recalled unanimously at the conclusion. The overture was the grand Leonore in C major—Fidelio, No. 3, which, no less than the symphony and the orchestral parts of the concerto, showed Mr. Mann's band in the most advantageous light. The singers were Miss Banks, Miss Martin, and Mr. Wilbye Cooper. Miss Banks gave the "Song of the Quail," and joined Mr. Cooper in the duet from the prison scene for Leonora and Florestan from Fidelio. Miss Martin, who is a pupil of Mr. Hullah's, and a promising one, sang Marcellina's song from Fidelio (Act I., scene 1), and "Know'st thou the land?" and Mr. Cooper, in addition to the duet with Miss Banks, sang the fine chamber song, "O beauteous daughter of the starry race"—all performances entitled to praise. The weather was anything but inviting, notwithstanding which the attendance was numerous and fashionable—a proof that good music may successfully contend even with the elements.

DUDLEY GALLERY, EGYPTIAN HALL.—On Saturday, the 2nd instant, the London Glee and Madrigal Union concluded, most successfully, their annual series of performances. This tuneful choir, organised and directed by Mr. Land, and aided by the "intercantatory remarks" (as they were aptly termed by a daily contemporary) of Mr. Thomas Oliphant, has greated a great impression in musical circles, and done much good service to the cause of English chamber-music. The singing of the "four-men-song-men" (as Shakspeare denominates such as sing in four-part harmony), namely, Messrs. Baxter, Cummings, Land, and Lawler, was perfection, especially in Horsley's glees, "By Celia's arbour," and "When the wind blows in the sweet rose tree," which the illustrator, Mr. Oliphant, correctly terms the highly-finished miniature pictures of glee-writing. The admirable manner in which Miss Eyles renders the pathetic ballads, such as "Barbara Allan" and

Digitized by Google

"The Oxfordshire Tragedy," is notorious; nor is she a whit inferior in the humorous Maypole song, "Come lasses and lads," "O weel may the keel row," and the quaint ditty, "Oh, mother, a hoop!" written in 1710, and peculiarly illustrative of the antiquity of "crinoline." Miss J. Wells is improving rapidly, and we can compliment her on the simple and unaffected execution of that most difficult ballad to sing with due effect—"Auld Robin Gray." Mr. Oliphant thus concluded a short farewell address:—

"We have no Rode's airs with variations to take your ears by storm; no sky-high flights of vocalisation, such as some old lady described to Samuel Johnson as being 'astonishing, wonderful,' &c. 'Wonderful! madam,' said the Doctor; 'I wish to Heaven they were impossible!' On the contrary, it has been the aim of the London Glee and Madrigal Union to win your favour by an appeal to your understanding and to your feelings; and I trust you will accord to us at least some portion of that honour in our generation which, according to Ecclesiasticus (chap. xliv. verse 5), is "the meed due to such as found out musical tunes, and recited ditties in writing."

We are glad to learn that Mr. Land is making arrangements to renew these very pleasing and instructive entertainments in the course of the spring.

Letter to the Editor.

ORAZI (ORAGI) E CURIAZI (CURIAGI).

SIR,—My attention has been drawn to the review of this celebrated composer's song from "Orazi e Curiazi"—and your transcribing the title page in extenso—literatim et notatim, neither of which I beg to say are (is?) correctly given by you from the copy. I admit the error of four G's for four Z's in the spelling of the names, which ought to have been corrected before printing. The motive of my now addressing you is simply to reply to your query—"Did Mercadante write down such a progression as this?". In reply, I say most certainly—"Yes"—as it appears in my copy—with a crotchet rest, and not as in your notation with a quaver rest, and in the title of the song your spelling differs from my copy in two words. You will oblige me by inserting this communication in your next number. Yours,

R. ANDREWS.

Manchester, Feb. 12, 1861.

[We give insertion with pleasure to Mr. R. Andrews' apology. Nevertheless, we plead "not guilty" to the charge he makes against us of misrepresenting his orthography. As "retort courteous" we may remind him that Mercadante's opera should be called Gl'Orazi e Curiazi—not Orazi Curiazi; unless the composer's name be affixed to it—as Mercadante's Orazi, &c., which is not the case on Mr. Andrews' title page. To conclude, we will not believe that Mercadante—a learned though somewhat prosy musician, did write down the progression complained of, until we see it in the full orchestral score. Pianoforte arrangements—even by Mr. Andrews—are no authorities.—ED.]

Provincial.

THE third and last concert of the BIRMINGHAM Musical Union appears to have been the most attractive of these agreeable and too evanescent entertainments. Aris's Gazette writes in eulogistic terms of the entire performance:—

"The quartet of Beethoven (in G, No. 2, op. 18), was played by Messrs. Ries, H. and G. Hayward (violins), and Herr Daubert (violoncello), most admirably. Its numerous beauties, more especially the quaint originality of the scherzo allegro and the fine phrasing and accompaniments of the final allegro, being most ably rendered. Herren Ries and Daubert evidently played con amore, and fully realised the subtle delicacies of this grand composition of the great 'tone poet.' The playing of Messrs. H. and G. Hayward was also very effective. Miss Banks did herself great credit by her singing of Mendelssohn's 'First Violet.' The Mozart duet for piano (Flavell) and violin (Rees) was exceedingly fine. Mr. Flavell seems more at home with this composer than, perhaps, any other, as far as illustrative power is concerned, and in this instance his skill and talent were conspicuous. The firm and decisive bowing of Herr Ries was shown to great advantage. Weber's trio for piano (Duchemin), flute (Mathews), and violoncello (Daubert), proved to be the most attractive performance of the evening, Mr. Duchemin's intelligent reading and clever playing (taking the time to a nicety) contributing materially to its success. Herr Daubert imparted considerable interest to the Mendelssohn duet (piano and violin) with which the second part commenced, Mr. Duchemin being perfectly at home in the fine pianoforte accompaniments."

The following remarks on the general management of the society, and speculations as to its future prospects, are not without interest:—

"The society has now closed its labours for the season, and we trust without any pecuniary loss. They certainly have had the satisfaction of arousing the attention of amateurs to the fact, that there are resident professors who are both able and willing to place before them works of that refined nature which there would be no opportunity of hearing in Birmingham, were it not for the efforts of such gentlemen, since there are few amateurs capable of coping with the difficulties which beset the realisation of the sterling conception of the classical writers. We cordially hope the members of the Birmingham Musical Union have found sufficient encouragement, during the season now closed, to induce them to resume their interesting labours next winter."

Mr. W. G. CUSINS (writes a correspondent) gave a soirée musicale at the Mathematical School, ETON, on the 8th instant, by permission of the head master, the Rev. Stephen Hawtrey. There was a long list of lady patronesses, of high worthy names, so that altogether the affair was first caste. Mr. Cusins had for his coadjutors, in the instrumental department, M. Victor Buzian (violin), and M. Paque (violoncello), and, in the vocal, Mad. Louisa Vinning and Miss Rainforth. The pianoforte performances, solo and in combination, were Beethoven's trio for piano, violin and violoncello, in G, Op. 1 (No. 2); Mendelssohn's sonata, in B flat, Op. 45, for piano and violoncello; Thalberg and De Beriot's grand trio on the Huguenots, for pianoforte and violin; and Thalberg's grand fantasia, for pianoforte solos, on Mose in Egitto. Mr. Cusins was in the best play, and was profoundly appreciated by his refined and attentive auditory. He was ably assisted by the talented violinist and violoncellist. Miss Rainsforth sang "Old Robin Gray," in a style we are not often accustomed to hear now-a-days, when genuine simple ballad-singing seems to have died an unnatural death, and crooked sentimentality to have supplied its place. Mad. Louisa Vinning, if not so true a ballad-singer, is an oftener singer, and has therefore more chances of success. Both ladies in duet were very happy, especially in Mendelssohn's "Merry bells." Mr. Victor Buzian executed a difficult piece on the violin, which was more difficult than interesting. Also, M. Paque presented a solo on his instrument, and Mr. Harold Thomas presided at the pianoforte. [We have preserved our correspondent's article intact.—ED.]

The concert at PLYMOUTH for the benefit of Mad. Jullien, which took place on Monday night at St. George's Hall, Stonehouse, was, we are well pleased to record, a bumper. Of this interesting affair we beg to present our readers with a detailed account (inevitably abridged) from the Western Daily Mercury of Tuesday:—

"A 'Grand Jullien Festival,' for the benefit of Mad. Jullien, took place last night, at St. George's Hall, Stonehouse, under the patronage of the Earl and Countess of Morley, Sir Thomas and Lady Pasley, the Hon. Mrs. Soltau Symons, Major-General and Mrs. Hutchinson, Colonel Holloway, C.B., Colonel Hamilton, Major Wickham, Major Harene, and the officers of the different regiments. The hall was filled by a brilliant and fashionable company, including all the rank and beauty of the neighbourhood. The arrangements made by Mad. Julien for the comfort and convenience of her patrons were all that could be desired. The hall is not the most convenient in the world, and its fittings are not creditable to the gentlemen who have the management of the property. However, the fair bénéficiare took care not to overcrowd the audience, and there was consequently no discomfort felt by any one. Besides Mad. Anna Thillon, Miss Rance, the protégée of the lamented Jullien, Mrs. Henry Reed, the pianist, and Herr Hermann, first basso at her Majesty's Theatre, the orchestra comprised the bands of the Royal Marines, of the 12th Regiment, and of the 61st, who played many of Jullien's most effective pieces, in a manner that elicited the heartiest applause. The performances opened with the overture to William Tell, which was beautifully played. Herr Hermann sang Mozart's 'In diesen heiligen Hallen,' from Zauberflöte, with a clearness of tone and a rich and powerful distinctness of utterance. His voice has great force, and is rich and melodious. Mad. Anna Thillon discoursed sweet music most eloquently. The first song was 'Una voce poco fa,' into which she threw all the gaiety which its sentiment ought always to inspire. In the ballad of 'Minnie,' which she sang by desire, she was encored. Mrs. Henry Reed played a solo, on the piano, by Weber, and a fantasia by Prudent, both of which evinced her mastery of the instrument. Miss Kate Ranoe sang Mozart's 'Deh vieni non tardar,' and Braga's 'Santa Lucia' in a very sweet and charming style. She was most warmly received, and we never heard her sing to greater advantage, or with more success. She has become a favourite with the Plymouth audiences. We should like to have spoken more in detail of the performances of the band, which was ably conducted by Mr. Winterbottom, Mr. Rix, and Herr Sauer. In the British Army Quadrilles, the solos on the cornet-à-piston, flute, clarionet, flageolet, trombone, and bassoon, reminded us of those days when Jullien, in the height of his successes, used to join in those thunders of well-merited applause which it so much delighted his heart to see accorded. The concert was altogether a success, and we trust that Madame Jullien may be gratified by her renewed acquaintance with her Plymouth friends.

Digitized by Google

The Messiah was performed in the Free Trade Hall, MANCHESTER, on Wednesday, being the usual Ash Wednesday performance, Mr. D. W. Banks being conductor, and Mr. W. T. Best presiding at the organ. The principal singers were Mad. Florence Lancia, Mrs. Fanny Huddart, Mr. Augustus Braham, and Mr. Henri Wharton. Particulars have not reached us.—On Saturday Mr. Willott's entertainment, Light and Shade, was given at the same locality, with Mad. Lancia and Mr. Augustus Braham.

"The more (says the Manchester Weekly Times) we hear and see of the gifted Lancia, the more we are satisfied that she is a true artist; one that, ere long, will take a position inferior to none in operatic singing, where dramatic feeling is required. There are few things of the kind finer than her 'War Song,' from Verdi's Attila, in one direction, or the humorous ballad of 'Perliceman A' in the other."

Dr. Mark and his little men have been paying a visit to WORCESTER, and, if not attracting large crowds, have at least been gratifying their admirers. "The 'little men,'" writes Berrow's Worcester Journal, "went through their clever performances with extraordinary skill, and the concerts were enlivened by some songs by Mr. Frank Reid, who has a most musical tenor voice, and who sang Braham's favourite song, 'The anchor's weighed,' with great judgment and effect. The laughing chorus by the 'the little men' was given so truthfully that the audience involuntarily joined in it."—The same journal speaks praisingly of Mr. Evans' concert at the Music Hall.

The Concert Society of LEEDS gave a performance of Der Freischutz at the Town Hall on Saturday, Mad. Catherine Hayes and Miss Lascelles sustaining the two female parts. Further particulars next week.

The Saturday Evening Concerts in EDINBURGH, taking something of their tone, doubtless, from the success achieved by the two Monday Popular Concerts recently given in that city, are beginning to indicate a greater bias towards the "classics" in their programmes than was their wont. At the fifteenth concert, on Saturday last, Haydn's Adieu symphony, the overture to Egmont, and the Marcia Funebre from the Eroica symphony, were performed. The Edinburgh Courant, nevertheless, appears to think that "orchestral performances do not seem to be as much appreciated by popular audiences as vocal"—"which," it adds, "is to be the more regretted, because for the latter Mr. Howard is in a great measure dependent upon assistance from the other side of the border, while the former can be easily and well supplied in our own city." What audiences, if not popular, the Monday Popular Concerts commanded, the writer does not trouble himself with thinking about. Miss Clari Fraser, who made her third appearance at the Saturday Concerts, continues to please.

"By her graceful and simple style of singing (writes the journal quoted above) she gave universal satisfaction. She was repeatedly recalled. One of her songs, an old English ditty, 'Oh! mother, a hoop, a hoop,' was exceedingly appropriate to the present time, but the audience did not seem to appreciate its humour. 'Ilka blade o' grass,' most sweetly sung, was more successful."

The Edinburgh Glee Union, a recently-formed society, gave a concert on Monday evening at the Masonic Hall, which attracted a large audience. The London Glee and Madrigal Union has evidently been the model upon which this new Union is established. In addition to the glees and part-songs, the programme contained several solos, two of which were contributed by Miss Helen Kirk, a native of Glasgow, who made her début in the City Hall there last month, and whom the Edinburgh Courant represents as highly promising. The principal members of the Union are Messrs. Geoghegan, A. W. Smith, Bishop, and Rutherford.

The Caledonian Mercury gives a lengthened account of the performance of the Creation, in the Music Hall, Edinburgh, on the 23rd ult., under the direction of Mr. Charles J. Hargitt, and speaks in eulogistic terms of the singing of Mad. and Mr. Weiss, who took the leading soprano and bass parts in the oratorio. The chorus consisted of the members of the Edinburgh Choral Union, with the full orchestra of the Musical Association.

A correspondent from DUBLIN informs us that a matinée was given by Herr Oberthür, at the Misses Leishmans' Educational Institute for Ladies, on Saturday, and was numerously attended, notwithstanding the severity of the weather. A trio for harp, violin, and violoncello, by Herr Oberthür, was excellently played by the composer, Mr. Levey and Herr Elsner, and listened to with earnest attention, and applauded after each movement. The other performances by Herr Oberthür were a fantasia for the harp on Oberon, and a "transcription" for the same instrument of Reichardt's popular Lied "Thou art so near and yet so far," "an elegant composition," writes our correspondent, "which Herr Oberthür played with remarkable taste, and which will, no doubt, soon become popular among harpists." Miss Julia Cruise sang Mr. Joseph Robinson's song "Summer," accompanied on the pianoforte by the composer, with great expression; and Miss Ellen Williams contributed her talent to enhance the interest of the vocal portion of the programme. A solo for violoncello was played by Herr Elsner, and ably accompanied on the pianoforte by Dr. Stewart, and the concert terminated with a trio of Herr Oberthür for harp, violin, and violoncello, entitled the "Alpen horn."

At the last concert of the Philharmonic Society (Feb. 8th), M. Vieuxtemps, Signor Piatti, and Herr Pauer performed. The concert was almost entirely instrumental, and included, among lesser things, one of Mozart's symphonies in C major, Mendelssohn's trio in D minor, for piano, violin, and violoncello, the overture to Oberon, and Vieuxtemps' violin concerto. The concert, it need hardly be said, was eminently successful. The Evening Mail thus delivers its opinion on the performers:—

"We liked M. Vieuxtemps better in the fantasia on Lombardi. Here the old singing tone, the almost vocal phrasing, the neatness of execution, boldness, and complete mastery over the instrument, were all apparent, and the M. Vieuxtemps of some years stood before us. Of Signor Piatti's playing it would be hard to speak in too high terms. He combines with entire command of the instrument a thorough feeling of what he interprets, and he renders the melodies so exquisitely that we are reminded of the most finished vocalism. Herr Pauer was the pianist, and a more genuine pianoforte player could scarcely be desired. Though he does not possess the delicious finish, liquid rapidity, and and faultless brilliancy of Arabella Goddard, neither the comprehensive manner of Thalberg, yet there is a choice execution combined with moderated power, and a clearness of idea in his playing surpassed by few performers. His own valse manifested talent, but the subject is too dry to be attractive, and he wisely substituted another piece to the encore. Mendelssohn's trio could not have been given more perfectly than it was by M. Vieuxtemps, Signior Piatti, and Herr Pauer. But with such a trio of performers why curtail the work, as it was on last evening, by omitting the first movement? If this were done, fearing the concert might be too long, it would be wise to have left one or both of the duets which were rendered so oddly as to make a great number of the audience wonder at their being given at all."

Very true, brother Mail; and we only wonder Mr. Russell should have lent his sanction to such an act of vandalism.

A LIMERICK correspondent writes that Mr. Corbett's concert, in the Theatre, attracted a large and fashionable audience. Miss Cruise was the vocalist, and sang with admirable taste "The meeting of the waters" and "The beating of my own heart" (G. A. Macfarren). Miss M'Carthy, the pianist, performed Mr. Benedict's brilliant and popular fantasia, "Erin," * with equal taste and spirit, and was rapturously applauded. Mr. Levey's performances of "The last rose of summer" and "The boys of Tipperary," on a single string, elicited loud praise. Herr Elsner was the violoncellist, and Herr Oberthur the harpist. The latter created quite a sensation in his clever "transcription" for harp solo of Reichardt's popular lied, "Thou art so near, and yet so far." The concert altogether was a great success.

Digitized by Google

The Operas.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Fra Diavolo was produced last night, for the first time at this theatre, with the following cast:—Zerlina, Miss Parepa; Lady Allcash, Mlle. Alessandri; Fra Diavolo, Mr. Swift; Lorenzo, Mr. Parkinson; the Robbers, Messrs. Bartleman and Patey; and Lord Allcash, Mr. Honey. We shall notice the performance in our next. Mr. Wallace's Amber Witch is announced for Saturday week.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.—On Monday night, the pantomime having at length been laid aside, a new musical piece was produced, entitled The Song of Hiawatha, founded on Longfellow's celebrated poem. The Song of Hiawatha, which was brought out at Boston, in 1859, with great success, is the composition of Mr. Robert Stoepel, a gentleman not unknown in musical circles in England, and who, some years since, went to the United States, and married Miss Matilda Heron, an American actress of high standing. Mr. Stoepel had his "legend," as he calls it, subsequently performed at New York, and other States of the Union, with a result that tempted him to try its fortune in home-land; and accordingly having arrived in London and submitted it to Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison, it was approved of, accepted, and produced on Monday night on the stage of the Royal English Opera, under the direction of Mr. Alfred Mellon, with the band and chorus of the establishment, and Messrs. St. Albyn, H. Corri, Wharton, and Madame Palmieri as principal vocalists. Miss Matilda Heron (Madame Stoepel) recited the poem, which, we learned, had been altered and abridged by the poet himself to fit it for musical purposes. On the present occasion we do not feel called upon to give a detailed account of the music, which we had an opportunity of hearing the first night only, and which we consider too earnest and comprehensive to be thoroughly understood after a single hearing, more particularly as the performance was far from perfect, the singers having had but two or three rehearsals. The Song comprises fourteen pieces, choruses, orchestral illustrations, an Indian dance, a trio, and solos. Our impression is that the Song of Hiawatha is a composition of high merit, and that Mr. Stoepel has proved himself an original no less than a graceful thinker. Miss Matilda Heron delivered the verses with admirable point and feeling, and was most liberally applauded throughout.

Mr. Balfe's Satanella was given for the first time this year on Tuesday evening last, and was on the whole as good a performance as we remember of that most sparkling and attractive work. Miss Louisa Pyne was in exquisite voice and sang delightfully, creating the usual impression in "The power of love," which was rapturously encored. Mr. Harrison, too, in the "Glorious vintage of champagne," and "An angel form in dreams behold," displayed all his old vigour and energy. Miss Leffler assumed the part of Stella for the first time. R.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.—We can scarcely think that any one will now be found with sufficient hardihood to repeat the senseless parrot cry, heard so frequently at one time, that the English were not a musical nation. Should any such demented individual, however, be still in existence, we would advise a visit to St. James's Hall any Monday evening, and if after that he was unconverted in his opinions, we should feel inclined, if not to "write him down an ass," at least to set him down as a being in no way amenable to reason. The fact is, that in no city in the world is so much really good music to be heard as in London. Let any one who doubts this assertion read the reports of our foreign correspondents, if unable to verify by personal observation, what musical fare is provided in continental capitals and large towns. Where do we find any societies corresponding in magnitude, importance, and number to our Sacred Harmonic and Philharmonic Societies — we speak not of London alone but also of the many provincial associations bearing the same name? Can Paris, Vienna, Berlin, or anywhere else, show a tithe of the concerts and various musical entertainments that are given in London every season — to say nothing of the two large opera houses open throughout the greater part of the year, and provincial concert and operatic tours? And, though last, by no means least, is there any place where classical chamber music of the highest order is brought week after week within the reach of the shilling-paying masses, as it has been now no less than fifty-two times at St. James's Hall, to say nothing of eleven similar concerts in the provinces quite recently, swelling the total of the Monday Popular Concerts to no less than sixty-three within two years of their foundation. Such a result is unparalleled in the history of musical entertainments. Last Monday's concert offered special attractions for the connoisseur, and we were therefore not surprised to find that standing room was at a premium in St. James's Hall, and numbers turned back much to their chagrin, being unable to obtain admission. The entire programme was devoted to Beethoven, and comprised no less than four chefs d'œuvre of the great "tone-poet"—two for the first time at the Monday Popular Concerts. The quartet in C major (op. 59), which has been already heard at these concerts (Nov. 14, 1859), and is the last of the three dedicated to Count Rasoumowski, the Russian ambassador at Vienna, and, as all our readers know, one of the most strikingly original of the stringed compositions of the great master. Enough to say that, in the hands of Messrs. Vieuxtemps, Ries, Schreurs and Piatti, the performance left nothing for the most fastidiously hypercritical taste to desire. So with the trio in C minor for violin, viola and violoncello (the last of four), which was equally faultless in execution, and made a worthy commencement to the second part, the performers being summoned forward at the end.

To Miss Arabella Goddard the musical public is in a great measure indebted for the resuscitation of Beethoven's latest pianoforte solos — the envy and despair of those with less intellectual grasp and manipulative skill who consequently pronounced these works as meaningless or unplayable — the truth being that they lacked the comprehension to understand and the fingers to execute such wholly exceptional compositions. Opus 111 — the thirty-second and last of the sonatas of Beethoven — was introduced by Miss Goddard some time since at one of her memorable soirées, and its reproduction at the Monday Popular Concerts was looked forward to with much interest, the op. 109 (E major) having been so well received in March last year. That the expectation formed was by no means deceived may be readily understood by those who know how thorough a mistress of her art is Miss Goddard, the audience showing the most strict attention and the warmest appreciation of this truly magnificent sonata, after her matchless execution of which she was unanimously recalled into the orchestra and applauded with the heartiest enthusiasm.

The last piece formed an appropriate climax to the very admirable selection of the evening, — every note of the now familiar Kreutzer sonata being enjoyed to the full and applauded to the echo. Indeed it has rarely been our lot to listen to such a marvellously spirited performance — Miss Goddard and M. Vieuxtemps outshining even themselves, and both being recalled at the end.

The only vocalist was Mr. Sims Reeves, who, by special desire, gave that exquisite chain of love-songs, the Lieder Kreis, in the most incomparable style, and also a charming little ariette, "The stolen kiss," in such a manner as to provoke an encore so irresistible and unanimous that our great tenor had no choice left but to comply, as he had complied with the "recall" after the Lieder Kreis. Mr. Benedict conducted and accompanied the Lieder Kreis in a highly artistic manner. At the next concert Mendelsohn's Ottet is to be repeated.

* Composed expressly for Miss Arabella Goddard.

Digitized by Google

FATHER KEMP'S OLD FOLKS.—An American entertainment without the nigger element is a novelty to commence with. Here we have a troupe of minstrels, wanting the conventional blackened faces and red ruled shirts, illustrating the various actions and passions of humanity by the power of music, and making themselves agreeable without bones, banjos, and muscular contortions. Father Kemp's Old Folks have the least possible pretentions to anything out-of-the-way. Their sole peculiarity consists in their costume, which professes to be that of "one hundred years ago," and which certainly look odd enough to belong to a century or two more remote. The troupe consists of thirty ladies and gentlemen, part forming the orchestra, part chorus, and a few soaring into the empyrean of single voices. The orchestra is not very powerful, nor is the choral force remarkable for its strength, but they sing and play well together, and Father Kemp marshals them in a skilful manner. Of the solo singers we must specially distinguish from the rest Miss Emma J. Nichols, "the favourite young American vocalist," as she is styled, who may without violence, though young, be denominated the vocal soul of the Old Folks. Miss Nichols has a very fine, powerful contralto voice of peculiarly telling quality, and which she manages with sufficient ease, although apparently without much art. To a real vocaliser such a voice would prove an immediate fortune. The young lady is an immense favourite already with the audience of the lower room at St. James's Hall, where the Old Folks are now exhibiting, and gives some of her songs nightly—more especially "The captain with the whiskers," with an effect hardly to be described. The rest of the vocal company do not number among them any Sims Reeveses or Louisa Pynes.

SOCIETY FOR THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF THE FINE ARTS.—The Rev. Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, Bart., Professor of music at the University of Oxford, and one of the vice-presidents of this society, recently delivered a lecture, at the society's rooms in Conduit Street, "On the Development of Musical Style." The room was crowded, many musical and artistic notabilities being present. Mr. R. Lincoln Cocks was in the chair. The lecturer commenced by showing the difficulties which existed in the way of any attempt to classify music. If they adopted the chronological system the difficulty always arose where to fix the point of demarcation—what was ancient and where the modern commenced. If they classed it under the head of the names of composers, there was this objection, that all great composers had composed in almost every style. Upon the whole, the best system appeared to be that adopted by Dr. Crotch, which, by the way, he stated he had adopted in consequence of an idea suggested by Sir Joshua Reynolds, in his Lectures on Painting, and which classified musical compositions under three heads—the sublime, the beautiful, and the ornamental or picturesque. The lecturer entered at some length into a explanation of the peculiar characteristics of these various styles, and showed that in a great majority of compositions, two of them, sometimes the whole three, were combined in various proportions; just as in painting, the three primitive colours, and again the secondary colours resulting from the combination of any two of them, and eventually the tertiary colours, in various qualities of hue, and gradations of tint, constituted a chromatic parterre of endless and unlimited variety; the accurate combination of the whole resulting in the pure white of daylight. Historically, it was very difficult to say where harmony first commenced. It was certain that it was not relished by, but, on the contrary, was repulsive to the barbaric peoples of the south. On the other hand, there was evidence to show that amongst the Sclavonian and Celtic races of the north harmony of sound had been known and cultivated from the earliest times. It was not until the Gregorian period that the first attempt at fusing the two systems—the melody of the south and the harmony of the north—was made; and with what result they all knew. The lecturer afterwards traced the progress of musical development through its various forms of lyric and orchestral achievement down to our own time. He illustrated his remarks throughout by references to various works of great composers of all ages. The discourse, which was of a most eloquent and convincing character, was frequently interrupted by the applause of the audience, and the rev. gentleman was loudly cheered at its conclusion. Mr. Ottley, the accomplished and indefatigable secretary of the society, then took the chair, and in few but appropriate words, commented upon the interesting lecture the audience had been listening to with such marked atttention, and seconded the vote of thanks proposed by Mr. R. Lincoln Cocks, which was carried by acclamation.

MR. VAN PRAAG.—The most polite and useful of concert agents has issued his circular for the forthcoming season, in which he states that he is about to "resume the business in which for many years he trusts he has afforded satisfaction." He should have said "unqualified" satisfaction. We have known Mr. Van Praag for many years, and can answer for his thorough knowledge of the management of concerts and balls, as well as the superintendence of bands and choruses, and in short everything connected with the getting up of musical performances. In addition to his experience and perfect acquaintance with the organisation of music meetings, benefits, &c., we may name his willingness to oblige and the energy he invariably displays on behalf of those who employ him as among his special recommendations. In short, Mr. Van Praag is a concert agent in the most exact sense of the word, and those who avail themselves of his services once will never be tempted to have recourse to any one else. For particulars we refer the reader to our advertising columns. R.

PROPOSED TESTIMONIAL TO PROFESSOR MERLET.—On Friday evening a meeting was held in University College for the purpose of considering the propriety of presenting some substantial testimonial to Professor Merlet, who has recently resigned the professorship of the French language and literature, after having held the appointment for the last thirty-two years. Professor Key, who presided, referred in terms of high praise to Professor Merlet's uninterrupted devotion to his duties from the opening of the college to the present session, when, from age and enfeebled health, he was compelled to resign. It was decided, after some discussion, that the proposed testimonial should be given in the form of an annuity, or an equivalent to an annuity; and further, that all old and existing students of the college and the junior school should be requested to contribute thereto. An influential committee, including members of the council, professors, and former and present students, was formed to carry out the object of the meeting; and W. A. Case, Esq., M.A., was requested to act as hon. secretary and receive subscriptions.

SACRED MUSIC IN SCOTLAND.—A meeting was held at Edinburgh on Friday, in connection with the association founded by the late Lord Murray, for the revival of sacred music in Scotland. The Lord Advocate who presided, said,—"I don't understand, and never did, how it came to pass, that while in the earlier days of the Reformation music was certainly an ordinary part of the education of children, from the highest to the lowest, it has come to be so utterly neglected as it has been. Part singing in the earlier period of the Reformation, in the 17th century, was an ordinary part of the teaching in the parochial schools of Scotland. There are old Acts of Parliament which enjoin that every burgh shall have its song school, and there are some of these schools, existing at least in name, to this day. I know very well that it is thought that Presbyterians look with eyes askance at anything but vocal music, and that the organ, or "kist o' whistles," as it has been called, is something that ought not to be introduced into religious worship. Now, speaking for myself as a Presbyterian, I think we are hardly done justice to in the matter. We do not look upon the organ with anything like superstitious fear—quite the reverse; but we regard it as of importance that the congregation should sing when they profess to sing. I imagine that the real dislike of Presbyterians to the organ is that it tends to prevent the congregation taking their proper part in the psalmody. There can be no doubt that the noblest of all church music is the singing of the human voice. An organ may help a lame congregation; but a congregation able to sing as a congregation should does not require such assistance. I hold in my hand a book I brought down from the Advocates' Library to show that psalmody was not neglected in the earlier ages of the Reformation. It is John Knox's Psalm-Book, printed in 1565, five years after the Scottish Reformation, and in it the music is noted down along with the psalm. Knox had the strongest possible sense of the necessity of encouraging church music, and I believe that for a century after his day there was a great deal of pains taken in this important branch of public worship." Lord Neaves, in moving the approval of the report read, said,—"Whether we are ever to see in our Presbyterian churches anything that may give a little sustainment and assistance to the voice—not, perhaps, an organ, which the people might dislike—but something that might tend to improve the music and sustain the voice from falling at the close, I do not know; but now that 300 years have elapsed since the Reformation we should not be frightened because the thing was originally connected with Popery. Let us have good vocal music, at least such as will not disgrace our congregations. Certainly the psalmody is very bad in many congregations throughout the country, and it can be no honour to our Maker to sing in the manner I have heard many voices do." The Rev. Dr. Lee said,—"I am quite sure that the music we often hear in this country can have neither good moral nor good spiritual effect. It cannot be called music even by metaphor. I think that the reason we want instrumental music in this country is that we have almost no musical cultivation. If we had musical cultivation we could dispense with the use of instruments. It is because of our imperfect musical cultivation that we want something to do for us what we cannot do for ourselves. In our congregational singing it is often a misnomer to speak of harmony; for one man sings what he calls his bass, and another sings another thing he calls bass; and the two, unhappily, are not in accord and don't make harmony, so that discord and confusion are the inevitable result." The Rev. L. S. Orde (Episcopalian) maintained that the organ did not prevent, but greatly aided, congregational singing.

Digitized by Google

SCHOOL FOR THE BLIND.—An examination and musical performance of the pupils of this institution for teaching the blind to read, and training them in industrial occupations, took place at the schoolroom, Upper Avenue Road, Regent's Park, the Rev. E. H. Nelson in the chair. The programme comprised selections of vocal and instrumental sacred music from the works of Beethoven, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Mendelssohn, &c., all performed by the pupils, under the direction of Mr. Edwin Barnes, their master, especially two choruses from Handel's Messiah—"And the Glory of the Lord," and "O Thou that tellest"—in the first part, three solos on the organ, respectively by Messrs. Wilmot, Allen, and Bell, three of the senior male pupils, and Mozart's Grand Chorus "Glorious is Thy Name," sung by the whole of the pupils. Between the first and second parts the pupils read with much facility from the embossed Bibles in use at the school the 3rd chapter of the 2nd Epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians, and were afterwards examined by the Chairman in the meaning of the more difficult passages, answering with equal readiness the questions propounded. In the second part Beethoven's solo sonata and Sonata Patetica (op. 13) was performed by Allen, some part songs—one entitled "Christmas," composed expressly for the pupils—and the slow movement from Mozart's symphony in C, on the organ, by Wilmot. After the concert the Chairman briefly addressed the visitors. He considered that what they had that afternoon heard was satisfactory evidence of the proficiency of the pupils; they had not only performed the music well, but were evidently grounded in religious matters; their instruction in music was a solace in their affliction, and he trusted those who had heard them would do what they could to benefit the school. The proceedings terminated by the pupils singing the National Anthem.

CONCERT AT THE BLUE-COAT SCHOOL, WESTMINSTER.—A large party—including the Vice-Chancellor Sir Wm. Page Wood, Mr. Maude, the Rev. John Jennings, M.A., rector of St. John's, the Rev. W. Tennant, &c.—assembled on Wednesday evening in the school-room of the Blue-coat School, Little Chapel Street, Westminster, at a private concert given by Mr. Elliot, treasurer and head governor. The performance consisted of a selection of glees, four-part songs, &c., by the boys, and nearly 20 young men who had volunteered their services, together with "Violets" and "My Pretty Jane" by Mr. Dawson, of Westminster Abbey (both encored). Mr. Sarsons, master of the school, conducted the singing; and Mr. W. Williams, a young and rising musician, accompanied on one of Broadwood's pianofortes. In the course of the evening Mr. Elliot complimented Mr. Sarsons and his school, and the number of governors being very small, hoped some of the gentlemen present might become governors, as the funds were at a low ebb.

MR. HULLAH, THE "VILLAGE COQUETTES," &c.—"And will a once good and kind master of mine in the craft of letters be angry with his old 'prentice and journeyman if in these desultory reminiscences I set down among the fasti of the St. James's Theatre a certain opera called the Village Coquettes, to which he, a very young man then, with long silky hair, and a cataract of white satin for a cravat, as you see him in Mr. Maclise's picture, wrote the libretto, and in which John Braham enacted the part of a convivial but dissolute squire (in a scarlet velvet coat and top boots of shiny leather)? The Village Coquettes! I remember almost every line of the words and every bar of the music. John Parry, the vivacious, the genial, the evergreen prince of buffo-singers was among the dramatis personæ. There was that charming song of 'Autumn Leaves,' which I sincerely wish somebody would revive now. John Braham had a wondrous song about 'Snipe shooting in the snow.' Whether are fled the days of the Village Coquettes? The squire in the scarlet velvet coat is dead. There was a gentleman attached to the St. James's Theatre, who united the functions of treasurer and writer of burlesques, and whose name was Gilbert Abbott à Beckett. He lived to be a writer of leaders in The Times and one of the most upright magistrates that ever sat on the bench. He died very sadly and prematurely, too soon for friendship but not too soon for fame. Laughing John Parry laughs yet, and carols gaily. The writer of the libretto is alive and famous to all the world. His name is Charles Dickens; and did I need a further excuse for routing up these old memories, it would be in the fact that he who composed the music to the Village Coquettes also lives, a good and honourable and just man? He has unhappily fallen upon evil days, and in life's wane has to begin the world again; but the author of the words to his songs has no more forgotten the old days than I have; for at the head of the committee for raising the funds for a testimonial to John Hullah I find the name of Dickens."—GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA (Temple Bar).

VERDI IN PARLIAMENT.—Our readers who now and then hum "Il Balen," "La mia Letizia," and dozens of other popular melodies, will be glad to hear that Verdi, who is an ardent liberal (not republican) politician, has been elected a member of the Italian parliament. Through the spirited medium of Reuter's telegraph, we have received an anticipatory report of his maiden speech, which is as follows:—Care compagne e voi teneri amici, I am glad to meet you on the parliamentary stage of our beloved country, and I trust my humble efforts may be instrumental in introducing concord and harmony in our deliberations, and composing our fears. Let us, amici miei, act together in concert, and soon our beloved Italia will no longer be a Traviata among nations. Under the guidance of our Ré Galantuomo, we will also soon free la Bella Venezia from Austrian tyrants, and when he cries to us, "Suivez-moi" and "Vieni in Roma," let our response, as a band of brothers, be Guerra, guerra! and if our words are piano let our blows be forte, so that the finale of our operations may be a blaze of triumph, such as Il Signor Bunn, mio caro amico Inglese, never dreamed of in his most poetic flights. With such a leader and conductor as Vittore Emmanuele and chefs d'attaque like Garibaldi, Cialdini, Persano, and other great warlike artists, we must succeed; and though the Pope and Francis Joseph, on the score of some of my works being produced in Rome and Venice, style me a double base traitor, my aria d'intrata shall ever be Viva l'Italia Unita. Let us repel overtures on any other terms, either from foreign, royal, and imperial managers, or the sediziose voce of Bombastic bravoes and reactionary prompters. This speech which was delivered in recitative, excited the greatest furore, and the members were so excited, that for several minutes the cries of "Bravo" and "encore" shook the building.—Liverpool Porcupine.

MILAN.—(From a correspondent.) Signor Luigi Sessa, who, some time ago, held some séances of classical music, with the highly talented English pianist, Mr. Deacon, gave two concerts of the same kind in the Ridotto of the Scala, for the relief of the wounded and invalided in the late Italian campaign. Both concerts were not equally successful. At the first, from some reason not to be accounted for, the attendance was not what it should have been. At the second, however, the audience was both brilliant and numerous, all the élite of the higher classes in Milan honouring the Ridotto with their presence. At the second concert (I did not attend the first) the programme comprised a quintet by Boccherini; Mendelssohn's sonata, in B flat, for pianoforte and violoncello; Beethoven's sonata-quasi-fantasia, for pianoforte, in C sharp minor; adagio and rondo, from Rode's seventh violin concerto; and Onslow's quintet, in E flat, for pianoforte and stringed instruments. I need not inform your readers who Boccherini is. The analytical programmes of the Monday Popular Concerts have made his name and his wonderfully fertile genius familiar to them. Few old composers, perhaps, can vie with Boccherini in originality, the more remarkable, as in his time all music, even that of the great masters, reflected the frivolous sensuality and abandoned state of morals of the period. In the quintet played at the Ridotto, the adagio is extremely melodious, and the allegro remarkable for its unflagging spirit. It was executed very finely by Signors Sessa, Ferari, Santelli, Guarenghi, and Negri. Mr. Deacon did real honour to his country beside the Italian professors. His playing both in Beethoven's sonata for piano solus, and Mendelssohn's sonata for piano and violoncello, was most admirable, and produced a powerful sensation. Not to be minute, the whole concert afforded a treat to the audience, and must have realised no despicable sum for the funds.

BOOSEY'S MONTHLY VIOLINIST, price 6d.—The First Number of this Publication will appear March 1st, and will contain a Selection of 13 Airs from Balfe's new opera, "Bianca;" Laurent's Daisy Waltzes on the Buckley's Songs; Burckhardt's Knickerbocker Polka; Laurent's Christmas Waits Quadrille; La Chatelaine Valse, Petchi-i-i Polka, and Flocon de Neige Galop. Boosey's Monthly Violinist will comprise the newest and most popular Music of the day, short Airs, with Variations, &c., forming a most attractive Miscellany for Amateurs.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

Digitized by Google

GUINEA EDITION

OF

BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS.

Just published, in two volumes, superbly bound in cloth, price each 10s. 6d.,

BOOSEY AND SONS'

NEW EDITION OF

BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS FOR PIANOFORTE,

Edited by W. DORRELL; with Life of BEETHOVEN by MACFARREN, and Portrait by Lynch.

THIS edition is beautifully printed from newly-engraved Plates, and is the most correct one published.

CONTENTS OF VOL. I.
Price 10s. 6d.

Sonata, No. 1, Op. 2, F minor.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 2, A.
Sonata, No. 3, Op. 2, C.
Sonata, Op. 7, E flat.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 10, C minor.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 10, F.
Sonata, No. 3, Op. 10, D.
Sonata Pathetique, Op. 13, C minor.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 14, E.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 14, G.
Sonata, Op. 22, B flat.
Sonata, with Funeral March, Op. 26, A flat.
Sonata quasi una Fantasia (known as the "Moonlight Sonata"), No. 1, Op. 27, C sharp minor.
Sonata quasi una Fantasia, No. 2, Op. 27, E flat.
Sonata Pastorale, Op. 28, D.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 31, G.

CONTENTS OF VOL. II.
Price 10s. 6d.

Sonata, No. 2, Op. 31, D minor.
Sonata, No. 3, Op. 31, E flat.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 49, G minor.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 49, G.
Sonata, Op. 53, C.
Sonata, Op. 54, F.
Sonata Appassionata, Op. 57, F minor.
Sonata, Op. 78, F sharp.
Sonata, Op. 79, G.
Sonata Caractéristique, Op. 81, E flat ("Les Adieux").
Sonata, Op. 90, E minor.
Sonata, Op. 101, A.
Grand Sonata, Op. 106, B flat.
Sonata, Op. 109, E.
Sonata, Op. 110, A flat.
Sonata, Op. 111, C minor.

"There are many editions of Beethoven's sonatas, German, French, and English; but there is not one that we have seen, from which, taking all things into account—correctness and clearness of the text, elegance of form, and moderation of price—we have derived so much satisfaction as from the edition now before us. The text, after undergoing the revision of so able an editor as Mr. Dorrell, may be expected to be immaculate; and so, after a close examination, we find it to be; and the clearness and beauty of the paper and printing are not to be excelled. The value of the edition is much enhanced by an able and interesting essay on the life and works of Beethoven from the pen of Mr. G. A. Macfarren; and there is, moreover, an excellent portrait of the composer."—Daily News.

BOOSEY AND SONS'

MISCELLANIES FOR VARIOUS INSTRUMENTS.

A List of the Contents of each Work may be had on application.

CASE'S CONCERTINA MISCELLANY for CONCERTINA and PIANO, 36 Numbers, each 2s. 6d.

CASE'S RECREATIONS for CONCERTINA and PIANO, 12 Numbers, each 1s.

HARPER'S CORNET MISCELLANY for CORNET-A-PISTONS and PIANO, 32 Numbers, each 3s.

PRATTEN'S FLUTE MISCELLANY for FLUTE and PIANO, each 3s. 6d.

PRATTEN'S RECREATIONS for FLUTE and PIANO, 36 Numbers, each 1s.

CASE'S RECREATIONS, VIOLIN and PIANO, 36 Numbers, each 1s.

WATSON'S VIOLIN MISCELLANY for VIOLIN and PIANO, each 3s.

BOOSEY'S ORCHESTRAL JOURNAL of DANCE MUSIC for Large and Small Band, 120 Numbers, 2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. each.

BOOSEY'S CONCERT ROOM ORCHESTRAL JOURNAL, containing Operatic Selections for Large and Small Band, 6 Numbers, 4s. and 7s. each.

BOOSEY'S ORCHESTRAL OVERTURES for Large and Small Band, 12 Numbers, 4s. and 8s. each.

BOOSEY'S BRASS BAND JOURNAL for Large and Small Band, 120 Numbers, 1s. and 4s. each.

BOOSEY'S QUICK STEP JOURNAL for Brass Bands (for pasting on cards) 6 Numbers, 1s. and 4s. each.

BOOSEY'S DRUM and FIFE JOURNAL, 13 Numbers, 2s. 6d. each.

BOOSEY AND SONS, HOLLES STREET.

T. MAUSS.—LE CORSAIRE GALOP BRILLANT, for Pianoforte. Second edition, price 3s.
Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

T. MAUSS.—"MERRILY OVER THE SNOW," the popular Song, arranged brilliantly for Pianoforte, price 3s.
Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S ORCHESTRAL OVERTURES, arranged by LAMOTTE. Price 8s. each for full band; 5s. each for small band.

1. Crown Diamonds, Auber.
2. Zampa, Herold.
3. Zanetta, Auber.
4. Oberon, Weber.
5. Fra Diavolo, Auber.
6. Der Freischütz, Weber.
7. Domino Noir, Auber.
8. Gazza Ladra, Rossini.
9. Dame Blanche, Boieldieu.
10. Masaniello, Auber.
11. Part du Diable, Auber.
12. Guillaume Tell, Rossini.

KUHE'S NEW TRANSCRIPTION of SCHUBERT'S FAVOURITE MELODIES, as short and effective Pieces for the Pianoforte, price 2s. 6d. each.

1. Serenade.
2. Ave Maria.
3. Adieu.
4. The Wanderer.
5. The praise of Tears.
6. Thine is my heart.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

OF

DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.,

244 REGENT STREET. (JUST OUT.)

"MAY."—New Duettino, by HENRY SMART, composed for equal Voices. Price 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Henry Smart, in this melodious and truly exquisite little duet, has, if possible, even surpassed in elegance and vocal finish, the pieces so warmly eulogised in our last impression."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THIS WORLD IS A GARDEN," by GEORGE LODER. Comic song. Price 2s. 6d.

"The well-known and popular song introduced with such invariable success, by Mr. John Rouse, in Stirling Coyne's lively operetta, The Pets of the Parterre. As all our readers must have heard, and hearing, applauded it, it is enough to say that we entirely agree with their unanimously favourable verdict."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"IN A LEAFY GARDEN," by GEORGE LODER. Ballad. Price 2s. 6d.

"Composed for that careful and promising tenor, Mr. Richard Seymour, is in a different style to This World is a Garden, and shows that the composer, Mr. George Loder (the talented conductor of the Lyceum orchestra), can give musical expression to sentiment no less than to humour. It is graceful, well written, and last, not least, essentially vocal."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"L'ETOILE DU SOIR," by FRANZ LISZT. Romance from Richard Wagner's Tannhauser. Price 2s.

"M. Liszt's idea of 'transcription' is peculiar to himself, and the present example of its application would, in all probability, surprise the composer of Tannhauser himself; nevertheless, it accommodates itself to a certain taste of the day, which looks upon a pianoforte piece as nothing if not gymnastic."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

MONIOT'S celebrated SCHOTTISH D'AMOUR, played at the Ball of the German Society of Benevolence and Concord, as well as at the Lyceum Theatre every evening, with such great success, is published for Piano, 3s. (Orchestra 5s.) only by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE BANNER OF ST. GEORGE," by BALFE, a new National Song. The words by John Brougham, written for, and dedicated to, THE ST. GEORGE'S RIFLE CORPS, is published, beautifully illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," Révérie by W. Kuhé, on Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), and "I love YOU," Sims Reeves's popular ballad, transcribed for the Piano by Emile Berger, are published, price 3s. each, by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL," by W. H. WEISS, composed and sung by the composer, with the greatest success, as well as by Mr. WINN and other vocalists of celebrity, is published, handsomely illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

BALFE'S NEWEST and most POPULAR SONGS.

	s.	d.
"I love YOU" (Sung by Sims Reeves)	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose" (Ditto)	3	0
"The Banner of St. George" (beautifully illustrated)	3	0
"If I could change" (Sung by Laura Baxter)	2	6
"I'm not in love, remember" (Madame Jenny Bauer)	2	6
"Oh! take me to thy heart again" (by Miss Poole)	2	0

Published by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W., where "I love YOU" may be obtained, transcribed for the Pianoforte by Emile Berger, price 3s.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, February 16, 1861.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 39—No. 8 SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1861 PRICE {4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

EWER & CO.'S LIST OF NEW PUBLICATIONS.

				s.	d.
BENEDICT, J. MALCOLM, Marche Triomphale	...	...	...	4	0
BERGER, FRANCESCO, Bon repos, chérie, Nocturne	...	...	...	2	0
" Lena, Serenade	...	...	...	2	0
GAUDE, LOUIS DE LA, Evelyn, Polka Mazurka	...	...	...	2	0
GARIBALDI, Viva Italia, March and National Hymn (with Italian words)				2	0
JUNGMANN, A., Souvenance	...	...	...	2	6
KRUGER, W., Les Cloches du Soir	...	...	...	4	0
LISZT, J., Grand Paraphrase sur Il Trovatore	...	...	...	6	0
" Rigoletto	...	...	...	6	0
" Ernani	...	...	...	6	0
MAGNUS, H., Carnaval Napolitain	...	...	...	4	0
PACHER, J. A., Op. 9, La Harpe	...	...	...	4	0
" Op. 34, Le Ruisseau	...	...	...	3	0
" Op. 50, Twelve Melodious Studies	...	...		7	6
" Op. 53, Tendresse	...	...	...	3	0
SCHULTHES, W., Op. 27, Stella Matutina, mélod. réflg.	...	...		2	6
SILAS, E., Op. 49, Costanza Impromptu	...	...	...	3	0
SPINDLER, F., L'Oisillon	...	...	...	2	6
WOLLENHAUPT, H. A., Op. 19, Grande Marche de Concert			...	3	0
" Op. 23, La Gazelle	...	...	...	3	0
" Op. 24, Galop di Bravura			...	4	0
" Op. 26, Helene. Grand Valse Brillante			...	4	0
" Cordelia. Schottisch	...	...	...	3	0
" La Violette. Polka de Concert	...	...	...	3	0

MOLIQUE'S ORATORIO—"ABRAHAM."

Soprano Airs.—I will extol Thee, my God	...	...	...	4	0
" Hear my prayer, O Lord	...	...	...	3	0
" Unto Thee lift I up mine eyes	...	...	...	4	6
Contralto Air.—They kept not the law		...	...	1	6
Tenor Airs.—Who walketh uprightly	...	...	...	2	6
" Pour out thy heart before the Lord		...	...	2	6
Baritone Airs.—Lead me, O Lord, in Thy righteousness		...	...	3	0
" Let there be no strife	...	...	...	2	6
" The joy of my heart is ceased	...	...	...	4	0
" Lord have mercy upon me	...	...	...	4	6
Duets.—Cast out this bondwoman. Alto and Baritone		...	...	4	6
" It is of the Lord's great mercies. Soprano and Baritone			...	3	0
Trio.—Alto, Tenor, and Bass. Let all those rejoice		...	...	3	0
Quartet.—S. A. T. & B. Go in peace before the Lord		...	...	4	6
March.—Arranged for Pianoforte Solo	...	...	...	2	6
" " Duet	...	...	...	4	0
" " Organ (arranged by W. T. BEST)			...	3	0

EWER & CO. 87 REGENT STREET,

Universal Circulating Musical Library.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—The First New Philharmonic Concert this season will take place on Monday evening, March 11; the First Public Rehearsal Saturday afternoon, March 9, at half-past 2. Conductor, Dr. Wylde. Programme:—Overture—Egmont; violin concerto—Mendelssohn; Schubert's Grand Symphony in C; Weber's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat; overture, Alencoragen—Cherubini. Pianist, Miss Arabella Goddard; violin, M. Vieuxtemps, his first appearance at these concerts; vocalists Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, &c.; orchestra and choir of 300 performers. Subscription for the series of Six Concerts and Five Public Rehearsals:—Sofa stall, £3 3s.; balcony, first row, One Guinea and a-Half; second row, One Guinea.

Messrs. Cramer and Co., 201 Regent Street; Keith, Prowse and Co., 48 Cheapside; Austin, Ticket Office, St. James's Hall; W. Gradèn Nicholls, Esq., Hon. Sec., 28 Argyll Street, W.

THE MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—Season 1861. The FIRST ORCHESTRAL CONCERT will take place on Wednesday evening, Feb. 27, at St. James's Hall, and commence at half-past 8 o'clock precisely. The doors in Regent Street and Piccadilly will be opened at a quarter to 8 o'clock to enable all the members to be seated before the commencement of the performance. Programme:—Part 1. Overture, Ruy Blas—Mendelssohn; cantata, Mia speranza Adorata, Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington—Mozart; concerto in D, violin, M. Vieuxtemps—Beethoven; scena (Euryanthe), Mr. Weiss—Weber; overture, the Tempest—Benedict. Part 2 Symphony in D minor (No. 2)—Spohr; duo, La Gazza Ladra, Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington and Mr. Weiss—Rossini; overture, Le Philtre—Auber. Conductor, Mr. Alfred Mellon.

N.B.—Members who have not yet paid their annual subscription for 1861, are respectfully reminded that they should do so immediately to Messrs. Cramer and Co., 201 Regent Street, by whom the tickets of the Society are issued. Those members who purpose to withdraw from the Society should signify their intention to the Hon. Sec. as soon as possible, to enable the Council to fill up vacancies.

CHARLES SALAMAN, Hon. Sec., 36 Baker Street, W.

St. James's Hall, 28 Piccadilly.

MISS AUGUSTA THOMSON begs to announce that she has REMOVED to 38 Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, W.

MR. and MADAME R. SIDNEY PRATTEN beg to announce, that they have removed to 38 Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, W., where they will continue to give lessons on the Flute, Guitar, and Concertina.

MISS HELEN HOGARTH (Teacher of Singing) begs to inform her pupils and the public that she has RETURNED to town for the season, and has removed from Weymouth Street to No. 71 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square.

SIGNOR GIULIO REGONDI begs to announce that he has REMOVED to 27 Berner's Street, Oxford Street, W.

THE MISSES ELTON (Duet Singers), beg to announce they have returned to town for the Season.

All communications respecting Concerts to be addressed to their Agents, Messrs. Hopwood and Crewe, 42 New Bond Street.

THIRD WEEK OF THE LATEST SENSATION.

FATHER KEMP'S OLD FOLKS. — Miss EMMA NICHOLS, 30 LADIES and GENTLEMEN, from America, in ANCIENT COSTUME, every night at 8, and Wednesday and Saturday morning at 3. St. James's Hall, Piccadilly. Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery 1s.

MADAME OURY'S BRILLIANT FANTASIA on Jacobite Airs, 4s.—Madame Oury's Souvenirs d'Ecosse, 4s.—Madame Oury's "Auld Robin Gray," 4s.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, and Patterson & Sons, Edinburgh.

CARL FAUST, of Breslau.—Messrs. Robert Cocks and Co. have the pleasure to announce that, having concluded an engagement with HERR CARL FAUST, of Breslau, they are enabled to introduce for the first time to the English Public the Works of this distinguished composer, hitherto known in this country to the courtly circles exclusively. For melody, rhythm, and thoroughly dansant qualities, the productions of Carl Faust excel everything known in Europe since the days of Strauss. His compositions have accordingly met with an enthusiastic reception throughout Germany. Now ready, ELECTRA POLKA, 2s.; Louise March, 2s. 6d.; Cataract Galop, 3s.; Heart's-ease Valse, à la Tyrolienne, 3s.; the Britannia Quadrille (founded on English national airs), 4s.; the Mephisto Galop, 2s. 6d.; the Enchanting Polka, 2s. 6d.; Flora Suite de Valses, 3s. See Robert Cocks and Co.'s List of Musical Novelties, furnished gratis and postage free.

London: Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, W., publishers to the Queen and the Emperor Napoleon III.

LATEST PIANOFORTE PIECES, by W. VINCENT WALLACE. Come where my love lies dreaming, melody, transcribed, 3s.; the Shepherd's Roundelay, pastoral sketch, 4s.; the Volunteer Rifles' March, decorated title, 3s.; La Luvisella, favourite Neapolitan melody, transcribed, 3s.; Beethoven's Ruins of Athens, fantasia on airs from, 3s.; Good news from home, 3s.

London: Robert Cocks and Co., and of all Musicsellers.

THE TWENTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT, ACCOUNTS, and BALANCE SHEET of the Mutual Life Assurance Society for the year 1860 are this day published, and may be had by a written or personal application to the Head Office, or to any of the Society's Agents.

CHARLES INGALL, Actuary.

The Mutual Life Assurance Society,
39 King Street, Cheapside, E.C., London, 20th Feb. 1861.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—Conductor Professor W. STERNDALE BENNETT, Mus. D.—First Concert, March 4. Subscription, four guineas, and Family Tickets of not less than four, 3½ guineas each; Single Tickets, 15s. each.

Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210 Regent Street, W.

PREMIERE TARANTELLE, pour Piano, par BRINLEY RICHARDS, dedièe à M. Charles Hallé, 5s.

TO BE PUBLISHED BY SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MUSIC, a new work, in Three Essays which appeared in the MUSICAL WORLD. By JOSEPH GODDARD. Readers of the MUSICAL WORLD and the Public, wishing to encourage the publication of the above, may do so by forwarding their names to Mr. J. GODDARD, 6 Crescent, Camden Square, N.W. Price 5s. For further particulars, see the MUSICAL WORLD of Dec. 15th, 1860.

Digitized by Google

NEW AND POPULAR

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY

ASHDOWN AND PARRY, 18 HANOVER SQUARE.

G. A. OSBORNE. LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM. Brilliant Fantasia. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. LES ENFANTS DE LA GARDE. Grande Marche brillante. Price 4s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. VEDRAI CARINO, Transcription (Don Juan). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. BATTI, BATTI. Transcription (Don Juan). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. THE MERMAID'S SONG. Transcription of Haydn's Canzonet. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. PRAEGER. MALBROOK. Brilliant Piece on the old French air. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. PRAEGER. JOCK O' HAZELDEAN. Fantasia. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

WILHELM GANZ. SANTA LUCIA. A brilliant transcription of the popular Neapolitan air. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE MAUSS. PROMETHEUS. Grand Galop brillant. Price 4s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

JULES BRISSAC. THE HARP THAT ONCE THRO' TARA'S HALLS. Transcription. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. JOSEPHINE. Mazurka de Salon. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. LA VALLÉE DES ROSES. Deuxième Mazurka de Salon. Price 3s. 6d.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. LE LANGAGE DES FLEURS. Troisième Mazurka de Salon.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

E. SILAS. ROMANCE. Price 2s. 6d.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

E. SILAS. IMPROMPTU (à la Mazurka). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

EMANUEL AGUILAR. THE BIRDS AT SUNSET. Characteristic Piece. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

STEPHEN HELLER. IN WALD UND FLUR. Troisième Suite de Promenades d'un Solitaire. 6 Nos. Price 3s. and 4s. each.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE KULLAK. LES ARPÈGES. Étude de Concert. Price 5s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE KULLAK. CAPUCINE. Legende. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN AND PARRY

(Successors to Wessel and Co.),

18 HANOVER SQUARE.

IN THE PRESS,

HOWARD GLOVER'S OPERA, "RUY BLAS" shortly to be performed at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden.
Ransey and Sons, Holles Street.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.
Their Catalogues, which contain a great variety of Music calculated for teaching purposes, may be had, post-free, on application.
London: 18 Hanover Square.

TWO MUSICAL SKETCHES for the PIANOFORTE, dedicated to Mr. Charles Hallé, by JAMES LEA SUMMERS, price 3s. 6d. each, "are cleverly written and stamped with real musical feeling."—MUSICAL WORLD.
London:—Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210 Regent Street.

AN ORGANIST and PIANOFORTE TEACHER is about to be APPOINTED at Wellington College. Persons desirous to become Candidates for this situation may learn particulars on application, by letter only to the Rev. E. BENSON, Wellington College, Wokingham.

ELIGIBLE Ground Rents, Freehold Land, Freehold Houses in occupation, and Leased Shops.
No. 1. Woodbury Park Estate, Tunbridge Wells (second portion).
2. Bound's Green, Hornsey (Green Lanes), No. 2.
3. The North Bow Estate, Old Ford (second allotment).
4. The Tottenham Estate, Seven Sisters' Trees (ditto).
5. Houses at Camberwell and Enfield.
6. Leased Shops at Putney.
7. (Ground Rents). Two Plots on the St. Margaret's Estate, Twickenham.
8. Ditto. Two Plots on the Battersea Estate.
Especial attention is requested to the above, which will be on sale on and after Thursday the 28th of February, 1861, at the Offices of the Conservative Land Society, No. 2 Norfolk Street, Strand, London, W.C.
Plans of the Estates will be forwarded by post, on receipt of seven stamps, for each separate plan.
Printed particulars of each Estate will be forwarded free of charge. Prospectuses free, as to the Share and Deposit Departments. Interest 5 per cent. on the former, 4 per cent. on the latter.
CHARLES LEWIS GRUNNEISEN, Secretary.

LEYTONSTONE NATIONAL SCHOOL ROOMS.—A Concert was given at the above Rooms on the 12th instant, in which the following singers took part: Miss Annie Cox, Miss Emma Boden, Mr. C. Searle, Mr. Alexander Thornley and Mr. A. J. Hubbard; Mr. W. Seymour Smith accompanied, and Mr. A. J. Hubbard conducted.

HARROW SCHOOL SPEECH ROOM.—Mr. J. B. Turner, the pianist, gave a Concert on Tuesday morning in the above Hall, by permission of the head master, the Rev. H. M. Butler, M.A., and masters of the school. Mr. Turner was assisted by Miss Banks, Mad. Laura Baxter, Messrs. Montem Smith, and Weiss, as vocalists; and Mr. H. Blagrove (violin), Mr. W. Pettit (violoncello), and Mr. T. Harper (trumpet), instrumentalists.

EYRE ARMS.—A concert was held at the Assembly Rooms last week, in aid of funds for reimbursing the Rev. Joseph Irving for heavy losses sustained through the destruction of the church of St. John the Evangelist, Carlton Road, by fire. The concert was highly successful, and was attended by a numerous audience. Miss Fosbroke, Miss Ellen Bliss, and Mrs. Friswell were well received, Mrs. Friswell being unanimously encored in Giuglielmi's "Gratias Agimus," the clarionet obbligato to which was most efficiently played by Mr. A. Williams, R.A.M.; and Miss Fosbroke eliciting considerable applause in Regaldi's ballad, "The calm repose of eve." The pianoforte solos were executed with much delicacy and finish by Miss Ellen Bliss, a rising pianist. Mr. Frank Elmore sang "Come into the Garden, Maud," and Reichardt's "Thou art so near," with great taste, and was encored in each. Mr. C. Henry's rich baritone told well in the "Wolf," and Leslie's ballad, "Speed on my bark." Some part songs, including Bishop's ever fresh and charming "Sleep gentle lady," were carefully rendered. The concert was conducted by Mr. Finlayson.

HERR SCHACHNER has just returned to London from Berlin, where his new grand Oratorio, Israel's Heimkehr (the Return from Captivity), was produced on the 20th January, at the Berlin Academy, with great success. The Oratorio is in four parts. 1. The Captivity; 2. The Deliverance; 3. The Reconciliation of Jehovah with His people; and 4. The Covenant. The Libretto is partly taken from Holy Scripture, and partly from the Hebrew Melodies of Moore. The performance was conducted by Professor Grell, the principal singers being Mad. Flavriers-Vifern, Mlle. Baer (alto), Herr Geier (tenor), and Herr Krause (bass).

HERR FORMES.—The celebrated German basso is reported to have arrived in London.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"Les Arpèges, Etude de Salon."—THEODORE KULLAK, Op. 59 (Ashdown and Parry). This study, or rather show-piece, is modelled very nearly after the pattern of Les Perles d'Eaume, by the same composer, which Miss Arabella Goddard used to play so often and with such success. Nor is Les Arpèges at all inferior to its precursor in grace and brilliancy. Nothing could be better written for the instrument, nothing lie readier for the hand of a tolerably expert performer, and nothing make a more imposing display out of what after all amounts to only a moderate degree of difficulty. In short, this really elegant study may be recommended to professional pianists, whether as a morceau de bravoure for public exhibition, or an extremely good practice for the fingers with no ulterior object than that of acquiring fluency and evenness of execution. Herr Kullak should write more in this style.

"Trivagium—No. 1;" and "Thee will I Love" (Willis; and Addison, Hollier and Lucas) are additions to a compilation entitled "Sacred Music, adapted for public and private devotion"—by R. ANDREWS. They call for no special remark. "The Christmas Hymn, with variations"—by R. ANDREWS (C. Jeffrys, London; R. Andrews, Manchester)—is No. 2 of "Six Sacred Melodies," varied for the pianoforte. Neither this nor "A happy, happy Christmas" ("Songs of the Poets of England and America"), "edited, varied, arranged, and the music composed" by RICHARD ANDREWS (Music Repository, Oxford Street, Manchester), demand more than the mention of their existence. Nevertheless, we should like to be initiated into the mystery of Mr. Andrews' labours. We find, for example, the name of "John S. B. Monsell" (author of Spiritual Songs), attached to the words of "A happy, happy Christmas," and yet Mr. Andrews, according to the authority of the title-page, has had the pains of editing, varying, arranging, and setting to music. And all this for a piece which just occupies five lines!

"Operatic Selections for the Harmonium" arranged by G. W. GOODBAN (Metzler and Co.) We have received Books 1, 2, and 3 of the above. The first contains, "A te o cara," a delicious air de ballet from Guillaume Tell, and "Come è gentil;" the second, "Quando il destin" (La Figlia del Reggimento), "Convien partir" (do.), and "In si barbara" (Semiramide); the third, "Libiamo" (Traviata), the Page's first air in the Huguenots, and the Ranz des vaches movement from the overture to Guillaume Tell. As might have been expected from Mr. Goodban, the arrangements are good—well adapted to the instrument, and effective.

"Rondo Apassionato, pour piano"—AUGUSTE ERGMANN (Ashdown and Parry). This piece is dedicated to Miss Arabella Goddard, and as might have been guessed, on that account alone, is one of more than ordinary pretensions. It comprises an introduction, andante, in B major, and a vivace assai in B minor (ending in the major)—just like (by the way) a certain composition of Mendelssohn's, in which (by the way) the same keys are employed in much the same manner. There is more aim than accomplishment (as it seems to us) in the introduction, which moreover includes a progression (page 3, line 3, bar 4), which as it stands is very harsh, but with A natural, instead of A sharp, would be easy enough. The rondo is a regularly constructed movement, although in style it is a kind of mixture of Weber and Mendelssohn. The first theme is Weberish, decidedly; the second, both in melody and treatment, Mendelssohnish, as decidedly. At the same time it is but fair to add that Mr. Ergmann does not present us (like so many others) with wishy-washy Weber, or maudlin Mendelssohn, but rather with vigorous imitations of both. To conclude, though somewhat diffuse, his rondo is cleverly conducted, and if executed with vigour and correctness would assuredly produce an "effect." Some places want revising here as in the preceding movement. What, for example, does Mr. Ergmann mean by bars 6, 7, line 2, page 9?

"Six nocturnes, for the pianoforte," by JOHN FIELD—edited by FRANZ LISZT (Ashdown and Parry). In re-publishing these nocturnes (in E flat, C minor, A flat, A, B flat, and F) Messrs. Ashdown and Parry are helping further to promote the taste for sterling pianoforte-music which is now (thanks to the Monday Popular Concerts &c. &c. &c.) so widely spreading in these kingdoms. It would be superfluous at this time to criticise pieces which have long been acknowledged by the higher authorities as chefs-d'œuvre in their way; and we need add no more than a strong recommendation to our pianoforte-playing readers to possess and make themselves masters of these nocturnes without delay. They should be on every desk. John Field has been allowed to glide out of the memory too easily; but his coming back again will probably endow him with an extra fascination. Such fresh, genial and artistically-made music can never die for want of intrinsic charm; it has only to be heard (from kindred and sympathetic fingers) to win the admiration—nay affection—of all who love what is genuine, healthy, and true.

"Holyrood, a cantata"—words by HENRY F. CHORLEY, music by HENRY LESLIE (Addison, Hollier and Lucas). Here—in a handsomely got up volume, bound in red cloth, with gilt letters—we have the cantata of Messrs. Chorley and Leslie of which we spoke so favourably, and at such length a fortnight since. We have nothing to add to, or retract from what was written about Holyrood, and with the assurance that it looks just as well on paper as it sounds from the orchestra, we heartily commend it to our readers.

"Linger, linger, gentle maiden"—words from the Finnish, music by HENRY KILLICK MORLEY (R. Cocks and Co.); "O sister, sing the song I love"—words by L. M. DAVIDSON, music by the same (S. Clark); "I never knew how dear thou wert"—words by CATHERINE WARFIELD, music by the same (Duncan Davison and Co).

These ballads have more than ordinary merit. They are tuneful, singable, and correctly written—good things, in short, without pretension, and therefore welcome. Perhaps the best and most graceful of the three is, "I never knew how dear thou wert," composed expressly, we believe, for Miss Lascelles. The first, nevertheless (dedicated to Miss Poole), is just as likely to please, and moreover has the advantage of very beautiful words. Mr. Morley should have affixed the name of the translator, who has no cause to be ashamed of his work.

"Scales and Chords in all the Major and Minor Keys"—edited by BENNETT GILBERT (J. H. Jewell), is a very handy, complete, and useful little work. "Esmeralda, schottische élégante," for the pianoforte, "composé par" ERNEST BENNETT GILBERT (J. H. Jewell). But for the "composée par" we should not have an objection, however slight, to offer against this sparkling and elegant little dance-piece, which deserves to be entitled "Esmeralda."

"Souvenir de Cambria, fantaisie élégante"—by BENNETT GILBERT (J. H. Jewell). Here "composée par" would be in better keeping. However, not to be hypercritical, whether the theme upon which this fantasy is built be a national tune, or the invention of the fantasist, it is extremely pretty. On the other hand, the treatment is both clever and ingenious. The last variation is as brilliant and effective as the first is graceful.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY.

PIANOFORTE.

JONES (J. TOMLINS) "La Gracieuse Mazurka."
Ditto. "Souvenir de Madère."
Ditto. "La petite rivière."
OSBORNE (G. A.) "Love's young dream."
SCHLOESSER (A.) "Les Enfants de la Garde."

DUNCAN DAVISON AND CO.

PIANOFORTE.

HOLMES (GEORGIANA) "Andante in E flat."
HOLMES (W. H.) "Highland Echo."

VOCAL.

AGUILAR (EMANUEL) "Farewell."
FERRARI (A.) "Vieni, vieni."
Ditto. "Ah se piacer mi vuol."
Ditto. "L'onda che mormora."
THOMSON (JESSIE) "Music breathes in everything."

HALE AND SON (Cheltenham).

VOCAL.

CLARIBEL "The trefoil leaf."
GUERNSEY (WELLINGTON) "Courting days."

THE OPERA COMIQUE.

ITS RISE AND PROGRESS.

(Continued from page 38.)

GOSSEC AND GATEL.

GOSSEC, and afterwards CATEL, cleared the path for the Nicolos, the Méhuls, the Boieldieus, &c., by supplying the Opéra Comique with works more correctly written than those of their predecessors, and thus forming the taste of the audiences. Their dramatic works, however, were not those which contributed the most to their celebrity. François Joseph Gossec* owed his principal title to fame to his instrumental music, his religious compositions, and patriotic songs. When he arrived in France, in 1751, he obtained, through the patronage of Rameau, to whom his master had sent him, the place of director of the orchestra in the household of the farmer-general La Popelinière. He subsequently became director of the Concert Spirituel. Struck with the backward state of orchestral music at that time in France, he wrote symphonies which shone in a remarkable manner next to those of Lulli, Mondonville, and Rameau, which formed the stock of the Concert Spirituel. He wrote what were then called periodical symphonies at about the same time Haydn was composing such works in Germany. These were destined to become known on this side of the Rhine twenty years later, and to cause the works of the French musicians to become in turn forgotten. Gossec sought to introduce his instrumental reform into operatic works. He constituted an orchestra very much in the same as it is now, only retaining among the stringed instruments the violin, the viola, the violoncello, and the double-bass. He substituted for the flute with a mouth-piece which was false in intonation and disagreeable in tone, the German flute; he extended the use of the clarionet, and proscribed the hunting-horn in favour of the cor d'harmonie. His claims to rank as a composer of Opéra Comique are based on four one-act productions presented to the Comédie Italienne, viz.: Le Faux Lord, 1764; les Pêcheurs, April 8, 1766, (his greatest success); Toinon et Toinette, and Le Double Déguisement. The latter was less fortunate than the rest, and was only played one night. Gossec was one of the best masters of composition of the French school, although attached, as well as all his musical compatriots, to the system of the fundamental bass. Among his pupils were Charles Simon Catel,† who overturned the ancient theoretical edifice of Rameau, and distinguished himself by a treatise on harmony which has continued to be the basis and outline of other more developed works since written on the subject. If French opera has German and Italian blood in its veins, the same may be said of our musical theories. Catel condensed in his logical and clear treatise whatever he had found that was obscure in the rational and confused works of the German and Italian masters. He wrote several comic operas, which were not attended with the success they perhaps deserved: L'Auberge des Bagnères (1807), the words of which were, as we have seen, by Elleviou, contained charming melodies, a dramatic truth of expression felicitously hit upon, and above all, great purity of style—a rare merit in that time, and one which probably turned to the disadvantage of Catel. We are all familiar with the absurd prejudice of a certain part of the public against the works of composers who have the reputation of being erudite. Music by rule of three is the ridiculous phrase by virtue of which many men of talent have seen the fame due to them eclipsed, and often enough by positive mediocrity. The qualities which shine in L'Auberge des Bagnères reappear in Les Artistes par Occasion, a comic opera produced the same year, but the libretto of which was too poor to keep its place on the stage. There is a pretty trio in this work which is yet to be heard at concerts. In 1812 Catel produced Les Aubergistes de Qualité, a somewhat frigid composition, but from which I nevertheless may quote a pretty duo for two soprani and a tenor :—

"D'un seul vœu mon âme est remplie."

He afterwards wrote the music for a drama in three acts, called Wallace, which obtained a deserved success, and in which a soprano air was much applauded :—

"Soyez sensible à ma douleur."

L'Officier enlevé (1819) was his last work. The grand opera Sémiramis was his most valuable gift to the stage, but his masterpiece met with the fate which befel the works of Gossec: the libretto of Semiramis was destined to furnish the canvas for a work of surpassing brilliancy which should throw Catel's opera into oblivion.

Although the fact has no connection with the history of the Opéra Comique, I cannot mention Gossec without observing what is rare enough among artists, that he was full of admiration for the composers of talent who lived in his day. If he became the protégé of Rameau, it is that he rendered homage to his works, as at a later period his admiration for the operas of Gluck won him the attachment of that great genius. It was with delight that he beheld the progress of musical art in his day, a progress which often left his works lagging behind among the old-fashioned antiquities. Catel submitted his treatise on harmony to him, and he embraced him, saying, "Thou makest me understand at last that which I taught thee." And in like manner it was a great happiness to him that he had "the singular good fortune," says Adolphe Adam, in the charming pages of his book devoted to him, "of hearing the last performances of the operas of Lulli, and witnessing the first triumphs of Rossini."

NICOLO AND MEHUL.

Nicolo belongs far more than the two preceding writers to the history of the Opéra Comique. Although not an irreproachable writer, he united some of the qualities of Gossec and Catel, with the charm of the melodies of Grétry and Dalayrac. His real name was Nicolas Isouart. Born at Malta in 1775 of French parents, he was sent to Paris to study. It had been intended that he should enter the royal navy, but the revolution of '89 disturbing his father's plans, he returned to Malta, where he devoted himself to commerce. This new career was, but ill-suited to him, and he already felt growing within him his passion for music. He procured lessons of harmony from the chapel-master of the Knights of Malta. Isouart, senior, discovering that his son devoted a great deal of time to the study of music, separated him from his master, who had taken him into affection, seeing how rapidly a talent for composition was developing in him. Nicolas was sent to Palermo, but here he found even better opportunities than at Malta for following up his artistic inclinations. From Palermo he was transferred to Naples, and placed with some German bankers. In this city he completed his studies in composition:

* Born in a small town in Hainaut, January 17, 1733, and died at Passy, February 16, 1829.

† Born at Aigle, June 1773, died at Paris, Nov. 26, 1830.

Digitized by Google

his sojourn in the native land of Leo, Durante, Scarlatti, Pergolese and Cimarosa, having definitively fixed his vocation. He obtained a libretto (Avviso ai Maritati) for the theatre at Florence, and signed the same with his Christian name in Italian,—NICOLO, he thought having a more musical sound than ISOUART. The Avviso was not crowned with any great success, and this may have caused the young composer to reflect. He may probably have feared that he had done unwisely to abandon commerce, but he was more fortunate at Leghorn with his opera of Artaserse, which procured him the acquaintance of the Grand-Master of the Order of Malta, who brought him back to his native island, and procured him the post of chapel-master to the Order. After the landing of the French at Malta, and the suppression of the Knights, he was taken by General Vaubois to Paris, where he was persuaded to settle. He was patronised by Kreutzer, who smoothed for him the difficulties of his access to the stage. Nicolo made himself known as a dramatic composer by the music of the Tonnelier, an old opéra comique which had been parodied by Delrieu, and for which he wrote new music. The piece was unsuccessful. The same year (1799) he produced an opéra comique in one act, La Statue, ou la Femme avare, which was not more fortunate than the Tonnelier. After some successful joint productions, such as the Baiser et la Quittance, a score to which Méhul, Kreutzer, and Berton contributed some part, he succeeded in several small operas: Michel Ange (1802), Le Médecin Turc (1803), L'Intrigue aux Fenêtres (1805). His lasting successes, however, did not come till later, when he had to vie with a rival more powerful than himself, Boieldieu, by whom Nicolo was unwilling to be eclipsed. He had, nevertheless, another rival of distinguished merit, the author of Joseph; but the works of Méhul, as will shortly be seen, although of a more solid stamp than those of Nicolo, had the misfortune, which was also a merit, of being beyond their time. His severe and magisterial music was not destined to be appreciated at its just value until our own day, whereas that of Boieldieu possessed charms which produced their effect at once. There were then two camps formed, constituting an agreeable counterpart to the Gluckists and Picinists. Nicolo, to maintain his reputation, was forced to write scores of a higher musical value than he had hitherto produced. It was from this time that his great successes commenced: Les Rendezvous Bourgeois, one act (1805); Un Jour à Paris, three acts (1808); Cendrillon, three acts (1810); Le Billet de Loterie, one act (1811); Joconde, three acts, and Jeannot et Colin, three acts also, both in 1814.

(To be continued.)

SIGNOR ARDITI.

OF all the foreign musical artists who have established themselves in this country, there is no one more deserving the esteem of the profession than this well-known chef-d'orchestre and composer. A few details of his career, during which he has been associated with the most celebrated vocalists and instrumentalists of the present day, cannot but be interesting to our readers. Luigi Arditi was born at Crescentino, a small town in Piedmont, in 1822. Evincing great musical talent when very young, he was placed under the celebrated Professor Caldera, with whom he rapidly acquired a proficiency in violin playing and composition. At the age of fourteen, by the advice of Caldera, his father sent him to the Conservatoire at Milan, where he devoted himself to a serious course of study, and distinguished himself by the production of an opera entitled I Briganti, which was performed with considerable success during the carnival of 1841. In 1842 he gained, for the third time, the prize at the Conservatoire for composition, as well as for violin-playing, and on this occasion was presented with a violin by Viceré, as an especial mark of approbation. He took leave of the institution in the autumn of 1842, and may be said to have commenced his public career early in the following year, when he was engaged as orchestral conductor at Vercelli. He afterwards performed in several of the principal towns in Italy, and returned to Milan in company with the sisters Milanollo, for whom he composed and arranged some of their most effective duets. During 1844 Arditi extended his travels to Rome and Verona with Bottesini. Their success was unprecedented. Encouraged by the result of their concerts, they had determined to visit England together, when an advantageous engagement for America, offered by the impresario Marty, induced them to set sail for that country, where they arrived in September 1846.

Arditi was appointed conductor of the Italian Opera at the Tacon Theatre in the Havana, Bottesini being in the orchestra under his direction. At the conclusion of their engagement with Marty, they made a tour through the United States, and remained some time in New York. Recalled by Marty to conduct the opera at the Tacon Theatre, Arditi remained in the Havana until the end of 1850, during which season the company included the well-known names of Bosio, Steffenone, Tedesco, Salvi, Bettini, Lorini, Badiali, Beneventano, Marini, &c. &c. When in the Havana he was generally called "Créolio," from the many graceful dances he composed which became popular. In 1852 he was engaged by Alboni to accompany her during her tournée through the States, and then, desirous of holding the reigns of management as well as the conductor's baton, he became impresario in partnership with Mad. Devries, and maintained the enterprise successfully for fourteen months.

He was subsequently under an engagement to Sontag at New Orleans, at the expiration of which his services were secured by Mr. Hackett to direct the operas and concerts given with Grisi and Mario during their visit to America. At this time he conducted the performances on the opening of the Academy of Music at New York.

It will thus be seen that Arditi was connected with every musical undertaking of importance in the New World for a period of ten years, or from the time of his first contract with Marty, in 1846, to the moment of his leaving the United States for the purpose of revisiting his native country, in 1856. Upon his return to Europe, he accepted an engagement as conductor at the Naum Theatre at Constantinople, where new honours awaited him, and where he was decorated by the Sultan with the Order of the Medjidie. Upon leaving Constantinople, Arditi returned to Milan, here his reputation and ability as a maestro induced the indefatigable Lumley to make an engagement with him, which has continued up to the present time, and thanks to which, his remarkable talent has become known to the English public.

During the last twelvemonths Arditi has published many of his compositions, some of which have become popular. Among these will be remembered the Valse Chantante in D, entitled "Il Baccio," which was sung with so much effect by Piccolomini, for whom it was expressly composed. One of his works which is still unpublished, is an opera called "La Spia," of which those who have heard it speak in the highest terms.

It has afforded us much gratification to have been able to give this brief outline of Signor Arditi's successful career, his musical acquirements and amiable qualities making him in every respect worthy of the social and professional position he has attained in this and every other country he has visited.

ANTEATER

THE NEW ORGAN, WITH THE MUSICAL SERVICES, FOR THE CHURCH OF ALL SAINTS', KENSINGTON PARK.

ON Wednesday, M. Lemmens, professor in the Conservatoire of Brussels, and organist to His Majesty the King of the Belgians, gave a performance of his own compositions upon the grand organ that has just been completed in the manufactory of Messrs. Gray and Davison, for the new church of All Saints', Kensington Park, of the beauty and elegance of which there has been, from time to time, so much said. M. Lemmens performed the selection from his own organ compositions.

PART 1.

1 Prelude en E flat . . . . . MS.
2 Introduction et Fugue, en C. mineur.
3 Fantaisie en D majeur . . . . . 1 Fanfares.
4 Prière en E majeur . . . . . 2 Cantabile. 3 Finale.
5 Hosannah! Grand Chœur et Cantabile.

Digitized by Google

PART 2.

6 Prelude funèbre en D mineur.
7 Introduction et Fugue, en C majeur. Septième mode, "Laudate Dominum omnes Gentes!"
8 Thème Varié. MS.
9 Quatuor.
10 Fantaisie en F mineur.

The compositions themselves do not call for much remark, with but this exception, they are one and all so entirely similar in construction and form, as to need but little comment; at the same time his combinations and treatment of the various stops were most elegant and charming, and to which, no doubt, may be attributed the greater portion of the applause awarded by a numerous auditory to M. Lemmens upon the conclusion of almost every piece he performed.

En passant we may just mention, that the smoothness of his fingering and playing, united to a remarkable command of the pedal board which he possesses, lent a charm and delight to the listener, which few, very few, of our English organists are able to produce.

The organ itself, which, after all, should be the object to which we ought mainly to address ourselves, is, without exception, one of the finest and most melodious instruments to which we have ever listened, and is, in every particular, suitable to the purpose for which it is designed and intended, viz., for the use of a church, the service of which we understand to be, in all its entirety, a cathedral service. For the purposes of accompaniment to the voices of the choir, sustain for giving every possible variety of sound, from the most gentle pianissimo to the most majestic and thundering fortissimo.

In a really proper treatment and combination of its stops, every degree of loudness and softness may be obtained, the most delicate light, shade and gradation achieved, while, in conjunction with a really good choir, that has been properly taught to depend upon itself, the organist may give every scope to his fancy, sometimes tranquillising the feeling of a congregation by a soft and delicate treatment of the accompaniment, at other times leading the way and transporting with the grandeur and majesty of the full organ; sometimes gliding away like the gentle breath of zephyr, at other times bursting forth into beautiful melody and massive harmony. As just stated, for cathedral duty, this organ reflects the highest credit upon those who designed and those who built it.

The following is the arrangement and disposition of the stops, &c.:—

GREAT ORGAN.

1.	Double diapason, throughout	16 feet.
2.	Open diapason „	8 „
3.	Gamba „	8 „
4.	Stop diapason „	8 „
5.	Harmonic flute „	4 „
6.	Principal „	4 „
7.	Twelfth „	3 „
8.	Fifteenth „	2 „
9.	Mixture „	3 ranks.
10.	Furniture „	3 „
11.	Trumpet „	8 feet.

CHOIR ORGAN.

1.	Dulciana, metal throughout	8 feet.
2.	Stop diapason, wood „	8 „
3.	Principal „	4 „
4.	Flute „	4 „
5.	Piccolo „	2 „
6.	Corno de Dapetto, gamut G	8 „

SWELL ORGAN.

1.	Bourdon, throughout	16 feet.
2.	Open diapason „	8 „
3.	Stop diapason, bass „	8 „
4.	Keraulophon, tenor C	8 „
5.	Clarionet flute, throughout	8 „
6.	Principal „	4 „
7.	Fifteenth „	2 „
8.	Mixture „	3 ranks.
9.	Cornopean „	8 feet.
10.	Oboe „	8 „
11.	Clarion „	4 „

PEDAL ORGAN.

1.	Double Diapason	16 feet.
2.	Violon	16 „
3.	Principal	8 „
4.	Trombone	16 „

The Great Organ contains	798	pipes.
„ Choir Organ	310	„
„ Swell Organ	636	„
„ Pedal Organ	464	„
	2,208

There are seven coupling stops, six composition pedals, a tremulant to act upon the stops of the swell organ. It is tuned upon equal temperament, by which all the musical scales are rendered alike available. The organs are contained in two cases, the great, the swell, and the pedal organs in the large one, while the choir organ stands in front of the keyboard, and which has a very chaste and elegant appearance. The decoration of the front pipes and case is novel and exceedingly handsome.

Many may ask, where is this church, and where is Kensington Park? As far as we are able we will explain its position, and as we proceed offer a few general remarks, which are intended to draw the attention of our readers to one of the most important steps in connection with church music which has been taken for some considerable time. The church of All Saints', Kensington Park, which has been for nearly seven years in course of erection, and is now gradually and rapidly drawing near its completion, is situated to the north of Notting-hill Gate and Westbourne Grove, and upon the southern confines of the Great Western Railway.

This church, which has been described as a miniature cathedral, and which has cost some 20,000*l*., was originally founded by the Rev. Samuel Edmund Walker, D.D., Rector of St. Columb-Mayor, Cornwall, as a memorial to his father and mother, and is now being finished in a style of great magnificence and munificence, through the indefatigable and untiring energies of its first incumbent, the Rev. John Light, M.A. It may not perhaps here be out of place to mention that the services of this church will be musical, and we understand will be carried out upon the simple but beautiful directions of our Liturgy, as laid down by the Book of Common Prayer; that not only one but every part of the service will receive its due and proper attention, and that, as far as we are able to gather from various sources of reliable information, no department of the Church's service will be mutilated in any shape or particular. The musical portion of the service of our Church, which in itself is a very great element and source of delight, has received much careful attention from the incumbent, who has entrusted the creation and training of a choir of some thirty voices to the care of Dr. James Peeh and Mr. William Sudlow, by whose aid it is confidently anticipated that a truly beautiful musical service will be attained. It is also worthy of remark, and we are glad to learn the fact, that the incumbent is one totally unconnected with any party ultra high or low, and to the former of which most frequently these services are usually associated. To the neighbourhood its daily services will unquestionably prove a boon, while, to the public and to the church as a body, they will present a pleasing and gratifying contrast to that usually drowsy and dreadfully insipid performance once a week of the public worship in the majority of our churches, and, perhaps, in a great degree assist to revive that interest in the services of the Church and Church's music which has so unmistakeably been lost through the ignorance, indolence, and indifference of many of the clergy, as well as, from a feeling of repugnance, in a great measure existing in the public mind, to the house of God being solely converted into a mere arena for oratorical display, and not unfrequently a channel for monetary speculation,—a place in which to worship the creature rather than the God. We sincerely and heartily wish the Church all the success that it will deserve; it is a step in the right direction, and success it will eventually obtain should it be carried through with the determination and integrity of purpose with which its incumbent has started. He has only to make his efforts well, not partially, known, not only to the district in which his church is situated, but to the metropolis and country at large. Efforts of this kind should be known as a great public good. Such a great and glorious undertaking should be placed unmistakably above the influences of mere local petty feelings, impressions, prejudices, and interests. It is the great and discriminating public that will really and unselfishly sympathise with a man and his efforts, especially when such efforts are devoid of all those mummeries and objectionable ceremonials which have no authority for their introduction, and which enshroud nearly all classes of such communities as are placed in power in the ultra-high churches of London and the country. But, in conclusion, however, we may add that it is one thing to begin well and firmly, and another to end with timidity and indifference, as it is too often the case in works of this kind. There is but one straightforward course in all these matters,—to begin and end upon one common truthful principle. The Book of Common Prayer is the best and only guide for all difficulties in which an incumbent may be placed by secret or public opposition to its ordinances, for opposition in one quarter or the other—such innovations as they are termed, but which would be more properly styled restorations, will create sooner or later in a myriad-headed congregation, such as this new and almost unknown district of Kensington will produce, backed up by the latitudinarianism of the present occupant of London's episcopal chair, and so accomplish a really great and holy purpose, for which many have struggled but so few endure to the end, because in many instances they are untrue to themselves, to others, and their God. Again we repeat that we sincerely hope for the well-being and success of this church, and that the Rev. John Light may eventually reap that reward which he merits for his past continued exertions in the cause of this interesting church. J. P.

Digitized by Google

MUSICAL SOLEMNITIES IN COMMEMORATION OF FRIEDERICK WILHELM IV. OF PRUSSIA.

Cologne.

At noon on Sunday, the 20th ult., the Cölner Männergesang Verein, under the direction of Herr F. Weber, royal music-director, executed, in the large hall of the Casino, a musical service in memory of the late King. A numerous audience, headed by the principal civil and military authorities, had responded to the invitations, by especial cards of the committee, and completely filled the area of the hall and the galleries.

The Verein regarded the ceremony as an act of profound reverence for the deceased king. In the year 1855, His Majesty received the congratulations of the society on his birthday, and honoured with his gracious attention and approbation the performance of several vocal pieces, in the apartments of the palace of Sans Souci. He also presented the society with the large gold medal for art, and endowed them with corporative rights. The hope that His Majesty would take the society under his especial protection remained unfulfilled, but only in consequence of the inscrutable decree of providence which lately plunged the country into consternation and grief.

The programme was carried out in a manner worthy of the occasion, and one deeply impressive from the feeling way in which the music was sung. The choral, "Jesus, meine Zuversicht," by B. Klein, commenced the ceremony. Next came the "Bardenchor," by Silcher, with new words for the first and second strophes); "Ecce, quomodo moritur Justus," by Palestrina; and "Hoffnung," by J. C. Schärtlich. Herr L. Bischoff, who is an honorary member of the society, then recited a poem, written by himself for the occasion, and entitled: "Der Sänger am Grabe des Königs" ("The Singer at the Grave of the King"), which was instantly followed by the "Lacrimosa dies illa," and "Pie Jesu Domine," from Cherubini's Requiem. Then came Silcher's chorus: "Stummschlift der Sänger," G. Söllmer's "Salvum fac regem" closing the ceremony, which had been listened to by all present with the deepest sympathy and devout attention.

The sixth Gesellschafts-Concert, in the Gürzenich, under the direction of Herr Ferdinand Hiller, had been set apart, by the managing committee, as "A funeral service in honour of his late Majesty King Friederick Wilhelm IV," and took place on Tuesday evening, the 22nd ult. The hall presented a deeply moving spectacle. The whole of the chorus and audience—numbering above fifteen hundred persons—were dressed in mourning. The front of the stage was adorned with black velvet and silver hangings, while sacrificial flames burned in high golden candelabra wound round with flags.

After an "elegiac march," composed for the ceremony by Ferdinand Hiller, Herr Laddey recited a poem: "Zur Erinnerung," by Wolfgang Müller. Hereupon were heard the first chords; the chorus rose and joined in Mozart's "Requiem æternam dona eis Domine, et lux perpetual luciat eis." It was a very solemn moment. The imperishable monument of Mozart's genius once again—by the union of purely human feeling, religious sentiment and artistic conception, which, in his case, had blended into unity and into the peculiar expression of his artistic nature, directed to the highest objects—filled all hearts with comfort and elevating devotion.

The solos were sang by Mlle. Rothenberger, Mad. B. Herren, A, Pütz and K. Hill-Malapert, from Frankfort-on-the-Maine.

What else would follow the Requiem in honour of the memory of the deceased monarch, but that sublime composition by Beethoven, which he called the Sinfonia Eroica? The execution was admirable. Added to this was the solemn frame of mind of the spectators, so that, perhaps, the great thoughts, the wonderfully interwoven melodies, and the striking specimens of harmony, especially in the first movement and the funeral march, were scarcely ever so grasped by the performers, in all their significance and profundity, as on this evening.

MUSIC AT MUNICH, IN NOVEMBER AND DECEMBER, 1860.—Now that Prince Carnival has again definitively grasped his all-powerful sceptre, and handed over the concert-rooms to dancing and masquerading, I am enabled to furnish you with a tolerably complete sketch of the first portion of our musical doings during the months of last November and December.

The Musikalische Akademie, under the direction of Franz Lachner, performed at its four Odeon-concerts, an overture for a full wind-band (first time), by Mendelssohn; an andante for eight wind-instruments, by Beethoven; a prelude and fugue for full band, by Franz Lachner; an air from Orpheus and Eurydice, by Joseph Hadyn; two of the most recently published vocal quartets of M. Hauptmann ("An der Kirche wohnt der Priester," and a song from Mirza Schaffy); and, lastly, two charming vocal quartets, for soprano and four male voices, by Ferdinand Hiller ("Lebenslust," and "Die Lerchen"). Besides these, we had Beethoven's symphonies in D major and A major; Mendelssohn's symphony in A major; the symphony in D minor (introduction, allegro, romance, scherzo, and finale), by R. Schumann; the overture (No. 3) in C, to Leonore, by Beethoven; the overture to Euryanthe, by Weber, and the Scotch piece, Im Hochland, by Gade. Herr Lauterbach played Lafont's sixth violin concerto; and Herr Walter, Molique's third (that in D minor). Mlle. Stöger sang Beethoven's concert air in E flat, while Mlle. Stehle, alone, gave us an air with obbligato pianoforte accompaniments by Mozart, and, with Mad. Diez, a duet from Idomeneo.

The Oratorio-Association, under the direction of Herr von Perfall, repeated, at its first concert, Handel's Messiah; at its second, it performed, for the first time, a motet for eight voices ("Herr, höret mein Gebet"), by Hauptmann; the "Christnacht," by Ferd. Hiller, and the "Pilgerfahrt der Rose," by R. Schumann.

Chamber-music was satisfactorily represented at the concert of Herren Werner and Venzel, aspiring young members of the Court orchestra, and at two concerts given by the pianist, M. Mortier de Fontaine, as well as at that got up by him, for a select circle, on the anniversary of Beethoven's death. Two orchestral concerts of Herr Seidel presented us, as a novelty, with a symphony (in G minor) by Méhul* and one by Rommel, who is a professor at the Conservatory here. Finally, in the way of virtuosi, we heard, in addition to that excellent pianist, Mad. Kolb-Dauvin, at present stopping amongst us, the brothers Holmes, violinists, at three concerts, in which the public was especially pleased with the admirable manner in which they played together in Spohr's duet-compositions.

JENNY LIND.—"It is reported," says the Court Journal, "that Mr. Gye has succeeded in obtaining the valuable services of Jenny Lind for this season." (Fudge!)

GRISI AND MARIO.—If report speaks true, the direction of the Crystal Palace have entered into an agreement with Mr. E. T. Smith to give a series of Italian operatic performances during the summer, for the purpose of exhibiting the talents of Mad. Grisi and Signor Mario, who are engaged to him for the season. It is added that a theatre is about to be erected in the centre transept for the purpose.

* So often recommended by ourselves to our own musical societies.

Digitized by Google

LIST OF

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY'S ORCHESTRA

FOR 1861.

(DEDICATED TO MICHAEL COSTA, ESQ.)

"Old Double" still alive.

First Violins.

BLAGROVE, } (Principals).
BECKER, }
BANISTER.
BEZETH.
CLEMENTI.
COLLINS, (VIOTTI).
DAY.
BUZIAN.
KETTENUS.
JACQUIN.
GRIESBACH.
RENDLE.

Second Violins.

PAYTON.
PERRY.
JAY.
NICKOL.
BETTS.
GUNNISS.
VAN HEDDEGHAN.
WHEATLEY.
CALKIN.
SCHONING.
LOADES.
BOOSE.

Tenors.

BLAGROVE, R. (Principal).
BAETENS.
BOILEAU.
THOMAS.
WESTLAKE.
LUTGEN.
TOLHURST.
COLCHESTER.

Violoncellos.

PETTIT (Principal).
PEZZE.
DAUBERT.
SCHRŒDER.
SMITH.
VIEUXTEMPS.
WOHLERS.
GOODBAN.

Double Basses.

ROWLAND (Principal).
WHITE.
GILARDONI.
EDGAR.
PICKART.
BLACKESTON.
GRIFFITHS.
WAUD.

Flutes.

SVENDSEN.
CARD (E.)

Clarionets.

WILLIAMS.
POLLARD.

Oboes.

LAVIGNE.
MALSCH.

Bassoons.

WAETZIG.
CHISHOLM.

Horns.

STEGLICH.
KEEVIL.
HANDLEY.
WATERSON.

Trumpets.

ZEISS.
WARD.

Trombones.

WEBSTER.
GERMANN.
HEALEY.

Drums.

THOMPSON.

[The above list is authentic. (Signed) PETIPACE.

MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—At the last general meeting of the fellows and associates, Mr. W. V. Wallace (professional) retired from the council, and Mr. Benedict was elected in his place. The Rev. Sir William Cope (non-professional) retired, and Mr. John Sampson Peirce was elected in his place. The other retiring non-professional member of the council, Mr. Edward James, Q.C., no other candidate being put forward, was re-elected. The full list of the council stands now as follows:—Jules Benedict, Esq.; Henry G. Blagrove, Esq.; Wm. Chappel, Esq., F.S.A.; James William Davison, Esq.; Joseph F. Duggan, Esq.; Charles E. Horsley, Esq.; Edward James, Esq., Q.C.; Joseph Lidel, Esq.; G. A. Macfarren, Esq.; Frank Mori, Esq.; Geo. Alex. Osborne, Esq.; John D. Pawle, Esq.; John Sampson Peirce, Esq.; E. F. Rimbault, Esq., LL.D., F.S.A.; Charles Salaman, Esq.; Augustine Sargood, Esq.; John Simon, Esq.; Henry Smart, Esq.

BIJOU THEATRE—HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Miss Grace Egerton (Mrs. George Case), on Monday evening introduced to the London public her musical and colloquial entertainment, entitled Latest Intelligence, which has lately been achieving a great success in the provinces. The entertainment has been written expressly for Miss Egerton, by Mr. Edmund Yates and Mr. N. Harrington; and the plot may be thus defined:—Mr. Case has gone on a tour to the continent in search of novelties for a new entertainment, leaving his partner Miss Egerton, rusticating at a secluded village in Devonshire. The lady, bored almost to death by ennui, goes over to Boulogne, and puts up at the same hotel in which her partner is "recruiting," after the fatigues of his journey. She accidentally discovers his apartment, and disturbs his quietude by a series of visits in different disguises. Mr. Case becomes infuriated at the frequency of the visits which he receives from unknown persons, and disgusted with the want of attendance at the Hotel, leaves for England. He arrives at Folkestone, sea-sick and weary, and determines to have a few days' rest before setting out to London. But this is denied him. Miss Egerton again follows him, and again renews her personations, representing in the whole a dozen different characters, until in the end all is satisfactorily explained. Miss Egerton has a tolerable voice, and sings skilfully; but her great charm consists in her acting, which is really fascinating from its grace, ease and wonderful esprit. In seeing her, indeed, we are struck with the irreparable loss the stage has suffered by her absence. Miss Egerton is assisted by Mr. George Case, who varies her impersonations and songs by performances on the concertina, of which instrument, we need hardly say, he is an eminent master. The elegant and most beautifully fitted up little theatre in the old opera house, is just the place for enjoying so agreeable and lively an entertainment as that of the Latest Intelligence.

Digitized by Google

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE THIRTEENTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON

(54TH CONCERT IN ST. JAMES'S HALL)

WILL TAKE PLACE

ON MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 25, 1861,

The Programme selected from the Works of

VARIOUS COMPOSERS.

First Performance of SPOHR'S GRAND DOUBLE QUARTET in D MINOR.

Seventh Appearance of M. VIEUXTEMPS.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Quartet, in B flat, for two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello, M. VIEUXTEMPS, Herr RIES, M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI—Mozart; Canzonet, "Name the glad day," by general desire, Miss BANKS (her first appearance at the Monday Popular Concerts)—Dussek; Partita, in B minor, for Pianoforte alone (first time at the Monday Popular Concerts), Mr. CHARLES HALLE—Bach.

PART II.—Double Quartet in D minor, for four Violins, two Violas, and two Violoncellos (first time at the Monday Popular Concerts), MM. VIEUXTEMPS, RIES, CARRODUS, WATSON, SCHREURS, WEBB, PAQUE, and PIATTI—Spohr; Song, "The Charmer," Miss BANKS—Mendelssohn; Sonata, in B flat, for Violin and Pianoforte (by particular desire), M. VIEUXTEMPS and Mr. CHARLES HALLE—Dussek.

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT. To commence at Eight o'Clock precisely.

 In consequence of many hundreds of persons having been unable to obtain admission at the 11th Monday Popular Concert, on Feb. 11th, 1861, when the entire programme was chosen from the works of Beethoven, there will be another Beethoven Concert on March 4th, 1861 (14th Concert), when the principal features of the selection which afforded so much gratification on that occasion will be repeated. M. Vieuxtemps will lead (with MM. Ries, Schreurs, and Piatti), the Rasoumowski Quartet in E minor (No. 2); and the Trio in E flat (No. 1) for Violin, Viola, and Violoncello. Miss Arabella Goddard will again perform the grand Sonata, for Pianoforte alone, in C minor, Op. 111—the 32nd and last sonata of Beethoven; and the Kreutzer Sonata, for Pianoforte and Violin, with M. Vieuxtemps. Mr. Sims Reeves will repeat the Lieder Kreis, and the "Stolen Kiss." Conductor, Mr. Benedict.

NOTICE.—It is respectfully suggested that such persons as are not desirous of remaining till the end of the performance can leave either before the commencement of the last instrumental piece, or between any two of the movements, so that those who wish to hear the whole can do so without interruption.

Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s.

Of CHAPPELL and Co., 50 New Bond Street, and the principal Music-sellers.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—The lessee begs to announce the following arrangements: THIS EVENING (Saturday), positively for the last time ROBIN HOOD. On Monday, a favourite Opera; and on Tuesday, the 26th of February, will be produced, with new scenery, dresses, decorations, and appointments (having been many months in preparation), a new grand romantic opera, in four acts, entitled THE AMBER WITCH. The music composed expressly for this theatre by W. V. WALLACE. Written by HENRY F. CHORLEY, Esq. Rudiger (the young Lord of Ravenstein), Mr. SIMS REEVES; The Commandant, Mr. SANTLEY; The Pastor, Mr. PATEY; Claus, Mr. TERROTT; The King, Mr. BARTLEMAN; Elsie, Miss HUDDART; and Mary, Madame L. SHERRINGTON. Early application, to prevent disappointment, should be made at the box office of the theatre, which is open daily from 10 to 6. Doors open at half-past 7; performance commences at 8 o'clock each evening.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH. The last four Nights of Mr. and Mrs. CHARLES KEAN. The Last Night but Seven of the most successful Pantomime of the season.—This Evening, THE GAMESTER, in which Mr. and Mrs. CHARLES KEAN will appear. To conclude with the new, magnificent, and successful comic Pantomime of PETER WILKINS. Scenery by Beverley.

Upper gallery, 6d.; lower gallery, 1s.; pit, 2s.; upper boxes, 2s.; first circle, 2s. 6d.; dress circle, 5s; stalls, 6s.; private boxes, three guineas, two guineas, and 10s. 6d. Doors open at half-past 6; to commence at 7. Box-office open daily from 10 till 5, under the direction of Mr. C. Nugent.

MR. and Mrs. CHARLES KEAN'S engagement at the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, will conclude on Thursday, next, 28th, when RICHARD III. will be performed (for that night only), being for the Benefit of Mr. and Mrs. C. Kean.—On Tuesday next, 26th, inst., (for the last time) LOUIS XI. THIS EVENING (Saturday 23rd, for this night only), THE GAMESTER. Monday next, 25th, (for the last time) HAMLET. Wednesday, next, 27th (for the last time), THE WIFE'S SECRET. No re-engagement can take place, as Mr. and Mrs. C. Kean are to appear at the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh, on Monday, 4th March.

ERRATA.

In the second "leader" of the last number of the Musical World, for Mr. "Fay" read Mr. Fry. Mr. Fry is one of the most eminent musicians and musical critics in America.

In the article, "Auber's new opera" read "Auber, it is true, is four times twenty—but he is not, and never will be eighty." By the misprint of "eighty-four" for eighty the point of M. Fiorentino's compliment to to the great French musician is entirley lost.

NOTICES.

To ADVERTISERS.—Advertisers are informed, that for the future the Advertising Agency of the THE MUSICAL WORLD is established at the Magazine of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyle Street (First Floor). Advertisements can be received as late as Three o'Clock P.M., on Fridays—but not later. Payment on delivery.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2s. 6d. / Every additional line (10 words) ... ... 6d.

To PUBLISHERS AND COMPOSERS.—All Music for Review in THE MUSICAL WORLD must henceforward be forwarded to the Editor, care of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street. A List of every Piece sent for Review will appear on the Saturday following in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

To CONCERT GIVERS.—No Benefit-Concert, or Musical Performance, except of general interest, unless previously Advertised, can be reported in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1861.

FEW, excepting those who have been employed on the task can understand the difficulties of translating into English an Italian or French libretto, and adapting it to music. The Italian is extremely hard to master, but the French is almost insurmountable. The genius of the French and English languages are as opposite as day and night. The one is plastic, flexible, accommodating, susceptible of modification, easy to mould, not averse to alteration, and capable of being elongated, or abbreviated at convenience—an india-rubber language, in short, wonderfully suited for the purposes of a certain kind of music. The English tongue, on the other hand, is as rigid and immoveable as granite, admitting of no accentual interference, obstinate, immoveable, unmalleable, unmanageable. In French comic music the difficulty of translating and fitting the words into the vernacular becomes greater, since greater liberties are taken with rhythm, accent, and pronunciation. That "patter" music in which the French language runs so glibly, and in which the productions of the Opéra Comique abound, is entirely opposed to English verse unless in the form of burlesque. We consequently find that in translating French comic works, our adapters have hitherto never been able to achieve a success. No matter what amount of skill and pains has been expended, no matter who the poet, the result has been more or less a failure.

The new translation of Auber's Domino Noir (now being given at the Royal English Opera), written by Mr. H. F. Chorley, one of our most experienced and able adaptors, constitutes no exception. Mr. Chorley exhibits consummate tact and unusual command of versification on several occasions; but more frequently the language appears to defy all his efforts, and he gives up rhyme, accent, and even reason in despair. For example the lines which make the burthen of Jacintha's song in the second act, and which M. Scribe has written

"Vieille duègne,
Ou tendron,
Si nous tenons
A notre règne,
Pour cent raisons
Choisissons
La maison
D'un vieux garçon—"

Digitized by Google

Mr. Chorley renders thus: —

"When one is fifty or sixty,
And rents should be ready,
The very best earthly nest
Is near a single man grown very old."

So also the words of the chorus of nuns in the last act, which are of the simplest kind and form, are, from their necessity, we have no doubt, rendered vague and unmeaning in the English. The original words are—

"Ah! quel malheur!
Ma chère sœur!
Quel accident!
Est-ce etonnant
Et désolant
Pour le couvent!"

One would have thought that these words, more especially as they involved no "female" terminations, would have presented little difficulty to the translator. On the contrary, Mr. Chorley, with all his art and knowledge, is entirely abroad in their adaptation, as the reader will perceive.

"What do they say?
On such a holiday,
When all should be gay
And make a grand display,
To cure her head again,
And take away
Her very inconvenient pain,
Suppose we go and pray!"

The "Aragonese" is translated with extreme felicity, and ne words fit the music admirably. We cannot say, however, that we are fascinated with the idea of music "singing out spitefully," nor do we exactly understand how a muleteer can be "miles too slow." In Brigitta's couplets, in the beginning of the third act, we cannot be quite so lenient with the poet, who, we certainly think, could, with a little pains, have done M. Scribe's verses more justice, and have infused a little more elegance and style into his translation. The last couplet runs thus in the French:—

"Humble et les paupières baissées,
Jamais de mauvaises pensées...
Mais avant d'entrer au parloir,
On jette un coup-d'œil au miroir.
Si vous voulez, jeune fillette,
Etre à fois prude et coquette,
Savez-vous où cela s'apprend?
C'est au couvent."

And has been translated into—

"Looking upon the ground for ever,
With a worldly fancy, no never!
Hating the very name of glass,
While we talk about ourselves, alas!
If anywhere can envy smoulder,
And most of all as we grow older,
Answer me! answer me!
Such a place is where?
'Tis convent where a gentlewoman,
Flouted is by elders most common;
Yes—yes—that holy place is there.

Now, with deference, we think the words we have italicised are susceptible of improvement. We might take exceptions to the dispensing with the definite or indefinite article before the words "glass" and "convent;" but this is a matter of style. The scene in which the adapter displays his greatest mastery of the language is the supper scene, which demands little allowance even on the score of a translation, and might be written for an original work, so smooth are the versicles, so well-chosen and pithy the expressions.

Indeed the utmost forbearance should be shown towards the translation of a foreign libretto, which even talent, experience, facility, and command of words, so seldom succeed in rendering available to the singer, and agreeable to the reader. If the verses can be made tolerably smooth, the plainest words be always employed, the meaning never obscured, and common sense ever apparent, the triumph of the poet is attained, and he may smile at such as are only contented with the higher qualities of style, felicity of thought, grace of diction, and flow of versification. It must be remembered that "translation" is one thing, and "adaptation" to notes another. In translating an opera the poet must consider the music in the first instance. For the time being he is the absolute slave of the composer. When all is borne in mind, the difficulties of his task will be acknowledged, and his short-comings and crudities overlooked. Let no man say, when reading a translated libretto, "this is a bad book," without considering thus far. He cannot else do credit to his judgment.

R.

TAKING up the Times on Thursday to look for a notice of the Domino Noir, all that we found in the way of news, in any manner relating to it, was a simple telegram, informing us that the author of the piece, M. Eugène Scribe, had expired the day before. We had been present at the first performance of the work in question by the company of the Royal English Opera; and reflecting how its sparkling music, and not less sparkling and ingenious libretto had delighted the audience, we could not help saying to ourselves that, after all, Scribe had died, like a great general, on the day of a victory. Then, however, we remembered that the victory of the Domino Noir had been so often gained that to have heard of its latest repetition—had M. Scribe but lived a few hours longer—would probably not have made any great impression upon him. Why, Scribe's pieces of all kinds are played in every part of Europe, and not a night passes but some one of his works is represented in his own city, which he loved so much, and of which he has depicted the little vanities and weaknesses with a satire so goodnatured that it is sometimes almost tender. Still we could not help returning to our first idea. At least there was something affecting, to a Londoner, in a celebrated dramatic author dying the day on which one of his most charming works was presented to the younger portion of the London public for the first time; an occasion on which the most experienced theatregoers, the most hardened habitués, must have acknowledged that, if this was not the first time of their seeing the Domino Noir, they certainly, since its first production, had never seen anything in the same style that could be pronounced so good. In proof of our assertion, we ask any one whether the audience would not have been profoundly touched if, after the fall of the curtain on Wednesday evening, when all the principal performers had been called for, and the enthusiasts of the pit were still calling, almost at random, for anybody who liked to come, and for one (the author), who was less likely than other person, mentioned to show himself; if, then, some one had appeared on the stage, and had simply said, "The author of the piece, so full of life, which you are now applauding, died this day," if he had been a pedant (a most improbable supposition, we admit), the spokesman might have added, "I will not say "Valete et plaudite," but "Valete et lugete."

A full biography of Scribe will doubtless be found—this week or the next—in another part of our columns. All we know at present about his last moments is that he expired suddenly in his carriage. Dramatic authors sometimes die suddenly in England as in France, but not in their carriages.

Digitized by Google

The most in this way that a dramatist living solely by his plays could aspire to in England would be to breathe his last in a Hansom cab. Scribe made no secret of having conquered his position "at the point of his pen," as his compatriots would say. On the contrary he was proud of it, and boasted of it as much as a man of his wit, sagacity, and good taste could boast of anything. Any true Parisian would have known who the expiring man was in the carriage which bore the dying Scribe, if only from the arms and motto on the panels. The arms—two pens crossed above an inkstand; the motto—a supremely modest Industriâ. It always seemed to us that Scribendo would have been a more appropriate device. Proprietors of hereditary escutcheons would perhaps have exclaimed against the bad taste of such a legend; but there are many such (as, for instance, the celebrated "Ver non semper viret"), to which the same objection might be urged with more force, together with the more important one of frivolity.

It is a curious fact that the two most popular and prolific dramatists of modern France have both died sudden deaths. One, of course, was M. Scribe; the other was M. Scribe's son-in-law, M. Bayard. M. Bayard died at a ball given at his own house. M. Scribe, who was present, invited the dancers to the next day's funeral. Then he set to work, revising and completing M. Bayard's unfinished manuscripts. Who is there now in France worthy to perform a similar kind office for the author of La Camaraderie and a hundred other masterpieces? E.

[M. Scribe was in a carriage, on his way to join M. Auber, and a party, to celebrate, at a déjeuner, the success of the new opera La Circassienne. On setting out he was in perfect health. He left home at noon, and was brought back, dead, in little more than a quarter of an hour. He was in his 70th year. Ed. M. W.]

THE Cathedral of Halberstadt, in the province of Saxony, is one of the largest and finest in Germany. It is built in the purest Gothic style, and attracts many lovers and judges of architecture, who, after once admiring its architectural proportions, seize every opportunity of revisiting it. To the admirers of the old edifice, are now likely to be added a new influx of organists and amateurs of organ music, attracted by the grand old cathedral organ, which has not only been thoroughly restored, but increased in power and dimensions. This rare and magnificent instrument, with the renovations and additions of Herr Buchholz, organ-builder of Berlin, is now open to inspection.

As far back as the year 1361, the cathedral possessed one of the very earliest organs, built by the oldest German organ-builder on record, the monk Nikolaus Faber. This instrument, which, for the time, was a large one, had fourteen diatonic, and eight chromatic keys, extending from great B to the one-lined A. These twenty-two keys were divided into two manuals, the upper one containing the soprano, and the lower the bass notes. The necessary sound was supplied by twenty pairs of bellows, worked by the bellows-blowers. Organs did not then have stops; the pipes were placed together in one mixture. In the imperfect condition of the mechanical arts at that time, however, it was scarcely possible to execute the simple melody of a song, far less a harmonic accompaniment; the heavy and very broad keys could only be weighed down by the fists, just as is now the case with peals of bells in churches.

After the invention, in 1471, of the pedal, by a German named Bernhard, the cathedral-organ at Halberstadt was renovated in 1495 by George Kleng, and received a pedal, consisting of only eight keys, which, as the pedal possessed no separate pipes, were connected, by means of small strings, with the keys of the manuals. This organ, in its then condition, cannot have been used in the cathedral later than the middle of the sixteenth century at the utmost, for a second organ, the builder of which is not known, was, about the end of the seventeeth century, removed from the cathedral to the St. Andreas-Kirche, where, after having undergone considerable repairs, it is still used, although in a very dilapidated condition. The organ then had two manuals, one pedal, and thirty stops.

The third cathedral organ, built by Heinrich Herbst and son of Magdeburg, for 12,000 thalers, and handed over, as complete, to the authorities on the 19th July, 1718, had five manuals, namely, three placed one over the other, with pedal, and two separate manuals, one on each side the organ, one being in chamber-tone. By means of this peculiar arrangement, three performers could play simultaneously upon the instrument; but as only two manuals could be coupled, the arrangement was attended with the defect that in the full organ scarcely half the stops could be employed by one player. One side key-board was only built for the sake of symmetry, and, as it possessed no separate stops, was connected with the lower key-board. This organ possessed sixty-five stops, supplied with wind by eight large pairs of bellows. The intonation of the stops, as well as their material was as fine and solid as is the case with Silbermann's celebrated instruments; but it had the same defects which are peculiar to all old organs.

In 1838 this organ was almost completely rebuilt in all its parts, with the exception of its case and the tongued-pipes, by Herr Schulze, of Paulinzelle. It received four superposed manuals, of which the three lower ones could be coupled, and one pedal. The four manuals had a compass from C C sharp up to high F, and the pedal from C C sharp chromatically through two octaves to the high D. It received eight new twelve-feet pairs of bellows, four of which furnished wind to the manuals and four to the pedal. The tone-pitch, which had previously been chorus-pitch, was changed into chamber-pitch.

The organ suffered so much from the repairs carried on during a space of ten years in the cathedral itself that it was not astonishing that many stops and pipes, in which the dust was nearly half an inch deep, would no longer sound, or answer their object. A thorough course of cleaning and repairing was indispensable to save the splendid instrument from utter destruction. The commission was given by the authorities at Magdeburg to the firm of Buchhols and son of Berlin, already celebrated for having built a great many large organs, and after Herr Buchhols had executed his honourable task in real artistic fashion, the organ was again handed over for use, as it now stands, on the 9th November last. Herr Buchholz, jun., who worked for a considerable period in the manufactory of Cavaillé-Col, at Paris, and where he perfected himself in his art, has proved, as artistically as modestly, his great mastery, and has done more than was to be expected from the limited resources at his command. He has freed the whole instrument from dirt and dust, and intonated all the stops in so masterly, a manner, that both the softer character-stops and the remaining full stops in the full organs are unrivalled. He has moreover renewed nearly all the reed-stops and, as the three lower manuals when coupled could be played only with great effort, has succeeded so admirably in remedying this defect, by means of a pneumatic machine, that the three manuals when coupled are now as easy to play as formerly a single one was. Furthermore, by a clever but extremely simple arrangement, he has produced a crescendo and decrescendo for the eight stops of the upper four-foot manual, the results being that these soft stops have received a three-fold modification. Though Herr Buchholz, as we have already stated, has turned all the stops in a masterly manner, he seems to have treated the softer ones of this manual with especial love, for every one who hears, after the chords of the full organ, this manual with its wonderful character-stops, is surprised and absolutely carried away by the tones which surpass in perfection everything he ever heard before. The full organ possesses a grandeur of tone, power, and brilliancy almost unexampled, and has elicited the greatest astonishment from all who have enjoyed the opportunity of hearing it.

Digitized by Google

PHILHARMONIC CONCERT.—The new band assembled in the Hanover Square Rooms on Saturday last at 11 A.M., under the direction of Professor Sterndale Bennett. The result of the first trial was eminently satisfactory. The grand allegro of Mendelssohn's Lobgesang, Beethoven's Symphony in A (No. 7), and Spohr's overture to the Alchemyst were performed with wonderful spirit and precision. No more proof was wanted about the efficiency of the new band, which one might have imagined had been playing under Professor Bennett's direction for the last twenty years—intead of, as it were, just "scraping" his acquaintance. Thus the subscribers to the Philharmonic Concerts may rest satisfied that they will experience no diminution of their pleasures.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.—It was only to be expected that Mendelssohn's Ottet would be promptly repeated "by unanimous desire," and the enthusiastic welcome accorded to its second performance is sufficient warrant that Mr. Arthur Chappell did wisely in again affording the public an opportunity of hearing it. That such a production should have emanated from the brain of a boy of fifteen is little less than a miracle,—it is a piece of absolute inspiration, combining a breadth and largeness never approaching heaviness, with an airy lightness equally removed from frivolity,—the whole work at each hearing disclosing fresh beauties as gratifying to the unskilled amateur as to the thoroughly-versed musician. With the exception of one trifling hitch (instantly rectified) at the opening of the second movement, the execution was altogether as praiseworthy as upon the former occasion—the instrumentalists, led by M. Vieuxtemps, being precisely the same. There was but one more concerted piece, but that a perfect gem,—the quartet, in G minor, of Mozart, for pianoforte, violin, tenor and violoncello, generally admitted to be the finest composition of its class that proceeded from the pen of the most tuneful and prolific of great masters, and rendered most unexceptionably by Messrs. Charles Hallé, Vieuxtemps, Schreurs and Piatti. Judging from the warmth of its reception, we are inclined to think the first time of hearing will not be the last. Mr. Charles Hallé gave Beethoven's Grand Sonata in C major, Op. 53, dedicated to Count Waldstein—which was originally introduced at these concerts by Miss Arabella Goddard, May 30th, 1859, and is one of the three solos for the pianoforte (the Sonata Appassionata, in F minor, and the gigantic B flat, 106, being the other two) avowedly written to exhibit the brilliant mechanical qualities of the player. Replete with difficulties, it is, nevertheless, more than a vehicle for the display of rapid fingers, being instinct with all that the highest intellect of musical genius could inspire. Herr Lenz has written a heap of extravagant rhapsody on this sonata, in which he finds a likeness to the phantoms in Dante's Inferno, to an arsenal of artillery,—a ship of the line blown up, and——a gad-fly!! Were Beethoven still living he might well exclaim, "Save me from my friends." As a fit companion to this climax of difficulties for the pianoforte, M. Vieuxtemps selected Bach's Chaconne, in D minor, as an illustration of his complete mastery over the violin. This again is one of three sonatas for the instrument, the other two being fugues no less remarkable for elaborate ingenuity. Mendelssohn, whose faith in Bach is well known, has added a pianoforte accompaniment (admirably played by Mad. Vieuxtemps, by the way), which sustains without in any way interfering with the solo. Remarkable as was M. Vieuxtemps' recent rendering of Tartini's Trillo del Diavolo, his execution of Bach's Chaconne was still more praiseworthy, the latter bearing about the same relation in point of difficulty as does the great 106 B flat of Beethoven to the "Moonlight" or any of his early sonatas. We were glad to find the vocal selection confined to two pieces in the evening, as it confers the merit (good music notwithstanding) of shortening the entertainment to a reasonable limit. Mad. Laura Baxter was the singer, and gave excellent effect to Henry Smart's charming song "Estelle," and Dr. Sterndale Bennett's graceful lyric "Gentle Zephyr." After the sentimental twaddle palmed off as drawing-room ballads (never admitted at the Monday Popular Concerts) it is refreshing to come across two compositions like these, as genial and unaffected as they are thoroughly musician-like. Both songs were accompanied by Mr. Benedict in his most finished style, and if we do not always mention that gentleman's name in connection with these concerts it is rather by oversight than design, his services as conductor being as highly valuable as they are uniformly unobtrusive. Sophr's Double Quartet, in D minor, is promised at the next concert, and a repetition of the last Beethoven selection, from which some four hundred persons were reluctantly turned away on the 11th of January, is announced for March 4th.

THE ENTERPRISING IMPRESARIO.

CHAPTER VIII.

OF all the touring parties which are formed after the London season, there are few whose travels are more replete with incident and adventure than those of a party of musical celebrities, brought together by an enterprising impresario for a tour in the provinces. They do not, it is true, brave the dangers of Vesuvius, or encounter hair-breadth escapes on the glaciers of Switzerland, neither do they experience the inconvenience of a nocturnal interview with Spanish bandits, nor a run of ill luck at Baden-Baden; but they have stories of their own to tell, which, though of less perilous and exciting scenes, are still interesting and amusing. A pleasant time they pass. Living in a style, popularly supposed to be the lot of fighting-cocks, they have no heed of hotel bills or railway tickets, it being a characteristic feature of a provincial tour that all expenses as well as salaries are paid out of one pocket—the impresario's.

In former times these musical parties consisted of a few artists, one or two celebrities being sufficiently attractive to the provincial public; but of late years they have been considerably augmented, and in some instances include the entire strength of a London Italian opera company, advancing the cause of music by more perfect performances of the best operatic works than were previously to be heard in the provinces. To arrange the movements of such a precious freight is an undertaking requiring no little care and forethought—one which has given many an enterprising impresario the heartache.

Singers, theatrical managers, Bradshaw, to say nothing of the public, have to be consulted and conciliated, obstacles apparently insurmountable to be overcome, and at the last moment all arrangements may be frustrated by a puff of wind or the late arrival of a railway train.

The principal towns are visited, Dublin being that in which the campaign generally commences. The voyage thither from Holyhead is a severe trial to the tourists. For many days before starting the weather glass is anxiously and constantly referred to. Visions of rocking steam-boats trouble the sleep of the foreign magnates. They leave Euston Square in fear and trembling. Lucrezia has laid in a stock of antidotes and eau de Cologne enough for the whole party. The Duke Alfonso has provided himself with a zinc belt, which is already fastened round his body, but so tightly that it has quite a contrary effect to that he expected, and he is persuaded by Gubetta, who is sitting opposite, to remove it for fear of accidents. An attenuated sallow-faced Frenchman, the utility bass of the company, pooh-poohs the preparations of his companions, and tells long tales of shipwrecks, much to the discomfort of the seconda donna, who listens to them attentively, and inquires timidly, "s'il y a des rochers près de Dublin."

Digitized by Google

The train passes Bangor—dashes through the Menai Bridge—and the anxiety of our travellers increases momentarily. Heads are thrust out of the windows to see if the wind blows, and blow it always does across the Isle of Anglesea. Lucrezia declares her intention to remain at Holyhead. Gennaro upbraids her for want of courage. Alfonso readjusts his belt. The prima donna Leggiera, poor little Amina, implores some one to look after a good berth for her if they must really cross. The thin Frenchman, with the sallow face, buttons his coat, and becomes paler and paler as the train approaches its destination. The night is dark, and more or less stormy. The steamer rolls heavily at her moorings. The railway carriages reach the end of Holyhead pier, and the party alight. "Shall we have a good passage, captain?" inquires the impresario of a figure in a pilot coat. "Better than to-morrow I expect," is the reply made in the hearing of the foreigners, who now gather together and confer among themselves whether to start or not. The engine screams, the wind blusters, the sailors swear and shout to each other through the darkness, all adding to the timidity and indecision of the party.

Suddenly Gennaro leaves the group, and says he is resolved to go. Lucrezia follows him, and so do Amina, Gubetta, and many others. The Duke has confidence in his belt, and is already on board. The sallow-faced Frenchman prefers waiting till to-morrow, and returns to the hotel, in spite of all his boasting. The vessel is under weigh, and already tossing and pitching about in the boiling sea outside the harbour of Holyhead. Gennaro paces the deck, cigar in mouth, trying boldly to conquer a certain unpleasant sensation which is fast gaining ground upon him.

Some five or six members of the chorus endeavour to warm themselves against the iron platings of the engine-room. Lucrezia is extended upon a sofa in the ladies' cabin. "Gennaro, Gennaro, mi sento male!" She calls, but in vain. Gennaro by this time has dropped his cigar, and is hanging in a pitiable state over the side of the boat. Lucrezia suffers, but not alone. Orsini on the couch opposite groans most dolefully. In half an hour and the worst anticipations are realised. Antidotes, zinc belts, eau de Cologne, are of no avail. The warblers are hushed and prostrate; the only notes at all audible are indicative of distress and suffering. What noise is that like the falling of a house, that wakes the stewardess out of a dose, and alarms the passengers? Lucrezia feebly raises her head, and sees Orsini lying on the floor! She has tumbled off the couch, and fallen with a crash which threatened the safety of the ship, and all on board. There she must lie until able to pick herself up; for all efforts of the stewardess to move her are futile. It is indeed a rough night, and the wind has increased in violence. Some of the party think that the sallow-faced Frenchman was right to stop behind, and envy him his snug quarters in Holyhead. All are quite exhausted; their moaning and groaning become weaker and weaker, when the welcome intelligence is brought them that they are entering Kingstown harbour. One after another they struggle up the narrow staircase on to the deck, and feast their eyes with the sight of land. Gennaro, who has been rolled up in tarpaulin by a charitable sailor, is unpacked, and helped upon his legs. He staggers to the cabin door to inquire for Lucrezia. The Duchess appears in a most lamentable plight, and vows in a husky voice that nothing shall ever tempt her to cross the channel again. Orsini rolls over, and gets up. Amina treats the matter more philosophically than the rest, and is thankful it has been no worse.

The vessel is alongside, and the foreign magnates disembark among a crowd of the Kingstown inhabitants, who have assembled to see them arrive. Being almost incapable of any voluntary exertion, they are put into the railway carriages, and conveyed to Dublin, where they are finally housed at Morrison's Hotel. After some hours' repose, the entire company meet together at dinner, on this the first day of the tour—a critical reunion for all concerned—when it will be seen how the ladies are likely to agree, and whether the gentlemen are agreeable companions,—questions of no slight importance, considering that the pleasure or discomfort of the ensuing six weeks or two months depend thereon. The impresario is seated at the head of the table, with Lucrezia and Amina at either side; the conductor faces him a long way off, the intervening space being filled up by the seconda donna, tenors, baritones, and other members of the company, in their respective places. The feast begins. My enterprising friend must be careful how he divides his attention between the two ladies on his right and left. He must not let the prima donna assoluta suppose she is neglected, or the prima donna leggiera imagine for a moment there is any partiality shown to her opposite neighbour. Not that they are jealous, but terribly tenacious of their rights, and particularly so on such an occasion as the present. The mother of Amina sitting next her is a stout lady, with puffy cheeks and a reddish nose. She talks but little, except to the waiters in very broken English, whenever a savoury dish which is out of reach attracts her notice, then woe to the attendants if they do not obey her almost unintelligible commands.

The dinner goes off well. Conversation becomes general. Lucrezia is in good humour (the sea voyage being over is a reason for it), and tells some capital anecdotes of which she has a store. She gets up, and shows how she used to torment a Duke Alfonso of former times; how she wickedly delighted to tease Tamburini in the celebrated trio scene. Then she gives an imitation of Ronconi's by-play in the same part, and of his grimaces by which he would try to make her and Gennaro laugh at the most serious moment. The primo baritono, the merry andrew of the party, has forgotten the failure of his zinc belt, and performs sundry conjuring tricks, to the vast amusement of his companions. The cloth is removed, and after coffee the ladies retire, embracing each other in the most affectionate manner. Smoking then begins, and perhaps a game at chess, which is watched most attentively in silence, until a questionable move excites a discussion so energetic and noisy, as though the question in dispute were to be decided by him who could make the most violent gesticulations, and speak the loudest. At length the party breaks up—buona sera, and everybody goes off to bed, thankful they are not with the sallow-faced Frenchman, who is in the full enjoyment of the traversée which he had so ignominiously refused to make with them the night before.

Thus the first day of the tour may be said to have passed propitiously enough. The next morning a message is brought to the impresario, informing him of the sudden hoarseness of the basso profondo. He goes to Oroveso's apartment, and finds the old Druid panting and sighing, unable to sing a note. The manager sends for the doctor. The doctor comes. Behold him as he enters the sick room. His tall, well-built frame, slightly inclined to the obese; the genial smile upon his face, which somewhat resembles that of an infant Bacchus in spectacles, inspire the patient with confidence as those of one accustomed to wrestle successfully with every symptom of disease. Like Coleman's Dr. Bolus, who

> "Though in trade
> Which oftentimes will genius fetter;
> Read works of fancy, it is said,
> And cultivated the belles lettres.

our doctor is an accomplished as well as a learned man. His prescriptions are not, perhaps, written in verse, but he makes his physic as palateable as it is efficacious, and he can, when he has restored his patients to convalescence, discourse as eloquently upon the nourishing properties and the ingredients of different gastronomical dainties as any professed follower of the culinary art. He speaks many languages, and addresses Oroveso in Italian: "Mostrate la lingua!"

The basso, who seems somewhat puzzled why he should show his tongue because he has lost his voice, opens his mouth wide and exhibits as requested.

"Male qui?" says the doctor, pointing, to the throat. "Sì molto male," is the reply, much to the horror of the impresario who stands at the foot of the bed, anxiously awaiting the doctor's opinion, which, upon further examination, is that Oroveso will be able to sing by the evening, but that he must be kept quiet and adopt immediate remedies. The impresario's mind is relieved, and he goes to the theatre, where the rehearsal is in progress. The band and chorus make a deafening noise in the empty house. A confusion of tongues is heard upon the stage; the foreign régisseur and the English prompter are teaching the chorus their stage business, each after his own fashion. The conductor gesticulates violently in the orchestra, and screams at the top of his voice when a wrong note is played; every preparation is being made for the evening performance, when a great attendance is expected to the first night of the Italian opera in Dublin.

Digitized by Google

ANTHATER.

The Operas.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Although the performance of Fra Diavolo is not what it might be at this theatre, it presents many points of a special recommendation, which may serve to smooth away its sins. Mlle. Parepa sings the music of "Zerlina" admirably. She introduced air in the second act—that selected by poor Bosio at the Royal Italian Opera—wonderfully indeed. Mr. Swift's Fra Diavolo has many excellent points, vocally and histrionically; Mr. Honey makes a quaint "Lord Allcash;" and Mlle. Alessandri a nice "Miladi." Nevertheless, the cast, we imagine, might have been made stronger.

The Amber Witch, announced for Saturday, is postponed to Tuesday, when it is expected that all will be ready, and no further disappointment to the public made necessary.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.—Auber's Domino Noir, produced for the first time at this theatre on Wednesday, was a decided success. The cast included Miss Louisa Pyne as Angela; Miss Thirlwall, Brigetta; Miss Leffler, Jacintha; Mr. Haigh, Horace; Mr. St. Albyn, Juliano; Mr. H. Hornastle, Lord Elfoot, (called in the translation, Prince Grumboff, why we know not); and Gil Perez, Mr. Corri. This time the directors had faith in the composer, and did not attempt—as in the Crown Diamonds—to render his music more attractive by English ballads and Italian variations. Miss Louisa Pyne sang with wonderful brilliancy and finish throughout; and the whole performance, indeed, musically speaking, was most admirable. Of the acting, were we so inclined, we might venture to speak in irreverent terms of dispraise. The band, under the direction of Mr. Alfred Mellon, was splendid; and the chorus excellent, particularly in the magnificent scene of the nuns in the last act. The Domino Noir will doubtless have a run—if not, it ought. Mr. Howard Glover's Ruy Blas is in active preparation, and will be produced about the second week in March.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.—By the revival of Don Cæsar de Bazan, a third character is added to the list of M. Fechter, whose great success with the London public may be measured by the small number of parts he undertakes. Since his first appearance, at the beginning of the winter, he has merely alternated Ruy Blas with the Corsican Brothers, but he has acted —if we mistake not— every night, and the esteem in which he is held has progressed without reaction. His interpretation of the peculiarities of Don Cæsar's character and position solves a difficulty which will often prevent a consistent impersonation. While he is a penniless vagrant, with nothing save the blue Castilian blood to enable him to float above the common herd of mendicity, Don Cæsar can be made so extremely amusing that the actor, emulous of applause, is sorely tempted to sink him altogether into an abyss of blackguardism. This would be all very well if the Don had only to wallow to the end of the story; but as the play is written he is bound to rise in the last act, and appear the thorough Spanish gentleman, punctilious on points of honour as any hero of Lope de Vega or Calderon. Whatever his antecedents, he must be the thorough hidalgo when he defends the honour of his wife against the King, and hence the misfortune will frequently arise that the Don Cæsar of the beginning has nothing in common, save his name, with the Don Cæsar of the catastrophe. This inconvenience is obviated by M. Fechter in a manner worthy of all praise. He attaches more importance to the conclusion than to the commencement of the story, and therefore he does not, for the sake of being "funny," sink the vagabond Don Cæsar so low that he may not without losing his identity, be easily raised to the proper position of the proud, honourable Count of Garafa. Everybody knows how M. Fechter can play a thorough gentleman in the chivalric sense of the word, and readily imagine the spirit he displays when as the loyal husband he defies the royal seducer. But attention may be called to the admirable finesse with which, at the beginning, he makes the soul of the gentleman shine through the rags in which his body is enveloped, and shows that scampdom, thick as it may lie on the surface, has not penetrated the core. The low form of inebriety he discards altogether; he is careless and improvident, that is all; he laughs at the prospect of his own death with the truly Spanish disregard of life, but he is still the scion of the old house of which he is the last representative. This play was a favourite long before its plot supplied the libretto of Mr. Wallace's Maritana, and with M. Fechter in the principal character it is likely to thrive on a new popularity.

Miss C. Lecleroq is a very efficient Maritana, and the boy Lazarillo is prettily played by Miss Maria Harris. Indeed, the piece is creditably performed throughout, and has been put upon the stage in tasteful and appropriate style.

Provincial.

From a correspondent in GLASGOW we learn that the musical lectures delivered by Mr. H. J. Lincoln in the great towns of Scotland, have been, as we anticipated, eminently successful. Of the second lecture held at Glasgow, the North British Daily Mail writes as follows:—

"On Saturday afternoon, H. J. Lincoln Esq., of London, delivered his second musical lecture in the Queen's Rooms, his subject being the Genius and Works of Weber, with vocal and instrumental illustrations. The hall was quite filled with an assemblage comprising the élite of the city. William Euing, Esq., presided. Mr. Lincoln, in an able and interesting manner, described the characteristics of Weber's genius, contrasting it with that of Mozart, from whom he differed in this respect, that, while Mozart's powers as a composer were of a universal character, capable of treating successfully a great variety of themes, those of Weber were more limited, yet such as proved him to be a great master in his own department of musical art. Weber's genius belonged to the heroic and romantic class; his sacred compositions wanted the elevation and tone necessary for that kind of music; but he was able to project his imaginations, so to speak, out of himself, and accordingly he excelled in dramatic characterisation. Some men of genius throughout their works reproduced in a modified form their own feelings and sentiments, so that the individuality of the author was always conspicuous. Byron's heroes were all types of himself. But, as Sir Walter Scott embodied in literature the characteristic traits of his countrymen, so the lyrics of Weber were essentially expressive of German nationality. Mr. Lincoln illustrated the character of Weber's compositions by several selections from his works, vocal and instrumental, including the duets "Tell me truly," "Ebben da quella via caverna; song, "Crepato un tal bestion; drinking song from Der Freischutz; quartets, "Benedictus," and "Over the dark blue waters;" themes on the pianoforte, overtures, &c. Mrs. Harper and Mrs. Lunn, Messrs. Cumming and Lawler, executed the vocal part of the music very efficiently, and elicited loud applause. The performances of Mr. Lincoln and Herr Ries on the pianoforte were also highly applauded. The lecture and illustrations, while they were interesting from the instruction they imparted regarding the genius and works of the great composer, were no less fitted to afford pleasure to the audience as a high-class intellectual entertainment."

The selection of Mendelssohn's Elijah for the first concert of the season, by the Liverpool Philharmonic Society, judging from the Mercury, appears to have pleased all parties, and to have had good results. The Philharmonic Hall was crowded in every part, and the performance, if not first rate, was satisfactory. If, on the other hand, we are to give credence to the Daily Post, we should be compelled to think differently. "We must confess we seldom, if ever, heard the Elijah," writes our contemporary, "with so little pleasure." Two causes are assigned—a weakness in the principal singers, and a preponderance of brass instruments in the orchestra. As regards the latter fault, the writer is somewhat severe on the authorities:—

"It is surprising that, in spite of all we have said, and all that every musician says month by month, that the committee are so insensible to the defect, and fail to remedy it at all costs. It is neither just to the performers, to the conductor, nor to the subscribers. The former are deemed incompetent because they cannot perform impossibilities; the conductor gets blamed because the band is not effective; and the subscribers, who pay a good price for the best article, don't get it."

Digitized by Google

The Mercury, taking a direct opposite view, asserts that the oratorio "was rendered in a manner which reflected infinite credit on the performers, generally speaking." The soloists were Mlle. Parepa, Miss Palmer, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, and Mr. Lawler, which will enable the reader, perhaps, to reconcile the conflicting statements of the journalists. The annual concert of Mr. Millar, at Birkenhead, on Tuesday evening week, the Liverpool Mail informs us, attracted a large and fashionable audience to the Craven Rooms. The singers were the Misses Millar, Miss Edith Wynne, Mr. Scarisbick, and Mr. Millar; instrumentalists, Mr. F. Webb (violin), and Mr. Millar, jun. (pianoforte). "The Misses Millar, who are débutantes," writes the Mail, "displayed admirable taste and considerable power of expression and execution in various solos and concerted pieces, and the bénéficiaire, though his voice is evidently effected by the ravages of time, sang a song of his own composition, "As light over the waters breaking," and Victor Massé's "Light as the falling snow," with unexceptionable vocal skill.

The performance of the Messiah at the Free Trade Hall, MANCHESTER, on Wednesday, the 13th, according to the Manchester Weekly Times, was a great musical treat, in spite of the organ being made to do duty for the orchestra. However, as the organ accompaniments were entrusted to so eminent a hand as Mr. W. Best, and as the prices of admission were Free Trade Hall prices, all grumbling was checked, and gratification reigned triumphant. We can readily imagine how superbly the organ parts were played, and that the "pastoral symphony" narrowly escaped an encore, as the same paper informs us. The principal singers were Madame Lancia, Miss Fanny Huddart, Mr. Augustus Braham, and Mr. Wharton. Of the first-named lady, the Weekly Times thus speaks:—

"Madame Florence Lancia on this occasion sang the music for the first time. She was very nervous, as a young artist very naturally might be under such circumstances, and before so large an audience, accustomed to hear the first talent of the country in this trying Handelian music. This feeling somewhat interfered with Madame Lancia's success in the early portion of the oratorio, but she gradually recovered, and in the beautiful air, 'But thou didst not leave,' had fairly recovered her self-possession, and won one of the most enthusiastic encores. There was no mistaking the richness of her tones, the clear, definite character of her declamation, or the legitimite reading, for here, as indeed throughout the oratorio, she kept closely to the composer's notation, never for a moment being led away into meretricious ornament. In the most trying, perhaps, of all musical declamation, 'I know that my Redeemer liveth,' Madame Lancia showed an amount of intelligence and dramatic expression, which is as rare as it is interesting, particularly when we consider the novelty of her position. That rapt expression of an abiding faith has not often been more beautifully illustrated, and the artist received the warmest acknowledgment from an evidently delighted audience. If we were given to prophesy, we should feel inclined to anticipate a great career for this gifted young vocalist."

Mr. Augustus Braham is commended for the vigour of his style, and Miss Fanny Huddart for her truthful expression. The choir was good, and Mr. W. D. Banks all that could be desired as conductor. The London Glee and Madrigal Union performed at the Concert Hall, on Wednesday evening, with eminent success. "After the usual scraps from foreign operas," writes the Manchester Examiner and Times, speaking of the glees and madrigals, "there was a freshness as of spring-time in these beautiful harmonies—for what harmony is so beautiful as that derived from the human voice in finely attuned combination." The concert was made further attractive by the performance of Beethoven's symphony in D, and the overture to Der Freischutz.

A concert was given at LEEDS, by the Town Hall Concert Society, on Saturday week, which comprised a performance of Der Freischutz, and a miscellaneous selection. The solo vocalists were Mad. Catherine Hayes, Miss Helena Walker, Miss Lascelles, Mr. Tennant, and Signor Burdini; chorus, the Leeds Concert Choir; violinist, Herr Becker; pianist, Mr. Francisco Berger; organist, Mr. Spark; conductor, Mr. Henry Smart. The operatic portion of the concert was indifferent, owing to the want of pre-arrangement amongst the principals, and some of the music had to be omitted. The second part of the concert was more successful, Mad. Catherine Hayes singing "The last rose of summer" most admirably, and being enthusiastically encored. Miss Lascelles was also encored in the song of the goat-herd, from Dinorah, "Ye maidens in spring time." A solo on the violin by Herr Becker was one of the great attractions of the evening, and Mr. Berger's performance on the pianoforte of "The Harmonious Blacksmith" was much applauded. Miss Walker and the Concert Choir maintained their well-earned reputation. The concert terminated with Mr. Spark's popular "Garibaldi chorus." The Town Hall Concert Society gave their final season performance last Saturday, when the Brousil family were engaged. There was a crowded audience and a very enjoyable concert.

The opening of a new organ for Trinity Church, KNARESBOROUGH, is thus noticed in the Leeds Intelligencer, of February the 16th:—

"Twelve months since the desirableness of procuring an organ for this church was affirmed at a meeting held in the vestry, the harmonium then used not being considered sufficient in power either to direct or sustain the voices of the congregation. An appeal for funds was cheerfully and liberally responded to, not only by those who regularly attend the church, but by many who are not in the habit of doing so; and upwards of 200*l.* was subscribed, independent of the proceeds of a most successful bazaar. The erection of the organ was entrusted to Messrs. Foster and Andrews, of Hull; and Tuesday last was fixed for its opening by Mr. Dent Davidson, organist, Leeds. Two excellent sermons were preached, morning and evening, by the Rev J. Palmes, Vicar of Weeton. The attendance in the morning was thin, but in the evening the free seats were well filled. The collections amounted to 15*l.* 11*s.* The entire cost of the organ is 310*l.*, and is now wholly defrayed. The organ comprises two full sets of keys, and a pedal board of 29 notes. While the great organ is not large, the swell is very complete, the wish of the subscribers being to have an instrument possessing a great variety of pleasing effects rather than immense power. Mr. Davidson did full justice to the organ and choir, accompanying in a most tasteful manner, and by his judicious selection of voluntaries exhibiting the several fine solo stops, as well as the richness of the full organ.

The Evening Courant renders an account of a concert which was given on Saturday afternoon, at the Masonic Hall, EDINBURGH, by Signora Fabroni, and which attracted a large attendance. The lady sings and plays the harp, being far more successful with her instrument than with her voice.

As might be imagined Mad. Catherine Hayes's Irish tour is proving a series of triumphs. Two concerts were given in the Rotundo, DUBLIN, with what effect may be gathered from the following excerpt from the Daily Express:—

"Mad. Hayes was in splendid voice and her first triumph was attained in Bellini's aria, "Qui la Voce." She next—and most charmingly—sang a new song, composed expressly for her by M. Gabriel, entitled "Maureen," in the which being encored, she sang "Home, sweet Home" Gladly would the audience have had a repetition of this old melody, but they refrained from taxing one who with so much kindliness had answered their plaudits. In the second part Mad. Hayes was joined by Signor Burdini in the duetto, "Quant Amore," from l'Elisir d'Amore. She next sang a new song, "Love's Messenger," written by M. Berger, and substituted for it, on being encored, "Kathleen Mavourneen," and drew down thunders of applause, which were again and again renewed as the closing strains were heard in "Savourneen Dheelish."

Herr Becker's violin solo is highly eulogised, and the singing of Miss Lascelles and Mr. Tennant well spoken of.

The same success appears to have attended the party in CORK, the Cork Daily Herald rendering a glowing account of the first "Catherine Hayes's" Concert given at the Athenæum on Friday evening, the 15th instant.

BOOSEY'S MONTHLY VIOLINIST, price 6d.—The First Number of this Publication will appear March 1st, and will contain a Selection of 13 Airs from Balfe's new opera, "Bianca," Laurent's Daisy Waltzes on the Buckley's Songs; Burckhardt's Knickerbocker Polka; Laurent's Christmas Waits Quadrille; La Chatelaine Valse, Petchi-ki Polka, and Flocon de Neige Galop. Boosey's Monthly Violinist will comprise the newest and most popular Music of the day, short Airs, with Variations, &c., forming a most attractive Miscellany for AMATEURS.
(Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.)

Digitized by Google

GUINEA EDITION

OF

BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS.

Just published, in two volumes, superbly bound in cloth, price each 10*s.* 6*d.*,

BOOSEY AND SONS'

NEW EDITION OF

BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS FOR PIANOFORTE,

Edited by W. DORRELL; with Life of BEETHOVEN by MACFARREN, and Portrait by Lynch.

THIS edition is beautifully printed from newly-engraved Plates, and is the most correct one published.

CONTENTS OF VOL. I.
Price 10s. 6d.

Sonata, No. 1, Op. 2, F minor.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 2, A.
Sonata, No. 3, Op. 2, C.
Sonata, Op. 7, E flat.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 10, C minor.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 10, F.
Sonata, No. 3, Op. 10, D.
Sonata Pathetique, Op. 13, C minor.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 14, E.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 14, G.
Sonata, Op. 22, B flat.
Sonata, with Funeral March, Op. 26, A flat.
Sonata quasi una Fantasia (known as the "Moonlight Sonata"), No. 1, Op. 27, C sharp minor.
Sonata quasi una Fantasia, No. 2, Op. 27, E flat.
Sonata Pastorale, Op. 28, D.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 31, G.

CONTENTS OF VOL. II.
Price 10s. 6d.

Sonata, No. 2, Op. 31, D minor.
Sonata, No. 3, Op. 31, E flat.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 49, G minor.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 49, G.
Sonata, Op. 53, C.
Sonata, Op. 54, F.
Sonata Appassionata, Op. 57, F minor.
Sonata, Op. 78, F sharp.
Sonata, Op. 79, G.
Sonata Caractéristique, Op. 81, E flat ("Les Adieux").
Sonata, Op. 90, E minor.
Sonata, Op. 101, A.
Grand Sonata, Op. 106, B flat.
Sonata, Op. 109, E.
Sonata, Op. 110, A flat.
Sonata, Op. 111, C minor.

"There are many editions of Beethoven's sonatas, German, French, and English; but there is not one that we have seen, from which, taking all things into account—correctness and clearness of the text, elegance of form, and moderation of price—we have derived so much satisfaction as from the edition now before us. The text, after undergoing the revision of so able an editor as Mr. Dorrell, may be expected to be immaculate; and so, after a close examination, we find it to be; and the clearness and beauty of the paper and printing are not to be excelled. The value of the edition is much enhanced by an able and interesting essay on the life and works of Beethoven from the pen of Mr. G. A. Macfarren; and there is, moreover, an excellent portrait of the composer."—Daily News.

BOOSEY AND SONS'

MISCELLANIES FOR VARIOUS INSTRUMENTS.

A List of the Contents of each Work may be had on application.

CASE'S CONCERTINA MISCELLANY for CONCERTINA and PIANO, 36 Numbers, each 2s. 6d.

CASE'S RECREATIONS for CONCERTINA and PIANO, 12 Numbers, each 1s.

HARPER'S CORNET MISCELLANY for CORNET-A-PISTONS and PIANO, 32 Numbers, each 3s.

PRATTEN'S FLUTE MISCELLANY for FLUTE and PIANO, each 3s. 6d.

PRATTEN'S RECREATIONS for FLUTE and PIANO, 36 Numbers, each 1s.

CASE'S RECREATIONS, VIOLIN and PIANO, 36 Numbers, each 1s.

WATSON'S VIOLIN MISCELLANY for VIOLIN and PIANO, each 3s.

BOOSEY'S ORCHESTRAL JOURNAL of DANCE MUSIC for Large and Small Band, 120 Numbers, 2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. each.

BOOSEY'S CONCERT ROOM ORCHESTRAL JOURNAL, containing Operatic Selections for Large and Small Band, 6 Numbers, 4s. and 7s. each.

BOOSEY'S ORCHESTRAL OVERTURES for Large and Small Band, 12 Numbers, 4s. and 8s. each.

BOOSEY'S BRASS BAND JOURNAL for Large and Small Band, 120 Numbers, 1s. and 4s. each.

BOOSEY'S QUICK STEP JOURNAL for Brass Bands (for pasting on cards) 6 Numbers, 1s. and 4s. each.

BOOSEY'S DRUM and FIFE JOURNAL, 18 Numbers, 2s. 6d. each.

BOOSEY AND SONS, HOLLES STREET.

T. MAUSS.—LE CORSAIRE GALOP BRILLANT, for Pianoforte. Second edition, price 3s.
Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

T. MAUSS.—"MERRILY OVER THE SNOW," the popular Song, arranged brilliantly for Pianoforte, price 3s.
Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S ORCHESTRAL OVERTURES, arranged by LAMOTTE. Price 8s. each for full band; 5s. each for small band.

1. Crown Diamonds, Auber.
2. Zampa, Herold.
3. Zanetta, Auber.
4. Oberon, Weber.
5. Fra Diavolo, Auber.
6. Der Freischütz, Weber.
7. Domino Noir, Auber.
8. Gazza Ladra, Rossini.
9. Dame Blanche, Boieldieu.
10. Masaniello, Auber.
11. Part du Diable, Auber.
12. Guillaume Tell, Rossini.

KUHE'S NEW TRANSCRIPTION of SCHUBERT'S FAVOURITE MELODIES, as short and effective Pieces for the Pianoforte, price 2s. 6d. each.

1. Serenade.
2. Ave Maria.
3. Adieu.
4. The Wanderer.
5. The praise of Tears.
6. Thine is my heart.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

OF

DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.,

244 REGENT STREET. (JUST OUT.)

"MAY."—New Duettino, by HENRY SMART, composed for equal Voices. Price 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Henry Smart, in this melodious and truly exquisite little duet, has, if possible, even surpassed in elegance and vocal finish, the pieces so warmly eulogised in our last impression."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THIS WORLD IS A GARDEN," by GEORGE LODER. Comic song. Price 2s. 6d.

"The well-known and popular song introduced with such invariable success, by Mr. John Rouse, in Stirling Coyne's lively operetta, The Pets of the Parterre. As all our readers must have heard, and hearing, applauded it, it is enough to say that we entirely agree with their unanimously favourable verdict."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"IN A LEAFY GARDEN," by GEORGE LODER. Ballad. Price 2s. 6d.

"Composed for that careful and promising tenor, Mr. Richard Seymour, is in a different style to This World is a Garden, and shows that the composer, Mr. George Loder (the talented conductor of the Lyceum orchestra), can give musical expression to sentiment no less than to humour. It is graceful, well written, and last, not least, essentially vocal."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"L'ETOILE DU SOIR," by FRANZ LISZT. Romance from Richard Wagner's Tannhauser. Price 2s.

"M. Liszt's idea of 'transcription' is peculiar to himself, and the present example of its application would, in all probability, surprise the composer of Tannhauser himself; nevertheless, it accommodates itself to a certain taste of the day, which looks upon a pianoforte piece as nothing if not gymnastic."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

MONIOT'S celebrated SCHOTTISH D'AMOUR, played at the Ball of the German Society of Benevolence and Concord, as well as at the Lyceum Theatre every evening, with such great success, is published for Piano, 3s. (Orchestra 5s.) only by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE BANNER OF ST. GEORGE," by BALFE, a new National Song. The words by John Brougham, written for, and dedicated to, THE ST. GEORGE'S RIFLE CORPS, is published, beautifully illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," Révérie by W. Kuhé, on Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), and "I love YOU," Sims Reeves's popular ballad, transcribed for the Piano by Emile Berger, are published, price 3s. each, by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL," by W. H. WEISS, composed and sung by the composer, with the greatest success, as well as by Mr. WINN and other vocalists of celebrity, is published, handsomely illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

BALFE'S NEWEST and most POPULAR SONGS.

	s.	d.
"I love YOU" (Sung by Sims Reeves)	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose" (Ditto)	3	0
"The Banner of St. George" (beautifully illustrated)	3	0
"If I could change" (Sung by Laura Baxter)	2	6
"I'm not in love, remember" (Madame Jenny Bauer)	2	6
"Oh! take me to thy heart again" (by Miss Poole)	2	0

Published by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W., where "I love YOU" may be obtained, transcribed for the Pianoforte by Emile Berger, price 3s.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 12 James Street, Buckingham Gate, in the Parish of St. Margaret, in the City of Westminster, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, February 23, 1861.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 39—No. 9 SATURDAY, MARCH 2, 1861 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Mr. HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.—Hullah Fund.—A CONCERT will be given on Thursday Evening, March 7th, in AID of the HULLAH FUND, on which occasion the Choir will be assisted by the following distinguished artists:—Miss Banks, Mad. Sainton-Dolby, Mr. John Foster, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, Mr. Montem Smith, Mr. Winn, Miss Arabella Goddard, and Mr. Henry Blagrove. Accompanyist—Mr. J. G. Calcott. Conductor—Mr. Henry Leslie. Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 2s. 6d.; area or gallery, 1s. Tickets to be obtained of E. J. Fraser, Esq., Hon. Sec. of the Hullah Fund, No. 26 Craven Street, Strand; Addison, Hollier, and Lucas, 210 Regent Street; Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201 Regent Street; Mr. Austin, Ticket Office, St. James's Hall; and Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48 Cheapside.

STANLEY LUCAS, Hon. Sec.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Mr. HENRY BAUMER, Professor R.A.M. and Dulwich College, RECEIVES Pianoforte Pupils at the above Hall every Thursday. Mr. Baumer's Harmony Class commences at 3 p.m. Address, 6 Hilldrop Crescent, Tufnell Park, N.; or to the College, Dulwich, S.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—The First New Philharmonic Concert this season will take place on Monday evening, March 11; the First Public Rehearsal Saturday afternoon, March 9, at half-past 2. Conductor, Dr. Wylde. Programme:—Overture—Egmont; violin concerto—Mendelssohn; Schubert's Grand Symphony in C; Weber's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat; overture, Alencoragen—Cherubini. Pianist, Miss Arabella Goddard; violin, M. Vieuxtemps, his first appearance at these concerts; vocalists Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, &c.; orchestra and choir of 300 performers. Subscription for the series of Six Concerts and Five Public Rehearsals:—Sofa stall, £2 2s.; balcony, first row, One Guinea and a-Half; second row, One Guinea.

Messrs. Cramer and Co., 201 Regent Street; Keith, Prowse and Co., 48 Cheapside; Austin, Ticket Office, St. James's Hall; W. Graeffe Nicholls, Esq., Hon. Sec., 33 Argyll Street, W.

THE VOCAL ASSOCIATION.—ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Fifth Season, 1861. President—the Right Hon. the Earl of DUDLEY. Conductor—Mr. BENEDICT. FIRST CONCERT, Tuesday evening, March 12, when Miss ARABELLA GODDARD will perform prelude and fugue, ALLA TARANTELLA (J. S. BACH), and ALBION, fantasia on English airs, composed expressly for Miss ARABELLA GODDARD (BENEDICT). Subscription for the series of Five Concerts and one Conversazione—Sofa stalls (double tickets), £3 3s.; balcony stalls, front row (double tickets), £2 2s. Subscribers can secure the best places at Mr. MITCHELL'S, Royal library, 33, Old Bond-street, W. The remaining dates are Wednesdays, April 3 and 17; May 1 and 22; and June 19. The Conversazione will be given on Wednesday, May 22.

PECKHAM AMATEUR MUSICAL UNION.—Ninth Concert, Saturday, March 2nd. Artistes: Miss POOLE, Miss CLARA WEST, Mr. FIELDING, Mr. J. L. HATTON and HERR GOFFRIE. Conductor, Mr. F. OSBORNE WILLIAMS. Mr. Hatton will play the "Harmonious Blacksmith," and two "Lieder ohne Worte." Herr Goffrie will play De Beriot's "Tremolo," and "Tema con variazioni." To commence at 7. Carriages at half-past nine.

HENRY HERSEE, jun., Brunswick Terrace, Camberwell, President.
HORACE QUARE, Camberwell Green, } Hon. Secs.
WALTER CHESSMAN, Queen's Road, Peckham, }

THE NATIONAL CHORAL SOCIETY, under the direction of Mr. G. W. MARTIN.—In consequence of the great interest occasioned by the first performance of the "Messiah" by this Society, a Second Grand Performance will be given on WEDNESDAY, March 6. The Chorus, acknowledged to be the finest in the kingdom, numbers over 500 voices, being the largest ever heard in an Oratorio at Exeter Hall. Principal Singers:—Mrs. SUCHET CHAMPION, Madame SAINTON-DOLBY, Messrs. GEORGE PERREN and LEWIS THOMAS.

Opinions of the Press, &c., on the First Performance of Handel's Oratorio, "The Messiah," at Exeter Hall, Feb. 6, 1861.

"I was perfectly delighted with the performance in every respect. I can truly say that I have never heard so effective a chorus."—CIPRIANI POTTER.

"The striking chorus, 'Lift up your heads,' acquired unusual boldness and spirit from the fresh voices of which this Choral Society seems to be mainly formed, while the grand 'Hallelujah!' was no less effective."—Telegraph.

"The oratorio afforded unqualified pleasure. The National Choral Society promises to play a conspicuous part in the advance of choral harmony."—Times.

"We may safely say that the choruses in 'The Messiah' have never been so splendidly executed in London."—Sunday Times.

"Indeed we have seldom heard a finer performance of an oratorio."—The Press.

"The Society is destined to prove a great success."—Morning Star.

"The sopranos are extremely brilliant, and the basses really magnificent."—Morning Chronicle.

"The 'Hallelujah' chorus was a triumph of choral skill and ability.—Morning Advertiser.

"The chorusus were rendered with a power and a precision quite marvellous."—Wesleyan Times.

The Repetition Performance will take place on WEDNESDAY NEXT, 6th March at 7·30 p.m. Tickets 1s., 2s., 3s. each; Numbered Stalls, 5s.—Offices, 14 and 15, Exeter Hall.

THE ARION, Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.—The First Grand Orchestral Concert will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms on Friday, March 15, at 8 o'clock. Principal vocalists—Mad. Weiss, Mad. Gilbert, Miss Susanna Cole, Mdle. Charlier, Miss Fosbroke, Mad. Andrea, Miss E. Boden. Mr. Wilbye Cooper, Mr. Wallworth and Mr. Weiss. Pianoforte, Miss ARABELLA GODDARD. Violin, M. VIEUXTEMPS. Accompanyists, Dr. Bennet Gilbert; organ, Mr. W. C. Filby; harp, Mr. Layland. Stalls, 5s.; reserved seats, 2s. 6d.; area, 1s. Tickets at the principal Musicsellers, and of Mr. Alfred Gilbert, 13 Berners Street.

MISS AUGUSTA THOMSON begs to announce that she has REMOVED to 38 Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, W.

MR. and MADAME R. SIDNEY PRATTEN beg to announce, that they have REMOVED to 38 Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, W., where they will continue to give lessons on the Flute, Guitar, and Concertina.

MISS HELEN HOGARTH (Teacher of Singing) begs to inform her pupils and the public that she has RETURNED to town for the season, and has removed from Weymouth Street to No. 71 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square.

SIGNOR GIULIO REGONDI begs to announce that he has REMOVED to 27 Berner's Street, Oxford Street, W.

MR. HENRY HAIGH will remain in Town for the Season, and can accept ENGAGEMENTS for Operas, Concerts, and Oratorios.—205 Euston Road, N.W.

MADAME OURY'S BRILLIANT FANTASIA on Jacobite Airs, 4s.—Madame Oury's Souvenirs d'Ecosse, 4s.—Madame Oury's "Auld Robin Gray," 4s.
Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, and Patterson & Sons, Edinburgh.

THE TWENTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT, ACCOUNTS, and BALANCE SHEET of the Mutual Life Assurance Society for the year 1860 are this day published, and may be had by a written or personal application to the Head Office, or to any of the Society's Agents.

CHARLES INGALL, Actuary.
The Mutual Life Assurance Society,
39 King Street, Cheapside, E.C., London, 20th Feb. 1861.

IN THE PRESS,
HOWARD GLOVER'S OPERA, "RUY BLAS," shortly to be performed at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden.
Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD'S NEW SOLO "ALBION," FANTASIA ON ENGLISH AIRS,
(By BENEDICT).
PERFORMING with the greatest success by Miss ARABELLA GODDARD at all the Concerts of the season, price 4s.
Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

NEW CANZONET JUST PUBLISHED.
"THE RAINBOW," by Mrs. J. HOLMAN ANDREWS. Written by the Rev. J. KEBLE. Dedicated to Miss Wood, North Cray Place, Kent. Price 2s. 6d.
London: Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201 Regent Street.

PREMIERE TARANTELLE, pour Piano, par BRINLEY RICHARDS, dediée à M. Charles Hallé, 5s.

TO BE PUBLISHED BY SUBSCRIPTION.
THE PHILOSOPHY OF MUSIC, a new work; being Three Essays which appeared in the MUSICAL WORLD. By JOSEPH GODDARD. Readers of the MUSICAL WORLD and the Public, wishing to encourage the publication of the above, may do so by forwarding their names to Mr. J. GODDARD, 3 St. Paul's Crescent, Camden Square, N.W. Price 5s. For further particulars, see the MUSICAL WORLD of Dec. 15th, 1860.

A PROFESSOR of MUSIC and ORGANIST in a Parish Church, where there is a fine organ, full choral service, surpliced choir, has an extensive TEACHING BUSINESS in one of the largest towns in England, wishes to DISPOSE of it either by Sale or Contract of Exchange with another Organist. The south preferred, the illness of a member of the family being the considerable Satisfactory reference.—Apply C. Z., Office of this Paper.

Digitized by Google

NEW AND POPULAR

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY

ASHDOWN AND PARRY, 18 HANOVER SQUARE.

G. A. OSBORNE. LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM. Brilliant Fantasia. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. LES ENFANTS DE LA GARDE. Grande Marche brillante. Price 4s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. VEDRAI CARINO. Transcription (Don Juan). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. BATTI, BATTI. Transcription (Don Juan). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. THE MERMAID'S SONG. Transcription of Haydn's Canzonet. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. PRAEGER. MALBROOK. Brilliant Piece on the old French air. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. PRAEGER. JOCK O' HAZELDEAN. Fantasia. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

WILHELM GANZ. SANTA LUCIA. A brilliant transcription of the popular Neapolitan air. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE MAUSS. PROMETHEUS. Grand Galop brillant. Price 4s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

JULES BRISSAC. THE HARP THAT ONCE THRO' TARA'S HALLS. Transcription. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. JOSEPHINE. Mazurka de Salon. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. LA VALLÉE DES ROSES. Deuxième Mazurka de Salon. Price 3s. 6d.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. LE LANGAGE DES FLEURS. Troisième Mazurka de Salon.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

E. SILAS. ROMANCE. Price 2s. 6d.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

E. SILAS. IMPROMPTU (à la Mazurka). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

EMANUEL AGUILAR. THE BIRDS AT SUNSET. Characteristic Piece. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

STEPHEN HELLER. IN WALD UND FLUR. Troisième Suite de Promenades d'un Solitaire. 6 Nos. Price 3s. and 4s. each.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE KULLAK. LES ARPÈGES. Etude de Concert. Price 5s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE KULLAK. CAPUCINE. Legende. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN AND PARRY

(Successors to Wessel and Co.),

18 HANOVER SQUARE.

EWER & CO.'S LIST OF NEW PUBLICATIONS.

	s.	d.
BENEDICT, J. MALCOLM, Marche Triomphale	4	0
BERGER, FRANCESCO, Bon repos, chérie, Nocturne	2	0
,, Lena, Serenade	2	0
GAUDE, LOUIS DE LA, Evelyn, Polka Mazurka	2	0
GARIBALDI, Viva Italia, March and National Hymn (with Italian words)	2	0
JUNGMANN, A., Souvenance	2	6
KRUGER, W., Les Cloches du Soir	4	0
LISZT, J., Grand Paraphrase sur Il Trovatore	6	0
,, Rigoletto	6	0
,, Ernani	6	0
MAGNUS, H., Carnaval Napolitain	4	0
PACHER, J. A., Op. 9, La Harpe	4	0
,, Op. 34, Le Ruisseau	3	0
,, Op. 50, Twelve Melodious Studies	7	6
,, Op. 53, Tendresse	3	0
SCHULTHES, W., Op. 27, Stella Matutina, mélod. rélig.	2	6
SILAS, E., Op. 49, Costanza Impromptu	3	0
SPINDLER, F., L'Oisillon	3	6
WOLLENHAUPT, H. A., Op. 19, Grande Marche de Concert ...	3	0
,, Op. 22, La Gazelle	3	0
,, Op. 24, Galop di Bravura	4	0
,, Op. 26. Helene. Grand Valse Brillante ...	4	0
,, Cordelia. Schottisch	3	0
,, La Violette. Polka de Concert	3	0

MOLIQUE'S ORATORIO—"ABRAHAM."

Soprano Airs.—I will extol Thee, my God	...	...	4	0
,, Hear my prayer, O Lord	...	...	3	0
,, Unto Thee lift I up mine eyes	...	...	4	6
Contralto Air.—They kept not the law	...	...	1	6
Tenor Airs.—Who walketh uprightly	...	...	2	6
,, Pour out thy heart before the Lord	...	...	2	6
Baritone Airs.—Lead me, O Lord, in Thy righteousness	...	...	3	0
,, Let there be no strife	...	...	2	6
,, The joy of my heart is ceased	...	...	4	0
,, Lord have mercy upon me	...	...	4	6
Duets.—Cast out this bondwoman. Alto and Baritone	...	...	4	6
,, It is of the Lord's great mercies. Soprano and Baritone	...		3	0
Trio.—Alto, Tenor, and Bass. Let all those rejoice	...	...	3	0
Quartet.—S. A. T. & B. Go in peace before the Lord	...	...	4	6
March.—Arranged for Pianoforte Solo	...	...	2	6
,, ,, ,, Duet	...	...	4	0
,, ,, Organ (arranged by W. T. BEST)	...		3	0

EWER & CO. 87 REGENT STREET,

Universal Circulating Musical Library.

ROBERT COCKS & CO.'S LIST OF POPULAR MUSIC.

TARANTELLE, by BRINLEY RICHARDS. — A New ORIGINAL WORK by this Composer. Dedicated to Charles Hallé, Esq., 5s.

LOUISE, NOCTURNE, pour Piano. By BRINLEY RICHARDS. 3s.—"A lovely vocal melody, full of feminine grace and sweetness." Press.

LA MAZURESKA, for Piano. By LOUIS ADELBERG. 3s.—"This piece exhibits more skill in composition and freshness of idea than the majority of works published in the present day."—Newcastle Courant.

PULASKI QUADRILLE. By CARL FAUST, of Breslau. Illuminated title. 4s.—"This fine composition will be found to vindicate fully the high reputation which Carl Faust has obtained in Germany."

LA CZARINA, original Mazurka de Salon, for Piano. By BRINLEY RICHARDS. 3s.—"A musician of Mr. Richards' standing should oftener favour us with emanations from his own mind."—Newcastle Courant. "Simple, elegant, and flowing, this graceful drawing-room morceau combines brilliancy with richness of modulation."—John Bull.

VIOLIN MUSIC.—Gratis and postage free, a THEMATIC CATALOGUE of MUSIC for the VIOLIN, Tenor or Viola, Violoncello, and Contra-Basso, with Methods, Instruction Books, Exercises, Studies, &c., for those Instruments, including also Lists of Septets, Symphonies, Overtures, and Orchestral Music, as well as Duets, Trios, Quartets, Quintets, &c., for the above-named Instruments and Pianoforte, demy 8vo., 90 pages. Forwarded free of all charges. Address, Robert Cocks and Co.

THE most RECENT MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.—LIST of NOVELTIES just issued gratis, and postage free. Also gratis and postage free, a CATALOGUE of 6,000 Pianoforte, Elementary, &c., Works. Will be ready in a few days, a NEW LIST of Songs, Ballads, &c., showing the key, compass, &c., of each. Apply as above.

THOSE EVENING BELLS, Transcribed for the Pianoforte. By W. VINCENT WALLACE, 3s. London: Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, W., of whom may be had gratis and postage free, a List of Mr. Wallace's latest Pianoforte Compositions. And of all Musicsellers.

TO PIANOFORTE MANUFACTURERS.—A young Man is desirous to be ARTICLED to a Pianoforte Manufacturer as a Tuner. He already has a good knowledge of Tuning. For terms, &c., direct to A. B., 55 Barbican.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"'The Banner of St. George,' a national song"—words by John Brougham, music by M. W. Balfe (Duncan Davison).

The words and music of this song are in an equal degree spirited, healthy, and vigorous. It is appropriately inscribed to the St. George Rifle Corps. Mr. Sims Reeves himself might do worse than publicly essay it.

"'The Silver Cord,' waltz brilliant for the pianoforte"—by J. Von Joel (Duncan Davison and Co.)

A "waltz brilliant" (what language is that supposed to be?) which begins much too familiarly to be styled original; which has a second part, in G flat, with an objectionable full cadence (page 2, line 5, bars 3, 4); and, to make amends, an episode, in A flat, brilliant, melodious, and clever, especially where the theme is given as an inner part for the left hand, while a graceful florid passage is allotted to the right.

"'Switzerland,' vocal duet"—by Mrs. Henry Ames (Ashdown and Parry)—is an unpretending trifle, but very pretty, and neatly written.

"'Valse de Salon,' for the pianoforte"—by Blanche Lidel (Ashdown and Parry), though occasionally a little in the manner of Weber, would be wholly blameless but for one objectionable progression (page 5, line 3, bars 4, 5), where the 6, 4 on E flat is unceremoniously quitted for the common chord of F minor. This is easily corrected, however; and the thing is worthy of correction, the leading themes being tuneful, and well contrasted with a plaintive and charming episode in the relative minor.

"'The Sun's Last Smile is Beaming,' song"—words by John Francis Waller, LL.D., music by Charles Oberthur, Op. 165 (Ashdown and Parry).

If Herr Oberthur would alter the harmony in the fourth bar of the first line, where the chord of the dominant flat seventh, on B flat, is abruptly succeeded by that of the sixth (sharp), fourth, and third, on A flat, we should have nothing but praise for his very elegant and musician-like song, which (though decidedly Spohrish in feeling), is as well accompanied as it is melodious and expressive. Herr Oberthur invariably writes musically, and will therefore doubtless take our suggestion in good part.

"'The Poet's Bridal Gift' ('Dichter's Brautgabe')"—words by Hoffmann Von Fallersleben, music by Bernhard Altaus (Ewer and Co.).

This song is not without character, in spite of its commencing with a (hardly improved) version of a familiar Russian tune. The harmony of the accompaniment is "choisie," and the form unhacknied. The words (in German and English) are also good, though here and there, as in the following,

"Every cadix yet may hold Nought for thee but sweetness," somewhat affected.

"'Drowsy Polka,' for pianoforte and voice"—words by Albert Russell, music by Ernest Beyer (Ewer and Co.).

The peculiarity of this polka is that it is not all drowsy, but, on the contrary, extremely lively. The motto, therefore—

"Oh! I am so drowsy!
Oh! I'm so done up!"

is altogether out of place. Perhaps, however, Herren Russell (Albert) and Peyer (Ernest) mean that the charm of their polka is so irresistible that even somnambulists will dance to it. Tant mieux! The polka is so utterly undrowsical that too much can hardly be said of its liveliness. Vive la Polka!—la "Drowsy Polka!"

"'Tendresse,' morceau mélodieux, pour piano"—J. A. Pacher, Op. 53 (Ewer and Co.).

Mr. Mantalini (being musically given)—had Mad. Mantalini (being musically given) performed, for his delight and edification, this very simple and sentimental piece (Miss Knaggs, Miss Nickleby, and Mr. Ralph Nickleby being present)—would have entitled it his "its popolorum tibi." "Tendresse" is just the sort of thing to please simple and sentimental young ladies. It is simple as a hammer, and sentimental as a coffee-cup. Mrs. Nickleby would have remembered to have heard—no, to have seen—no, to have heard, something very like—no, something very unlike it—by a pianist—no, by a player on the concertina—no, by a pianist, at Rosherville Gardens; or, if not at Rosherville, somewhere else; for, as she had often said to her dear departed husband, she never could make up her mind whether she had ever seen Rosherville or not, or whether she did not mix it up, in some way or other, with Covent Garden market, or the Temple.

"'Polka Mazurka,' pour piano,"—Anton Rubinstein (Ewer and Co)—was reviewed last year, and some specimens of its peculiarities set forth for the advantage of our readers in music type. We have only to repeat that it is dedicated to Madame la Princesse Sophie de Nassau—who, as we remarked at the time, must have ears-patent to apprehend it.

"'L'Oisillon,' morceau charactéristique, pour le piano,"—Louis Spindler, Op. 76 (Ewer and Co)—is sparkling enough and if without pretension equally without fault. Short and sweet and "chirping," moreover, while a little more difficult to execute, it is also more refined than the late Signor Panormo's "Bird-waltz," which, were it not already forgotten, would have been speedily cast into oblivion by Herr Spindler's superior and "characteristic"-er (if not much more original) effort.

"'Courting Days,'"—words by L. M. Thornton, music by Wellington Guernsey (Hale and Son, Cheltenham)—is a remarkably engaging ballad. Both words and music are pretty. In short, the author of "The Postman's Knock," and the composer of "Mary Blane," have both written "up to the mark," and not for the first time by many, done themselves real credit.

"'The Trefoil Leaf,'"—words by B. H., music by Claribel (Hale and Son, Cheltenham); "'Music breathes in Everything,'"—words (from Harebell Chimes) by A. J. Symington, music by Jessie M. Thomson (Duncan Davison and Co.). Both of these are nice songs, the first simple and unaffected, the last extremely graceful.

"'La Petite Rivière,' caprice élégant;" "La Gracieuse,' Mazurka brillante;" "'Souvenir de Madère,' nocturne"—for the pianoforte—by J. Tomlins Jones (Ashdown and Parry.)

There is little to say, one way or the other, about these trifles, beyond the fact that they are wholly unoffending. The nocturne has some graceful passages, and is perhaps the best of the three.

"'Love's young Dream,' fantasia for the pianoforte,"—by G. A. Osborne (Ashdown and Parry).

Mr. Osborne has treated the charming melody which he has taken for a theme with parental tenderness, adorning it with many graces and "fioriture," which it wears becomingly. The fact is that "Love's young Dream" is a young and pretty maid, who would look well in any dress, but who looks quite provoking when attired by the hands of a cunning milliner like Mr. Osborne.

Digitized by Google

"'Ave Maria,' prayer"—by CARL WEYNER (Robert Cooks & Co.)

A smooth, correct, and effective piece of vocal harmony for soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, with pianoforte accompaniment.

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

AYLWARD (Salisbury).

RICHARDSON (J. E.) "A Collection of Sanctuses, Kyries, and Doxologies."

AUGENER AND CO.

HARTOG (HENRI) "Premier morceau de Salon."
" " Second—ditto—(Pianoforte).

ASHDOWN AND PARRY.

SELLE (W. C.) Marche Triomphale (Pianoforte).
ALLEN (G. B.) "'Twas in the pleasant mouth of June."
HARVEY (R. T.) "The old love dieth not."
METCALFE (W.) "Three Songs."

CRAMER AND CO.

ANDREWS (MRS. J. HOLMAN) "The Rainbow."

ROBERT COCKS AND CO.

RICHARDS (BRINLEY) "Première Tarentelle" (Pianoforte).

DUNCAN DAVISON AND CO.

MAUSS (T.) "Tyrolean Mountain Song" (for Pianoforte).

OETZMANN AND CO.

BADARZEWSKA (T.) "La Prière exaucée" (Pianoforte).

RANSFORD AND SON.

BAILLOT (R.) "Trois Romances sans Paroles" (Pianoforte).
MAUSS (T.) "Points du Rhin" (Pianoforte).

VIENNA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

HERR CARL TAUSIG came here in January, most firmly resolved to bring back the Viennese to a more favourable opinion of the compositions of his master, Franz Liszt. Flying notices have appeared as the prolegomena, which usually precede an historical event. L. A. Zöllner's Blatt für Theater, Musik und Kunst, of the 8th January, for instance, says:—

"The pianist, C. Tausig, is about to give, in the rooms of the Musical Union, four orchestral concerts, the first of which will take place on the 20th inst. Herr C. Tausin will play a new pianoforte concerto by Liszt, and conduct the Ideals and the Festklänge. That this entertainment will attract the curious in crowds, is beyond a donbt."

The Recensionen of the 13th January writes as follows:—

"Liszt is great, and Tausig is his prophet. Allah cannot come himself, so he sends his Mahomet, in order to bless the Viennese with a long series of Sinfonische Dichtungen. Herr Tausig will give, in the rooms of the Musical Union, three concerts, in which only works by Liszt for the orchestra and piano will be played. However decidedly we should oppose performances of this description by our regular musical societies, we are quite delighted that the genial pianoforte-virtuoso, Liszt, should condescend to bear the very large expenses of such concerts himself, in order to place the Viennese in a position to hear and test his music, and then to pronounce an impartial judgment on it."

On the 20th January the same paper says: "We have received the following letter from Herr Tausig:—

"In the last number of your paper there is, in a notice concerning my orchestral-concerts, the following passage:—'We are greatly delighted that the genial pianoforte-virtuoso, Liszt, should condescend to bear the very large expenses of such concerts himself.' I am compelled, by the utter untruth of this passage, to correct it. Apart from the fact that Dr. Franz Liszt has in no way, directly or indirectly, anything to do, in a non-artistic sense, with the concert speculations of his adherents, however intimately connected with him, I must emphatically state that I consider it a material point of my artistic honour to devote my own means to the performance of the works of that master whom I especially admire and respect. Begging you will insert this correction in the next number of your paper, I have the honour to subscribe myself,

"C. TAUSIG."

"It will be easily understood," pursues the Recensionen, "that we could not suppose any one but the Grand Master of the Future himself would and could make the material sacrifices requisite for carrying out the speculation in question. We receive, however, the above correction with the more pleasure, as by the devoted contribution of this Squire of the Future, the polyphonic crusade receives a still more heroic stamp than before." The correspondent of the Breslauer Zeitung of the 27th January observes:—

"We perceive in Liszt's compositions an effort to join the Music of the Future; Liszt, however, with his aristocratic nature, is too much connected with the Past; he follows, almost immediately, Beethoven, and nothing that lies between, German, Italian, or French music, appears to touch his compositions. He 'can no longer plunge into the blending stream of the new time.' His pupil, Tausig, exhibits the same serious, powerful, and technically strict style as his master—a style which leaves the drawing-room artists of the present day, such as Bülow and Clara Schumann (!) far behind."

The young violinist, S. Bachrich, gave a concert lately, and produced a favourable impression. His playing is distinguished by remarkable purity of intonation, good "bowing," and a certain agreeable pertness. It is, however, deficient in deep feeling, and in rapid passages wants force. The selection of one of S. Bach's sonatas, with pianoforte—that in E major—was exceedingly praiseworthy in an artistic point of view. We have had a new violin-concerto by Rubinstein, who seems rather averse to bestowing anything like finish on his compositions. The concerto appears to be just what it was when its author first conceived it; a great deal must be done to it before it can be pronounced really fit for publication. The finale, for instance, is far too short, and altogether deficient in any well-worked-out independent idea.

In the feuilleton of the Vienna Presse, of the 12th ult., under the heading "Da Ponte, the author of the book of Don Juan," we are informed that the memoirs of this writer, which are carried down to the period of his leaving London to settle in New York (1803), were discovered, written in Italian, in the spring of 1859, among a number of old books exposed for sale in New York, and that they have appeared in a French translation by M. Chavanne. It happens, however, that the Memorie di Lorenzo da Ponte da Cenede scritte da esso appeared, more than forty years ago, in two small volumes at New York, and that the Seconda Edizione, corretta, ampliata, ed accresciuta d' un intero volume, e di alcune Note, were published, at the same place, in three small volumes, in the year 1829-30, by the firm of John H. Turney. The Leipsic Allgemeine Musikalische Zeitung (No. 40, 1842), gave a long satire of the book, and in the year 1847 a mediocre translation of the second edition was produced at Stuttgard. M. Chavanne has consequently conferred no particular favour on anyone by translating into French the manuscript of the first volume, which was discovered in the manner above related, while, by endeavouring to palm this fragment off upon the world as a new and remarkable discovery, he only affords a fresh proof of the ignorance of French literary men. We may remark, by the way, that Da Ponte died on the 17th August, 1838, and that consequently (since he was born on the 10th March, 1749), he was in his 90th, and not, as is asserted by the writer in the Presse, in his 97th year.

Feb. 25, 1861.

Rubinstein's long looked for opera Die Kinder der Haide was given for the first time last night, at the Kärtnerthor Theatre, and attracted, as may be supposed, a crowded audience. No opera of late years has excited so much curiosity—none had so much care and attention bestowed upon its production. It has been in rehearsal for the last four months, and every resource of the opera house was made available for its perfect representation. Rubinstein is immensely popular with the Viennese public, by whom his first dramatic work was looked forward to with great interest, increased by the long announcement, and all that has been said and written about it by those who had had an opportunity of hearing portions of the music.

Has it had success? Certainly, if the enthusiasm of the audience last night is any criterion; but it is a question whether that enthusiasm was not attributable to the wonderful display of talent on the part of Madame Csillag, who sustained the principal character rather than to the intrinsic merit of the music. The lady was recalled no less than eighteen times, and her singing and acting are spoken of in all the daily papers as being beyond all praise, while the opera itself is scarcely mentioned. Herr Ander, as the substitute of Herr Wachtel, for whom the tenor part was originally intended, exerted himself most strenuously, as also did Mlle. Kraus and Herr Meyerhofer.

Digitized by Google

The music, to judge from the first performance, is somewhat monotonous, and not remarkable for originality. The finales to the 1st and 2nd acts, and a bridesmaid's chorus, made a favourable impression, and were much applauded.

A detailed account of the whole work shall be sent next week. Suffice it for the present to record that the opera has been given, and met with the appprobation of the public.

THE ENTERPRISING IMPRESARIO.

CHAPTER IX.

The time arrived for the evening's performance. Morrison's Hotel for the previous hour had been alive with notes of preparation. They were to be heard in every part of the house. Lucrezia (in whom, I suppose, nobody who took the trouble to think about it while reading the last chapter failed to recognise la Diva Grisi) trying her voice—Adelgiza practising some of the most troublesome passages in the Norma duets—Gennaro (who was to appear as Pollio on the occasion) running over a cadenza or two—Oroveso growling like distant thunder, had brought all the domestics of the establishment on to the landings to listen to them, and caused considerable annoyance to a party of bachelors at dinner. At length the carriages were ordered. Gennaro, always the last, but never too late, made Lucrezia cross by keeping her waiting at least half an hour; messages innumerable had been sent to him without avail; as usual, he took his time, and was not to be hurried. At last he came, watch in hand, calculating, with provoking accuracy, that it would take so many minutes to reach the theatre, ten more to dress, and then there would be exactly two to spare. The Diva, having a more elaborate toilette to make, became alarmed at the probable consequences of the delay. They got to the theatre. There the doors had just been thrown open, and crowds were rushing in to the galleries and pit, much to the satisfaction of the manager, who, as is his wont, walked up and down behind the curtain, listening to the grateful sound of the house filling. Pleasant noise of delightful confusion,—every footfall money, every voice a shilling. He was thoughtful; now and then a placid smile suffused his countenance, and he would stretch out his hands as if to grasp some imaginary object, doubtless the coin, his share of the Italian Operas. But difficulties had to be overcome before the announcement of the evening could be fulfilled.

A box containing costumes was missing—had been left behind at Holyhead or Kingstown—no matter where, it was not now to be found when wanted. Here was a dilemma little dreamt of by the crowds which thronged the theatre, and noisily clamoured for their amusement to begin. What was to be done? How could Oroveso appear without his robes, or Flavio minus tights? The costumier approached the musing manager, and with tears in his eyes related the disaster which threatened the success of the opera engagement at its very outset.

A general search was made through the wardrobe, and substitutes for the missing dresses eventually discovered, which, although perhaps not quite orthodox, were still sufficiently correct to be made available. This obstacle having been surmounted, a speech had to be made for the basso, whose hoarseness had not altogether disappeared since the morning. Without the speech he obstinately refused to sing, and there was no alternative. The time of commencement had long since past, owing to the delay caused by the dresses. The audience had become uproarious. It was no easy matter to claim their indulgence under such circumstances. A speaker, however, was found bold enough to face them, and who having received his instructions, proceeded to fulfil the ungrateful task.

His appearance before the curtain excited the suspicions of a disappointment, and the reception he met with was anything but flattering. Taking advantage of a short lull in the expressions of dissatisfaction with which he had been greeted, he began his speech in the most ill-chosen phrase of "Ladies and Gentlemen, I am sorry to inform you—" yells of indignation followed this announcement, and drowned the voice of the unfortunate spokesman. In spite of the most suppliant appeals to their feelings in dumb show, the audience would not be informed, no matter how sorry the speaker might be. After a while the storm abated, and a hearing was obtained. When it became known that the apology was only for the basso profondo, and not, as had been supposed, for the favourite tenor, order was restored, and the opera at last began. The old favourites were received enthusiastically; the audience soon forgot how long they had been kept waiting, and expressed their delight as loudly as they had but a short time before given vent to their displeasure. The first act over, and they were on the best possible terms with themselves and with the artistes, whose turn it now was to listen to the singing by which, to the surprise of all foreigners, the habitués of the galleries of the Theatre Royal wile away the time during the entr'actes. In no other country does a public make itself so completely at home in a theatre as in Ireland. There is no restraint. They sing, they converse, and their witty remarks, when not too personal, are amusing enough. Sometimes a head-dress or a pair of gloves of a remarkable colour, in the boxes, will attract their attention, and the wearer be forthwith honoured with "three cheers." A white hat is an especial object of dislike, and vain is the hope of the owner that it will pass unnoticed; wherever he may hide it, concealment is impossible, it's sure to be discovered and hooted when there's nothing better to do. Occasionally a gallery tenor will give an imitation of some popular singer. On the night in question he sang "Ah che la morte," and was for a short time listened to attentively; but the love of fun was too strong, and hints, such as "Mario's looking at yer," "Don't forget the finish," convulsed the house with laughter, and completely upset the ambitious effort of the imitator. Mr. Levey, the talented leader of the band, is familiarly addressed as Lavey, and affectionate inquiries are made nightly after his numerous progeny. When Verdi's Macbeth was given for the first time in Dublin, a few months since, the long symphony preceding the sleep walking scene did not altogether please the galleries. The theatre was darkened, everything looked gloomy and mysterious, the music being to match. The curtain rose, and the nurse and doctor discovered, as usual, seated at the door of Lady Macbeth's chamber. Viardot's appearance was awaited in the most profound silence, when a voice from the gallery cried out, "Arrah, hurry now, Mr. Lavey! tell us, is it a boy or a girl?" an inquiry which nearly destroyed the effect of the whole scene by the commotion it caused. But while talking of the Gods and their doings, I forget our tourists, who by this must have finished the opera and gone back to the hotel to supper. The carriage, of course, has been surrounded by a crowd of musical fanatics, anxious to get a peep at the prima donna as she left the theatre. How they used to struggle and fight for a good look into the carriage! Some would scramble on to the roof, others mount the wheels at the risk of broken legs. Sometimes the horses were detached and their places usurped by a string of enthusiasts. One little lady, to whom this compliment was paid, reminded me forcibly, as she sat in the carriage, of that picture which represents a goddess seated in a chariot drawn by a flock of geese. Everyone to his choice of the means of showing admiration.

The artistes at supper were joined by the Frenchman, who indulged them with an interesting account of his voyage from Holyhead,—how ill he had been,—a most agreeable accompaniment to the soup and macaroni. They did not seem to object to the narrative, but were listening attentively, when Lucrezia suddenly rose from her chair. "Dio mio!" she exclaimed, "siamo tredici!" Now if there be any prejudice among the Italians stronger than another, it is that against the supposed ill-fated No. 13. They tell marvellous stories in support of their belief in its evil influence. How people die from sitting down 13 to table, how railway accidents are encouraged by a party of 13 travelling in the same train, how you're sure to be smothered alive by sleeping in room No. 13, and how if you read a story like this, for instance, of No. 13, something is sure to happen to you, but whether pleasant or disagreeable is not known. I should like to see a certain Italian of my acquaintance take up this number of the Musical World. It would fall from his grasp like a hot coal; he would turn pale, and all the charms and horns within reach would be brought into requisition to avert the consequences of the contamination.

Digitized by Google

On the occasion in question, misfortune was supposed to be imminent. All present expressed alarm, except the Frenchman, who was henceforth looked upon as a heretic, because he continued to eat his supper, regardless of what might happen. He was, in fact, the cause of the discomfort; whether wittingly or not, he had augmented the original healthy number of the party, 12, to its present ominous quantity. Relief, however, came before the spell had time to work. Wonderful interposition! Signor Fortini walked into the room, much to the consolation of Lucrezia and the rest, who then resumed their seats, and finished a hearty supper.

Antbater.

MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.

This Society, though only in the third year of its existence, may be fairly admitted to represent the musical community of the metropolis and, to some extent, indeed, that of the country at large, many of the most influential professors resident in the provinces belonging to its ranks. The report communicated by the hon. secretary, Mr. Charles Salaman, at a recent general meeting, and now printed for circulation, informs its readers that "since the termination of last season nearly 400 new associates and nominated annual subscribers have been received into the society," which, allowing for secessions during the previous year, brings the list of members to considerably above 1,600. The objects professed by the Musical Society of London have been more than once explained, and the suggestion contained in the report, that "its reputation is by this time firmly established and the importance of its aim appreciated," is only a reasonable conclusion, drawn from the increasing anxiety manifested by the public, as well as by the profession, to take an active part in its proceedings. The mixture of the amateur and professional elements in the organisation of the society, establishes a degree of confidence which it would be otherwise difficult to obtain. It averts in the council the practicability of "jobbing," and the advancement of "clique-ism." Musicians—whether deservedly or the contrary is beside the question here—"enjoy the repute of being jealous, egotistical, and quarrelsome, no less than sensitive and enthusiastic; and if the controlling board consisted exclusively of professional men very little belief would attach to the wisdom of its policy, or the unswerving integrity of its management. Happily, as this board is made up of twelve musicians and six amateurs, the minority—among whom are three eminent members of the bar—act as a wholesome check on the majority, bringing unprejudiced argument to weigh against the "idola" so rarely separable from the musical mind, and tempering enthusiasm with a certain amount of common sense. Thus matters go on smoothly enough; and in case of any short-comings the general body of members have the remedy in their own hands.

The grand concerts held in St. James's Hall, which are a conspicuous feature in the arrangements of the society, may fairly take rank among the most remarkable musical entertainments ever presented in this country. As if the orchestra under Mr. Alfred Mellon's direction—which in 1859 and 1860 became the theme of universal praise—was not sufficiently good, its numbers have been increased by the addition of 14 to the "strings"—(eight violins, two violas, two violoncellos, and two double basses). Its strength is now colossal, and there is no exaggeration in asserting that it is the finest body of instrumental performers ever brought together in London. The magnificent overture to Ruy Blas, with which the first concert began on Wednesday night, declared the efficiency of the band in a triumphant manner. A nobler piece of execution was never listened to, and it was impossible for Mr. Mellon to resist the unanimous demand of the audience for a repetition. This was in some respect unfortunate, the selection being unusually long, as may be seen by the subjoined:—

Part I.

Overture, Ruy Blas	Mendelssohn
Scena, Euryanthe	Weber
Concerto in D, Op. 61 (violin)	Beethoven
Cantata, "A non sai qual pena sia"	Mozart
Overture, The Tempest	Benedict

Part II.

Symphony in D minor (No. 2), Op. 49	Spohr
Duo, "Come frenare" (La Gazza Ladra)	Rossini
Overture, Le Philtre	Auber

M. Vieuxtemps played the violin concerto of Beethoven—which in largeness of design and elaboration of detail (like his pianoforte concertos in G and E flat) is on a par with his orchestral symphonies—superbly, and was accompanied by the band with a precision and delicacy almost unparalleled. His "cadenzas" were both ingenious and admirable, the first (in the opening allegro) being a prodigy of mechanical achievement. The second was appropriately brief, and in strict keeping with the style of the rondo—one of Beethoven's most fresh and charming "pastorals," which mere "fiddlers" are apt to render slightly vulgar, but which, in the hands of a master like the accomplished Belgian violinist, retains its natural grace while losing none of its buoyancy and vigour. On no occasion has M. Vieuxtemps experienced a more flattering acknowledgement of his artistic worth. When he had left the platform, at the end of the concerto, he was recalled and literally "overwhelmed" with applause. The honour was legitimately earned. Another surprisingly good performance on the part of the orchestra was that of Mr. Benedict's overture to Shakspere's Tempest, introduced in accordance with an excellent rule of the society—to give at every concert one work of more or less pretentions from the pen of a resident musician, foreign or native. A better choice could not easily have been made than this brilliant and picteresque dramatic prelude, a work as full of poetical fancy as of novel and interesting combinations. Its success was complete. With Spohr's fine symphony (written for our Philharmonic Society about 40 years since, during the composer's first visit to England) we were less entirely satisfied. The scherzo and finale were given to perfection; but the slow movement wanted delicacy, and the first allegro would have been all the better for another careful rehearsal. For comparatively unfamiliar pieces of great difficulty, like this symphony, one rehearsal is not enough; and if the Musical Society of London cannot obtain efficient preparation in every instance, it should confine its programmes exclusively to well-known works. Besides, the society owes some of its laurels to Spohr's 4th symphony (the Wiehe der Töne), and should have treated the composer with all the greater deference on that account. The delicious overture to Auber's delicious pastoral opera, on the other hand, left nothing to wish. The execution was altogether irreproachable.

The vocal pieces were unexceptionable in themselves, but too uniformly long. Mr. Weiss gave the thoroughly dramatic and thoroughly Weberian bass scena from Euryanthe splendidly, and Madame Lemmens-Sherrington the beautiful cantata of Mozart with such intelligence, feeling, and expression that no one complained of its being transposed, for her convenience, a third lower than the original key, although it might have placed a less skilled and ready orchestra in somewhat of a dilemma. The duet for the Ninetta and Ferdinando from La Gazza Ladra was less suited to the singers and to the prevalent character of the selection.

Had the concert been half an hour shorter it would have been all the more enjoyable; but, under any circumstances, it was an entertainment of the very highest class. A brilliant audience completely thronged St. James's Hall.

Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts.—On Thursday evening this society held its first conversazione for the season at the rooms of the Architectural Photographic Association, in Conduit Street, when there was a numerous assemblage of members and their friends, completely filling both the large gallery and the west gallery. Mr. H. Ottley commenced the proceedings by reading a paper in reference to the application of photography in illustrating works of architecture. Architectural structures, next after elevation and distribution of their parts, depended mainly for their beauty upon light and shade, under the influence of the sun, effects which by the sun were most successfully reproduced in photography. He also referred to the late catastrophe at Chichester Cathedral, and drew some parallels between the spire of the latter and that of Salisbury. A musical entertainment followed, conducted by Mr. Alfred Gilbert. The programme included Mac Farren's Trio, the "Troubadour," given with admirable spirit by Mad. Gilbert, Mad. Andrea, and Mr. Layland; "Robert toi que j'aime," and the "Light of other days," by Mad. Gilbert, who was warmly applauded, particularly in the latter; A Venetian Canzonette, by Cardigiani; Louis's Ballad, "Oh if I had some one to love me," both charmingly rendered by Mad. Leonte; Hatton's ballad, "The Blacksmith's Son," by Miss Boden; Song, "Oh how I shall triumph o'er ye" (Mozart), by Mr. Lawler, who was encored; "Sweet, sweet, those hours" (A. Gilbert), a pretty song, very neatly executed by Mr. Layland; "Il Portiglione" (Balfe), given with true buffo spirit by Mr. Penna. The entertainment, which did not terminate till half-past eleven o'clock, afforded complete satisfaction to all present, and most satisfactorily inaugurated the third season of this useful and rising society.

Digitized by Google

THE LIFE OF HANDEL.

By Friedrich Chrysander. Leipsig, Breitkopf and Härtel."*

The Second Volume of Chrysander's book on Handel has recently appeared. The first was contemporaneous with the publication of the Leipsic Society's edition of Handel's Collected Works, and thus the foundations were simultaneously laid for two monuments in honour of the master, who had become a stranger in his native land; monuments which will not only hand down his memory to the remotest ages, but also, by their intellectual influence, be of indisputable importance for our own further progress in art. Both enterprises, Handel's Works and Chrysander's Biography, proceed hand in hand towards the same result, namely, to render the life and acts of one of our great masters, in all their truthfulness, the common good. Of his compositions only a few were really known, while some few more were known only by tradition to the larger portion of the public, so that merely indistinct notions of his all-comprehensive musical labours were floating about among the people. Just as, in the case of Bach, until about twenty or thirty years ago, we were contented with the limited side of his art, that is to say, his eminent technical excellence, and did not until very lately begin to penetrate to his really intellectual qualities; we shall, in a short time, change our inadequate notions of Handel's art for others more correct and complete, and, in the place of the few anecdotal narratives from which the large mass of the public derived their ideas of his life and disposition, without attaining a truthful and definite picture of his character, we shall now acquire, thanks to Chrysander's work, a knowledge of the complete and and mighty course of development pursued by the mind of one who was as elevated in morals as he was in art.

Both undertakings have come at the right time. It is an indisputable fact that the musical art of the present day possesses in itself, as a counterpoise to that extravagance and pretension of mere technicality, of which it is generally the victim, a profound impulse to maintain what is true, and to return to what is primary. The attraction towards direct knowledge—a feeling that takes us back to those sources whence the art of our forefathers flowed in never turbid clearness—appears, indeed, to be a firm basis for vigorous progress. Since the art of our own time does not appear to go further than the Past in achieving a result that may serve as a standard, and does not, moreover, possess in itself the productive power for the purpose, there is nothing better left for it to do than, by popularising the perfect works of certain definite periods, to lay down among the people the foundations for future structures. That is the great end which our editions of the works of Handel and Bach have to fulfil. Even at present, people have not as yet come to a clear understanding concerning the relative position of genius to morality, and of the artist to life; here it is that art-history enters on her rights, for it furnishes the proof that true genius is not conceivable without human worth, while, by means of the latter, it has come forth victorious from every struggle. Our first wish in contemplating the work under consideration is that Bach and all our greatest masters may find such historians as Handel has found in Chrysander, or that the latter himself may be their historian,

The endeavour, by means of old art generally, to prepare a secure foundation for our vigorous development must not be misunderstood as a wish to return to antiquated forms and notions. As far as Handel is concerned, such a thing is entirely out of the question; though, as a matter of course, certain works of his sprang up under the momentary influence of his age, it might very easily happen that, on examining our productions now-a-days, the questions: What of ours had not originated under the same circumstances as the perishable portions of Bach and Handel's works, while, on the other hand, what had risen to such a height of ideality as their great works? would remain unanswered, if we were not sincere enough to own the true state of the case. We hope that our increasing appreciation of the past and of its great masters will speedly put an end to the complacent theory of the "surmounted point of view," and its two obstetric aids, leaven-storming egotism and unthinking delight in its equal by birth, fashionable feebleness. No one, without rendering himself altogether ridiculous, can any longer give utterance to such opinions as those which recently appeared in a musical paper on Handel's Israel in Egypt.

There is now evident throughout Germany a great amount of zeal for the restoration of old masterpieces, not in the isolated cases of collectors and historians, but combined with the wish to place these treasures within the reach of the large mass of the public. Even in our own time the spirit of indefatigable progress towards something higher does not rest a single moment, although we may not be able to perceive its workings in violent revolutionary attempts, but rather in the effort to obtain a correct view of our progress. The task of making the riches bequeathed to us by our great forefathers in art the common intellectual property of all, secures, if it be rightly performed, an honourable position even for our own age. At all events, if the highest ideas of our particular epoch have become the free property of its posterity, and thus placed an entire nation in a higher position and rendered them capable of receiving what is new to them, fresh and more extensive views are opened up in the domain of the mind, until these views are themselves realised in the endless process of intellectual development, and become the foundation for further efforts.

As yet, however, we have absorbed and rightly worked out hardly a tenth part of what art offers us; for this reason, putting all other considerations aside, the revivification of Bach and Handel, on the extensive scale on which it is now practised, is of undoubted importance for us. The notions of church music and oratorios have, at present, disappeared, as much as it is possible, from among us. Consequently we require for both of them complete models, more defined in their forms and ideas—models, such as Bach, Handel, and the older masters have bequeathed us—if these kinds of composition are not to give up their ideal empires and sink down into a mere semblance of life in consequence of a combination of subjects and means of expression negativing each other. Church music, which finds its idea in man's relative position to the highest intellectual ideas, must fall a prey to a mere over-sensual poetastering of the feelings as little as to the non-independent playing of the understanding with pure form. In our own age—which we cannot deny possesses an impulse to render clearer the views of religion, obscured by forms, although for the moment it has not got beyond a dim humanism—church-music, when it has not altogether descended to a mere concert style, has been subjected to mere sentimental ecstacy quite as often as to abstract intellectual formalism. In the works of old church-music, up to its highest exponents, Bach and Handel, the matter and the expression constitute indivisible unity, while the form of expression, although determined by the circumstances of the age, is always natural, and springs from the subject. On this account, the study of the old masters is the best invigorating means for the benefit of our own religious art, but only if we endeavour to discover, and, in conformity with the present view taken of things, to render evident in our works the inward relations between outward appearance and the living idea contained in it, and not content ourselves with the mere contemplation and imitation of outward form and peculiarities.

We are no better off, now-a-days, with oratorios, whenever we happen to come across them. Our present music, based entirely upon subjective sensation, does not possess the strength to wed itself to a purely objective conception of the matter given it, and declines into coldness and outward painting. The discordance

* From the Deutsche Musik Zeitung.

Digitized by Google

between the great historical figures of the Bible and our modern sentimentality is generally very great in modern oratorio. The purely historical character of the oratorio is entirely misunderstood—it was so even by Mendelssohn, who introduced into his oratorios the lyrical church elements, namely, the choral, certainly with Bach's Passions musik as a model, but without perceiving that the latter was a series of special works for divine service, while oratorio is only more distantly related to the purely church view of things, or even has nothing at all to do with it. Mendelssohn wanted to invest oratorio with an additional religious signification, which was quite as foreign to him personally as to the whole polite world in which he lived.

Handel was born to create and carry out Oratorio. It is a sufficient proof of the greatness and importance of this highest form of musical art, that a man of such a mind as Handel had to live a long life of active employment in every way, in order, in his greatest strength and maturity, to complete, in his greatest works, that form in which the passing of idea into reality could be effected in a manner most appropriate to music, namely, the oratorio, in which the feelings enter with the epic view of matters into a compact for the purpose of representing a real action and definite characters, that it to say, in which the feelings become objective, while the action does not step forth outwardly into life, but remains ideal, so that there is nothing to disturb the music, as is not unfrequently the case with visible action.

(To be continued.)

Advertisements.

S T. J A M E S'S H A L L,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE FOURTEENTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON

(55TH CONCERT IN ST. JAMES'S HALL)

WILL TAKE PLACE

ON MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 4, 1861,

The Programme, Vocal and Instrumental, selected from the Works of

BEETHOVEN.

(By particular desire).

First Performance of the TRIO in G (Op. 9),

Second Performance of the GRAND SONATA in C MINOR (Op. 111).

Vocalist:—Mr. SIMS REEVES.
Pianist:—Miss ARABELLA GODDARD.

Eighth Appearance of M. VIEUXTEMPS.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Quartet, in E minor, for two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello (Op. 59—No. 2 of the set dedicated to Razoumowski) MM. VIEUXTEMPS, RIES, SCHREURS, and PIATTI—Beethoven; Cavatina, "Adelaide" (second time at the Monday Popular Concerts), Mr. SIMS REEVES—Beethoven; Grand sonata, in C minor, Op. 111, for Pianoforte alone, Beethoven's last sonata (second time at the Monday Popular Concerts) Miss ARABELLA GODDARD—Beethoven.

PART II.—Trio, in G major, for Violin, Viola, and Violoncello (first time at the Monday Popular Concerts), M. VIEUXTEMPS M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI—Beethoven; Song, "The stolen kiss," Mr. SIMS REEVES—Beethoven; Grand sonata, in A major (Op. 47), for Pianoforte and Violin, dedicated to Kreutzer, Miss ARABELLA GODDARD and M. VIEUXTEMPS—Beethoven.

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT. To commence at Eight o'Clock precisely.

Stalls, 6s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s.

Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, and at the Hall, 28 Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co.; Hammond, Addison and Co.; Schott and Co.; Ewer and Co.; Simpson and Oetzmann and Co., Regent Street; Bradberry's London Crystal Palace, Oxford Street; Duff and Co., 65 Oxford Street; Prowse, Hanway Street; J. H. Jewell, 104, Great Russell Street; Chidley, 195 High Holborn, Purday, 50 St. Paul's Church Yard; Keith, Prowse and Co., 48 Cheapside; Turner, 19 Cornhill; Cook and Co., 6 Finsbury Place, South; Humfress, 4 Old Church Street, Paddington Green; Fabian, Circus Road, St. John's Wood; Ransford and Son, 2 Princes Street, Cavendish Square; Ivory, 275 Euston Road; Mitchell, Leader & Co., Ollivier, Campbell, Hopwood and Crewe; and Willis, Bond Street;

NOTICE.—It is respectfully suggested that such persons as are not desirous of remaining till the end of the performance can leave either before the commencement of the last instrumental piece, or between any two of the movements, so that those who wish to hear the whole can do so without interruption.

And Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Production of the AMBER WITCH.—THIS EVENING will be performed, for the second time, with new scenery, dresses, decorations, and appointments (having been many months in preparation), a new grand romantic opera, in four acts, entitled THE AMBER WITCH. The music composed expressly for this theatre by W. V. WALLACE. Written by HENRY F. CHORLEY. Rudiger (the young Lord of Ravenstein), Mr. SIMS REEVES; The Commandant, Mr. SANTLEY; The Pastor, Mr. PATEY; Claus, Mr. TERRETT; The King, Mr. BARTLEMAN; Elsie, Miss HUDDART; and Mary, Madame L. SHERRINGTON. Early application, to prevent disappointment, should be made at the box office of the theatre, which is open daily from 10 to 6. Doors open at half-past 7; performance commences at 8 o'clock each evening. During Lent there will be No Peformance on Wednesday and Friday Evening.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—Return of the celebrated Comedians, Mr. and Mrs. CHARLES MATHEWS.—Last Night of the most successful Pantomime of the season.—For the convenience of parties residing at a distance the Pantomime will be played first.—THIS EVENING, the grand comic Pantomime of PETER WILKINS. Scenery by Beverley. To conclude with THE GAME OF SPECULATION, in which Mr. CHARLES MATHEWS will appear.

Reduced prices:—Upper gallery, 6d.; lower gallery, 1s.; pit, 2s.; upper boxes, 2s.; first circle, 2s. 6d.; dress circle, 5s; stalls, 5s.; private boxes, 10s. 6d., one guinea and two guineas. Doors open at half-past 6; to commence at 7. Box-office open daily from 10 till 5, under the direction of Mr. C. Nugent.

NOTICES.

TO ADVERTISERS.—Advertisers are informed, that for the future the Advertising Agency of the THE MUSICAL WORLD is established at the Magazine of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements can be received as late as Three o'Clock P.M., on Fridays—but not later. Payment on delivery.

Terms { Three lines (or under) ... ... 2s. 6d. / Every additional (10 words) ... ... 6d.

TO PUBLISHERS AND COMPOSERS.—All Music for Review in THE MUSICAL WORLD must henceforward be forwarded to the Editor, care of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street. A List of every Piece sent for Review will appear on the Saturday following in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

TO CONCERT GIVERS.—No Benefit-Concert, or Musical Performance, except of general interest, unless previously Advertised, can be reported in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, MARCH 2, 1861.

THE Directors of the Philharmonic Society have now a good chance of showing of what stuff they are made. Nothing but downright earnestness, vigour, and zealous perseverance, can carry them through the season in triumph. We feel satisfied, however, that no amount of energy and pains will be spared, and that A.D. 1862, the Jubilee of the Institution, will be a Jubilee in more respects than one. Last week we presented our readers with a list of the new orchestra, under favour of a frequent and valued contributor. Since then, from the same source, we have obtained a list of the subscribers for 1861. We are not going to print that, but may inform those who wish well to the old Philharmonic Society, that it is as large and influential as any we remember—little short of 400; indeed, a substantial foundation to work upon. Messrs. Anderson, Balsir Chatterton, Jewson, M'Murdie (Mus. Bac.), John Thomas, Turle, and Marmaduke Wilson (C) must do the rest, by making their programmes so varied and attractive as to wring from the public generally that liberal patronage which has hitherto for the most part been confined to Queen's visits, or extraordinary "apparitions," in the shape of distinguished "virtuosi" from across the main.

If we may hazard a recommendation to the Philharmonic Society in this emergency, it will be to run no risks. Theirs is a conservative institution; and it is good policy to adhere to those conservative principles upon which, allowing for inevitable "ups and downs," they have so well prospered

Digitized by Google

now for five decades. Better give irreproachable performances of acknowledged masterpieces than questionable performances of works upon which the verdict of time has yet to be pronounced. The music of the great masters should be the chief, if not exclusive, feature of the programmes, and the most renowned artists, vocal and instrumental, whether foreign or native, alone be allowed to exhibit as solo performers. The selection for the first concert (see our advertising columns) is, on the whole, to the purpose. Mozart's cheerful, pure, and guileless symphony in C (the first) is a happy inauguration. It is like beginning the season with a smile—an emblem, in short, of good days, or rather nights, to come. Let us have Beethoven's too, in C (the first we mean); that will be another smile, or rather chuckle. And then Mozart in D (the first); and then Beethoven in D (the first); and then Mozart, in E (flat); and then Beethoven in E (flat); and then Mozart in ———; yet no, Mozart has not written a symphony in F (unless it is one of the small ones—the symphonettes, or symphoninies). But enough in respect of symphonies, without mounting the ladder ("scala"), has been suggested. To suggest any more—except that the second parts of the programmes of the eight (mind that, reader, eight, not six) concerts might be given up to Mendelssohn, Spohr, and (forget him?—never!—he should have been named first) Haydn—"Papa Haydn"—would be what the free subjects of the constitutional King of Italy, and even the Pope-tied denizens of the "States," not to mention the fortressed (*dis*tressed) inhabitants of (not quite) crushed Venetia, would term "sciarpelleria." And this too with an excellent chance (five to two, at least) of our suggestions being unread or unregarded by the directorate in its wisdom. About overtures, concertos, and so forth, we need say nothing. Weber, from spirit-land, thunders at the door. He gained his first English laurels at the Philharmonic Society's concerts, and has not yet lost a leaf of them. Cherubini approaches with vigorous step; Mendelssohn comes quickly, with a fairy tale; while Sterndale Bennett is at hand, with legends of blithe woods and running waters. (For "about overtures, concertos, and so forth, we need say nothing," by the way, read "about concertos and so forth," &c.) And then—to mention concertos—has not old Dussek, of late, shook (sic) off the dust of half a century, and stood forth, genial and vigorous, as of yore? Has not Hummel been gently tended by Arabella Goddard and young Ritter? Is not our Russian Field ("our Russian Field"—sic) John Field—within easy reach, furnished with concertos like full-grown notturni, the movements gliding in and out of each other, as streams that converge and separate? Will not ——— (For "about concertos and so forth," by the way, read "about and so forth, &c.")

But why proceed? We leave the rest (the "scegliticcio"—in its purest interpretation) to our Philharmonic King David, our worthy Balsir—J. (John?) Balsir, who knows what harpers, or harpists, to engage, and if he did not, could inquire of John Thomas; to W. Turle of Westminster, who will have an eye to the organ; to Frederick Bowen, President of the Board of Pianos; to M'Murdie, well versed in rounds and glees; to Marmaduke (Wilson), who must not be confounded with his namesake Haydn (Wilson); to Pope Anderson, who directs everything, issues bulls, and excommunicates; and to Director-Professor (Camb.) Sterndale Bennett, Mus. Doc., who wields the conductor's stick—the Hercules who has borne the Philharmonic globe upon his shoulders, since Garagantua-Antæus-Michael cast it off and "Richard" intervened and fled. These men know what to be about, and will set about it expeditiously; they are men of parts, and will act discreetly; men of resolution and will "never say die."

So health and long life to "Old Double," and an appropriate pre-jubilee for the Philharmonic Concerts.

P . . . P . . E.

THE veracious and never quite uninformed Mr. PUNCH in announcing the death of Scribe, says, "the English dramatists are doing as well as can be expected." No doubt his loss will be felt severely by our concoctors of plays, but France can still boast of many writers from the fertility and ingenuity of whose brains our national authors may hope to thrive, and win repute. There are tailors who can alter coats and make them look as good as new, and are yet incapable of cutting and converting the original cloth to any good purpose. Their attempts would invariably result in misfits. Our dramatists are admirable "repairers," but very indifferent "makers." Give them the garment already shapen and stitched, and they exhibit remarkable tact in unsewing, adapting, changing, and fitting to any form. Our librettists, feebler than our playwrights, have not the same skill in alteration; but then the difficulty of fitting words to music must be taken into account.

Scribe was undoubtedly the most accomplished writer for the lyric stage that France, or perhaps any other country, has produced. His plots, even the best and apparently the most finished, will not bear close inspection. Like Turner's pictures, on too approximate an examination, they appear crude, rugged, without meaning. But draw back, and contemplate them with less anxious polyscopity, and how they resolve themselves into life and purpose! How they glow, start from the canvas, and enchain attention! The Huguenots—one of the grandest and most striking of all the great pictures in the Scribe gallery—furnishes a good example. Examine the groundwork closely. How strange, forced, and unnatural! Let us consider a part—the third act. A lady goes to be married in a cathedral near the Pré aux Clercs. She is left in the church after the ceremony is performed; remains alone there all the day and part of the night; is witness to an encounter at midnight between the Catholic and Huguenot parties, which is only ended by the Queen appearing on horseback; and she herself is at last sought by her spouse, who comes for her in a Lord Mayor's barge, with a brass band and a troop of dancing girls. This is no exaggeration. The whole scene represented thus may be pronounced nonsense. And who can contradict it? It is as foreign to reality, as improbable as a fairy tale. But a fairy tale may interest and fascinate by its veresimilitude, without there existing an atom of truth in its composition. Granted the supernatural power of the fairy, and the conversion of the pumpkin into a coach and mice into liveried servants, and Cinderella becomes consistent, and is looked upon as no imposition. Nothing can be more improbable than a young lady in a convent, on the eve of becoming an abbess, stealing away at night, appearing at a masked ball, and accepting the addresses of a lover. The thing is just as much opposed to truth as Cinderella's glass slipper, or Fortunatus's purse. But in every one of Scribe's pieces he depends for a certain amount of faith upon his audience; and this faith conceded, what a power he wields! He is a very magician, at the motion of whose wand everything striking and natural is brought vividly into play. He is always new yet always true. Incidents the most trivial and common, by a touch of his genius, are transformed into what is novel and beautiful. There is always some delicate trait displayed in his characters, some unexpected turn given to his situations which betokens the peculiar bent of his mind, and which may be said to have forced on modern writers a style, and to have helped to found a school. Surprise, indeed, is one of the main artifices of modern French writers, and was a special excellence of Scribe himself. When our own writers attempt anything strange they are but too likely to degenerate into caricature or burlesque.

Digitized by Google

While in every other branch of literature England is at least the equal of France; in the drama alone she pales before her. We have now no Congreves, no Sheridans, and no Goldsmiths; neither have the French Molières or Beaumarchais; but our neighbours, whether in writing for the stage proper or the stage operatic, are considerably our superiors at the present time We have our old dramatists, and may boast of them; but where are our new ones? An English author never yet wrote a moderately good book for an opera—to a certain extent we may except Mr. Planché's Oberon and Mr. Oxenford's Robin Hood—and there appears no likelihood of our improving in that respect. Perhaps one cause may be attributed to the fact that composers are indifferent to the poetic merits of a work; perhaps another, that publishers undervalue the value of good verses. Let us hope, now that there is such a capital opening for our native musicians, that a little more attention will be paid to the merits of the words in future. When an architect builds a house, his first consideration is for the strength and solidity of the ground-work. When a composer plans an opera he should look to the consistence, fitness, and durability of the poem which is his foundation. It is not difficult to form an opinion of what kind of poetry is suited for music. Plain sense, simplicity, and perspicuity, in the first instance. If he can obtain these, he may run the chance of finding the loftier elements of style and expression. R.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—The repetition of the Creation attracted an audience little less numerous than that of the previous performance. As Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Weiss again sustained the principal solo parts, we have little or nothing to add to our former notice beyond recording the fact of an equal success, hearty applause frequently rewarding the favourite singers; "With verdure clad" (Mad. Sherrington), "In native worth" (Mr. Sims Reeves), and "Rolling in foaming billows" (Mr. Weiss), especially eliciting approbation. Mr. Montem Smith sang the tenor music in the third part and rendered efficient service in the concerted pieces. The band and chorus would be literally all that could be desired but for a tendency to loudness in the brass, of which we have previously complained. Mendelssohn's Elijah is announced for March 8th, but the principal singers are not yet named.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—Mr. Henry Leslie's cantata, Holyrood, produced with so much success at St. James's Hall three weeks ago, was performed on Saturday at the tenth winter concert, the choir over which the composer presides forming the chorus, and the band being, of course, that of the Crystal Palace Company. The direction was in the hands of Mr. Leslie, and the execution was, for the most part, excellent. Miss Banks, vice Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, sang the music of Mary Queen of Scots, with much intelligence, and her air in reply to Rizzio's "Colla Stagion" was brilliantly executed. Miss Palmer, as Mary Beatoun, sang better than on the former occasion, and the music seemed to us more grateful in consequence. Mr. Wilbye Cooper sang the Italian romance just mentioned, and Mr. Weiss delivered the prophecies of John Knox with great power and emphasis. The cantata was, on the whole, received with applause, but the final portion commanded the most attention, and produced the greatest effect. The brief introduction was beautifully played by the band, and the accompaniments were well executed throughout, considering the slight preparation that could have taken place, and that in all probability the parts are yet in MS. We hear that Holyrood will shortly be performed again at the Crystal Palace. The weather could hardly have been worse, and yet the attendance was by no means inconsiderable.

The cantata was preceded by half a dozen miscellaneous pieces. Winter's overture to Tamerlane, played for the first time at these concerts, Moore's "Believe me," sung by Mr. Wilbye Cooper. "Tell me my heart," by Miss Banks (encored); "Madamina," by Mr. Weiss; and the contralto scena from Undine, sung by Miss Palmer a great deal more slowly than Mr. Benedict would have allowed had the baton been in his hands. After the concert there was a performance by small boys in the nave. These juveniles occasionally promenaded with the visitors, and anon planted themselves at the side of the avennes, shouting out in the discordant tone peculiar to peripatetic vendors of newspapers. "Crystal Palace News, one penny!" This Crystal Palace nuisance must be at once abolished.

AMERICAN INTELLIGENCE.

From a Correspondent). — The Mendelssohn Quintet Club at BOSTON which, in one of your papers, you justly remark, seldom or never introduces a quintet of Mendelssohn into one of its concerts —recently commenced a series of "Saturday Evening Concerts" of a popular character, an act for which it has been rated soundly by some ultra classicists, who never considered that there were two classes of the musical community to be conciliated. In my opinion the "Club"—which has never deserted, and never intends to desert its colours—has gone the right way to instruct those who want instruction; and the fusion of "classical" with "popular" works—the principle on which it started—is, I think, the best way to make good music known and appreciated. When I see such names as those of Beethoven, Schubert, Mendelssohn, &c., in the programme, I cannot decry the "Saturday Concerts," although the lighter elements of music, in the shape of ballad, dance, and fantasy may predominate. In Dwight's Journal, of the 9th of February, the reporter on these concerts indulges in some sensible observations as to the notions about "classical" and "popular" music, which, as I do not fancy they would be out of place in the MUSICAL WORLD, I send you for insertion.

"There is a large class of persons, who, either from a natural defect, or want of practice in listening to the best, or from a habit of listening to bad music, are unable to find enjoyment in what some people sneeringly term "classical" or "scientific" music We almost wish those terms had never been employed. They are so often used as an excuse for disliking good music, that it would have been better had such people been left in ignorance of the distinction between compositions conveyed in those words. There are naturally those who find anything tedious that is written by Bach or Handel; musical critics (save the mark!) who find the Messiah antiquated, who call the Ortetto by Schubert "broken crockery music," going into ecstacies over the Haymakers and La Traviata. Now such people are to be pitied; for surely they would wish to admire the best, if only they could. And from their individual point of view they admire the best, in La Traviata or the Haymakers. There are such people in literature and every art. What would the New York Ledger, to name the prominent representative of a large class of papers, do without patrons in literature? How would the daubers, who make those pictures that we receive periodically by the ship load from across the Atlantic, be able to earn a living, if it were not for just such persons, who admire the fearful specimens of the art of "the first European artists," as the advertisements of the auctioneer invariably read? We cannot expect that every one should stay away from the theatre, when "sensation pieces" are on the stage for weeks in succession. We cannot expect people suddenly to fall in love with Shakespeare, Milton, Spenser, and Chaucer, and leave off reading stories "that are not continued." In short, we cannot expect people as a mass to like what is best, to have a tendency for the ideal. The mass of people, on the contrary, have a tendency to what is mediocre or common place, and so we have flourishing "opera houses," nightly thronged by "appreciative audiences," places that derive a principal attraction from the fact that the natural colour of the face and hands is changed to a more sable hue. And therefore we have no orchestral concerts, no "Philharmonic Society" this winter, because there is not interest enough in the mass of the people to pay two and a half dollars for six concerts. There is demand for music of a low, or at least common place, character, and therefore that demand must be satisfied. And it will be satisfied. But this is a fact so well understood that it were hardly worth the ink shed in writing these paragraphs if there were not people who conceive it to be their especial duty to put in a plea for such music. It is scarcely a twelvemonth since a musical paper, not far from the town where we are writing, was inaugurated by a leader setting forth, that the concerts in Boston had been of too elevated a character; that they needed to be popularised; the public desired another class of music; and that therefore the programmes in future ought to be of a mixed character, so as to attract large (mixed?) audiences. This reminds me of the preface of an instruction book, in which the author alleges that the majority of persons that learn music do not desire or comprehend good music, and that, in view of this fact (undeniable, to be sure), pleasing music ought to be put in instruction books. Which the good man did, and thus supplied the "long-felt want." There is no danger, therefore, of that want for music of a lighter character ("Dixie," &c. &c.,) being unsupplied. It is taken care of in the places proper for it. But where it ought not to be supplied, is just in the Music Hall or any other place where good concerts are given. We know there is music of a lighter kind, which is not as bad as Dixie; quite good, in fact, of its kind, such as good waltzes, and polkas, and other dances, a number of operatic songs, without much lasting value, but as useful as candy or checkerberry lozenges. That too is furnished generally in its proper place by bands, in afternoon concerts, &c. We have not the least objection to its being performed at its proper time and place. But to advocate the introduction of lighter music in "Philarmonic concerts" proves the incapacity of such persons or papers to take an intelligent part in the discussion of musical matters. The mass of the people remain children, intellectually and morally and therefore they ought to be treated as such. Generally speaking, we have the idea that in the case of children a progressive course of instruction is best, proceeding from the rudiments up to the higher branches. Well then, if the public be like children, let them be musically instructed, proceeding from the A B C among musical compositions to the nobler effusions of the human heart, from simplest national air, or waltz, and polka, up to 'classical or scientific' music."

Digitized by Google

That the Mendelssohn Quintet Club do not contemplate giving up their regular concerts any more than they do playing Mendelssohn's quintets, I need hardly say. At the next concert they have announced, for the first time in Boston, Dussek's Quintet in F minor, for pianoforte and strings, and Beethoven's Grand Quartet in E flat, Op. 127.

Mr. J. C. D. Packer, a resident pianist, gave recently one of the most interesting performances of chamber music I have heard for a long while. The programme will satisfy you:—

Quartet	Haydn.
Variations Concertantes, for piano and violoncello	Mendelssohn.
Ario . . "Quando Mèro"	Mozart.
Sonata . . . for pianoforte, Op. 7	Beethoven.
Grand Duo, for two pianos, "Hommage à Handel"	Moscheles
Songs . . . "Sun of the Sleepless"	Mendelssohn.
"Love's Messenger"	Fesca.
Presto Scherzando } for piano.	Mendelssohn.
Valse, Op. 18 } for piano.	Chopin.
Trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello	Schubert.

Mlle. Patti, of whom your readers have heard, and who has been compared to Mlle. Piccolommini, sang at one of the Saturday Concerts, and, being a great favourite, attracted a large audience. Herr Stigelli, not unremembered, I dare to say, by the subscribers to the Royal Italian Opera in London, sang with her, and Mr. Eichbery (violinist), and M. S. B. Mills (pianist), played. The Handel and Haydn Society have engaged both singers for their next concert, when selections from the Messiah, Elijah, Solomon, St. Paul, and Rossini's Stabat Mater will be given.

But Boston must not arrogate to herself all the merit of giving choice concerts, and making out irreproachable bills of entertainment. I send you the programmes of two concerts lately given, one at St. Louis, the other at Cincinnati, at which removed places you would scarcely accredit that "classicism" was endeavouring to reign and rule. The concert at the former place was given by Mlle. Fabbri, in conjunction with Signor Abelli, the baritone, and Herr Mülder, the pianist. The following was the programme:—

Overture, "Le Nozze di Figaro	Mozart.
Chorus, "Arise up, arise," and chorale, "Sleepers, awake," St. Paul	Mendelssohn.
Bravura Song, "Happy birdling"	W. V. Wallace.
Piano Solo, "Concert Stück"	Weber.
Duet, "La Favorita"	Donizetti.
Overture, "Fingal's Cave"	Mendelssohn.
Chorus, "Happy and blessed are they" (St. Paul)	Mendelssohn.
Violin Solo, "Le petit tambour"	David.
Scherzo from Symphony No. 7	Beethoven.
Solo and chorus, "Conjuration Scene" (Les Huguenots)	Meyerbeer.

The concert at Cincinnati was the third of the St. Cecilia Society. The selection was as follows:—

PART I.

Vintager's Chorus, from the Seasons	Haydn
Duo for violin and pianoforte	Heller and Ernst
Aria from The Marriage of Figaro	Mozart
Adagio and finale from Sonata F minor	Beethoven
a. "Passage birds, farewell" } for soprano and alto,	Mendelssohn
b. "Flowing and ebbing" }
Scene from Tannhäuser	Wagner

PART II.

Hunting Chorus from the Seasons	Haydn
Concert Song	Eckert
Concerto for violin	De Beriot
Three Songs	Rob. Franz
a. "Love in Spring."
b. "Autumn sorrow."
c. "He has come in rain and storm."
Finale from Lorela	Mendelssohn

I have nothing to tell you about operatic music. Indeed there is an unusual dearth of even reputable singers in America, and unless you send us a few syrens to warble Italian or English music, we shall have to close our lyric theatres altogether.

POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—Mr. Ramsden is giving his new musical entertainment on the Old English Songs and Ballads at this popular institution to large and enthusiastic audiences. The illustrations are selected from Mr. W. Chappell's work, Popular Music of the Olden Time, and consist of compositions full of melody, and in some cases of much vigour and spirit, all of which are rendered with excellent effect. Mr. Ramsden's voice is of limited range, and is not remarkable for force, but it is eminently sympathetic and flexible, and gives expression to every variety of emotion with artistic fidelity. The songs and ballads are strung together by remarks critical and historical, still from Mr. Chappell's work, delivered with so much fluency and neatness that their brevity is almost a matter for regret, agreeably diversifying as they do the character of the entertainment. The songs most admired in the present selection appear to be the lute song, "Since first I saw your face" (Ford, 1607), ballad, "The bailiff's daughter of Islington" (traditional), old sea song, "The Mermaid" (date unknown), ballad, "Once I loved a maiden fair" (1620), humorous ditty, "Oh! for a husband" (circum. 1610), ballad, "The Carman's whistle" (16th century), and "Sally in our alley" (1630). Mr. Ramsden's entertainment has proved one of the most interesting and novel ever given at the Polytechnic Institution.

A "GYEFUL" EVENT.—The Court Journal states that Mr. Gye has succeeded in engaging Jenny Lind for the Royal Italian Opera next season. We trust that this Swedish "turnup" will prove a first prize for the operatic Frederick the Great, and that the engagement will be a triumph for both parties. May the Nightingale with her "sounds so gyeful," enable Covent Garden to profit by the loss of Grisi and Mario—the "Diva" returning to Her Majesty's Theatre to take a bona fide farewell, on the strength of the sentiment "On revient toujours à ses premiers amours."—Liverpool Porcupine.

THE POLYHYMNIAN CHOIR.—At the last General Meeting of the Polyhymnian Choir it was determined to elect Dr. James Pech as their conductor, to appoint a season for giving a series of concerts, and for commencing weekly rehearsals.

DEATH OF VELLUTI.—The once celebrated singer, Velluti, for whom Rossini composed his Aureliano in Palmira, and Meyerbeer the Crociate in Egitto, died a few days ago at his villa near Padua, at the age of eighty. Velluti, in his earlier years, was one of the principal ornaments of the Sistine chapel at Rome.

Digitized by Google

The Operas.

Her Majesty's Theatre.—After various delays Mr. Wallace's Amber Witch was produced on Thursday night, and achieved a success which was all along anticipated, and which, therefore, was no matter of surprise to any body. To this success every department of the establishment contributed more or less. The principal singers were Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Fanny Huddart, Messrs. Sims Reeves, Santley, Patey, Terrot, and Bartleman. The band, reinforced for the occasion, was directed by Mr. Charles Hallé. The scenery and dresses were rich and new, and the scenery, by W. Beverley, highly effective and striking. At present we cannot do more than give a few particulars of the performance, which was universally pronounced one of the most complete and satisfactory which has taken place at Her Majesty's Theatre for a very long while. All the principal singers were called for at the end of the first act, and then a loud cry was raised for Mr. Wallace, who was received on his appearance with the most enthusiastic cheers. At the end of the second act, in addition to the artists and composer, Mr. Smith was summoned forth, and was welcomed with thunders of applause. At the end of the third act the same recalls took place, and again at the end of the fourth act, when the excitement was wound up by a call for Mr. Hallé, who was bound to appear, and shared in the general approbation.

We are inclined to think the Amber Witch is Mr. Wallace's best work. To make assurance doubly sure, however, we shall defer our judgment until we hear the opera again. Meanwhile we can only say that the greatest credit is due to the all the principals, who exerted themselves to the very utmost; that Mad. Sherrington and Mr. Sims Reeves both created a powerful impression; that Mr. Santley never was heard to greater advantage; that the other artists came off with flying colours; and that there was not a single hitch in the performance from beginning to end.

The Amber Witch will be repeated to-night, and three times during the week, until further notice.

Royal English Opera.—The performance of the Domino Noir was on Tuesday night honoured by the presence of her Majesty, the Prince Consort, her Royal Highness the Princess Alice, and her Royal Highness the Princess Helena. The Hon. Flora Macdonald, Lord Cremorne, Lord Alfred Paget, and Colonel D. de Ros, were in attendance.

Monday Popular Concerts.—The principal novelty, and unquestionably the great attraction of the fifty-fourth concert was Spohr's double quartet in D minor, presented for the first time. The double quartet in E minor was twice given in 1859, and the verdict of the public upon each occasion being unanimously in its favour, it was wisely judged that a similar composition from the same pen would be no less acceptable. A modern critic, in a work published some half dozen years since ("Modern German Music"), recorded his opinion that Spohr's music was characterised by "a general air of swooning, over-luxurious, elaborate grace, which conceals its poverty in significance and variety so well and so long, that few indeed are capable of discovering it." Moreover, we learn that his (Spohr's, not the critic's) "first thoughts are apt to be threadbare;" that his "chamber music is a failure;" that he "neither fascinates nor excites, but falls flat and dull;" he is "vapid and tedious;" his "melodies poor and borrowed, his science conventional," and much more of the same sort. True it is that musicians are not altogether agreed as to the position that Spohr may ultimately assume. It rarely happens that there is anything like positive unanimity as to the merits of a contemporary, posterity being left (and justly so) to settle the claim and award the particular niche in the temple of Fame; for, after all, time must be the real adjuster of the claims of musicians no less than of painters and poets.

Prior to the institution of the Monday Popular Concerts the profession knew little, and the public less, of the chamber compositions of Spohr, who was only associated in the general mind with oratorios, operas, and symphonies. On May 16th, 1859, the double quartet in E minor (Op. 87, No. 3) was first introduced; the executants being Herren Joachim and Goffrie, Mr. Doyle, Signor Piatti, Herr Ries, M. Bernard, Herr Schreurs and M. Daubert; and on the same night a sonata for violin and harp, written for Mad. Spohr, an excellent performer on the latter instrument. Since then three quartets have been given—each twice,—a quintet, trio, and other instrumental pieces, to say nothing of several vocal compositions, all of which have been received with decided approbation. The reception of the double quartet in D minor, on Monday last, was such as to leave no doubt as to the opinion of the audience on the subject, and we hope that a repetition of the work will give another opportunity for the public to confirm their judgment. The executants in the first quartet were Messrs. Vieuxtemps, Carrodus, Schreurs, and Signor Piatti, in the second Herr Ries, Messrs. Watson, Webb, and and Paque, the ensemble, we need hardly say, in such hands, was literally irreproachable. No less happy was Mozart's quartet in B flat (No. 4, Op, 10), given for the first time. In this the charming adagio was rendered to such perfection as very narrowly to miss an "encore," the exquisite violoncello playing of Signor Piatti contributing in no small degree to the result. There was but one instrumental solo—a Partita—or series of dance pieces (somewhat after the fashion of the suite de pièces of which specimens have been presented at these concerts), by John Sebastian Bach, consisting of overture, gavotte, passepied (an old French dance in $^3_8$ or $^2_4$ time), by no means unlike the "Harmonious Blacksmith" of Handel, in a minor key, sarabande, bourrée (lively dance in common time, beginning with an odd crotchet) and echo. To all these movements Mr. Charles Hallé contributed due effect, and although as a piece it is not of that kind we should care to hear frequently repeated, still there is sufficient of interest, if only on account of its remarkable quaintness, to warrant its being introduced as a novelty. Dussek's sonata in B flat for violin and pianoforte, given for the fourth time, bids fair to become as popular as the well known "Kreutzer" of Beethoven, having indeed the same desirable effect on the audience, that of keeping them together until the last note, which the very familiar "Kreutzer" (to be repeated next Monday, by the way) invariably does. That Messrs. Vieuxtemps and Hallé should be perfectly at home in Dussek's sonata was only to be expected; neverthless the performance would have been brought to a more affective conclusion had the last movement been taken somewhat faster, much of the vigour and brilliancy being lost by retarding the time in the rondo finale. At Exeter Hall and St. Martin's Hall we have frequently had occasion to speak in terms of high praise of Miss Banks and were very glad to find her announced for the Monday Popular Concerts. In Dussek's Canzonet "Name the glad day" and Mendelssohn's song "The Charmer" (first time here), Miss Banks's pure liquid voice and charmingly unaffected manner captivated all hearers, and although the hearty and long continued applause at the end of both might have fairly warranted her accepting what was in each instance a genuine encore, the young lady modestly contented herself by returning to bow her acknowledgments. Mr. Benedict was, as usual the accompanist, and highly distinguished himself in Mendelssohn's song.

Stockholm.—The musical season commenced, as usual, in the beginning of September last. Opera again played the principal part, although up to now nothing especially new has been produced. Mozart's Zauberflöte, Don Juan, and Figaro's Hochzeit; Weber's Oberon and Freischütz; Flotow's Stradella and Verdi's Trovatore have been given. The opera which attracted most especially was Don Juan, which drew a numerous and educated audience, who were highly pleased with the performance as a whole, as well as with the exertions of the various artists individually. Mad. Michaeli, formerly Mad. Michal*, who was well known in Germany, particularly distinguished himself as Agatha, Donna Anna, Rezia, and the Countess in Figaro's Hochzeit. Susanna was sung by Mlle. Gelhaar, and Figaro by Herr Landberg, with a good deal of humour. Stradella was played alternately by Herr Richard (who is of German origin) and Herr Arnaldsen, Mad. Michaeli representing Leonora. The opera of Gustav Wasa, after the plot of Scribe (and Auber's) Gustavus III., with music by the German composer Naumann, rescored by Franz Lachner, was performed once.

* Who played the Queen in the Huguenots at Her Majesty's Theatre in the spring of 1860.

Digitized by Google

Letter to the Editor.

SACRED MUSIC.

Sir,—It cannot be questioned that one so learned as your editorial self in all that relates to the "divine art," must be acquainted with my fame, as being the first to ascertain the proportions between musical sounds. You will remember (Macrob. in Somn. Scip. ii. I.) that my attention was first arrested by this question in a village in the island. Samos, if my memory does not play me false, through listening to the different sounds produced by the hammers of some smiths beating out a bar of iron. I discovered this diversity of sound to be owing to the different weights of the hammers. After having adjusted hammers to express the different notes of music, I next tried to produce the same proportions between the tones of musical strings, by applying weights to stretch them, and succeeded pretty tol-lol—to use one of your good old Great-British figures of speech. Ha! ha! I often enjoy a good laugh over those puzzling, but merry times of yore, with my friend Pherecydes—the dear old soul! But I rest my claim to be heard on matters musical rather on the position I have for ages filled, and still continue with honour to fill here above, than upon what I might advance in connection with myself whilst on terra firma, viz., conductor of the music of the spheres: a post conferred npon me by the gods, in consideration of my earthly (but not earthy) discoveries. You, Mr. Editor, well know how I formerly travelled, and taught the higher sciences, in which I gave to music a very prominent position, through Phœnicia, Chaldea, India, and Egypt. Also how I afterwards visited Italy in the days of Tarquin the "Botty," and opened a school at Croto (or Croton, as some denominate it), a city on the Gulf of Tarentum. You also are aware that I obliged my scholars to listen in silence for two—and sometimes five years—before I allowed them to ask me any questions; a plan which if reversed in these days (on earth, of course) would be of infinite benefit to all concerned. I mean, grant your teachers a like period of time for replying to the queries of the taught. Let me here also advise certain divines of your country, who have lately made themselves obnoxious to the clerical powers that be, to take a hint from another method of mine when in the flesh—always to teach publicly the vulgar doctrine, and communicate their real opinions to a very select few. But this by the way.

I observe my exordium is becoming somewhat lengthy and diffusive, so must make compensation by cutting short the sermon itself. You see, as it is so long since I was personally known below, I deemed it necessary to say a few words relative to my own merits, before venturing to take others to task—always an ungracious though often a necessary one. I was perusing with great zest the Musical World (we all subscribe to it up here), on Sunday last (earthly computation), and was greatly surprised at some remarks made at a meeting held in Edinburgh in connection with the Association for the Revival of Sacred Music in Scotland. "The people don't like organs!!!" Then I must say the people don't like music—'tis as true as that effect follows cause. Dissolve your association at once, gentlemen, and rush to the ranks of the Quakers—I'm told they are getting thin. Heavens! what would I not have given to have had an organ in my school! or one of Evans's harmoniums! But possibly (and this was my principal reason for troubling you) the Scotch may yet be unaware of the existence of the latter instrument. This, gentlemen of the Association, is no "kist o' whistles," but a veritable sweet-many-tongued syren, who will tempt your bark on to no rock save the one of Ages. Let me, then—the conductor of the music of the spheres—entreat you, with all the fervency native to my character, to come out nationally for a stock of harmoniums, and be no longer scared from all propriety by the bugbears of superstition. Go in, I beseech you, Highlanders and Lowlanders, for music, genuine music. Let it no longer be justly but basely said (if said at all) that "one man sings what he calls bass, and another another thing which he calls bass!" Engage good masters, purchase good instruments, and determine to be behind no people on earth in celebrating the praises of your Maker in a manner worthy the high and holy object. But I must desist, for we give a grand concert this evening (your computation), in honour of a certain celestial who has written a musical scena describing the varied state of perfection arrived at by the nations of the earth in the cultivation of the "divine art," and I grieve to say I nowhere observe a bar (good in one sense) to Scotland.

I am, Sir, with most profound reverence,

The Shade of Pythagoras.

Borne on an arrow from Cupid's bow, and dropped into a P.O. on the banks of the Orwell.

Provincial.

From the Birmingham Journal of February 16th, we extract the following account of a:—

"New Organ for Trinity Church Coventry.—"We understand the vestry of Trinity Church, Coventry, determined to have a magnificent organ built, to take the place of the present one, which is fairly worn out. The order for the instrument has been given to Forster and Andrews of Hull, who have for many years enjoyed a high reputation for building first-class organs. This will have many peculiarities, not the least of which will consist of the instrument being supported on ornamental iron brackets, fixed to the south transept walls. To such of our readers as are interested in organs, we below give its contents:"—

Compass—Great Organ C C to G
Ditto Choir Organ C C to G
Ditto Swell Organ C C to G
Ditto Pedal Organ C C to F

GREAT ORGAN.

		Pipes
1. Bourdon	wood	12
2. Teneroon	metal	44
3. Open Diapason	metal	56
4. Horn Diapason	metal	56
5. Stopt Diapason	metal	56
6. Principal	metal	56
7. Wald Flute	wood	44
8. Twelfth	metal	56
9. Fifteenth	metal	56
10. Sesquialtera, 4 Ranks	metal	224
11. Mixture, 3 ranks	metal	168
12. Possune	metal	56
13. Solo Trumpet	metal	44
14. Clarion	metal	56
		984

SWELL ORGAN.

		Pipes
1. Sub Bass	wood	12
2. DoubleDiapason,	wood	44
3. Open Diapason	metal	56
4. Stopt Diapason	wood	56
5. Principal	metal	56
6. German Gamba,	metal	44
7. Fifteenth	metal	56
8. Piccolo	wood	56
9. Mixture	metal	168
10. Contra Fagotta	metal	44
11. Cornopean	metal	56
12. Hautboy	metal	44
13. Clarion	metal	56
14. Tremulant
		748

PEDAL ORGAN.

		Pipes
1. Grand Open Diapason	wood	30
2. Bourdon	wood	30
3. Principal	metal	30
4. Fifteenth	metal	33
5. Trombone, wood and	metal	30
6. Pedal Octave, wood and	metal	60
		210

CHOIR ORGAN.

		Pipes
1. Dulciana, Bass	metal	12
2. Duciana, treble	metal	12
3. Viola di Gamba	metal	44
4. Stopt Diapason	wood	56
5. Gemshorn	metal	56
6. Flute	wood	56
7. Fifteenth	metal	56
8. Dulciana Mixture	metal	168
9. Cromorne	metal	37
		529

COUPLERS.

1. Great to Pedals
2. Choir to Pedals
3. Swell to Pedals
4. Swell to Great
5. Swell Octave to Great
6. Swell to Choir

7 Choir to Great
Six Composition Pedals.

SUMMARY.

Great Organ	14 Register	984	Pipes
Choir Organ	9 Ditto	529	„
Swell Organ	14 Ditto	748	„
Pedal Organ	6 Ditto	210	„
Couplets	7 Ditto
	50 Registers and	2471	Pipes

At the last Monday Evening Concert, at Birmingham, a "Beethoven night" was given by Mr. Stimpson, who, finding the regular Miscellaneous Concerts of little or no avail, "wisely," as the Daily Post remarked,' "has recourse to the good offices of one of the great masters of his art, and under the banner of Beethoven, opened a gentle crusade against the insidious spirit of indifference which for some time past had been gradually freezing up the once plenteous streams of patronage." The result was not in all respects commensurate with the occasion. The attendance, however, was nearly double that of the recent Monday nights, and was so far satisfactory. The grand pieces were the Kreutzer sonata, for pianoforte and violin, and the trio, No. 1, Op. 1, for piano, violin, and violoncello. The performers were, Miss Summerhayes (piano), Miss Rosetta Piercy (violin), and Mr. Harrison (violoncello). Of the performance generally, the Post thus speaks:

Digitized by Google

"We were glad to perceive that the interest excited by the proceedings was not confined to the small section alluded to, but that the great body of the audience appeared both willing and capable to appreciate such lengthy, elevated, and elaborate works as the famous C minor Sonata for piano-forte and violin, and the first trio for piano-forte and strings, in E flat, which experienced so warm a reception at one of the recent Musical Union Concerts. The first mentioned will alone suffice to indicate the character of the entertainment, and the artistic pretensions of the instrumental executants, on whom the onus of the performance devolved. It was, to say the least, a daring feat for two young ladies like Miss Cecilia Summerhayes and Miss Rosetta Piercy (piano-forte and violin), to undertake the execution of a work which has tasked even the matured powers of such artistes as Miss Arabella Goddard and M. Vieuxtemps, and the most we had anticipated was a showy but undignified scramble through the very intricate score, redeemed here and there by the graceful execution of some passage of moderate difficulty. The result, however, was agreeably disappointing. Without pretending to assert that the performance, viewed in any light, was irreproachable, or even that the degree of mechanical proficiency evidenced by the two ladies was always employed to the best advantage, we must allow that a very creditable rendering of a very onerous work rewarded the faith of the sanguine and rebuked the apprehensions of the sceptical. The first movement was taken at excessive speed, or rather acquired in the heat of a performance in which the struggle with mechanical difficulties was easily calculated to divert attention from considerations of time and expression. A little unsteadiness and confusion from a similar cause was even more apparent in the finale presto.; but the vocal expressiveness which distinguished the adagio cantabile, the sportive grace with which the scherzo e trio was rendered, and the general attention to light and shade manifested in parts where mechanical considerations might have been deemed paramount and all absorbing, redeemed these accidental defects, and showed that with a few more rehearsals this last addition to our Monday evening repertory will be unexceptionable. The trio, No. 1, Op. 1, which constituted the second great feature of the concert, in which the two young ladies were reinforced by Mr. Harrison, the violoncellist, was even more satisfactory. The tuneful character of the work recommended it more powerfully also to the taste of the assembly, and the applause which greeted its conclusion was as warm and hearty as the most popular ballad could have evoked. The other instrumental performances consisted of the overture to Prometheus, and the andante from Beethoven's second Symphony, executed by Mr. Stimpson on the organ.

From the Bury Free Press, we learn that the Athenæum Choral Society gave a performance of sacred music at the Lecture Hall, Bury St. Edmunds, on Tuesday evening, the 19th February. The principal vocalists were, Mrs. R. Paget, Mr. R. Paget and Mr. Prattle. The programme included Mozart's Twelfth Mass, and selections from Handel's Judas Maccabeus and Mr. Costa's Eli. Mr. and Mrs. Paget were both loudly applauded in their various pieces, the lady obtaining an enthusiastic encore in the "Evening Prayer" from Eli. The performance reflected great credit on Mr. Nunn, the conductor of the society.

The Leeds Mercury, in noticing the opening of a new organ for Trinity Church at Knaresborough, remarks:—

"It is scarcely twelve months since the desirability of procuring an organ for this church was discussed at a meeting held in the vestry, the harmonium used not being considered sufficient in power either to direct or sustain the voices of the congregation. Although a comparatively large sum was required, an appeal for aid was liberally responded to not only by those who attend the church, but by many who are not in the habit of doing so. The principal contributors were the Rev. T. Collins, 25*l*.; Sir C. Slingsby, Bart., 25*l*.; B. T. Woodd, Esq., M.P., 20*l*.; and Mr. Gell, 10*l*. Altogether upwards of 200*l*. were subscribed. In furtherance of the movement, the co-operation of a number of ladies was secured, and a bazaar was held in September last which proved successful. The building of the organ was entrusted to Messrs. Foster and Andrews, of Hull. Tuesday last was fixed for its opening, and the organist engaged for the occasion was Mr. J. Dent Davidson, of Leeds. The choral part of the service consisted of Te Deum and Jubilate, Birch, in G; anthem, "In Jewry" (W. Clarke), and hymns (Litchfield, Cassell, the Old Hundredth); Ebden's Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in C; anthem, "I will lift up mine eyes;" and hymns (Darwell and Ely). Two excellent sermons were preached by the Rev. J. Palmes, vicar of Weeton. The collections amounted to 15*l*. 11*s*. The entire cost of the organ (310*l*.) is defrayed. The organ comprises two full sets of keys and a pedal-board of twenty-nine notes."

The same journal supplies a list of the stops and the number of pipes belonging to each organ:—

Great Organ.	Pipes
1. Open Diapason	56
2. Horn Diapason	44
3. Stopt Diapason Bass	12
4. Claribel	44
5. Dulciana	44
6. Flute	44
7. Principal	56
8. Twelfth	56
9. Fifteenth	56
10. Spare slide.
11. Spare slide.
	412

Pedal Organ.
1. Violin, 16 feet open	29

Swell Organ.	Pipes
1. Double Diapason	56
2. Open Diapason	56
3. Stopt Diapason	56
4. Principal	56
5. Fifteenth	56
6. Cornopean	56
7. Oboe	44
	380

Couplers.
1. Swell to great.
2. Great to pedals.
3. Swell to pedals.

The wish of the subscribers was to have an instrument possessing a variety of pleasing effects rather than immense power. Mr. Davidson (who was for a long period pupil of Mr. Charles Hallé) did full justice to the organ and choir, by his judicious selection of voluntaries exhibiting the fine solo stops as well as the richness of the full organ. The diapasons were massive and full, the claribel and stopt flute especially clear (Rink's "Flute Concerto" being selected to display their capabilities.) The oboe is a fine mellow-toned stop, and the full organ, coupled, gave so large a body of tone as to cause the loss of a sesquialtra and trumpet (for which the great organ is prepared) scarcely to be regretted.

The re-opening of the Hall of the Mechanics' Institute at Halifax appears to have been an interesting "solemnity." The Halifax Courier devotes half a column to a description of the building, from which we can only afford to quote the following:—

"Last night, this Hall was re-opened, after having been closed a few weeks, the interior in the mean time having been thoroughly renovated and greatly beautified. It is now decidedly a handsome room, unquestionably the finest public room in the town. The painting and colouring throughout are magnificent. A new gallery, capable of accommodating about two hundred and thirty persons, has been erected by Mr. Pulman, from plans by Mr. Rich. Horsfall, architect. The whole alterations have been carried out under the supervision of a committee, composed of Messrs. J. Stansfeld, S. Wainhouse, Henry Foster, and A. C. Foster, members of the Board of Directors. The total cost has been about 310*l*., towards which sum 250*l*. has already been promised."

The concert by which the important event was inaugurated would seem to have afforded universal satisfaction. The following description of the performance is amputated from the body of our contemporary's article, and we are glad to hear that since the ope- our contemporary is doing well:—

"It was decided—and very wisely as we think—to re-open the Hall with a grand concert, which accordingly took place last night. In spite of the exceedingly unfavourable character of the weather, which, no doubt, kept large numbers away, the room was filled in the gallery and back seats, the only deficiency, and that but a slight one, being in the front seats. The effect of the new decorations was really magnificent, and—what is even more important—we are glad to say that the acoustic deficiencies formerly apparent in the room have been completely removed. One of the artists engaged was Mad. Catherine Hayes, and she pronounces it an easy room to sing in, while we ourselves can testify that the very faintest tone can be excellently heard therein. In addition to Mad. C. Hayes, there were Miss Lascelles, the celebrated contralto, who is well remembered in Halifax—Mr. Tennant, a capital tenor with a fine voice—Signor Burdini, a good baritone—the members of the Halifax Glee and Madrigal Society also giving their valuable services. The instrumentalists were the eminent violinist Herr Becker, and Mr. F. Berger the pianist, the conductor being Mr. R. S. Burton. From first to last the performance was a complete success. The encores were frequent, and they would have been almost continuous had not some check been interposed in the first part; but in the second part the enthusiasm of the audience knew no bounds, and the encores had to be given as demanded. Perhaps Mad. Hayes and Herr Becker were the most severely tried in this respect, the ballad singing of the lady, and the marvellous violin playing of the gentleman evidently creating a sensation. Miss Lascelles, Mr. Tennant, and Signor Burdini were likewise loudly applauded and encored—both of which they well merited, while the members of the Glee and Madrigal Society found favour not only with those who are accustomed to their performances, but with those who, like Mad. Hayes, heard them last night for the first time. On all hands were heard remarks on the excellence of the performance, as well as on the beauty of the room, and perhaps we cannot better describe both than by saying that they were worthy of each other."

Digitized by Google

A concert of some pretensions was given at the Town Hall, Doncaster, on Thursday evening, the 21st ult., by Mr. W. Booth, the pianist and conductor of the Harmonic Society. The special features of the programme were the grand trio in C minor of Beethoven, and the grand trio of Mendelssohn in the same key. Mr. Booth had for his coadjutors Mr. Hes (fiddle), and Mr. Wilson (violoncello). Some choruses were sung very effectively by the members of the Harmonic Society.

A correspondent from Ipswich informs us that the fourth monthly series of Wednesday and Saturday Popular Concerts was brought to a close on Saturday last. So great has been the demand for admission, that on several occasions hundreds have not been able to procure standing room. Never was want more palpable than a Music Hall in this town. The only place sufficiently large is the Corn Exchange, which was built for an opposite purpose than that of conveying sound. To give an idea of the place it is only necessary to state that sundry popular singers have publicly asserted that it was the "very worst" place they ever sung in. The Mechanics' Lecture-hall is well adapted for the conveyance of musical sounds, but it is not sufficiently large. The question of a Music Hall is continually being raised, and its want continually being felt. Sites are pointed out that could be made available, but no one with sufficient influence seems to take the initiative in the matter. The programmes for the month have consisted of glees, part songs, ballads, and selections from popular operas. The instrumental has comprised dance music, operatic selections, Mendelssohn's "Wedding March," and the overtures to Don Pasquale, Der Freischütz, Men of Promethuss, Fra Diavolo, Zampa, &c. On the evening of Ash-Wednesday there was an extraordinary rush to hear the Creation, which was most satisfactorily performed. Mr. W. Norman conducted, and Mr. J. Stidolph presided at one of the new patent Minima organs of the Messrs. Stidolphs of Ipswich. The leading vocalists were Miss Matt, Miss Bacon, Mr. Matt and Mr. Hayward. The People's Concerts, which are unwisely continued on the same evenings as the Popular Concerts, are carried on under the conductorship of Mr. Charles Gunning. They are kept up by public subscription, resulting from the present playing at soldiers mania. The committee to "increase their popularity," not satisfied, it is presumed, with their other arrangements, advertised Mr. and Miss Bowmer from the London Concerts to give a selection of vocal music for a number of nights; but through some cause which has not transpired their appearance was limited to one evening. [Who are the Misses Bowmer?—Ed.]

The Evening Mail renders a glowing account of the extra concert given by the Ancient Concert Society at the Rotunda, Dublin, which includes Mad. Catharine Hayes and party, in addition to a section of the Society's Choir. Of course Mad. Hayes was the principal attraction, and of course the programme was made to exhibit her talents in the most varied light. Of the whole performance we extract the following notice from our contemporary just named:—

Madame Hayes, in the scena from Der Freischütz, "Before my eyes beheld him," manifested those qualities which have so long endeared her to so many publics, and left her without an equal as a songstress amongst her own countrywomen. The recitatives were declaimed with genuine dramatic fervour, and the aria "Softly sighs," rendered with a pathos quite entrancing. She also sang "The Fisher's Bride," and "The Last Rose of Summer," with all that artistic excellence which has so long distinguished her. The latter was unanimously re-demanded. Mr. Tennant gave, with felicity of tone and style, Campana's romance "Amami," and Blumenthal's ballad, "When we are parted." In the latter he was encored. We do not know a gentleman at present before the public with a fairer career before him than Mr. Tennant, and we trust that his success will incite to still larger exertion. In the duo "Per boschi," with Madame Hayes, and the quartet, "Pour les attraits," he evinced his ability as a concerted singer. Miss Lascelles sang, "Che fara senza," but it was taken too fast, and the effect of this splendid music of Gluck utterly lost. The fair lady made amends in Balfe's "Reaper and the flowers," which she rendered with true feeling. Of Herr Becker's playing of the two movements from Mendelssohn's concert in E minor, we can only say that more finish, delicacy, and truthful intonation, with sufficient execution, is very rarely exhibited. He also played a fantasia on "Hungarian airs," which showed his powers over the instrument in another style, and both equally delighted the audience. Dussek's sonata in B flat was well interpreted by Mr. F. Berger on the pianoforte, and Herr Becker, violin. Mr. F. Berger played "The Harmonious Blacksmith" with such neatness and precision as not to be passed without commendation. Of the part singing by the small and select choir we could not speak too highly. "The Chapel," by Kreutzer, "Slumber, dearest," Mendelssohn, and "The Soldier's love," Kucken, were rendered with such charm of tone and feeling as to be unanimously re-demanded. The concert formed a happy termination to the extraordinary successes of Madame Hayes and her party during the concerts given at the Rotunda in the past week.

PATERSON and SONS' Guinea Edition of the VOCAL MELODIES of SCOTLAND, edited by the late Finlay Dun and the late John Thomson, Esq., containing 144 Songs, full sized Music Plates, Four Volumes in One, elegantly Bound and Gilt, 21s.; in rich Fancy Bindings, from 25s., free by post for 2s. extra.

"Among the really cheap musical publications which are now almost continuously issuing from the press, one of the most remarkable is the work now before us.—Scotsman.

Paterson and Sons, Musicsellers, Edinburgh and Glasgow.

REPEAL of the PAPER DUTY.—The TENTH ANNUAL PUBLIC MEETING of the Association for Promoting the Repeal of the Taxes on Knowledge will be held at the Whittington Club, Arundel Street, Strand, Wednesday, March 13, 1861. The Meeting will be addressed by Acton S. Ayrton, M.P.; G. Augustus Sala; George Thompson; Dr. John Watts, and Alexander Young, Secretary to the Bituminized Paper Pipe Company. Doors open at 7, Chair taken at 8. Tickets for the Platform may be had of the Whittington Club, and at the Office of the Association, 162, Strand, W. C.

MESSRS. KLINDWORTH, H. BLAGROVE, and DAUBERT'S Second CONCERT, at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Tuesday evening next, at half-past 8 o'clock. Mozart's Trio in E, C. A. Franck's Trio in F sharp minor, G. A. Macfarren's Quintet in G minor. Vocalist, Miss Palmer. Programme illustrated by G. A. Macfarren. Tickets at Cramer's Ewer's, Schott's, Chappell's, and Bett's Warehouses.

ST. CHRYSOSTOM'S CHURCH, Everton, Liverpool.—An Organist, capable of directing a Choir and conducting the Service efficiently, will be REQUIRED about the end of April. An organ of considerable power and variety, containing two complete manuals and twenty-eight stops, is now being built for the church by Mr. Willis of London.—Apply to Mr. F. J. Eaton, Queen's Insurance Buildings, Liverpool.

CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS.—Just published, a new and splendid Library Edition of the whole of Chopin's celebrated Mazurkas, complete in one volume, music size, edited by J. W. DAVISON, with Portrait of Chopin, and Life and Critical Notice by the Editor. Superbly bound, 10s. 6d.

MENDELSSOHN'S SONGS WITHOUT WORDS.—New and complete Edition of the Six Books in One Volume. Edited and with a Preface, by J. W. DAVISON, and Portrait by JOHN LYNCH. Splendidly bound in crimson and gold. Price 7s. 6d.

BOOSEY'S FIFTY SHORT VOLUNTARIES for the Harmonium, arranged and selected by Rudolf Nordmann, from the works of the greatest masters. Price 3s. 6d. in cloth.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

STRAUSS, LANNER, and LABITZKY.—Just published, in a large book, music size, price 3s. 6d., Booseys' 100 Waltzes by Strauss, Lanner, and Labitzky for Pianoforte, including the best specimens of each composer. Also, the same work for Violin, 1s.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

THE HARMONIUM MUSEUM.—A Third Edition of this unrivalled work is now ready, price 7s. 6d., in cloth, containing 100 Sacred and Secular subjects by the greatest masters. Arranged for Harmonium by Nordmann; with an introductory article by Henry Smart for the use of persons unacquainted with the instrument.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER.—New and complete Edition. Arranged for the Pianoforte by Henry Smart. Price 3s.; or, handsomely bound in cloth, 5s. Also, Mozart's Twelfth Mass, in the same form.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

Digitized by Google

GUINEA EDITION

OF

BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS.

Just published, in two volumes, superbly bound in cloth, price each 10*s.* 6*d.*,

BOOSEY AND SONS'

NEW EDITION OF

BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS FOR PIANOFORTE,

Edited by W. DORRELL; with Life of BEETHOVEN by MACFARREN, and Portrait by Lynch.

THIS edition is beautifully printed from newly-engraved Plates, and is the most correct one published.

CONTENTS OF VOL. I.
Price 10s. 6d.

Sonata, No. 1, Op. 2, F minor.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 2, A.
Sonata, No. 3, Op. 2, C.
Sonata, Op. 7, E flat.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 10, C minor.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 10, F.
Sonata, No. 3, Op. 10, D.
Sonata Pathetique, Op. 13, C minor.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 14, E.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 14, G.
Sonata, Op. 22, B flat.
Sonata, with Funeral March, Op. 26, A flat.
Sonata quasi una Fantasia (known as the "Moonlight Sonata"), No. 1, Op. 27, C sharp minor.
Sonata quasi una Fantasia, No. 2, Op. 27, E flat.
Sonata Pastorale, Op. 28, D.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 31, G.

CONTENTS OF VOL. II.
Price 10s. 6d.

Sonata, No. 2, Op. 31, D minor.
Sonata, No. 3, Op. 31, E flat.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 49, G minor.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 49, G.
Sonata, Op. 53, C.
Sonata, Op. 54, F.
Sonata Appassionata, Op. 57, F minor.
Sonata, Op. 78, F sharp.
Sonata, Op. 79, G.
Sonata Caractéristique, Op. 81, E flat ("Les Adieux").
Sonata, Op. 90, E minor.
Sonata, Op. 101, A.
Grand Sonata, Op. 106, B flat.
Sonata, Op. 109, E.
Sonata, Op. 110, A flat.
Sonata, Op. 111, C minor.

"There are many editions of Beethoven's sonatas, German, French, and English; but there is not one that we have seen, from which, taking all things into account—correctness and clearness of the text, elegance of form, and moderation of price—we have derived so much satisfaction as from the edition now before us. The text, after undergoing the revision of so able an editor as Mr. Dorrell, may be expected to be immaculate; and so, after a close examination, we find it to be; and the clearness and beauty of the paper and printing are not to be excelled. The value of the edition is much enhanced by an able and interesting essay on the life and works of Beethoven from the pen of Mr. G. A. Macfarren; and there is, moreover, an excellent portrait of he composer."—Daily News.

BOOSEY'S MONTHLY VIOLINIST, price 6d.—The First Number of this Publication will appear March 1st, and will contain a Selection of 13 Airs from Balfe's new opera. "Bianca;" Laurent's Daisy Waltzes on the Buckley's Songs; Burckhardt's Knickerbocker Polka; Laurent's Christmas Waits Quadrille; La Chatelaine Valse, Petchi-i-i Polka, and Flocon de Neige Galop. Boosey's Monthly Violinist will comprise the newest and most popular Music of the day, short Airs, with Variations, &c., forming a most attractive Miscellany for Amateurs.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S ORCHESTRAL OVERTURES, arranged by LAMOTTE. Price 8s. each for full band; 5s. each for small band.

1. Crown Diamonds, Auber.
2. Zampa, Herold.
3. Zanetta, Auber.
4. Oberon, Weber.
5. Fra Diavolo. Auber.
6. Der Freischütz, Weber.
7. Domino Noir, Auber.
8. Gazza Ladra, Rossini.
9. Dame Blanche, Boieldieu.
10. Masaniello, Auber.
11. Part du Diable, Auber.
12. Guillaume Tell, Rossini.

KUHE'S NEW TRANSCRIPTION of SCHUBERT'S FAVOURITE MELODIES, as short and effective Pieces for the Pianoforte, price 2s. 6d. each.

1. Serenade.
2. Ave Maria.
3. Adieu.
4. The Wanderer.
5. The praise of Tears.
6. Thine is my heart.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

OPERAS IN ENGLISH.—Dinorah 12s.; Il Trovatore, 12s.; Satanella, 15s.; La Traviata, 12s.; Don Juan, 18s.; Figaro, 16s.; Sonnambula, 12s. 6d.; Norma, 10s. 6d.; Lucrezia, 16s.; Iphigenia in Tauris, 8s.; Faust, 12s. 6d.; Fidelio, 15s.; Der Freischütz, 12s. 6d.; Ernani, 15s.; Il Barbière, 10s.; Zauberflöte, 12s. 6d. These Operas are complete for Voice and Pianoforte, with English Words, and the original Foreign Text, in handsome cloth volumes. BOOSEY'S Editions must be ordered.—Holles Street.

OPERAS, SOLO.—Dinorah, 7s. 6d.; Satanella, 5s.; La Traviata, 5s.; Il Trovatore, 5s.; Rigoletto, 5s.; Ernani, 5s.; Luisa Miller, 5s.; Vêpres Siciliennes, 7s. 6d.; Crown Diamonds, 6s.; Don Pasquale, 5s.; Martha, 5s.; Les Huguenots, 7s. 6d.; Don Juan, 5s.; Fra Diavolo, 5s.; Fille du Regiment, 4s.; Lucia di Lammermoor. 5s.; Lucrezia Borgia, 4s.; Puritani, 6s.; Norma, 4s.; Sonnambula, 4s. These Operas are complete for Pianoforte, in cloth, gilt letters, each with a beautiful Frontispiece, printed on India paper, and an Introduction describing the plot and music. BOOSEYS' Editions must be ordered.—Holles Street.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

OF

DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.,

244 REGENT STREET. (JUST OUT.)

"MAY."—New Duettino, by HENRY SMART, composed for equal Voices. Price 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Henry Smart, in this melodious and truly exquisite little duet, has, if possible, even surpassed in elegance and vocal finish, the pieces so warmly eulogised in our last impression."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THIS WORLD IS A GARDEN," by GEORGE LODER. Comic song. Price 2s. 6d.

"The well-known and popular song introduced with such invariable success, by Mr. John Rouse, in Stirling Coyne's lively operetta, The Pets of the Parterre. As all our readers must have heard, and hearing, applauded it, it is enough to say that we entirely agree with their unanimously favourable verdict."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"IN A LEAFY GARDEN," by GEORGE LODER. Ballad. Price 2s. 6d.

"Composed for that careful and promising tenor, Mr. Richard Seymour, is in a different style to This World is a Garden, and shows that the composer, Mr. George Loder (the talented conductor of the Lyceum orchestra), can give musical expression to sentiment no less than to humour. It is graceful, well written, and last, not least, essentially vocal."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE BANNER OF ST. GEORGE," by BALFE, a new National Song. The words by John Brougham, written for, and dedicated to, THE ST. GEORGE'S RIFLE CORPS, is published, beautifully illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," Révérie by W. Kuhé, on Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), and "I love YOU," Sims Reeves's popular ballad, transcribed for the Piano by Emile Berger, are published, price 3s. each, by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL," by W. H. WEISS, composed and sung by the composer, with the greatest success, as well as by Mr. WINN and other vocalists of celebrity, is published, handsomely illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

BALFE'S NEWEST and most POPULAR SONGS.

	s.	d.
"I love YOU" (Sung by Sims Reeves)	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose" (Ditto)	3	0
"The Banner of St. George" (beautifully illustrated)	3	0
"If I could change" (Sung by Laura Baxter)	2	6
"I'm not in love, remember" (Madame Jenny Bauer)	2	6
"Oh! take me to thy heart again" (by Miss Poole)	2	0

Published by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W., where "I love YOU" may be obtained, transcribed for the Pianoforte by Emile Berger, price 3s.

TYROLEAN MOUNTAIN SONG, by T. MAUSS (Der Jodelplatz), arranged for the pianoforte, and dedicated to Mr. W. E. Jarrett, of Cheltenham, is just published, price 3s.

Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, S. W.

THE SILVER CORD WALTZ, by J. VON JOEL, (dedicated to Emile Berger), is now published, for the pianoforte, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, S. W.

ANDANTE in E flat, by GEORGIANA HOLMES, from a Quintet by FELICIEN DAVID, arranged for the pianoforte, and dedicated to Lady Scott, is just published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, S. W., where "Les Etoiles et leur Langage," Nocturne and "Air with Variations" (both composed by Georgiana Holmes), may be obtained, price 3s. each.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A COLLECTION of SANCTUSES, KYRIES, and DOXOLOGIES, in Score, and with Accompaniments, selected and arranged by J. E. RICHARDSON, Assistant Organist of Salisbury Cathedral, price 3s. 6d.

Salisbury: W. P. Aylward, New Canal.

London: Messrs. Cocks and Co., 6 New Burlington Street; Messrs. Addison and Co., 210 Regent Street; and Mr. J. Willis, 119 New Bond Street.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.

Their Catalogues, which contain a great variety of Music calculated for teaching purposes, may be had, post-free, on application.

London: 18 Hanover Square.

WANTED, for the Parish Church of Horncastle, an ORGANIST. He must be able to instruct and act as Choir Master. Salary £25 per annum. There is an excellent opening for a good musician as teacher, &c., in town and neighbourhood.—Address, Henry Nicholson, Churchwarden, Horncastle.

CONCERT AGENCY, &c.—Mr. VAN PRAAG begs respectfully to inform his patrons and friends that he has recently RETURNED from the United States of America, and solicits their former patronage, as Agent for Concerts, &c., &c. He is now ready to resume the Business, in which for many years he trusts he has afforded satisfaction.

All communications addressed, as heretofore, at Mr. Brettel's, 25 Rupert Street, Haymarket, W., will be immediately attended to.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 12 James Street, Buckingham Gate, in the Parish of St. Margaret, in the City of Westminster, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, March 2, 1861.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 39—No. 10 SATURDAY, MARCH 9, 1861 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

THE CHURCH OF ALL SAINTS, KENSINGTON PARK.

MENDELSSOHN'S ELIJAH.

Previous to the Consecration of the Church of All Saints, Kensington Park, the

ORATORIO OF ELIJAH

will be given therein, on Saturday afternoon, March 30th, with full Band, Organ, and Chorus, including in all 300 Performers.

PRINCIPAL VOCALISTS:

Miss LOUISA PYNE and Mad. LAURA BAXTER,

Mad. ALEXANDER NEWTON and Miss SUSAN PYNE,

Mr. WILBYE COOPER and Mr. W. H. WEISS.

Conductor—Dr. JAMES PECH.

Tickets, Half-a-Guinea each, in aid of the Completion Fund.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—The First New Philharmonic Concert this season will take place on Monday evening, March 11; the First Public Rehearsal Saturday afternoon, March 9, at half-past 2. Conductor, Dr. Wylde. Programme:—Overture—Egmont; violin concerto—Mendelssohn; Schubert's Grand Symphony in C; Weber's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat; overture, Alencoragin—Cherubini. Pianist, Miss Arabella Goddard; violin, M. Vieuxtemps, his first appearance at these concerts; vocalists Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, &c.; orchestra and choir of 300 performers. Subscription for the series of Six Concerts and Five Public Rehearsals:—Sofa stall, £2 2s.; balcony, first row, One Guinea and a-Half; second row, One Guinea.

Messrs Cramer and Co., 201 Regent Street; Keith, Prowse and Co., 48 Cheapside; Austin, Ticket Office, St. James's Hall; W. Graeffe Nicholls, Esq., Hon. Sec., 33 Argyll Street, W.

THE VOCAL ASSOCIATION.—ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Fifth Season, 1861. President—the Right Hon. the Earl of DUDLEY. Conductor—Mr. BENEDICT. FIRST CONCERT, Tuesday evening, March 12, when Miss ARABELLA GODDARD will perform prelude and fugue, ALLA TARANTELLA (J. S. BACH), and ALBION, fantasia on English airs, composed expressly for Miss ARABELLA GODDARD (BENEDICT). Subscription for the series of Five Concerts and one Conversazione—Sofa stalls (double tickets), £3 3s.; balcony stalls, front row (double tickets), £2 2s. Subscribers can secure the best places at Mr. MITCHELL'S, Royal library, 33, Old Bond-street, W. The remaining dates are Wednesdays, April 3 and 17; May 1 and 22; and June 19. The Conversazione will be given on Wednesday, May 22.

THE VOCAL ASSOCIATION, St. James's Hall.—On Tuesday Evening next, March 12th, at 8.—Miss Arabella Goddard, Miss Banks, Mad. Laura Baxter; the London Quintett Union (Messrs. Dando, Westlake, Webb H. Pettit, Reynolds), and Choir of 200 voices. Conductor, M. Benedict.

Tickets, 3s., 2s., and 1s. each, at Mr. Austin's Ticket Office, 28 Piccadilly.

THE ARION, Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.—The First Grand Orchestral Concert will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms on Friday, March 15, at 8 o'clock. Principal vocalists—Mad. Weiss, Mad. Gilbert, Miss Susanna Cole, Mdlle. Charlier, Miss Fosbroke, Mad. Andrea, Miss E. Boden. Mr. Wilbye Cooper, Mr. Wallworth and Mr. Weiss. Pianoforte, Miss ARABELLA GODDARD. Violin, M. VIEUXTEMPS. Accompanyists, Dr. Bennet Gilbert; organ, Mr. W. C. Filby; harp, Mr. Layland. Stalls, 5s.; reserved seats, 2s. 6d.; area, 1s. Tickets at the principal Musicsellers, and of Mr. Alfred Gilbert, 13 Berners Street.

THE LONDON CONCERT SEASON, 1861.—Mr. C. M. SHEE respectfully intimates to the Musical Profession that he continues to undertake the ARRANGEMENT of Concerts (public or private) as heretofore, at very moderate charges.

Address, S. Miles and Co., 105 Wardour Street, or 6 Lower John Street, Golden Square.

THE TWENTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT, ACCOUNTS, and BALANCE SHEET of the Mutual Life Assurance Society for the year 1860 are this day published, and may be had by a written or personal application to the Head Office, or to any of the Society's Agents.

CHARLES INGALL, Actuary.

The Mutual Life Assurance Society,
39 King Street, Cheapside, E.C., London, 20th Feb. 1861.

IN THE PRESS,

HOWARD GLOVER'S OPERA, "RUY BLAS," shortly to be performed at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

PREMIERE TARANTELLE, pour Piano, par BRINLEY RICHARDS, dédiée à M. Charles Hallé, 3s.

MISS AUGUSTA THOMSON begs to announce her RETURN from Paris for the Season. Letters for Concerts, Oratorios, Parties, &c., to be addressed to her residence, 36, Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, W.

MR. and MADAME R. SIDNEY PRATTEN beg to announce, that they have REMOVED to 38 Welbeck Street, Cavendish Square, W., where they will continue to give lessons on the Flute, Guitar, and Concertina.

MISS HELEN HOGARTH (Teacher of Singing) begs to inform her pupils and the public that she has RETURNED to town for the season, and has removed from Weymouth Street to No. 71 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square.

SIGNOR GIULIO REGONDI begs to announce that he has REMOVED to 27 Berner's Street, Oxford Street, W.

MR. HENRY HAIGH will remain in Town for the Season, and can accept ENGAGEMENTS for Operas, Concerts, and Oratorios.—205 Euston Road, N.W.

MR. and Mrs. H. C. LUNN beg to inform their Pupils and Friends that they have REMOVED from 23 Southampton Street, Bloomsbury, to 15 Great Coram Street, Russell Square.

MADAME OURY'S BRILLIANT FANTASIA on Jacobite Airs, 4s.—Madame Oury's Souvenirs d'Ecosse, 4s.—Madame Oury's "Auld Robin Gray," 4s.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, and Patterson & Sons, Edinburgh.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD'S NEW SOLO "ALBION," FANTASIA ON ENGLISH AIRS,

(By BENEDICT).

PERFORMING with the greatest success by Miss ARABELLA GODDARD at all the Concerts of the season, price 4s.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

NEW CANZONET JUST PUBLISHED.

"THE RAINBOW," by Mrs. J. HOLMAN ANDREWS. Written by the Rev. J. KEBLE. Dedicated to Miss Wood, North Cray Place, Kent. Price 2s. 6d.

London: Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201 Regent Street.

TWO MUSICAL SKETCHES for the PIANOFORTE dedicated to Mr. Charles Hallé, by JAMES LEA SUMMERS, price 2s. 6d. each, "are cleverly written and stamped with real musical feeling."—MUSICAL WORLD.

London:—Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210 Regent Street.

COLLARD and COLLARD'S NEW WEST-END ESTABLISHMENT, 16 Grosvenor Street, Bond Street, where all communications are to be addressed. Pianofortes of all classes for Sale and Hire.

CONGREGATIONAL HYMN and TUNE BOOK.—Third ten thousand. 106 Four-Part Tunes, with their Hymns, arranged for the Church, price sixpence; in cloth, 1s.; leather, 3s. Words, separate, one penny; in cloth, with Table and Indexes, threepence. Enclose stamps, or P.O. order to Rev. R. R. Chope, Upton Scudamore, Warminster.

TO ORGANISTS.—WANTED immediately, for the Parish Church of Beccles, in Suffolk, an efficient Organist and Choir Master. The salary will not exceed £40 per annum.—Application to be made to Mr. W. J. Sharpe, Churchwarden.

ARTICLED PUPIL.—The Organist of York Minster has a vacancy in his house for another Pupil.

REPEAL of the PAPER DUTY.—The TENTH ANNUAL PUBLIC MEETING of the Association for Promoting the Repeal of the Taxes on Knowledge will be held at the Whittington Club, Arundel Street, Strand, Wednesday, March 13, 1861. WILLIAM EWART, M.P., in the Chair. The Meeting will be addressed by ACTON S. AYRTON, M.P.; G. AUGUSTUS SALA; GEORGE THOMPSON; Dr. JOHN WATTS, and ALEXANDER YOUNG, Secretary to the Bituminized Paper Pipe Company. Doors open at 7, Chair taken at 8. Tickets for the Platform may be had at the Whittington Club, and at the Office of the Association, 162, Strand, W.C.

Digitized by Google

NEW AND POPULAR

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY

ASHDOWN AND PARRY, 18 HANOVER SQUARE.

G. A. OSBORNE. LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM Brilliant Fantasia. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. LES ENFANTS DE LA GARDE. Grande Marche brillante. Price 4s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. VEDRAI CARINO. Transcription (Don Juan). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. BATTI, BATTI. Transcription (Don Juan). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. THE MERMAID'S SONG. Transcription of Haydn's Canzonet. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. PRAEGER. MALBROOK. Brilliant Piece on the old French air. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. PRAEGER. JOCK O' HAZELDEAN. Fantasia. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

WILHELM GANZ. SANTA LUCIA. A brilliant transcription of the popular Neapolitan air. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE MAUSS. PROMETHEUS. Grand Galop brillant. Price 4s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

JULES BRISSAC. THE HARP THAT ONCE THRO' TARA'S HALLS. Transcription. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. JOSEPHINE. Mazurka de Salon. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. LA VALLÉE DES ROSES. Deuxième Mazurka de Salon. Price 3s. 6d.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. LE LANGAGE DES FLEURS. Troisième Mazurka de Salon.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

E. SILAS. ROMANCE. Price 2s. 6d.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

E. SILAS. IMPROMPTU (à la Mazurka). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

EMANUEL AGUILAR. THE BIRDS AT SUNSET. Characteristic Piece. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

STEPHEN HELLER. IN WALD UND FLUR. Troisième Suite de Promenades d'un Solitaire. 6 Nos. Price 3s. and 4s. each.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE KULLAK. LES ARPÈGES. Etude de Concert. Price 5s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE KULLAK. CAPUCINE. Legende. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN AND PARRY

(Successors to Wessel and Co.),

18 HANOVER SQUARE.

EWER & CO.'S LIST OF NEW PUBLICATIONS.

				s.	d.
BENEDICT, J. MALCOLM, Marche Triomphale	...	...	...	4	0
BERGER, FRANCESCO, Bon repos, chérie, Nocturne	...	...	...	2	0
,, Lena, Serenade	...	...	...	2	0
GAUDE, LOUIS DE LA, Evelyn, Polka Mazurka			...	2	0
GARIBALDI, Viva Italia, March and National Hymn (with Italian words)				2	0
JUNGMANN, A., Souvenance	...	...	...	2	6
KRUGER, W., Les Cloches du Soir	...	...	...	4	0
LISZT, J., Grand Paraphrase sur Il Trovatore	...	...	...	6	0
,, Rigoletto	...	...	...	6	0
,, Ernani	...	...	...	6	0
MAGNUS, H., Carnaval Napolitain	...	...	...	4	0
PACHER, J. A., Op. 9, La Harpe	...	...	...	4	0
,, Op. 34, Le Ruisseau	...	...	...	3	0
,, Op. 50, Twelve Melodious Studies		...	...	7	6
,, Op. 53, Tendresse	...	...	...	3	0
SCHULTHES, W., Op. 27, Stella Matutina, mélod. rélig.		...	...	2	6
SILAS, E., Op. 49, Costanza Impromptu		...	...	3	0
SPINDLER, F., L'Oisillon	...	...	...	2	6
WOLLENHAUPT, H. A., Op. 19, Grande Marche de Concert			...	3	0
,, Op. 23, La Gazelle	...	...	...	3	0
,, Op. 24, Galop di Bravura			...	4	0
,, Op. 26, Helene. Grand Valse Brillante			...	4	0
,, Cordelia. Schottisch	...	...	...	3	0
,, La Violette. Polka de Concert		...	...	3	0

MOLIQUE'S ORATORIO—"ABRAHAM."

Soprano Airs.—I will extol Thee, my God	...	...	...	4	0
,, Hear my prayer, O Lord	...	...	...	3	0
,, Unto Thee lift I up mine eyes	...	...	...	4	6
Contralto Air.—They kept not the law	...	...	...	1	6
Tenor Airs.—Who walketh uprightly	...	...	...	2	6
,, Pour out thy heart before the Lord		...	...	2	6
Baritone Airs.—Lead me, O Lord, in Thy righteousness		...	...	3	0
,, Let there be no strife	...	...	...	2	6
,, The joy of my heart is ceased	...	...	...	4	0
,, Lord have mercy upon me	...	...	...	4	6
Duets.—Cast out this bondwoman. Alto and Baritone			...	4	6
,, It is of the Lord's great mercies. Soprano and Baritone			...	3	0
Trio.—Alto, Tenor, and Bass. Let all those rejoice			...	3	0
Quartet.—S. A. T. & B. Go in peace before the Lord			...	4	6
March.—Arranged for Pianoforte Solo	...	...	...	2	6
,, ,, ,, Duet	...	...	...	4	0
,, ,, Organ (arranged by W. T. BEST)			...	3	0

EWER & CO. 87 REGENT STREET,

Universal Circulating Musical Library.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S ORIGINAL WORKS FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

TARANTELLE, Dedicated to CHARLES HALLE, Esq. 4s.

"We may confidently predict a speedy and lasting popularity to this brilliant piece, which is unapproached by what its composer has hitherto produced. . . .

"The character of the 'Tarantelle' is admirably sustained throughout; the rapid movement, the strong contrasts of light and shade, relieved here and there with a little touch of mournful tenderness, appeal strongly to the imagination, and keep up the interest of the piece to the end."—Manchester Guardian, Mar. 2, 1861.

LA CZARINA, Mazurka de Salon. 3s.
LA REINE BLANCHE, Grand Galop de Concert. Solo, 4s.: duet, 4s.
LOUISE, Nocturne. 3s.
WARBLINGS AT EVE, Romance. Solo, 2s. 6d.; duet, 3s.
DREAM OF THE WANDERER, Romance. 2s. 6d.
THE VISION, Romance, Op. 34. 2s.
ANGEL'S SONG, Op. 30. 2s.
THE NAIAD'S DREAM, Romance. 2s.
CONTEMPLATION, Andante cantabile (New Edition). 2s.
MARIE, Nocturne, Op. 60. 3s.
THE ECHO, Nocturne. 2s.
SERENADE, Op. 64, in A flat. 2s.
THE FAREWELL, Romance, Op. 65. 2s.
IN ABSENCE, Romance, Op. 67. 2s.
THE FAIRIES DANCE, brilliant Morceau de Salon, Op. 66. 2s.
LA GRACIEUSE, Romance. Op. 29. 3s.
THE HOMEWARD, March. 3s.
LA VALSE NOIRE, Op. 42, intended as a Study for the Right Hand on the Black Keys. 3s.

London: ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, W., and of all Musicsellers.

PATERSON and SONS' Guinea Edition of the VOCAL MELODIES of SCOTLAND, edited by the late FINLAY DUN and the late JOHN THOMSON, Esq., containing 144 Songs, full sized Music Plates, Four Volumes in One, elegantly Bound and Gilt, 21s.; in rich Fancy Bindings, from 25s., free by post for 2s. extra.

"Among the really cheap musical publications which are now almost continuously issuing from the press, one of the most [illegible] is the work now before us.—Scotsman.

Paterson and Sons, Musicsellers, Edinburgh and Glasgow.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"A Sketch for the Organ"—by James Gattie (J. W. Jewell). Let this be our voluntary to play the composers in, upon whom we are about to pass judgment. It consists of an adagio of two lines ("12 bars"—Herr Lenz would add), and an allegro of ten lines ("63 bars"—Herr Lenz would add); and but for one or two such progressions as the following—might pass muster as a lengthened chain of well-studied progressions.

And now make way for old Dussek, who, in answer to this conglomerate of chords, brings with him a strain of gentle melody, in the shape of another charming canzonet. "Gentle Hope, from Heaven descending"—words by John Oxenford, music by Dussek (Chappell and Co.)—is a welcome addition to the vocal department of the Monday Popular Concert Library, which has already given us "Name the glad day, dear," "Now summer has departed," and the duettino, "Pardon, dearest treasure." The canzonet under notice ("Gentle Hope") forms No. 2 of the Six Canzonets, Op. 52, the republication of which is a genuine boon to our public singers. Johann Ludwig (Jean Louis) Dussek, and John Oxenford are genial companions. They ride comfortably together "in the melodious coach, careless of where the horses may take them" (as Richard Wagner says of Rossini and Auber),—and with good cause, being well assured that the quadrupeds will lead them to the "old well," where fresh tune lies, deep and full, to be drawn up by legitimate sons of melody. Of this "Gentle Hope" is an unmistakeable sign. Words and music combine as if they had been intended from the first for each other. In short, if not quite equal to that exquisite specimen of Dussek's vocal inspiration and Mr. Oxenford's strong sympathy with it, "Name the glad day, dear," it is in every respect a beautiful canzonet. Nor can it be altogether unknown to our readers, Mr. Sims Reeves having already introduced it at the Monday Popular Concerts.

More melody, more harmony, more true musical expression in short, is at hand. The dead Bohemian is worthily succeeded by a living Englishman. "Love me or love me not"—words and music by Henry Smart (Cramer, Beale and Chappell)—is another proof that its composer is determined to maintain the honour of our English school of vocal music. In the words, which involve a new treatment of an old theme, Mr. Henry Smart reveals a poetical faculty for which hitherto he has not received credit. Let the reader judge:—

"Among the grass a maiden sat,
Upon a summer's eve,
Thinking which of all her loves
She may the best believe.
She thought of one, and plucked a stem
Of the enchanter's grass;
Swiftly its little knotted buds
Her slender fingers pass.
Loves he me? or loves he not?
I love not him, so I care not.
Loves he me not? He loves not me.
'Tis best, because this was not he."

Now, although in the 1st and 4th lines, "sat" and "may," and in the 5th and 8th, "plucked" and "pass," suggest a certain confusion of the past and present tenses; and although (winking at the duosyllable with a k, line 7) the above is rather notty than smooth, it exhibits, we repeat, a poetical faculty to which Mr. Smart has hitherto laid no claim. In the second stanza (for which we are unable to find room) the maiden plucks a "spray," instead of a "stem," (We should have recommended a "twig," as more likely to help her to find out—to "twig"—the exact truth); and while, amidst blushes, she puts the questions to the spray she had already put to the stem—

"Love me?—love me not?
He loveth me!
Would it were true, for this is he!"

a voice behind her "satin shoulder," or close to her "velvet elbow," "whispers merrily"—

"Yes, it is true, for it is I!"

To "whisper merrily" is a new feat of tongue. Mr. Smart's music, however, is far superior and far more highly finished than his poetry. "Love me or love me not" is indeed a beautiful song, with melody going on all through—a pure stream of time that might have been prolonged indefinitely while its author was in the vein, and which leaves regret behind when it ceases. Why should it have ceased? But besides its melodious and harmonious charm, there is a deep sentiment in the song which endows it with another and a higher attraction. The alternate questions addressed by the maiden to the "stem" and the "spray" are cunningly contrasted. In the last, when the interrogation relates to the real master of her heart, an exquisite point is made, which we are sorry we cannot afford space to quote at length. To mutilate it would be sacrilege; it must therefore be left to the imagination of our readers, few of whom, we fancy, after what has been said, will hesitate to render themselves acquainted with Mr. Henry Smart's new song.

"Good bye, Winter," trio for treble voices—words from Parley's New Keepsake, music by Mrs. Henry Amss (Ashdown and Parry.) The words from Parley's New Keepsake are good. Peruse them, reader:—

"Winter, Winter—sad and dreary,
You are growing old and weary,
So 'tis time for you and I
To say 'Good bye!'

"Winter, Winter—bleak and blowy,
Icy, sleety, rainy, snowy,
Spring is softly stealing nigh;
Good bye! Good bye!

"Winter, Winter—pale and chill,
The snow-wreath fades on yonder hill,
The birds are singing in the sky;
Good bye! Good bye!
"Winter, Winter—sad and dreary," &c.

We hope this may be true, for the "winter," now snailishly (very) cutting its stick, has been downright inclement. We should like to add a verse or two to the foregoing pretty (and too amiable) apostrophe to the inexorable old "grip."

"Winter, Winter—drear and dusky,
Piping, snivelling, grumbling, husky,
No love's lost 'twixt me and you;
Go about your business, do!

Digitized by Google

"Winter, Winter—wet and dirty,
Worse than any one since 'thirty'*
Scarce 'nough sun to read a letter,
Soon as you are off the better.

"Good bye?"—no, ill bye you merit,
None your naughtiness would credit;
Dull one moment, duller th' other,
Nought but rain and splash and bother!

"Winter, Winter—pray don't linger,
When you've sloped, I'll place a finger
On my nose, and say 'God speed you!'
Pray don't think we further need you.

"Winter, Winter," &c.

SPRING, you're wanted. The sooner you come the better; and we trust the prognostications of Parley's (Peter Parley's?) New Keepsake may be speedily verified. Then let all England be vocal with some half-dozen of Mendelssohn's fresh, and buoyant, and springy Frühlingslieder. Nor would it be beside the purpose if some pretty maidens, arrayed in white, with snowdrops, primroses, and violets in their hair, were to assemble in groups of three, and sing Mrs. Henry Ames' unaffected and charming little tune, which is as correct and harmonious as it is tuneful.

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY.

BRISSAC (JULES) "The harp that once through Tara's halls" (Pianoforte).
JANECH (F. A.) "Solitude."
Ditto. "Un moment de récréation."
PRAEGER (F.) "Malbrook."
ERGMANN (A.) "Valse Caprice" (Violin, Violoncello, and Pianoforte).

DUNCAN DAVISON AND CO.

GREVILLE (The Hon. Mrs.) "La speranza" (Vocal).
Ditto. "La costanza."
Ditto. "Quando nascente il dolce sorriso."

J. H. JEWELL.

GATTIE (JAMES) "A Sketch for the Organ" (No. 1).
Ditto. ditto. (No. 2).

J. WILLIAMS.

ATKINSON (F. C.) "An address to Bees" (Song).

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

March 6.

As the interregnum since my last letter, three weeks ago, has, I perceive, been partially filled up by another correspondent, on whose qualifications for the office I must be dumb, and by a translation (more or less correct) from one of the French journals, I shall take up events here subsequently to the two important lyrical occurrences their articles refer to, namely, Auber's new opéra comique and that of Clapisson. In due order of precedence, I will first speak of the doings at the Grand Opéra. These are hitherto altogether in prospect for Tannhäuser, which was to have come out on Monday, postponed, owing to the indisposition of Venus (Mad. Tedesco), until Friday, latiné, dies Veneris; and therefore, we trust, of happy omen in this circumstance. All sorts of small talk is afloat in relation to the incidents which have marked the progress of the rehearsals of Wagner's opera, and not a musical personage can you encounter without being informed of some petty circumstance in connection with the getting up of the work. This multifold chatter resembles the twittering of birds previous to the levée of the King of Day—gossiping courtiers in the antechambers of the East. The impression of the whole mass of sound is lively enough, and gives a zest to anticipation; but take any separate contribution of one throat, and it is the feeblest and most inexpressive of sparrow-chirps. Therefore will I trouble you with not one item of this news-chaff, for you are too old a bird to be caught with it. Take instead a very consistent statement of fact, to the effect that the work which is to follow close upon the heel of the German neo-composer's production is a new opera by M. Gounod, under the title of La Reine de Saba, the libretto of which has been written by MM. Michael Carré and Barbier, and is founded on a novel by Gérard de Nerval. M. Gueymard, Mads. Gueymard-Lauters and Belval will be invested with the principal characters. It is further said that Meyerbeer's opera, L'Africaine, will follow next in succession—that is to say, unless Les Troyens, by Hector Berlioz, should not find its way to the foot-lamps of the Academy instead,—an event which is spoken of, and would beyond gainsay be an act of justice. There have been so many slips between the cup of publicity and the black lips of Meyerbeer's heroine, that she would scarcely be affected by the consequent delay. On the 23rd of this month it is announced that there will be an extraordinary performance at the Imperial Opera House. Two hundred exécutants will perform a selection from the symphonic works of Felicien David, under the conductorship of the composer himself. The Désert, the fourth part of Christophe Colomb, the overture to La Perle du Brésil, and the finale of Moïse au Sinaï, will be included in the programme.

The manager of the Italian Opera has just engaged Mlle. Trebelli for five years. The terms are said to be 200*l.* a month the first year, 280*l.* the second, and 320*l.*, 360*l.*, and 400*l.* for the third, fourth, and fifth years. These are not bad terms even for an Italian cantatrice, and the lady, who will make her début in Tancredi, is said to be indebted for so advantageous an engagement to the two brilliant seasons which she has recently carried through at Berlin and Madrid. The Nozze di Figaro is in preparation. Mad. Penco, whose engagement has just been renewed, will play Susanna, Mad. Battu the Countess, and Mlle. Dalmonti, whose débuts will continue, the Page. Meanwhile the Italian pianist, of whom I gave you some notion not long since, is astonishing the audiences at the Salle Ventadour each night of performance with his executive feats. He has himself accompanied by an orchestra, which would seem quite a superfluous measure in his case, for the ubiquitous power of his fingers on the key-board supplies the place of another pair of hands. One thing is to be said in favour of this hard-hitting gymnast, this "harmonious blacksmith"—he conceals the physical effort his feats cost him with a placidity of exterior truly Spartan in its heroism.

Mlle. Lemercier being unwell, a new work by M. Poise, called Le Jardinier Galant, has had to be put off at the Opéra Comique. The Théâtre Lyrique also announces a novelty, Les Deux Cadis, an opera buffa in one act, by M. Imbert, whose first attempt it is, and who is expected to exhibit masterly qualities—though of course on a small scale. Gil Blas with Mlle. Girard will be revived next week, to be followed by La Statue, by M. Reyer. The run of Clapisson's new opera, Madame Grégoire, and of the transplanted Val d'Andorre, will nevertheless continue. It is announced that M. Ambroise has again perched himself with unconscious impertinence upon the bust of Shakspeare, there to twitter his inanities and perform other bird-like but less seemly functions, which tomtits are wont to indulge in, in their ecstacy at finding themselves thus elevated. Falstaff and the sacred person of Shakspeare, dragged into the ridiculous piece of his Songe d'une Nuit d'Eté, have not satisfied his sacrilegious ravenings. He must now render Hamlet even more ridiculous than he has been made of late years by inept ambition on British boards. Hamlet the hero of an opéra comique! Oh ye daughters of heaven—each of you lend me a thong to make me a cat-o'-nine-tails, that I may whip this rascally crotchet-monger through the world! Is he not a descendant of the unbelieving Thomas? If I were an M.P., I should certainly ask Lord John Russell whether he meant to allow this threatened insult to the English nation in the immortal essence of its greatest and most revered genius to be perpetrated without a remonstrance,—a remonstrance backed by an ominous rattling of volunteer rifles. Like ancient Pistol let him exclaim, "All hell (videlicit Omnis Gallia, which, like the Inferno of Dante, 'divisa est in tres partes') shall stir for this."

Apropos of Mad. Penco's re-engagement and the terms received by Italian artists, it is said that M. Colzado had to submit to an increase in that lady's demands, and has signed an agreement to pay her 252,000fr. (10,080*l.*) for three seasons of seven months, a private box on the stage, and a multitude of other pri-

* The winter of 1830 (if we remember well) was what Mr. Mantalini would call "a demned winter," or even "a demnition winter."

Digitized by Google

vileges great and small. Signor Gardoni is to be succeeded by a tenor léger, Montanaro by name, whose voice is said to be very fresh and very flexible. Signor Angelini, wishing to go to Russia with Signor Graziani, has been allowed to give up his engagement, the management making no demand for compensation, which may be flattering or otherwise as a man may regard it. Mad. Tagliafico, in her normal capacity of comprimaria, will form part of the company. I told you how Signor Beneventano was to supply the place of Signor Graziani, making up in stones' weight of too solid flesh the deficiencies of the spirit. Not even his title of Baron della Piana can, however, exactly be taken in compensation for the defect in his title to rank as first barytone in a first-rate establishment.

The jury charged with examining the designs of the competitors for the new opera house have just completed their labours under the presidency of the Minister of State, Count Walewski. None of the plans sent in have been considered worthy of the first prize involving the execution of the project, but as the jury have represented that many of the attempts made by the competitors are of a very satisfactory character, the minister has granted an additional sum of 5000fr. to be distributed according to the judgment of the jury. This sum has been divided into three prizes; one of 2000fr. and the two others of 1000fr. each. Agreeably with the terms of the decree of the 29th of December last, the prizes have been awarded as follows:—Plan No. 6, M. Ginani, the 1st prize of 6000fr.; No. 34, MM. Crepinet and Botrel, the 2nd prize of 4000fr.; No. 17, M. Garnaud, the 3rd prize of 2000fr.; No. 29, M. Duc, the 4th prize of 1500fr.; No. 38, M. Garmer, the 5th prize of 1500fr. A future report will eventually explain the grounds on which the jury have decided their selection.

You are aware that the proprietary of the journal, La Maîtrise, together with the Congress for the restoration of Church Music, recently opened a competition for prizes to be awarded to the best sacred compositions. The examining committee is about shortly to assemble, and will classify, in the order of their respective merits, the short masses for three voices, the motets for one, two, or three voices, and the organ pieces applicable to the celebration of the various services which have been sent in to the editors of La Maîtrise by organists and chapel masters, French and foreign, who have taken part in the competition. Three gold medals, three of silver, and three of bronze, amounting in value to a total sum of 1250fr., have been allotted for the best manuscripts already received, or which may be sent in and examined during the meetings of the committee which commenced on the 20th of February, and will continue to the end of the present month. Those who desire to compete are invited to send to MM. Hengel and Co., No. 2 bis, Rue Vivienne, Paris, for a programme of the terms of the competition.

The first concert of the season was given last Wednesday at the Tuileries. Their Imperial Majesties do not seem to fare much more delicately in their musical entertainments than do our own Sovereign and consort at their palace of Buckingham. For curiosity's sake, I will transcribe the programme:—1, Trio, Pré aux Clercs; 2, Duo, Chaste Suzanne; 3, Les Noces Basques, pastoral scene for the harmonicon of Debain, by M. Lefèbvre Wely; 4. Air, Songe d'une Nuit d'Eté; 5. Chorus and air, La Circassienne; 6. Quatuor, by Alary; 7. Duo, Les Voitures Versées; 8. Cantique, Le Domino Noir; 9. Variations, les Diamants de la Couronne; 10. Scena, La Circassienne. M. Alary presided at the piano, and the orchestra was conducted by M. Tilmant. A chef de cuisine who should place relatively so vulgarly inspired a carte before his Imperial master and mistress as their programme, would receive the Imperial sack, and most deservedly, nay, would merit exile to an English club-house. The chef de musique of the Imperial household is, on the contrary, "personally felicitated." His Majesty's subjects are either more faithfully served by their music purveyors, or have a better taste which they impose on the programme-maker. For instance, M. Le Président du Sénat, alias M. Troplong, had a concert the other day, a portion whereof were the principal scenes from the Armide and Orphée of Gluck, "interpreted" (vile word) by Mad. Viardot. Mad. Jardier de Maleville, moreover, played Mozart and Haydn to the guests of the same dignitary of the State. To go on with private musical entertainments—musique de société—let me mention, first, that Rossini's "Saturday evenings" are brought to a close—dying most Pesaro swanlike and melodiously. On one occasion M. Duprez organised a concert, the personnel of which was entirely composed of his pupils, his own daughter, and M. Vandenheuvel, her husband inclusive, and never were the maestro's salons so crowded. To this succeeded a quieter Saturday, when only four artists exhibited their talents, the basso, Signor Badiali, the new tenor, Signor Montanaro, Signor Perelli, and Signor Bazzini, instrumental, executants, to whom must be added, supplementarily, the Vicomtesse de Grandval. The other night at the Baron de M——'s a little sensation was created by the present chef d'orchestre of the Société des Concerts, M. Tilmant, senior, standing forward again as a virtuoso of the first rank, and recalling all the charm and excellence of his youthful days, by taking part in a quintet by Onslow, and in the first quintet of M. C. Estienne. Mlle. Clementine Tinel de Kerolan,—a lady whose high talents as a pianist are never heard in public, save when the cause of charity induces her to use them as a lure to the generosity of all who love good music,—assembled a few friends on Sunday week to hear her play Beethoven's trio in B flat, Weber's sonata, Op. 49, Mendelssohn's sonata in B flat, and Prudent's Sonnambula fantasia. MM. Sighicelli and Emile Rignault assisted her in the concerted works. The tenor, Alexander Reichardt, has lately given a very successful concert. His sympathetic voice is as much admired here as it has been in England and Germany. M. Henri Herz announces for the 13th of the present month, a grand orchestral concert to take place of course in his own rooms — Herz of that ilk. Among the artists engaged, is M. Servais, whom one of the papers here dubs the Emperor of the violoncello. "Salve, Imperator, nos mentituri te salutant!" I have seen no account of Piatti's demise or abdication, have you? French votes will not make emperors in the Musical World. Servais may crown himself, or get crowned with a diadem of newspaper paragraphs; but the sacrament of universal opinion is wanting to the investiture. Emperor Fiddlestick! I refuse, for one, my allegiance at the risk of being sent au violon, or shut up in his violoncello-case — or bow strung, string and bow are there.

A correspondent in Brussels writes me, that on the first night of Gounod's Faust, the théâtre de la Monnaie was crowded, and that the opera was greatly applauded, to the calling on of the author twice during the performance. I had had no less brilliant accounts of the success of this work in Germany. At Darmstadt the Grand Duke sent for the composer, and presented him with the golden medal of merit, a reward which for twenty years past, there had not been thought any occasion to confer — on a foreigner. When Darmstadt opens its eyes to the merits of foreigners once or so in a century, it sees very far. Felix Godefroid, the harpist, has been harping to a good account in the outlying places of France, to wit, Langres, Colmar, Mulhausen, Metz and Nancy, and now he is in Paris again with the rapidity of one of his own arpeggio passages, having given as usual a soirée last Sunday evening in his salons. At Colmar just mentioned, M. J. Stockhausen, the barytone and son of the ancient harpist of that name, has just given a concert, when the ancient harpist in question brushed the cobwebs off his ancient harp, and with chappy fingers, which na'th'less had forgot little of their cunning, accompanied his son in the Nachtstück of Franz Schubert.

This evening there will take place the fourth of a series of musical performances much resembling your very successful "Monday Popular Concerts." They are at the Salle Pleyel and under the management or control of MM. Armingaud, L. Jacquart, and E. Lalo, with the assistance of Mad. Massart. Here is the programme for to-night:—1. Trio in E major, Mozart, piano, violin and violoncello; 2. Fourth quatuor in D minor, Schubert, two violins, alto and violoncello; 3. Sonata in E flat, Op. 12, Mendelssohn, two violins, alto and violoncello.

M. Schulhoff gave his third and last concert at these concert rooms last Friday, and with no abatement of the interest manifested on the occasion of his first as described by your humble but faithful correspondent.

Of theatrical news there is but little, and that little of no great interest. At the Odéon, a five act tragedy, by Alexandre Soumet and M. Louis Belmontel, entitled Une Fête de Néron, has been revived. It is a production of the romantic school, and, with the scope it gives for spectacle, and even ballet, stands widely apart from the stiff and stately puritanism of Racine and Corneille. The part of Nero, originally acted by Ligier, is played by M. Gibeau, and that of Agrippina by Mlle. Karoly, who has neither the majestic bearing nor dramatic force of Mlle. Georges, the original representative of the character. Poppœa, however, is quite adequately sustained by Mlle. Jordens. The mounting of the revival is excellent — a divertissement of bacchantes, and a scene representing the Gulf of Baia being especially notable. The Gymnase has at length produced Le Gentilhomme Pauvre, a long-expected comedy in two acts, by MM. Dumanoir and Lafargue. It is founded on one of the tales in the Scènes de la Vie Flamande of the Belgian novelist Henri Conscience, and possesses very striking situations, some of which are due entirely to the ingenuity of the dramatisers. It is well acted, Lafontaine and Mlle. Victoria playing the principal parts. The Variétés has withdrawn the "revue" which had so long occupied its bills, and puts forward three novelties — Les Ramoneurs, a vaudeville in one act; La Chasse aux papillons, and Paris quand il pleut. The latter is in two acts, and from the pen of MM. Clairville and Moinaux. It is full of broad fun, in which Ledère Kopp and Mlles. Bader and Henry are quite at home. The title of the first-named piece, Les Ramoneurs, will sound obscurely to most of your readers. It alludes to the practice of certain persons who would conceal the fact that old Time has been shaving their heads with his scythe, by drawing the still flowing locks, which he as yet has only "thinned," back over the denuded portion of their craniums. A very bold subject, we should say here, for even the flimsiest farce. In France the complaint is otherwise turned by calling the piece Un peu tiré par les cheveux.

Digitized by Google

(To be continued.)

THE ORGAN.*

THIRTEENTH STUDY.—QUALITY OF TONE CONTINUED, AND ITS SECOND PRINCIPAL CAUSE, FORM—THE FREE REED.

THE quality of the tone of reed pipes does without doubt most especially depend on the relative proportions of the pipe, the tongue, and the reed; but it depends, above all, on the way in which the reed itself is constructed. It is well known that reeds are of two kinds, the free reed, and the striking reed. This last kind produces a sharp metallic quality of tone, and this mainly arises from the tongue striking sharply against the edges of the groove. That sharp, trumpet quality of tone, which so takes the fancy of those who admire orchestral music, has for a long time been a cause of offence to persons who are not so wholly prejudiced in its favour, especially when they meet with it in a church of small dimensions, where there is but little sounding room, and they or others have often compared its tones, harsh and ill-proportioned to the size of the place, to the grating sound which is produced by dragging a heavy wooden bench over a stone pavement. Nor was it until long after science had ceased to devote its energies exclusively to the interests of ecclesiastical art, that, at the beginning of this century, when the sacred fire of zeal for the ancient traditions was again lighted up, a certain learned admirer of organs, M. Grenié, was inspired with the means of softening the quality of the reed pipes used in their construction. This he did by so arranging the tongue, with regard to the reed, that one might pass evenly within the other without meeting with any resistance. The two pieces are in fact so exactly fitted one to the other in his system, that the tongue would seem to be cut of the reed. Its action may be described as follows:—When the tongue, which is a thin piece of metal, is set in motion by the wind, on its passage upwards from the foot of the pipe into the reed, it gives way under its pressure for so much of its length as is pliant enough to do so, and is then brought back to its former position by its own spring-like nature. This alternate action of the air upon the tongue, and of the tongue upon the air, lasts as long as the wind is supplied to the foot of the pipe, and results in the production of a quality of tone as delicate as it is penetrating. The tones also of a reed thus constructed are far better suited to blend with those of the flue pipes than those of reeds made in the ordinary way.

There is little more than the above to say about the free reed. It is generally fitted to pipes, the bodies of which are made to a length which has been found by experience to be the best for the still further development of its tones, and somewhat shorter than those of the striking reeds. These last speak best, as is well known, with pipes which are three quarters of the length of flue pipes of the same note, while the free reed speaks well with a pipe which is not more than half the length of the flue pipe. With even shorter pipes than these M. Grenié has made free reeds, which speak the note of a 16-foot open pipe, with all the regularity and vigour which is required of them, though not with a tone which is equal in these respects to that of the French reed-stop, called the bombarde.†

The dimensions of the tongue, with regard to length, width, and thickness, are of as much importance in the construction of free reeds, as they are in that of the striking reed. If these details are not attended to, it will be subject to various irregular movements in its wrestlings with the wind. As the end, when the tongue of the free reed is fastened, is firmly fixed, no amount of wind can possibly make it vary in pitch; but this does not prevent it from being affected by an accident to which all metals are liable namely, a change in the temperature, and to this it is most sensitive. Hence heat makes it get flat, cold makes it get sharp, so that in winter a free reed will sometimes be as much as a quarter of a tone sharper than it is in summer. An extra pressure of wind has no more effect on the free reed than to widen the range of its beats, and consequently to give greater vigour to its power; a diminished pressure has, of course, a contrary effect; but in neither case is the pitch of the note altered. The ease with which its sounds may be thus augmented or diminished, according to the pressure of the wind, has given rise to its being used for the production of those effects of expression which are generally understood by the words crescendo and diminuendo. These effects are not, it is true, wholly inadequate for the expression of human feeling, though, after all, in a very imperfect way, and to apply them to the great organ, whose tones are throughout even and equal, is as contrary to the qualities of music in general, as it is to the traditions of music of the Church.

We would allow, then, the introduction of the free reed into an organ intended for the service of the Church, not as an expression stop merely, by which the feelings of the faithful may be moved, or their attention distracted, but because it points out to us a way, as brilliant as it is sweet, by which we may get rid both of that hard quality of tone of the striking reed, and because it will tend to put a stop to the noisy clatter of French organ-playing leaving us with nothing to fall back upon, as is the case with the Germans, but the dull monotony of wood and metal flue pipes. It may be added, that the introduction of free reeds into our larger church-organs, is, in the first place, due to a member of the French magistracy, M. Hamel, a judge at Beauvais. Of his skill and practical knowledge we have already had occasion to speak in terms of praise. In the year 1827, he superintended in person the building of the large organ of the cathedral of Beauvais, and for the first time applied the free reed system to this very remarkable instrument.‡

* From L'Orgue, sa Connaissance, son Administration, et son Jeu, by Joseph Regnier.

† This system may be found reproduced in the organ's expression made by M. Muller, Rue Ville l'Evêque, Paris.

‡ It appears that, in the organ built by M. Hamel, the free reed stops were supplied with wind from a bellows of their own. For we find, in an account published by M. Daujon for the Organ Building Society, of which he says he has the artistic direction, an additional fact in the history of the origin of the free reed. "The firm of MM. Daublanie, Callinet, and Co.," writes M. Daujon, "offers to our notice, at this moment (1844), an improvement in organ building, which consists in employing for the production of expression on their stops, the wind from the ordinary organ bellows. The extra pressure required for this wind is got by means of a pedal, which is at the command of the foot of the player. Henceforward, then, a separate bellows for these expression stops is no longer necessary. For this interesting invention the firm of MM. Daublanie and Callinet has received a patent."

Digitized by Google

EUGENE SCRIBE.*

Literature and art have, indeed, suffered cruelly in the last two months, but no loss has touched us no nearly, or been so unexpected, as the loss of Eugene Scribe. At the moment of our penning these lines, all Paris is acquainted with the details of Eugène Scribe's sudden death. It was in a hackney-carriage, while proceeding to M. Auguste Maquet's, in the Rue de Bruxelles, that the illustrious academician was seized with an apoplectic fit. The surgeons state that the aorta was ruptured. On that very morning Eugène Scribe had answered a letter of M. Crémieux, inviting him to dine on the following day, Thursday. Two hours later, the writer of the answer had ceased to exist. It was fated that M. Crémieux should possess the last autograph of Scribe — a relic which the eloquent member of the Paris bar will religiously preserve.

Had all the nations of Europe been asked to name the writer who personified most completely in their eyes the French stage and contemporary dramatic art; that writer whose durable successes, inexhaustible fertility, perfect clearness, and infinite variety, have carried his reputation to the extreme boundaries of the civilised world, there is not the slightest doubt that they would unanimously have named Eugene Scribe. Wherever a stage has been run up with a few planks, or a float formed of a lamp or two, the name of Scribe is known. As a natural consequence, the grief at his death will be immense, for he was the Providence and the Genius of the modern theatre.

This favoured author, who, for the last forty years, has supplied our dramatic repertory, leaving everywhere masterpieces behind him, enjoyed moreover the especially glorious privilege of furnishing the most illustrious composers of the present age with books for their operas. He inspired in turn Boïeldieu, Hérold, Auber, Halévy and Adam. The mere enumeration of Scribe's works would require several numbers of our journal, and even the list of his greatest successes would form a long catalogue. The following is only an instalment:—

At the Opéra: La Muette de Portici, Robert le Diable, La Juive, Les Huguenots, Le Comte Ory, Le Prophète.

At the Théatre Francais: Valérie, La Camaraderie, Une Chaîne, Le Verre d'Eau, Bertrand et Raton, Adrienne Lecouvreur, Les Contes de la Reine de Navarre, La Bataille de Dames.

At the Opéra Comique: La Dame Blanche, Fra Diavolo, Le Domino Noir, Le Maçon, L'Ambassadrice, Le Chalet, Haydée, Les Diamants de la Couronne, L'Etoile du Nord, Giralda, La Circassienne.

At the Gymnase: Michel et Christine, La Marraine, La Chanoinesse, La Mansarde des Artistes, Le Diplomate, Une Visite à Bedlam, Le plus beau Jour de la Vie, Le Mariage de Raison, and considerably more than one hundred others.

The number of Scribe's dramatic pieces is calculated to approach five hundred. To the latest hour of his life, he continued to use the fertile pen which he had placed upon the coat of arms he invented, with the motto, Inde Fortuna et Libertas. Several unpublished pieces, more or less advanced, remain in his portfolio; among others being a comic opera, in three acts, completely finished. This is entitled La Fiancée du Roi de Garbe, and was intended for Auber, the long and constant collaborateur of the deceased.

* * * * * * *
* * * * * * *

The funeral took place on Friday last. As might have been expected, the crowd was immense. Auber, completely prostrated with grief, was the first to appear in the nave of St. Roch, while the funeral procession, with the Minister of State at its head, was still coming down the Rue Royale. His Excellency followed on foot, behind M. Scribe's relations. Independently of the highest official and political notabilities who flocked to attend the procession, we observed nearly every member of the Institute of France; a deputation from the Municipal Council of Paris; the Committee of Dramatic Authors; Baron Taylor, President of the Five Associations, together with representatives of each separate association; the managers and artists of all the Paris theatres, and a deputation of pupils from Sainte-Barbe and Chaptal. In other words, even the nave of St. Roch was too small to accommodate every one, and many who had been invited to attend the ceremony were unable to obtain ingress.

The great organ was played by M. Auguste Durand, and the orgue d'accompagnement by M. Leprévost, both organists of St. Roch. The choruses of the Opéra Comique, the Conservatory, and of the Maîtrise of St. Roch, sang the "Introit" and the "Kyrie," from Cherubini's Requiem. M. France sang a "Pie Jesu," by M. Jules Cohen. After the mass, the Curé pronounced the absolution, and the procession wended its way to Père-la-Chaise.

In the cemetery six speeches were made. M. Vitel spoke for the Académie Française; M. Auguste Maquet, for the Association of Dramatic Authors; M. Labrouste, for the College of Sainte-Barbe; M. Paillard de Villeneuve, for the Municipal Council; M. Thierry, for the Société des Gens de Lettres and the Théâtre Français; and M. Montigny, as manager of the Gymnase.

In the evening the Théâtre Français, the Opéra Comique and the Gymnase were the only theatres closed, but, though the others were open, mourning reigned in all.—Jules Lovy.

* Translated and abridged from Le Ménestrel.

JOSEPH JOACHIM IN VIENNA.†

The most important event last week was the appearance of Joseph Joachim. In years gone by, the Viennese had, it is true, heard him as a wonderful child, but the wonderful man still remained a stranger to them. Vienna, the cradle, if not of Joachim himself, at least of his reputation, as well as the place of his education, had some reason to complain of the manner in which she had invariably been overlooked by the artist in the course of his long travels. Young as he is, Joachim has been considered, for nearly the last ten years, the first of living violinists, and the fact of Vieuxtemps having been, now and then, compared to him, proves that those who used such a standard were aware that they had to deal with greatness of no ordinary kind. It was no easy task for an artist to satisfy such high and long-cherished expectations of a public as experienced as ours. And yet Joachim has accomplished it in the most brilliant manner.

He began with Beethoven's concerto in D major. After the very first movement, it must have been evident to all that they had before them not only a most astonishing virtuoso, but a man of great importance and originality. With all his bravura, Joachim is so totally merged in the musical Ideal, that he might be described as a perfect musician, who had passed through and gone beyond the most brilliant "virtuosity." His playing is grand, noble, and free. There is not the slightest tinge of "virtuosity" about it; whatever, in the solos, could remind us of vanity or self-esteem is passed over, without our perceiving the faintest trace of it. This nobleness of artistic conviction is so prominent in Joachim, that it prevents our thinking until afterwards of the appreciation due to his magnificent technical skill.

What fulness and power in the tone which Joachim's grand and certain bowing draws from the instrument! It struck us, on the first occasion of our hearing Joachim, that, even in the most emphatic treatment of the lower violin passages, there was none of that peculiarly material scraping and shuffling on the string which we have at times heard in the playing of the most celebrated violinists. Joachim's shake is incomparable for purity and equality, while his polyphonic playing is, at one and the same time, so well combined, and yet so sharply distinct, that the listener frequently fancies he hears two performers. In the course of his concerts Joachim will enable us to form a still nearer acquaintance with his technical skill. After once hearing him, it strikes us that it would not be quite safe to pronounce even a general opinion on his merits, since he will probably exhibit his art to us under other aspects. After his first concert, we certainly felt inclined to believe that the expression of what is great, noble, and pathetic was the task best adapted to his nature. He must show us, in other compositions, whether he is as great a master of light grace, easy wit, and fresh humour. His rendering of Beethoven's concerto — especially his execution of the adagio, which he gave with deep feeling, but with such a degree of freedom that he almost appeared to be extemporising—afforded proofs of the most decided independence of conception. The concerto was more brilliant and more animated under Vieuxtemps' bow. Joachim exhibited greater depth of feeling, and, by truly ethical power, surpassed the effect which Vieuxtemps' playing produced by his gushing temperament.

† From the Vienna Presse.

Digitized by Google

The second piece was an adagio by Spohr, the uniformity of which lost everything like ponderousness in the vigorous and, at the same time, varied manner in which Joachim gave it; but it was in Tartini's Teufels-Sonate that he struck us as most astounding. We feel sure that violinists will agree with us when we say that this specimen of colossal and, at the same time, classically refined, technical skill, was something never previously equalled. The most difficult bravura passages in this piece—passages which the performer is generally contented to get over with unpretending mediocrity—Joachim not merely produced with ease and certainty, but absolutely, in countless instances, impressed an accent pregnant with meaning on this noisy, seething, confused mass of sounds; he "set up lights" which lent the whole thing a new and expressive character. To sum up, we remember scarcely a second virtuoso whose entire performance was cast so completely in one and the same mould, and consequently so pure and harmonious in its effect.*

* The writer adds other details about the concert which would have no interest for our readers.—ED. M. W.

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE FIFTEENTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON

(56TH CONCERT IN ST. JAMES'S HALL)

WILL TAKE PLACE

ON MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 18, 1861,

The Programme, Vocal and Instrumental, selected from the Works of

BEETHOVEN.

(By unanimous desire, and owing to the extraordinary success of the "Beethoven Nights" on Feb. 11th and March 4th).

First Performance of the TRIO in D (Op. 9).

First Performance of the GRAND SONATA in A MAJOR (Op. 101).

Pianist:—Miss ARABELLA GODDARD.

Ninth Appearance of M. VIEUXTEMPS.

Violoncello:—Signor PIATTI.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Quartet, in F major, for two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello (Op. 59—No. 1 of the set dedicated to Rasoumowski) MM. VIEUXTEMPS, RIES, SCHREURS, and PIATTI—Beethoven; Song, Miss BANKS—Beethoven; Grand sonata, in A major, Op. 101, for Pianoforte alone (first time at the Monday Popular Concerts), Miss ARABELLA GODDARD—Beethoven.

PART II.—Trio, in D major, for Violin, Viola, and Violoncello (first time at the Monday Popular Concerts), M. VIEUXTEMPS M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI—Beethoven; Song, Miss BANKS—Beethoven; Grand sonata, in C minor (Op. 30), for Pianoforte and Violin, Miss ARABELLA GODDARD and M. VIEUXTEMPS—Beethoven.

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT. To commence at Eight o'Clock precisely.

Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s., to be had of Mr. Austin, and at the Hall, 28 Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co.; Hammond, Addison and Co.; Schott and Co.; Ewer and Co.; Simpson and Oetzmann and Co., Regent Street; Bradbery's London Crystal Palace, Oxford Street; Duff and Co., 65 Oxford Street; Prowse, Hanway Street; J. H. Jewell, 104, Great Russell Street; Chidley, 195 High Holborn; Purday, 50 St. Paul's Church Yard; Keith, Prowse and Co., 48 Cheapside; Turner, 19 Cornhill; Cook and Co., 6 Finsbury Place, South; Humfress, 4 Old Church Street, Paddington Green; Fabian, Circus Road, St. John's Wood; Ransford and Son, 2 Princes Street, Cavendish Square; Ivory, 275 Euston Road; Mitchell, Leader & Co., Ollivier, Campbell, Hopwood and Crewe, Willis, Bond Street, and Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

NOTICE.—It is respectfully suggested that such persons as are not desirous of remaining till the end of the performance may leave either before the commencement of the last instrumental piece, or between any two of the movements, so that those who wish to hear the whole can do so without interruption.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. Smith.—Unprecedented success of Wallace's New Grand Romantic Opera of the AMBER WITCH, which will be repeated every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, until further notice.—THIS EVENING (Saturday), will be performed (for the fifth time), with new scenery, dresses, decorations, and appointments (having been many months in preparation), a new grand romantic opera, in four acts, entitled THE AMBER WITCH. The music composed expressly for this theatre by W. V. WALLACE. Written by HENRY F. CHORLEY. Rudiger (the young Lord of Ravenstein), Mr. SIMS REEVES; The Commandant, Mr. SANTLEY; The Pastor, Mr. PATEY; Claus, Mr. TERROTT; The King, Mr. BARTLEMAN; Elsie, Miss HUDDART; and Mary, Madame L. SHERRINGTON. Early application, to prevent disappointment, should be made at the box office of the theatre, which is open daily from 10 to 6. Doors open at half-past 7; performance commences at 8 o'clock each evening. During Lent there will be No Performance on Wednesday and Friday Evenings.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—THIS EVENING (Saturday) the new and successful Drama, in five parts, arranged by C. J. MATHEWS, Esq., entitled THE SAVANNAH, in which Messrs. CHARLES MATHEWS, ROBERT ROXBY, RYDER, G. HONEY, MCLEAN, FARRELL, SPENCER, MELLON, Mrs. CHARLES MATHEWS, Mrs. DOWTON, and Miss THIRLWALL will appear. After which, the new Vaudeville, entitled A SMACK FOR A SMACK; Fanchette, Mlle. ALBINA DI RHONA; John Trot, Mr. W. TEMPLETON. To conclude with the grand Comic Ballet entitled LE ROI DES PIERROTS; La Danse des Pierrots executed by Sixty Coryphées and Mlle. Albina di Rhona. Box-office open daily from 10 till 5, under the direction of Mr. C. Nugent. Doors open at half-past 6; to commence at 7.

NOTICES.

TO ADVERTISERS.—Advertisers are informed, that for the future the Advertising Agency of the THE MUSICAL WORLD is established at the Magazine of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements can be received as late as Three o'Clock P.M., on Fridays—but not later. Payment on delivery.

Terms { Three lines and under ... ... 2s. 6d.
Every additional 10 words ... ... 6d.

TO PUBLISHERS AND COMPOSERS.—All Music for Review in THE MUSICAL WORLD must henceforward be forwarded to the Editor, care of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street. A List of every Piece sent for Review will appear on the Saturday following in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

TO CONCERT GIVERS.—No Benefit-Concert, or Musical Performance, except of general interest, unless previously Advertised, can be reported in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, MARCH 9, 1861.

WITHIN the last twelve months Death has made sad havoc in the ranks of artists, and of those connected with art. Indeed, the grim King of Terrors, during this period, would seem to have chosen one section of the community, above all others, against whom to direct his arrows, whose points fail not to penetrate, and whose poison is beyond all cure. As the blight, from no pity, passes by the golden cereals and the smiling flowers, fastening on the unpretending potatoe apple, so the insatiate monster, mysterious as ruthless, overlooks beauty, opulence, and rank, and wages war upon intellect, as though afraid of the antagonism of mind, not knowing how far its operations might tend to interfere with his illimitable power. To descend to plain sense, we cannot recall a single year in which so many men who have figured conspicuously in the eyes of the public have fallen before the resistless scythe of the mower,—men, too, who had not all run out to the full extent of life's tether, and who, in some instances, had only passed the meridian of existence. Poor Jullien was cut down in the prime of life, when his mind was fullest, his energies greatest, his future most alluring. Albert Smith, still younger than Jullien, had barely reached the mer-de-glace of life's Mont Blanc, and was hurried away, with his eyes still fixed on the shining summit, which was the goal of his expectations. Robert Brough had only just entered on the highway which leads to the land of promise, and was outstripping many in his bounding career, when he was summoned away suddenly. We might name others—poor Lovell Philips, for instance, who died too young for friendship, love, and art—who perished early, and should have been spared if the shadowy monarch had owned one touched of pity, or had been influenced by feelings of poetical justice.

Digitized by Google

Scribe departed full of years, but, judging from his recent works, had not passed the zenith of his powers. Indeed Death deprived the world of a new work from his wonderfully fertile pen, which at the time of his decease he was busy inditing for the Opéra Comique, in conjunction with his friend and collaborateur Auber; and so, in killing Scribe, Death may be said to have committed a double murder. Alfred Bunn, less advanced in years than Eugène Scribe, had received frequent warnings that he would be soon wanted in the domains of Night, and should have been prepared. Let us hope that he brought himself at last to look upon the glitter and smile of life with some feeling akin to calmness.

The latest addition to Death's list is that of J. W. Maddox, who expired on Tuesday last, at his residence, Pelham Crescent, Brompton, in the seventy-third year of his age. This gentleman was for many years connected with the theatrical and musical world of London, and at one time played an important part in the fortunes of English opera. Mr. Maddox was lessee of the Princess's Theatre from the time of its opening, some eighteen or twenty years ago, and retained the lesseeship to his death. His management was characterised by great energy and discrimination, and to no London impresario was the public more deeply indebted for entertainments remarkable for their variety and excellence. It was at the Princess's Theatre that Macready, during the latter period of his career—dating from the time that he had given up management—most frequently performed. It was at the Princess's, under the direction of Mr. Maddox, he took his "farewell," previous to his departure for America. It was at the Princess's, under the same management, that the great tragedian made his first appearance after his return from America, when his popularity in this country was, if possible, increased by the treatment he had received from the New York public on the occasion of the "Forest Row," his reception, perhaps, being the most extraordinary ever witnessed in a theatre, the applause enduring without cessation for upwards of seven minutes. To Mr. Maddox, too, the theatrical world was indebted for the appearance in this country of the celebrated American actress, Miss Cushman; for the return of Miss Fanny Kemble (Mrs. Butler) to the English stage; for introducing to a London audience, Mr. Compton, the comedian, besides many other actors who now exhibit on the metropolitan boards.

But Music is even more indebted to Mr. Maddox than the Drama. Mr. Macfarren's Charles the Second, and Mr. Edward Loder's Night Dancers—two of the most charming of English operas — were written expressly for the Princess's Theatre; as was also Mr. Schira's Minnie, a work of genuine merit. Two of Mr. Balfe's operas, written for the Opéra Comique, Paris, and which had not been heard in England—the Four Sons of Aymon, and Geraldine (Le Puits d'Amour), were brought out by Mr. Maddox, as were also Flotow's Stradella, Mr. Loder's Puck, &c., &c. Perhaps, however, the greatest boon conferred by Mr. Maddox on the musical public was the production of Auber's Crown Diamonds—which by the way introduced Mad. Anna Thillon to a London audience—and The Syren of the same composer. The singers who came out under Mr. Maddox's management are almost countless, and we need only specify along with Mad. Thillon, already named, Mlle. Nau, Miss Rafter, Miss Sarah Flower, Messrs. Allen, Weiss, Charles Braham, &c., &c. Indeed, at one time, the little theatre in Oxford-street constituted the only home of English opera in the kingdom, and native composers were beginning to look to Mr. Maddox as their future regenerator, when, in an evil hour—for music, as was supposed at the time—Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean offered such tempting terms to the manager as compelled him to part with the theatre, and allowed him to retire into private life on a respectable competency. Although removed from the toils and turmoils of theatrical administration, Mr. Maddox, after his retirement from office, continued to take the liveliest interest in dramatic and operatic affairs, and was seldom or never absent from a performance of moment. He possessed a shrewd and keen intellect, and was a capital judge both of acting and singing. As a companion, he was mirthful and good-humoured; and as a friend he was sincere, hearty, and generous. His loss will be greatly felt both by friends and acquaintances.

R.

THE little Munich paper, Neuste Nachrichten aus dem Gebiete der Politik, contained, in its issue of the 6th December last, a notice — manufactured in St. Petersburgh, and thence distributed for circulation throughout Europe—of the pianist, Mortier de Fontange (or de Fontaine), from which we can only spare room for a paragraph or two. Meanwhile, we may conscientiously "echo" the sentiment of a German contemporary *, who remarks, that "since the glorious apparition of Ole Bull, the Norwegian fiddler, such a barefaced and colossal† puff has never invaded the columns of a German paper." It sets out thus:—

"Herr Mortier de Fontange, a gentleman who merits the highest encomiums for his interpretation of Beethoven's latest pianoforte poems, will visit Munich in December. Thirty years ago, a critic would have added: 'and give our ears a treat.' That was in the time of Field, Hummel, Moscheles, and other virtuosi, who were favourites in Munich. This notion is now changed! Beethoven writes for the mind. He judges all human things by the standard of the highest excitements of which the mind is capable; he points out to the mind ideal paths, which extend beyond the meridian of every-day life, and proceed higher, not contented with the statu quo of the world . . . A man who knows everything in Beethoven, just as an educated German carries his Schiller and Goethe about with him in his head and heart, knows absolutely nothing of the spiritual nature most peculiar to him, if he is not acquainted with the sonatas, quartets, symphonies, and masses beyond Op. 100.

"Such, however, are especially the above-named works, each of which forms an epoch in the history of the human mind, and a station of the latter on the road 'Forwards.' Only a special philosophical course of study is able to grasp the succession of ideas poured forth with the whole soul. . . . Studies of freedom on human thought, such as those in Beethoven, are to be found in the history of every art and science, but nowhere secreted in forms, which of themselves count for so many ideas, but thereby afford the most glorious instance of the fructification of all matter by the mind, which alone is a living thing. Such is Beethoven in his latest works, at the height of his mental power, of which he might well say:—'I am a mountain in God, and must ascend myself.'"

It was Angelus Silesius—not Beethoven—who uttered this absurdity. But listen further to the oracle from St. Petersburgh:—

"It is to the comprehension of such a prophet that Herr Mortier de Fontange has dedicated his artistic life: he has listened to this sackbut of ideas, 'mirum spargens sonum:' these manifestations of a brain which would have preferred the power of armies and cannons to musical notation for the triumph of his ideas, are interpreted profoundly and powerfully by Herr Mortier, deeply moved by his great and responsible task.

---

* The Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung.

† "Barefaced and colossal." Let it pass.

Digitized by Google

No treat for the ears, no concert! — a torch which he bears aloof for himself and others! The pianist who is able to present these works in their covering of tone, devotes himself to higher aims; he becomes a priest of art, speaking to the world in the language of the mind. . . .

"Munich will hear, him, and pronounce its opinion, and it is because Munich possesses an opinion that the artist comes to Munich."

"Will not Herr Mortier de Fontange," — inquires our Lower-Rhenish contemporary, in a quasi-ironical tone, pay Frankfort-on-the-Main and Cöln, too, a visit, rendering both happy by his presence?" In the first-named city it is reported that the pianist of the Trans-Hundred earned for himself imperishable renown, not many years ago, through his wholly original performance of Beethoven's sonata, Op. 111, and other remarkable works. But some more of the circular puff and we have done: —

"Let us apply to the artist the maxims of the statesman: 'It is not the rights a person exercises, but the duties he imposes on himself, which give him his value.' Herr Mortier has imposed upon himself the duty of standing forth as THE CHAMPION OF ARTISTIC TRUTH (!) — of campaigning all his life for enlightenment by means of Beethoven. Germany reads Sophocles and Thucydides more purely than its Beethoven, and from the first to the last edition of the five 'Schicksals-Sonaten,' HERR MORTIER'S RENDERING IS THE SOLE CORRECT ONE (editio mandatior), &c. &c."

"How Munich — artistic and amateur — in the Bockkeller and at Pschorr's" (exclaims our contemporary) — "must have puzzled its brains, on the 6th December, as to the precise signification of this panegyric from St. Petersburgh! How great must have been the excitement, when, only a few days subsequently, the hero Mortier, torch in hand, made his triumphal entry into the city, and, without loss of time, seating himself at the piano (14th December), played no fewer than thirteen different pieces, in the following order (the programme lies before us):—

"1. Fugue — S. Bach; 2. 'Harmonious Blacksmith' — Handel; 3. Saraband — François Couperin; 4. Toccata — Domenico Scarlatti; 5. 'Tempo di Menuetto' — Jos. Haydn; 6. Rondo — Mozart; 7. Sonata, Op. 111 — Beethoven; 8. 'Moment Musical' — Franz Schubert; 9. Romance — Schumann; 10. Scherzo — Mendelssohn; 11. 'Sérénade d'un Troubadour' — Wilemers; 12. Etude — Chopin; 13. 'La Cascade' — Pauer."

After such a bill of fare, can anything be wanting to the complete enlightenment of the lovers of music in Munich? Ah! Herr Mortier de Fontange (or Fontaine), proceed, we entreat you, with the mission of your life, so as thoroughly to enlighten, and in the very briefest possible space of time, the miserable darkness of the entire musical world — "even down to the Botokuden" (slily adds the Niederrheinisches Musik-Zeitung) seen "in the Brazils." You will not lack a monument when the shears of the parcæ, rendered all the sharper by the precious delicacy of its task, shall divide the thread which holds you to existence! We, too, in London, have heard the Bach-fugue (in A minor — Herr Mortier has only one); we, too, in London have heard the Mendelssohn-scherzo (in E minor — Herr de Fontange has only one); we, too, in London have heard — O Gemini! — the "Op. 111." The fugue and the scherzo were so fast that they were impossible. The sonata in C minor — O GEMINI! Nor was the Russian manifesto strange to us; for it heralded Herr de Fontaine to London as it has recently heralded him to Munich. In short, for many years it has not merely heralded, but chronicled, posted, advertised, telegraphed, star'd, and Time(s)d him everywhere; he hoisted it as his standard; he carried it on his shoulder at once as his atlas and his globe. Not to be tedious, it was the sun which cast that light upon him in the absence of which he might have been in the dark, and so unable to "enlighten the world through Beethoven," which is his self-imposed mission.

By the way, Herr Mortier de Fontange (or de Fontaine) is the man of whom it has been said, for the last twenty years, that "he is reported to have played the 'Op. 106' of Beethoven, but that no one come-at-able had ever heard him." This is no more than the truth. Herr Mortier is "reported to have played the Op. 106" somewhere, but no one knows where, and before somebody, but no one knows who. Herr Rellstab said as much in an article.* Or rather, on reference to Herr Rellstab, we find that it was not Herr Rellstab, but another critic (Herr Schzbwelgwth?), who said it. What Herr Rellstab said was, that "Herr Mortier de Fontang(in?)e intended to play it." If when that intention is fulfilled — which, no doubt, will be the case some time hence — the "Op. 106" comes out like the "Op. 111" — O GEMINI! We trust it may be at Munich, Frankfort (on the Maine or the Oder, we don't care which), or Cöln — not in London.

P . . . P . . E.

THE German papers inform us that Castelli, the Austrian literary Nestor, now in the eighty-fourth year of his age, has just published the first volume of his Memoirs. From these, among other interesting matters, we learn that his dramatic poem of the Swiss Family †, which has been translated into every language, and played hundreds of times at Vienna, brought him in altogether, for his rights as author, the sum of eight florins!

This fact will nevertheless cause little surprise; theatrical annals furnish us with only too many instances of the kind; and those who are curious about the fortunes of composers in former days, may satisfy themselves to their heart's content by examining the contents of Herr Jahn's last great work. Thanks to the zealous, diligent, thoroughly impartial, and extraordinarily voluminous biography of Mozart, we know how much the compositions of the illustrious German musician realised for him in the shape of pecuniary emolument — at least in the most important instances.

In the Registers of Accounts of the Vienna Theatre (an interesting and valuable collection), we read, for 1788—1789, page 45:—

"Paid to Ponte (Lorenzo), for writing the book of Don Giovanni, 100 florins."

And a little further on (page 47):—

"Paid to Mozart (Wolfgang), for composing the music of Don Giovanni, 225 florins."

For the score of the Magic Flute (such is the genuine title of this masterpiece — not the Enchanted Flute ‡, as many have been accustomed to call it, owing to a careless translation of the title on the score printed in Germany) — for the score of the Magic Flute, 100 ducats were paid by Schickaneder, manager of the Imperial Theatre, who reaped an immense profit by the bargain. No other work of Mozart's has enjoyed such continued popularity and success throughout Germany. The first representation of Die Zauberflöte took place on the 30th September, 1791. § In the month of October the opera was played twenty-four times; the bills

* Königliche privelegirte Berlinische Zeitung, March 6, 1855, in noticing Miss Arabella Goddard's audible and visible execution of the same sonata at one of her concerts in Berlin.

† Set to music by Weigl.

‡ The flute is not enchanted, but enchanting. In plain language, it enchants others. The Italians were therefore right in calling the opera Il Flauto Magico, and not Il Flauto Incantato.

§ Little more than two months later (Dec. 5, 1791 — at Vienna) Mozart died, in the 36th year of his age.

Digitized by Google

of the 23rd November, 1792, announced its hundredth, and those of the 22nd October, 1795, its two hundredth performance.

Again, the same munificent honorarium was the guerdon of Mozart, respectively on account of Die Entführung and Le Nozze di Figaro.

And what about those operas of Rossini which were originally produced in Italy? One example may suffice. The incomparable Barbiere di Seviglia was disposed of for an "obolus" — which not only purchased the right of republication but that of representation also! It must be admitted that the composers of the present day look more carefully after their interests.

EVERY week brings its funereal tribute to the mortuary tablets of the year just commenced. Letters from Weimar state that Herr Capellmeister Chelard, composer of the opera of Macbeth, died recently, in that Liszt-ridden city, at the age of seventy-two. Herr Chelard was director and conductor of the first German operatic company in England. He it was who introduced Fidelio; and afterwards presented us with his own Macbeth.

The Conservatory of Music of Liège, also, has lost Joseph Dupont, one of its most eminent professors, a skilful violinist, and a meritorious composer. He had just terminated an opera entitled, Ribeiro Pinto.

In the same week, aged seventy-seven, at Antwerp, died M. Henri Simon, last representative of the school of Lesueur and Catel. M. Simon was author of a large number of works, among which is the oratorio of Judith, ou le Siège de Béthulie, generally considered to be his masterpiece.

Lastly, from Paris, we are apprised of the death of André Hoffmann, who occupied a high position among dramatic artists, but whose career was cut short at an early age, by an affection of the brain. Independently of his talent as an actor, André Hoffmann was particularly happy in the "chansonnette." Thus, in Grassot and Hoffmann, Paris has lost its two most popular and distinguished low comedians. They resembled each other in nothing but their histrionic talent and idiosyncratic originality; but their respective deaths are to be deplored in an equal measure by habitual frequenters of the Parisian theatres. Grassot was the idol of the Palais Royal, Hoffmann the pearl of the Variétés.

Mr. Howard Paul has introduced the American national lyric, the "Star-spangled Banner" in his entertainment, and it is received in the northern counties with enthusiasm.

The Arion Choir.— This new and highly promising society gives its first Orchestral Concert for the season on Friday. The object of the Arion Choir is, we learn from the prospectus, "to obtain the best possible performances of music hitherto unknown, and of a nature not introduced by existing Choirs, such as Cantatas, Pastorals, Masses, Psalms, &c., with or without orchestra; but particularly Motets, &c., for double choir." The object is eminently praiseworthy, and is entitled to the attention of all musicians, professional and amateur.

Monday Popular Concerts.—As might have been anticipated, the repetition of the principal features of the Beethoven programme of February 11th proved an immense success, St. James's Hall being again crammed to repletion, and many applicants turned away from the doors. The critic's office at these concerts becomes, as a general rule, a mere sinecure, the selection being invariably of the highest order, the executants the first of their class, and the result uniformly satisfactory. The Rasoumowski quartet, in E minor, was (for the second time at these concerts) listened to with profound attention, and greeted with the warmest plaudits; while the enormous difficulties of the sonata (Op. 111)—in the hands of Miss Arabella Goddard—astonished, just as her expressive grace and delicacy enchanted, every hearer, and procured for the young pianiste a hearty, unanimous, and enthusiastic recall. Nor did the famous "Kreutzer" fall on less willing ears, the performance being, as on previous occasions, in all respects worthy of the music—the very highest praise that can be awarded. Instead of the trio in C minor (for strings), we had one in G major (first time), which was admirably played, and met with unequivocal success. These trios are a delightful innovation.

Mr. Sims Reeves sang the ever-welcome "Adelaide" with exquisite feeling, the accompaniment being played with the utmost grace and refinement by Miss Arabella Goddard. Nevertheless, it was impolitic to place it after "The stolen Kiss," which on the present occasion was given in the first part of the concert. The effect produced by "Adelaide" was as great as ever, and Mr. Reeves was compelled twice to return to the orchestra—courteously, however, after his wont, declining the "encore." Miss Banks (her second appearance) repeated the songs of the previous Monday—Dussek's "Name the glad Day," and Mendelssohn's "Charmer," with, if possible, increased approbation. More purely legitimate singing it would be difficult to find, a voice more fresh, or a style more unobtrusive. Miss Banks may be congratulated upon having now established herself as a decided favourite with one of the most discriminating audiences in London.

Monday, the 18th instant, is to be another Beethoven night, when some important novelties will be forthcoming. C.

The Vocal Association will give their first Subscription Concert this season at St. James's Hall, on Tuesday evening next, March 12th, when Miss Arabella Goddatd will perform, for the first time, a fantasia on English airs, entiled "Albion," composed expressly for her by M. Benedict, besides Bach's famous "Prelude and Fugue alla Tarantella;" Onslow's Quintet in B flat will also be performed by the following eminent artists: — Leader, Mr. Dando; 2nd violin, Mr. Weslake; viola, Mr. H. Webb; violoncello, Mr. Petitt; contra-basso, Mr. Reynolds. Part songs by the choir of 200 voices, under the direction of M. Benedict.

Crystal Palace. — At the concert of Saturday last, the London Glee and Madrigal Union (under the direction of Mr. Land) assisted, and gave some of their favourite glees and madrigals. There was also a violoncello fantasia, executed by M. Lamoury, Gluck's overture to Iphigenia, by the band, and Sir H. Bishop's quartet, "Blow, gentle gales;" the quartet was loudly redemanded. The members of the union — Miss J. Wells, Miss Eyles, Mr. Cummings, Mr. Land, and Mr. Lawler — appeared to delight the audience. We hear that the London Glee and Madrigal Union are to give a series of concerts at the Palace, commencing on the 11th instant.

A Concert was given at the Bridge House Hotel, London Bridge, by the Band of the M Division of the metropolitan Police, under the direction of band-master Mr. C. Fox. The audience encored nearly every piece in the programme, and in the instance of Miss Rebecca Isaacs in the "Ladies' Rifle Corps," and Mr. Leonard (who was never in better voice and never sang better) in "Largo al Factotum," would scarcely be content with that. The band played some selections from popular operas (including the march from Robin Hood). Mr. W. Wilson accompanied the vocal music on the pianoforte.

Munich.—Mendelssohn's overture for a wind-band was rather a novel piece for the Odéon, and not a few persons were more astonished than pleased at the appearance of a full military band, with its somewhat barbarous appurtenances, within the walls of that peaceful locality. The overture is, however, a brilliant proof of what great and beautiful effects may be produced even from the most unfavourable elements by a composer of Mendelssohn's fine feeling and taste. It may too serve as a contrast to what is done by many of our more modern and most modern composers, who, with all the rich appliances of a full orchestra at their command, degenerate into the rude tones of a brass band fitted only for a beer-garden. For our part, we thought the work was admirably suited for an orchestra, and quite in keeping with the name of its author.

Digitized by Google

Letters to the Editor.

ANOTHER STREET TUNE.

Sir,—Allow me to present you, and—if you think fit to print it—your readers also, with a companion to the cry of the "Dog's-meat-man," communicated to the "World" by Mr. C. E. Horsley, in your last number. It is perhaps not inferior in its melodic form, and cried, or sung, as I hear it daily, in a very musical voice, and in the exact pitch in which I have transcribed it, it makes a very musical and not disagreeable street cry.

I remain, Sir, yours truly,

Edwin Shargood.

ENGLAND'S LYRIC POETRY.

Sir,—The remarks of your valuable correspondent, "R.," in No. 39 of the Musical World, have opened a subject deeply concerning our composers and publishers. There is no moral question that lyric poetry, both on this and the other side of the Atlantic, is at a very low ebb, and it is difficult to decide who is most to blame for it. I think with "R." that the composers and publishers (and a little the public) are as accountable as the author; for so long as composers and publishers submit lyrics, or rather "sets of words," to the public, and the latter purchase them, more with regard to the signature they bear than their intrinsic merit, so long will the published lyrical productions remain in their present condition.

Authors will write any rubbish on the faith of a name, and one can scarcely blame composers and publishers for accepting that which they feel confident will sell best. Is it not a fact that the music-buying public — few of whom can sing at sight, and are consequently unable to judge of a melody before playing it — first ask to inspect the songs bearing the name of some extensive writer who, by some lucky accident, writes one good song in twenty?

It will easily be perceived that some interest dictates these remarks. It does. I have long felt that the lyric poetry of the present generation is far inferior to that of the last. Where are our Moores and Dibdens? Having a taste for that style of composition, I have devoted an amount of study to its construction, which, if directed into other channels, would, I am sure, have been rewarded by greater successes. I do not mean the success which has found its way to my pocket, as all who know anything of the subject will bear with me in admitting that to have been the least portion, and song-writing must never be regarded as a profession, but the publishing success. This is the secret of the complaints of "R." and myself.

Few people have the courage to continue writing, and studying to improve what they write, with the spectre of a polite note, declining their works, gazing at them from their escritoir. Good songs can be written, and I trust in the future to prove it; but never until composers, publishers, and the public refuse bad poetry, regardless of whose name it bears, will there be any encouragement for many whose end and aim is to be numbered with even the humblest of England's lyric poets, among whom is

Your obedient servant,

John Young.

BELL RINGERS.

31 High Street, Belfast, March 5, 1861.

Sir,—As a regular reader of your valuable Musical Review, permit me to suggest the addition of what I think would prove interesting to many, viz., a weekly notice of the performances of the cathedral change ringers throughout England.

Of this music I find no mention in any journal except Bell's Life in London, — about the last place any one interested in it would think of looking for it, at least whilst the Musical World exists. You would besides confer a favour on many not initiated in the theory of music, by giving an explanation of the terms used in describing the performances of such music, such as "treble bob majors," "grandsire triples," "foreman's course triples," "the tenor at home every fourth," and many other terms that have escaped my memory.

Yours sincerely,

G. H. W.

VERDI A REPRESENTATIVE AND PATRIOT.

Verdi, the well-known composer, after his election at Borgo San Donino, addressed the following letter to the President of the electoral bureau:—

"Monsieur le Président,—The spontaneous honour conferred on me by the electoral college of Borgo San Donino affects me deeply. It is a proof that I have acquired the esteem which belongs to an upright and independent man, and which is of infinitely greater value in my eyes than the trifling glory and fortune I have acquired in the arts. I thank you, therefore, Monsieur le Président, and I beg you to express the same for me to the electors who have confided to me their honourable mandate. Assure them that if I cannot take with me to Parliament the splendour of eloquence, I shall carry there independence of character, a scrupulous conscience, and the firm determination to contribute as much as lies in my power to the success and grandeur of the unification of our country, so long agitated and divided by civil discords. At present, in order to satisfy the desire so long disappointed of seeing the country united, fortune sends us a king who really loves his people. Let us rally round him, for the prince whom we are soon about to proclaim the first King of Italy, will perhaps be the only one that will have loved the Italians more than the throne.—Accept," &c.

"G. Verdi."

Verdi, who has, it is said, abandoned the Opera House, should, before abandoning his art altogether, compose a national hymn for the Piedmontese. No one would be capable of doing it better.

Drury Lane Theatre.—On Monday night the programme of this house assumed a totally new character. Not only has the highly successful engagement of Mr. Charles Kean come to an end, but the Christmas pantomime is at length withdrawn, and while Mr. Charles Mathews is once more the leading actor in the dramatic portion of the entertainment, there has been a great accession of strength to the choregraphic department. Mlle. Albina di Rhona, who caused so much sensation at the St. James's as a dancing soubrette, has migrated to Old Drury, taking with her Mr. Palgrave Simpson's Terpsichorean farce, A Smack for a Smack, in which she goes through all her characteristic movements, assisted by Mr. W. Templeton, a clever comic actor. She is also one of the principal dancers in a new ballet, called Le Roi des Pierrots, played for the first time last night. This ballet, being wholly without plot, is little more than a divertissement, but it concentrates a large amount of talent, and contains an unusual variety of spirited and amusing dances. M. Knach, under whose superintendence it has been produced, is himself a comic dancer, much after the manner of the celebrated M. Espinosa, of the Princess's, and greatly distinguishes himself both as a fantastic gentleman, who is apparently visited by a dancing-mania, and as a country bumpkin, who is partly scared, partly pleased by the feats of Mlle. di Rhona. Mr. Cormack and the two Misses Gunniss display themselves to great advantage, but the grand feature of the ballet is La Danse des Pierrots, executed by sixty ladies. These are attired after a fashion, something between that of the conventional French clown, and that of the Folie, half their number being dressed in white, the other half in red. By a curious series of combinations and dissolutions, executed with extraordinary precision, the most singular living picture is produced, and though novelty is scarcely to be expected in the shape of a ballet, there is really something altogether new, as well as extremely agreeable in the Danse des Pierrots.

Death of Mr. Maddox.—Mr. John Maddox, so long known in connection with the Princess's Theatre, expired on Tuesday morning, about four o'clock, at his residence in Brompton, after a protracted and painful illness. The deceased was lessee of the theatre in question at its opening, and remained so at his death. He was also manager of the house for many years, and did not retire until he had fully established its reputation among metropolitan places of amusement.

Digitized by Google

Philharmonic Concerts.—These entertainments have all but completed their "jubilee." The 49th season began on Monday night; and all who love good music and are aware that the first impulse in the right direction given to public taste originated in the establishment of the Philharmonic Society will be pleased to hear that the Hanover-square Rooms were crowded by a brilliant assemblage, and that the subscription list has not for years presented so satisfactory an appearance. The fact is that there is strong vitality in concerts of this description. They are based upon a solid foundation; their object is admirable, being nothing less than the advancement of true art through the perpetual example of those imperishable models which have been bequeathed us by the greatest masters. Conservative they must be; it is their mission; and those who counsel them to depart from it, in any sense, are either imperfect reasoners or enemies in disguise. The introduction of new and untried works should be the task of other and younger societies; the repertory of the Philharmonic is of necessity confined to acknowledged masterpieces. The Society of Concerts in the Conservatoire at Paris have always acted upon this principle — and with what results our readers need hardly be reminded. The programme on Monday night was in all respects irreproachable, and in one instance (we allude to the last piece) unusually interesting. We subjoin it in extenso:—

PART I.

Sinfonia in C	Mozart.
Aria, "Sombre forêt" (Guillaume Tell) .	Rossini.
Septuor in D minor	Hummel.
Duet, "Come, be gay" (Freischütz) . .	Weber.
Overture, "Alchymist"	Spohr.

PART II.

Sinfonia in A, No. 7	Beethoven.
Aria, "Idole de ma vie" (Robert le Diable)	Meyerbeer.
Overture in C major (MS.) . . .	Mendelssohn.

Conductor, Professor Sterndale Bennett, Mus. D.

Since last season there have been various secessions from the orchestra, owing to reasons that in no way concern the public, and the explanation of which would be not merely waste of time, but a tax on the patience of our readers. It is enough to state that the places of the (we believe) involuntary seceders have been filled up by thoroughly efficient substitutes, and that the execution of Mozart's first symphony in C (the one with the Haydnesque — or, to speak English, Haydn*ish* — minuet and trio), being completely up to the Philharmonic mark, was an auspicious inauguration of the season. The far more elaborate and difficult symphony at the commencement of the second part — which Beethoven himself regarded as one of his very best orchestral works — and the fine dramatic overture by which Spohr's opera, Der Alchymist, is exclusively known in this country, were equally well rendered — with a fire and precision, in short, added to a delicate observance of light and shade, that brought out all their beauties to perfection and contented the most exacting among the audience. The applause was frequent and liberal; and this was the more gratifying under the circumstances, inasmuch as the Philharmonic audience is chiefly an audience of professors and connoisseurs. Still more worthy of being dwelt upon was the very admirable performance of Mendelssohn's overture, which is so rarely heard that it came upon the ear with all the freshness of novelty, and on that account, if on no other, was the most striking feature in the programme. The history of this composition, which only exists in manuscript, may not be generally known. In 1833, on the occasion of his second visit to England, Mendelssohn was deputed by the Philharmonic directors to write some pieces for their concerts. The result of this commission — which reflected the highest credit alike on the judgment and the spirit of the society—was the overture in question (which, in consequence of the prominence of a particular instrument in the score, Mendelssohn used to call the "Trumpet-Overture"); the scena "Infelice," for soprano, since abridged, otherwise modified, and published; and the Second Symphony (in A major), now enjoying such universal celebrity under the title of the Italian symphony — a title invented after Mendelssohn's death, probably by some one who knew more about the composer's intentions than the composer himself. The "Trumpet-Overture," although in some passages reminding us more of Mozart than any other production of Mendelssohn's pen, is a masterpiece in the fullest acceptation of the word, and so delighted every hearer as to warrant its repetition at an early period, when, we beg leave to suggest, it might appropriately be assigned the place of honour in the programme. This, by the way, is one of the many pieces so inconsistently and so obstinately withheld from publication by Mendelssohn's executors. Happily, the Philharmonic Society, having the score and the orchestral parts in their possession, cannot be prevented from introducing it now and then at their concerts. If the rest of Mendelssohn's unpublished compositions are no weaker, there is no conceivable plea for suppressing them. It is to be hoped that before long some more reasonable explanation of the line of conduct it has been found necessary to pursue with reference to these interesting manuscripts than has been hitherto vouchsafed may be afforded by those from whom the musical world has an unquestionable right to demand it. At all events, the MS. overture on Monday night was a wonderful success.

The brilliant septet of Hummel, which stood in place of the ordinary concerto, was executed in first-rate styte by Mr. W. G. Cusins (pianoforte), Messrs. Svendsen (flute), Lavigne (oboe), C. Harper (horn), R. Blagrove (viola), Pettit (violoncello), and Rowland (double-bass), and unanimously applauded. Miss Louisa Pyne was the principal singer, which is equal to saying that the beautiful air from Guillaume Tell, and the elaborate "bravura" from Robert le Diable, were given to admiration. In the charming duet from Der Freischütz she was ably supported by her clever sister, Miss Susan Pyne.

No praise can exceed the deserts of Professor Sterndale Bennett, to whom the Philharmonic Society owes more than to any other man, and who directed the entire performance on the present occasion with unwearied zeal and masterly ability. He was received on appearing in the orchestra with the warmth due to his merits, and more than justified by his manner of conducting the orchestra the hearty greeting he experienced.

The Hullah Fund.— On Thursday night a concert was given at St. James's Hall by the members of Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir, in conjunction with several artists of eminence, vocal and instrumental, for the benefit of the Hullah Fund — an object which musicians and amateurs seem in an equal degree to have at heart. The hall was well attended, and the entertainment — in its way first-rate — afforded general satisfaction. Mr. Henry Leslie himself directed the performance, and the selection of part-songs, glees, and madrigals put down for the choir was one of varied attractions and uniform excellence. The most effective choral display was Weber's famous part-song, "Lutzow's wild hunt," which was splendidly delivered and encored with enthusiasm. The glee-party consisted of Miss Banks, Messrs. John Foster, Montem Smith, and Winn, who were highly successful in two of the most familiar glees of Spofforth and the Earl of Mornington. The solo-vocalists were Miss Banks, whose "Where the bee sucks" was deservedly redemanded; Mad. Sainton Dolby, whose admirable delivery of "The three fishers," Mr. Hullah's best and most popular song, was similarly complimented; Mr. Wilbye Cooper, who, besides one of the Reiselieder of Mendelssohn, gave Mr. Frederick Clay's very graceful ballad, "Would I could centre all my thoughts in thee," with irreproachable taste; and Mr. Richard Moss, whose fine bass voice was heard to advantage in Mozart's "Qui sdegno." Mr. Henry Leslie's elegant trio, "Memory," was also extremely well given by Miss Banks, Mad. Sainton Dolby, and Mr. Wilbye Cooper. The instrumental performers were Mr. Blagrove, who played his own clever fantasia on airs from Luisa Miller, in his finest manner; and Miss Arabella Goddard, whose polished and graceful execution of Handel's suite de pièces terminating with the "Harmonious Blacksmith," created the accustomed sensation, and who introduced, for the first time in public, Liszt's new and elaborately constructed fantasia on the themes of the quartet from Rigoletto, which she executed with a vigour, taste and brilliancy not to be surpassed. Both were loudly applauded, but Handel's variations seemed most entirely to suit the taste of the audience, who unanimously recalled Miss Goddard at the conclusion of her performance. The solo vocal music was well accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. T. S. Callcott.

At the next concert of Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir (March 21) Mendelssohn's 43*rd Psalm*, which was so wonderfully sung and so favourably received on the last occasion, is to be repeated.

Digitized by Google

THE WHITE SPOTTED HORSE.

An Arabian Legend of the period of the fourth Caliph.

BY SHIRLEY BROOKS.

'Tis the cause that alone should give grace to the fight,
And win for the champion a smile:
But honour be done to a true-hearted knight,
Let the steel that has cloven the way for the right
Be tempered in Seine or in Nile.

"He is here," said Mutassim, the Caliph and Lord,
As he turned at the sound of a cry,
And into the hand of young Omar restored
The wine that alone for the Caliphs is poured
In the goblet that fell from the sky.

At the knee of the Caliph is kneeling a maid,
At the knee of Mutassim the Just:
In the garb of the Faithful the girl is arrayed,
But the veil is in tatters, the raiment is frayed,
And the sandals are darkened with dust.

"Speak, child, and be fearless," he graciously said,
"Here nothing must tremble but guilt:
What foe hath a child of the Faithful to dread,
While the flag of Muttassim waves over her head,
And his hand hath a reach of his hilt?"

"I have fled from Ammora, where three moons ago,
I was dragged from the arms of my sire;
And my sister Rodava still lingers in woe."
"The name of the spoiler?" The voice was full low,
But the eye of the Caliph was fire.

"His name is Hodeida; a fortress that stands
On the Rock of Despair is his hold:
And thence like an eagle he plunders the lands,
Swoops fierce, at the head of his terrible bands,
And bears off the maidens and gold.

"'Tis a month since Rodava, the gentle and mild,
Implored him a ransom to claim:
He dashed her to earth, and the heart-broken child,
In her frantic despair, in her agony wild,—
O Caliph! she called on Thy Name.

"Hodeida laughed out as he savagely eyed
The girl where she lay like a corse:
'Mutassim, Mutassim,' he tauntingly cried,
'Yes, wait at my will till that hero shall ride
To thine aid on his White Spotted Horse.'"

The goblet the Caliph took back from the slave,
But scarce of the juice tasted he:
"The draught is but thin," said Mutassim the Brave,
"So seal up the beaker. Ho! banner and glaive!
Who rides to Ammora with me?"

Three days, and Hodeida beheld, from his tower,
Approaching a martial array:
The faithful came on in their pride and their power,
Arabia had sent to the battle her flower,
And a White Spotted Horse led the way.

Three hours, and the ram, that had thundered in vain,
Crashes gates with its terrible force;
The death-bearing arrows are pouring like rain,
And fierce through the portal and over the slain
Is rushing the White Spotted Horse.

Brief time for the slaughter—the robbers must die,
And they charge on the merciless sword:
What ruffian recoils from the Caliph's dread eye?
"Hodeida, no maid of Arabia shall cry
In vain on Mutassim the Lord.

"The White Spotted Horse hath appeared as the sign
Of thy doom, in the midst of thy gates:
Dost scowl on this faithful companion of mine?
Abdallah the Headsman, the duty be thine,
To banish a sight that he hates."

They brought out Rodava, with tears on her cheek,
"Didst doubt of my coming to save:
Yet my name in thine utmost of anguish couldst speak!
When Allah puts prayer in the heart of the weak,
He puts strength in the arm of the brave.

"Now, Omar, unseal me that beaker of wine,
Its flavour, perchance, is restored."
They shouted around, as with visage benign,
"Aye, now, by Mahommed, the draught is divine,"
Said Mutassim, the Caliph and Lord.

[The above is strongly recommended to English composers as a subject for a cantata,—not by the author, but by the Editor of the Musical World.]

Provincial.

The first part of the seventeenth concert of the Saturday Evening Concerts, on Saturday week, at Edinburgh, was devoted to a reading of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton's translation of Schiller's poem of Fridolin, with the incidental music composed by Bernhard Weber. Miss Aitken read the poem; but this mixed species of entertainment did not seem to please greatly. The entire musical setting of Fridolin by Mr. Frank Mori, we think, would have been more acceptable. Miss Helen Kirk, a young lady from Glasgow, made a good first public appearance. She is commended for her voice and expression, and cautioned about her style. The first of three concerts announced by Messrs. C. J. Hargitt and Howard, took place on Friday evening (March 1st), in the Music Hall. The "Jupiter" symphony of Mozart, the overture to Preciosa, and overture to Mr. Macfarren's Robin Hood, tested the mettle of the band. Of Mr. Macfarren's overture, our cotemporary, The Evening Courant, thus writes:—

"Macfarren's overture is not a work of much pretension, but it is melodiously and smoothly written, and, moreover, has a decidedly national character; at least it does not evince that laboured imitation of foreign styles of composition which too often characterises the orchestral works of our native composers. If the encouragement which is at present being given to English opera proves lasting, we may reasonably expect that a national style of operatic music, with original and distinctive features, will ere long be established in Britain."

Miss Banks made her first bow to an "Auld Reekie" audience, and was very favourably received. In the soprano part, in the fragment of Mendelssohn's Loreley, she appears to have pleased most. She does not, however, escape scot-free. The writer we have spoken above thus points to a fault which we are sorry to say might be laid to the charge of some of the most accomplished of our English songstresses:—

"She is, however, given to slurring some of her notes, and has great room for improvement in the matter of distinct articulation. We did not make out a single word of a song from Balfe's Bianca, which in other respects was charmingly sung."

Signor Piatti is lauded to the skies; but as regards intensity of feeling is said to have been "much surpassed by the late lamented Mr. Drechsler." Apropos of this somewhat startling enunciation, we counsel the reader to peruse the letter of our Paris correspondent, in the matter of Servais the Frenchman, and apply it to Drechsler the Teuton.

At the subscription concert at the Concert Hall, Manchester, on Wednesday, the 20th ult., the London Glee and Madrigal Union assisted. The Manchester Weekly Times thus alludes to the performance:—

"The vocal portion of the programme found able interpretation by the members of the London Glee and Madrigal Union, including Miss Wells, Miss Eyles, Messrs. Baxter, Cummings, Land, and Lawler; the same, with the exception of Miss Wells, who afforded so much gratification to the lovers of vocal harmony in the Free Trade Hall during the farewell performances of Mad. Clara Novello. With thoroughly educated musicians, possessing tuneable and pleasantly-mingling voices, there is no class of music that wins so rapidly, or takes such deep hold upon our sympathy, as this order of part singing. To English ears it has the charm of national sentiment and traditional association, carrying us back to the days of Shakspeare, of Ben Jonson, and even of "good Queen Bess"—if Dr. Motley will permit us to give that fair lady this gracious appellation. For many years there was established in Manchester perhaps the best glee club in the country—the best, because the members were in constant practice together, and night after night, and season after season, the same fine voices were heard; but, in spite of this agreeable recollection, it must be admitted that the London Glee and Madrigal Union have arrived at a degree of perfection that we have never previously experienced; the voices mingle so thoroughly, that is to say, they assimilate so peculiarly in quality and general character. Then, again, the intonation is so true; whilst, under the very skilful and well-studied direction of Mr. Land (whose compositions are of no mean order), there is an expression at once intelligent and faithful to the subject, and thus translating the meaning of both musician and poet in a manner acceptable to the least educated ear."

Digitized by Google

The band performed Beethoven's symphony in D and the overture to Der Freischütz, under the direction of Mr. C. A. Seymour, Mr. Charles Hallé not being present.

An English company, including the names of Miss Fanny Ternan, Miss Fanny Reeves, Messrs. Elliott Galer, E. Rosenthal, and J. Manley, is now giving a series of operatic performances at St. George's Hall, BRADFORD, not without opposition from a certain section of the public, who conceive the Hall is desecrated by being converted into a theatre. The Bradford people might easily reconcile matters by erecting a building available for operatic purposes. So wealthy a burgh, and musical, should have their own theatre, in which lyric representations would find a dignified home. We can hardly fancy the interior of St. George's Hall remaining unscathed by the alterations, fittings, and adjustments necessitated for its conversion into a theatre, more particularly that part required for the stage. If, however, the carpenters be as cunning as the staplers, the Hall will not suffer any damage.

LEEDS.—We learn from a correspondent that the opera company, under the direction of Mad. Rudersdorff and Mr. Randegger, have been performing at the Theatre Royal during the past fortnight to crowded audiences. Mad. Rudersdorff deserves great praise for the spirited manner in which she has produced some of the finest works in the repertoire of operas. Don Giovanni, Lucrezia Borgia, Il Barbiere, Sonnambula, Lucia, and Trovatore, have been included in the list, and at least respectfully performed. The principal characters have been undertaken by Mad. Rudersdorff, Miss Adela Alexander, Mad. Heinrich, Signor Tito Palmieri, Mr. Durand, and Mr. J. Morelle. The band is the best Leeds has ever had in the theatre.

At a concert given by the Classical Harmonists' Society at BELFAST, Herr Becker, the violinist, seems to have created an extraordinary sensation. The Belfast News-letter (March 1st) makes the following remarks on his performance:—

"Herr Becker favoured the audience with two violin solos, besides playing in a duet with Mr. Berger. Herr Becker is a very finished performer and his tone is perfectly unexceptionable. His bowing is also of a very high order of merit; and, whilst he proved that he has overcome many of the difficulties and learned to accomplish many of those tricks on the instrument which we could so well dispense with, he proved himself a true musician also, and succeeded in eliciting the warm applause of the audience and in being twice encored. Mr. Berger is a very pleasing pianoforte performer, and his rendering of Handel's 'Harmonious Blacksmith' was excellent."

The singers appear to have pleased, if we may trust the same authority:—

"Miss Lascelles, Mr. Tennant, and Signor Burdini each sang very effectively, and the audience stamped their efforts with unmistakeable approval."

The aboriginal members of the society—who may be fairly entitled "Aborigines," being aboriginal, that is, original (ab—from the first)—the aboriginal members of the Society, we say (as Mr. Thackeray would say), if the same authority may for a third time be accepted, proved themselves equally entitled to win that universal suffrage, which—as the late Caxton puts it, they "wanne"—that is, as we have suggested a line or two above, if the report of the Belfast News-letter may be trusted:—

"The members of the society acquitted themselves to admiration. There was not, indeed, much to do, but it was well done. The overture to Gluck's Iphigenia was played with very great effect and the violin passages which tell so wonderfully in the composition were admirably rendered. The chorus was fully up to the mark, and as a whole the concert went off admirably. Mr. G. B. Allen, the conductor, was, as usual, quite at home at his post, and he deserves the utmost credit for the training and general efficiency of the chorus."

To judge from the concurrency of Hibernian goose-quills, the tour of Madame Catherine Hayes has been everywhere prosperous.

MAD. GRISI, writes the Wiltshire County Mirror, will positively take leave of the stage in April, and her final appearance will be on the boards of Her Majesty's Theatre. ("Fudge!")

M. SCHIRA, writes the Brighton Gazette, will conduct the Italian operas during the coming season at Her Majesty's Theatre.

"JOHN" OF WESTMINSTER, THE ACTING DEPUTY FOR "BIG BEN."—Mr. T. Walesby writes:—"At length the great clock at the Houses of Parliament strikes the hour upon the largest of the four chime bells—or "John"—which is nearly as heavy as the great bell at St. Paul's Cathedral; the quarters being indicated as usual. Permit me to add that having, on certain occasions, ascended Sir Charles Barry's golden tower, I am enabled to assert that the bell chamber is very lofty, spacious, open at the sides, and altogether far better adapted for the passage of sound than any other in the metropolis. Hence the chimes may be heard at a considerable distance.

ST. PETERSBURGH.—Letters from this capital state that (M. Perrot having seceded) M. Saint-Léon has been appointed, by the Emperor, first Maître-de-Ballet of all the Imperial theatres in Russia.

BERLIN.—We learn, from our Berlin correspondent, that some warm partisans of Richard Wagner intend to establish a musical paper, entitled The Tannhäuser. The first number is to appear on the 15th inst., after the first performance of Tannhäuser in Paris.

Advertisements.

TO BE PUBLISHED BY SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MUSIC, a new work; being Three Essays which appeared in the MUSICAL WORLD. By JOSEPH GODDARD. Readers of the MUSICAL WORLD and the Public, wishing to encourage the publication of the above, may do so by forwarding their names to Mr. J. GODDARD, 3 St. Paul's Crescent, Camden Square, N.W. Price 5s. For further particulars, see the MUSICAL WORLD of Dec. 15th, 1860.

A PROFESSOR of MUSIC and ORGANIST in a Parish Church, where there is a fine organ, full choral service, surpliced choir, has an extensive TEACHING BUSINESS in one of the largest towns in England, wishes to DISPOSE of it either by Sale or Contract of Exchange with another Organist. The south preferred, the illness of a member of the family being the consideration. Satisfactory reference.—Apply C. Z., Office of this Paper.

VIOLIN.—To be SOLD, a very fine and highly esteemed Hieronymous or Grand Amati, at a moderate price.—Apply for view, &c. to F. B., MUSICAL WORLD Office.

CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS.—Just published, a new and splendid Library Edition of the whole of Chopin's celebrated Mazurkas, complete in one volume, music size, edited by J. W. DAVISON, with Portrait of Chopin, and Life and Critical Notice by the Editor. Superbly bound, 10s. 6d.

MENDELSSOHN'S SONGS WITHOUT WORDS.—New and complete Edition of the Six Books in One Volume. Edited and with a Preface, by J. W. DAVISON, and Portrait by JOHN LYNCH. Splendidly bound in crimson and gold. Price 7s. 6d.

BOOSEY'S FIFTY SHORT VOLUNTARIES for the Harmonium, arranged and selected by RUDOLF NORDMANN, from the works of the greatest masters. Price 3s. 6d. in cloth.
Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

STRAUSS, LANNER, and LABITZKY.—Just published, in a large book, music size, price 3s. 6d., Boosey's 100 Waltzes by Strauss, Lanner, and Labitzky for Pianoforte, including the best specimens of each composer. Also, the same work for Violin, 1s.
Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

THE HARMONIUM MUSEUM.—A Third Edition of this unrivalled work is now ready, price 7s. 6d., in cloth, containing 100 Sacred and Secular subjects by the greatest masters. Arranged for Harmonium by Nordmann; with an introductory article by Henry Smart for the use of persons unacquainted with the instrument.
Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER.—New and complete Edition. Arranged for the Pianoforte by Henry Smart. Price 3s.; or, handsomely bound in cloth, 5s. Also, Mozart's Twelfth Mass, in the same form.
Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

Digitized by Google

GUINEA EDITION
OF
BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS.

Just published, in two volumes, superbly bound in cloth, price each 10*s.* 6*d.*,

BOOSEY AND SONS'
NEW EDITION OF
BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS FOR PIANOFORTE,

Edited by W. DORRELL; with Life of BEETHOVEN by MACFARREN, and Portrait by Lynch.

THIS edition is beautifully printed from newly-engraved Plates, and is the most correct one published.

CONTENTS OF VOL. I.
Price 10s. 6d.

onata, No. 1, Op. 2, F minor.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 2, A.
Sonata, No. 3, Op. 2, C.
Sonata, Op. 7, E flat.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 10, C minor.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 10, F.
Sonata, No. 3, Op. 10, D.
Sonata Pathetique, Op. 13, C minor.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 14, E.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 14, G.
Sonata, Op. 22, B flat.
Sonata, with Funeral March, Op. 26, A flat.
Sonata quasi una Fantasia (known as the "Moonlight Sonata"), No. 1, Op. 27, C sharp minor.
Sonata quasi una Fantasia, No. 2, Op. 27, E flat.
Sonata Pastorale, Op. 28, D.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 31, G.

CONTENTS OF VOL. II.
Price 10s. 6d.

Sonata, No. 2, Op. 31, D minor.
Sonata, No. 3, Op. 31, E flat.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 49, G minor.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 49, G.
Sonata, Op. 53, C.
Sonata, Op. 54, F.
Sonata Appassionata, Op. 57, F minor.
Sonata, Op. 78, F sharp.
Sonata, Op. 79, G.
Sonata Caractéristique, Op. 81, E flat ("Les Adieux").
Sonata, Op. 90, E minor.
Sonata, Op. 101, A.
Grand Sonata, Op. 106, B flat.
Sonata, Op. 109, E.
Sonata, Op. 110, A flat.
Sonata, Op. 111, C minor.

"There are many editions of Beethoven's sonatas, German, French, and English; but there is not one that we have seen, from which, taking all things into account—correctness and clearness of the text, elegance of form, and moderation of price—we have derived so much satisfaction as from the edition now before us. The text, after undergoing the revision of so able an editor as Mr. Dorrell, may be expected to be immaculate; and so, after a close examination, we find it to be; and the clearness and beauty of the paper and printing are not to be excelled. The value of the edition is much enhanced by an able and interesting essay on the life and works of Beethoven from the pen of Mr. G. A. Macfarren; and there is, moreover, an excellent portrait of the composer."—Daily News.

BOOSEY'S MONTHLY VIOLINIST, price 6d.—The First Number of this Publication will appear March 1st, and will contain a Selection of 13 Airs from Balfe's new opera. "Bianca;" Laurent's Daisy Waltzes on the Buckley's Songs; Burckhardt's Knickerbocker Polka; Laurent's Christmas Waits Quadrille; La Chatelaine Valse, Petchi-i-i Polka, and Flocon de Neige Galop. Boosey's Monthly Violinist will comprise the newest and most popular Music of the day, short Airs, with Variations, &c., forming a most attractive Miscellany for Amateurs.
Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S ORCHESTRAL OVERTURES, arranged by LAMOTTE. Price 8s. each for full band; 5s. each for small band.

1. Crown Diamonds, Auber.
2. Zampa, Herold.
3. Zanetta, Auber.
4. Oberon, Weber.
5. Fra Diavolo. Auber.
6. Der Freischütz, Weber.
7. Domino Noir, Auber.
8. Gazza Ladra, Rossini.
9. Dame Blanche, Boieldieu.
10. Masaniello, Auber.
11. Part du Diable, Auber.
12. Guillaume Tell, Rossini.

KUHE'S NEW TRANSCRIPTION of SCHUBERT'S FAVOURITE MELODIES, as short and effective Pieces for the Pianoforte, price 2s. 6d. each.

1. Serenade.
2. Ave Maria.
3. Adieu.
4. The Wanderer.
5. The praise of Tears.
6. Thine is my heart.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

OPERAS IN ENGLISH.—Dinorah 12s.; Il Trovatore, 12s.; Satanella, 15s; La Traviata, 12s.; Don Juan, 18s.; Figaro, 16s.; Sonnambula, 12s. 6d.; Norma, 10s. 6d.; Lucrezia, 16s.; Iphigenia in Tauris, 8s.; Faust, 12s. 6d.; Fidelio, 15s.; Der Freischütz, 12s. 6d; Ernani, 15s.; Il Barbière, 10s.; Zauberflöte, 12s. 6d. These Operas are complete for Voice and Pianoforte, with English Words, and the original Foreign Text, in handsome cloth volumes. BOOSEY'S Editions must be ordered—Holles Street.

OPERAS, SOLO.—Dinorah, 7s. 6d.; Satanella, 5s.; La Traviata, 5s.; Il Trovatore, 5s.; Rigoletto, 5s.; Ernani, 5s.; Luisa Miller, 5s.; Vêpres Siciliennes, 7s. 6d.; Crown Diamonds, 6s.; Don Pasquale, 5s.; Martha, 5s.; Les Huguenots, 7s. 6d.; Don Juan, 5s.; Fra Diavolo, 5s.; Fille du Regiment, 4s.; Lucia di Lammermoor. 5s.; Lucrezia Borgia, 4s.; Puritani, 6s.; Norma, 4s.; Sonnambula, 4s. These Operas are complete for Pianoforte, in cloth, gilt letters, each with a beautiful Frontispiece, printed on India paper, and an Introduction describing the plot and music. BOOSEYS' Editions must be ordered.—Holles Street.

NEW PUBLICATIONS
OF
DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.,
244 REGENT STREET. (JUST OUT.)

"MAY."—New Duettino, by HENRY SMART, composed for equal Voices. Price 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Henry Smart, in this melodious and truly exquisite little duet, has, if possible, even surpassed in elegance and vocal finish, the pieces so warmly eulogised in our last impression."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THIS WORLD IS A GARDEN," by GEORGE LODER. Comic song. Price 2s. 6d.

"The well-known and popular song introduced with such invariable success, by Mr. John Rouse, in Stirling Coyne's lively operetta, The Pets of the Parterre. As all our readers must have heard, and hearing, applauded it, it is enough to say that we entirely agree with their unanimously favourable verdict."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"IN A LEAFY GARDEN," by GEORGE LODER. Ballad. Price 2s. 6d.

"Composed for that careful and promising tenor, Mr. Richard Seymour, is in a different style to This World is a Garden, and shows that the composer, Mr. George Loder (the talented conductor of the Lyceum orchestra), can give musical expression to sentiment no less than to humour. It is graceful, well written, and last, not least, essentially vocal."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE BANNER OF ST. GEORGE," by BALFE, a new National Song. The words by John Brougham, written for, and dedicated to, THE ST. GEORGE'S RIFLE CORPS, is published, beautifully illustrated, price 2s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," Révérie by W. Kuhé, on Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), and "I love YOU," Sims Reeves's popular ballad, transcribed for the Piano by Emile Berger, are published, price 3s. each, by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL," by W. H. WEISS, composed and sung by the composer, with the greatest success, as well as by Mr. WINN and other vocalists of celebrity, is published, handsomely illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

BALFE'S NEWEST and most POPULAR SONGS.

	s.	d.
"I love YOU" (Sung by Sims Reeves)	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose" (Ditto)	3	0
"The Banner of St. George" (beautifully illustrated)	3	0
"If I could change" (Sung by Laura Baxter)	2	6
"I'm not in love, remember" (Madame Jenny Bauer)	2	6
"Oh! take me to thy heart again" (by Miss Poole)	2	0

Published by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W., where "I love YOU" may be obtained, transcribed for the Pianoforte by Emile Berger, price 3s.

TYROLEAN MOUNTAIN SONG, by T. MAUSS (Der Jodelplatz), arranged for the pianoforte, and dedicated to Mr. W. E. Jarrett, of Cheltenham, is just published, price 3s.
Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, S. W.

THE SILVER CORD WALTZ, by J. VON JOEL, (dedicated to Emile Berger), is now published, for the pianoforte, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, S. W.

ANDANTE in E flat, by GEORGIANA HOLMES, from a Quintet by FELICIEN DAVIN, arranged for the pianoforte, and dedicated to Lady Scott, is just published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, S. W., where "Les Etoiles et leur Langage," Nocturne and "Air with Variations" (both composed by Georgiana Holmes), may be obtained, price 3s. each.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A COLLECTION of SANCTUSES, KYRIES, and DOXOLOGIES, in Score, and with Accompaniments, selected and arranged by J. E. RICHARDSON, Assistant Organist of Salisbury Cathedral, price 3s. 6d.
Salisbury: W. P. Aylward, New Canal.
London: Messrs. Cocks and Co., 6 New Burlington Street; Messrs. Addison and Co., 210 Regent Street; and Mr. J. Willis, 119 New Bond Street.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.
Their Catalogues, which contain a great variety of Music calculated for teaching purposes, may be had, post-free, on application.
London: 18 Hanover Square.

WANTED, for the Parish Church of Horncastle, an ORGANIST. He must be able to instruct and act as Choir Master. Salary £25 per annum. There is an excellent opening for a good musician as teacher, &c., in town and neighbourhood.—Address, Henry Nicholson, Churchwarden, Horncastle.

WALLWORTH'S ART OF SINGING. Second Edition, just out, full music size, price 7s. A new and modern method for cultivating the voice, and for gaining a perfect vocalisation—a practical work—contains 25 pages of music. With a true method of acquiring the Shake, now for the first time introduced in a Singing Tutor. By T. A. WALLWORTH, Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.
Published by A. W. Hammond (late Jullien), 214 Regent Street; and may also be had of the Author at his residence, 81 Park Street, Grosvenor Square, W., where Pupils are also received.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 12 James Street, Buckingham Gate, in the Parish of St. Margaret, in the City of Westminster, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, March 9, 1861.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 39—No. 11 SATURDAY, MARCH 16, 1861 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

THE CHURCH OF ALL SAINTS, KENSINGTON PARK.

MENDELSSOHN'S ELIJAH.

Previous to the Consecration of the Church of All Saints, Kensington Park, the

ORATORIO OF ELIJAH

will be given therein, on Saturday afternoon, March 30th, with full Band, Organ, and Chorus, including in all 300 Performers.

PRINCIPAL VOCALISTS:

Miss LOUISA PYNE and Mad. LAURA BAXTER,

Mad. ALEXANDER NEWTON and Miss SUSAN PYNE,

Mr. WILBYE COOPER and Mr. W. H. WEISS.

Conductor—Dr. JAMES PECH.

Tickets, Half-a-Guinea each, in aid of the Completion Fund.

Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d. each. A few Seats at 5s. To be had at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33 Old Bond Street, at any of the principal Musicsellers, and at Boddington's Library, Notting Hill.

MESSRS. KLINDWORTH, H. BLAGROVE, and DAUBERT'S Third CONCERT at the Hanover Square Rooms, TUESDAY Evening next, March 19th, at half-past 8. Quintet, Op. 5, Berwald; Sonata, Op. 102, No. 2, Beethoven; Fantasia, Op. 160, Schubert; Quartet, Op. 3, Mendelssohn; Scotch Songs, Beethoven. Vocalist, Miss MARIAN MOSS. Programmes illustrated by G. A. MACFARREN.

Tickets at Cramer's, Ewer's, Chappell's, Schott's, and Bett's Warehouses.

EWER & CO.'S LIST OF NEW PUBLICATIONS.

		s.	d.
BENEDICT, J. MALCOLM,	Marche Triomphale	4	0
BERGER, FRANCESCO,	Bon repos, chérie, Nocturne	2	0
,,	Lena, Serenade	2	0
GAUDE, LOUIS DE LA,	Evelyn, Polka Mazurka	2	0
GARIBALDI,	Viva Italia, March and National Hymn (with Italian words)	2	0
JUNGMANN, A.,	Souvenance	2	6
KRUGER, W.,	Les Cloches du Soir	4	0
LISZT, J.,	Grand Paraphrase sur Il Trovatore	6	0
,,	Rigoletto	6	0
,,	Ernani	6	0
MAGNUS, H.,	Carnaval Napolitain	4	0
PACHER, J. A.,	Op. 9, La Harpe	4	0
,,	Op. 34, Le Ruisseau	3	0
,,	Op. 50, Twelve Melodious Studies	7	6
,,	Op. 53, Tendresse	3	0
SCHULTHES, W.,	Op. 27, Stella Matutina, mélod. rélig.	2	6
SILAS, E.,	Op. 49, Costanza Impromptu	3	0
SPINDLER, F.,	L'Oisillon	2	6
WOLLENHAUPT, H. A.,	Op. 19, Grande Marche de Concert ...	3	0
,,	Op. 23, La Gazelle	3	0
,,	Op. 24, Galop di Bravura	4	0
,,	Op. 26, Helene. Grand Valse Brillante ...	4	0
,,	Cordelia. Schottisch	3	0
,,	La Violette. Polka de Concert	3	0

MOLIQUE'S ORATORIO—"ABRAHAM."

						s.	d.
Soprano Airs.—	I will extol Thee, my God	...	...	...	...	4	0
,,	Hear my prayer, O Lord	...	...	...	...	3	0
,,	Unto Thee lift I up mine eyes	...	...	...	...	4	6
Contralto Air.—	They kept not the law	...	...	...	...	1	6
Tenor Airs.—	Who walketh uprightly	...	...	...	...	2	6
,,	Pour out thy heart before the Lord	...	...	...	...	2	6
Baritone Airs.—	Lead me, O Lord, in Thy righteousness	...	...	...	...	3	0
,,	Let there be no strife	...	...	...	...	2	6
,,	The joy of my heart is ceased	...	...	...	...	4	0
,,	Lord have mercy upon me	...	...	...	...	4	6
Duets.—	Cast out this bondwoman. Alto and Baritone			...	...	4	6
,,	It is of the Lord's great mercies. Soprano and Baritone				...	3	0
Trio.—	Alto, Tenor, and Bass. Let all these rejoice				...	3	0
Quartet.—	S. A. T. & B. Go in peace before the Lord				...	4	6
March.—	Arranged for Pianoforte Solo				...	2	6
,,	,, ,, Duet				...	4	0
,,	,, ,, Organ (arranged by W. T. BEST)				...	3	0

EWER & CO. 87 REGENT STREET,

Universal Circulating Musical Library.

SIGNOR BURDINI begs to announce to his Pupils and the Public, that he will RETURN to London on the 21st instant.—No. 36 Bryanston Street, Portman Square.

MR. and Mrs. H. C. LUNN beg to inform their Pupils and Friends that they have REMOVED from 23 Southampton Street, Bloomsbury, to 15 Great Coram Street, Russell Square.

MONSIEUR EDOUARD DE PARIS begs to announce that he will give a MATINEE MUSICALE on WEDNESDAY, April 24th, at 13 Portman Street, Portman Square, by kind permission of J. G. Armstrong, Esq., further particulars of which will be shortly announced.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S NEW SONGS, sung with the greatest success at all the principal Concerts—Hawking Song, 3s.; Rest, 2s. 6d.; Now, 3s. The Music composed expressly by VIRGINIA GABRIEL. C. Lonsdale, 26 Old Bond Street.

NEW CANZONET JUST PUBLISHED.

"THE RAINBOW," by Mrs. J. HOLMAN ANDREWS. Written by the Rev. J. KEBLE. Dedicated to Miss Wood, North Cray Place, Kent. Price 2s. 6d.
London: Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201 Regent Street.

TWO MUSICAL SKETCHES for the PIANOFORTE dedicated to Mr. Charles Hallé, by JAMES LEA SUMMERS, price 2s. 6d. each, "are cleverly written and stamped with real musical feeling."—MUSICAL WORLD.
London:—Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210 Regent Street.

BRYCESON'S ORGAN FACTORY, BROOK STREET, EUSTON ROAD, LONDON, N.W. ESTABLISHED 1796.
Apply for PRICED CATALOGUE of ST. CECILIA, SCUDAMORE, and other ORGANS, usually in Stock. Also as to the Tuning, &c., of Organs in all parts of the Country. Church Organs of any size Built or Enlarged, as well as Warehoused during Restorations.

WANTED, a LADY or GENTLEMAN, to PLAY the HARMONIUM at the Unitarian Chapel, Effra Road, Brixton, at Morning and Evening Service on Sundays.—Address, stating qualifications, salary required, &c., to "F.," Mr. Short's, Post-office, Manor Street, Clapham, S.

ARTICLED PUPIL.—The Organist of York Minster has a vacancy in his house for another Pupil.

TO BE PUBLISHED BY SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MUSIC, a new work; being Three Essays which appeared in the MUSICAL WORLD. By JOSEPH GODDARD. Readers of the MUSICAL WORLD and the Public, wishing to encourage the publication of the above, may do so by forwarding their names to Mr. J. GODDARD, 3 St. Paul's Crescent, Camden Square, N.W. Price 5s. For further particulars, see the MUSICAL WORLD of Dec. 15th, 1860.

MENDELSSOHN'S SONGS WITHOUT WORDS.—New and complete Edition of the Six Books in One Volume. Edited and with a Preface, by J. W. DAVISON, and Portrait by JOHN LYNCH. Splendidly bound in crimson and gold. Price 7s. 6d.

PATERSON and SONS' Guinea Edition of the VOCAL MELODIES of SCOTLAND, edited by the late FINLAY DUN and the late JOHN THOMSON, Esq., containing 144 Songs, full sized Music Plates, Four Volumes in One, elegantly Bound and Gilt, 21s.; in rich Fancy Bindings, from 25s., free by post for 2s. extra.
"Among the really cheap musical publications which are now almost continuously issuing from the press, one of the most remarkable is the work now before us.—Scotsman.
Paterson and Sons, Musicsellers, Edinburgh and Glasgow.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.
Their Catalogues, which contain a great variety of Music calculated for teaching purposes, may be had, post-free, on application.
London: 18 Hanover Square.

Digitized by Google

NEW AND POPULAR

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY

ASHDOWN AND PARRY, 18 HANOVER SQUARE.

G. A. OSBORNE. LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM. Brilliant Fantasia. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. LES ENFANTS DE LA GARDE. Grande Marche brillante. Price 4s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. VEDRAI CARINO. Transcription (Don Juan). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. BATTI, BATTI. Transcription (Don Juan). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. THE MERMAID'S SONG. Transcription of Haydn's Canzonet. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. PRAEGER. MALBROOK. Brilliant Piece on the old French air. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. PRAEGER. JOCK O' HAZELDEAN. Fantasia. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

WILHELM GANZ. SANTA LUCIA. A brilliant transcription of the popular Neapolitan air. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE MAUSS. PROMETHEUS. Grand Galop brillant. Price 4s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

JULES BRISSAC. THE HARP THAT ONCE THRO' TARA'S HALLS. Transcription. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. JOSEPHINE. Mazurka de Salon. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. LA VALLÉE DES ROSES. Deuxième Mazurka de Salon. Price 3s. 6d.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. LE LANGAGE DES FLEURS. Troisième Mazurka de Salon.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

E. SILAS. ROMANCE. Price 2s. 6d.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

E. SILAS. IMPROMPTU (à la Mazurka). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

EMANUEL AGUILAR. THE BIRDS AT SUNSET. Characteristic Piece. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

STEPHEN HELLER. IN WALD UND FLUR. Troisième Suite de Promenades d'un Solitaire. 6 Nos. Price 3s. and 4s. each.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE KULLAK. LES ARPÈGES. Etude de Concert. Price 5s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE KULLAK. CAPUCINE. Legende. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN AND PARRY

(Successors to Wessel and Co.),

18 HANOVER SQUARE.

AUBER'S NEW OPERA,

LA CIRCASSIENNE,

NOW PERFORMING WITH

IMMENSE SUCCESS

AT THE

OPÉRA COMIQUE, PARIS,

WILL SHORTLY BE PUBLISED BY MESSRS.

ADDISON, HOLLIER, and LUCAS,

Who have Purchased the

COPYRIGHT.

London, 210 Regent Street, W.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD'S NEW SOLO,

"ALBION,"

FANTASIA ON ENGLISH AIRS.

BY

J. BENEDICT.

Performed with the greatest success by

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD,

AT THE CONCERT OF THE VOCAL ASSOCIATION, ON TUESDAY, MARCH 12TH.

"The melodies upon which Albion is constructed — "Pray Goody," and "Come if you dare" — are varied, ornamented, and otherwise elaborated with no less elegance than skill. The effect is remarkably showy and brilliant, and the audience were so much pleased, that Miss Goddard was compelled to return a second time and resume her seat at the pianoforte."—The Times.

"The triumph of the evening, however, was unquestionably achieved by Mr. Benedict's new fantasia, Albion, which embroiders the two airs on which it is based — "Pray Goody," and "Come if you dare" — with such charm and skill, that, elaborate as the variations are, they never, as in similar compositions, obscure the melody, but rather enhance its beauty."—Daily Telegraph.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"Albion," English Fantasia—Miss Arabella Goddard's pianoforte répertoire, No. 5 — by JULES BENEDICT (Boosey and Sons).

THE great popularity achieved by Mr. Benedict's "Erin," and "Caledonia," both composed for Miss Arabella Goddard, and both frequently performed by her in public, of course rendered an "Albion," to complete the triad, a sine quâ non. Here we have one at last; and it must be owned, a worthy companion to the others. As England is to Ireland, or to Scotland, so is "Albion" to "Erin," or to "Caledonia;" let the respective relations be interpreted according to their own particular sympathies by the musical patriots of either region. Mr. Benedict has chosen two genuine melodies for his English fantasia, melodies as openly contrasted as they are intrinsically beautiful. The delicious ballad from Midas, "Pray Goody," one of Dr. Arne's freshest inspirations, is the first; Purcell's vigorous and truly national war-song, "Come, if you dare!" (King Arthur) the last. "Pray Goody" is decked out with that refined and exquisite taste for which Mr. Benedict is noted, and the presence of which was never more evident than in the several fantasias he has expressly written for Miss Goddard. He seems, indeed, to have been conscious while composing these that he was composing for fairy fingers. At the same time, with the conviction that those same fairy fingers are equal to the most daring flights, and that no mechanical problem can abash them, he has approached ("abordé") the noble melody of Purcell with appropriate energy and boldness, The contrast offered by Mr. Benedict's treatment is as strong and as effective as that offered by the motivi he has had to treat. And yet, amid all this, there is an air of masterly completeness about the whole which is eminently satisfactory. Dr. Arne and Purcell, though locked up in the same fantasia, agree admirably well together; their characteristic features are blended with perfect harmony, and the two make one as though they had been associated from the first. "Albion" is, in fact, a showy, brilliant, and at the same time thoroughly elegant piece, and will, there is no doubt, be sought alike by professors and dilettanti. That it is calculated to enchant the public was amply demonstrated at the recent concert of the Vocal Association, and at the annual festival of the Royal Society of Musicians, on both of which occasions Miss Goddard performed it with extraordinary success. Now, that England, Ireland, and Scotland are propitiated, Wales (the "principality") will hardly be satisfied without its "Cambria." A mine of melodic wealth is at Mr. Benedict's disposal.

"L'Adieu," morceau de salon pour piano—par S. PERCIVAL, Op. 8 (Ashdown and Parry). There are grace and feeling in this piece, which, moreover, is composed with artistic finish, and well adapted to the pianoforte. The first pages are, perhaps, a little monotonous, owing to the peculiarity of the motivo, and the prevalence, almost without cessation, of triplet-arpeggios in the accompaniment; but at the più animato (pages 6, 7), where the semi-quavers are brought into action, we have a contrast at once brilliant and effective.

"The Voice of the Wind," andante grazioso, for the pianoforte; "A Summer's Morning"—morceau de salon, for the pianoforte—composed by CHARLES M'KORKELL (Ashdown and Parry). Both these little pieces have merit, if not novelty. They are so neatly written, moreover, and lie so well for the hand, that they can hardly fail to please amateurs—for whose use they are probably intended. "The Voice of the Wind" (evidently not suggested by Mr. Wallace's "Night Winds") is the most expressive, "A Summer's Morning" the most sparkling of the two—and this, in spite of its somewhat familiar and schottische-like second subject, which might certainly be more original.

"Im Grünen," kleine Stücke für pianoforte, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4,—THEODORE KULLAK (Ashdown and Parry). Of these "kleine Stücke" we have only received No. 2, in F major, all we can say about which is, that it fully establishes its title. It is a veritable "little piece"—and a very pretty little piece, to boot.

"Schubert's Favourite Melodies"—transcribed for the pianoforte—by W. KUHE (Boosey and Sons). The series before us includes six songs, known by their English titles of "Serenade," "Ave Maria," "Adieu," "The Wanderer," "The Praise of Tears," and "Thine is my heart." What Herr KUHE has added of his own in "transcribing" these beautiful melodies is so graceful and unobtrusive that he may fairly lay claim to having "embellished" Schubert after the manner of pianistes de salon—a manner peculiarly grateful to "dames et demoiselles de salon." Apart from his "embellishments"—which never occur, by the way, until the chief part of the song has been laid down according to the text—there is nothing in the "transcriptions" of Herr Kuhe to which Schubert himself could possibly have made objection. In short, they form both useful and agreeable little studies, their only fault being their brevity.

"Scottish airs as quartets," Nos. 1, 2, and 3—by CHARLES J. HARGITT (J. A. Novello)—consist of "John Anderson my Jo," "In the garb of old Gaul," and "Welcome, Royal Charlie," extremely well arranged for four voices—soprano, alto, tenor, and bass. They may be recommended as both agreeable and serviceable practice. No. 4 has not reached us.

"Eighteen German Volkslieder," for the pianoforte—by ADOLPH GOLLMICK, Op. 50 (Boosey and Sons).

Nos. 1 to 12 of this series of short, brilliant, and moderately easy drawing-room pieces have been already noticed in the MUSICAL WORLD. Nos. 13 to 18 are before us. The new numbers are constructed on a precisely similar plan, and fully carry out the promise of their predecessors. A livelier theme than that of No. 13, "Ach wie wärs möglich" ("My own Love"), could hardly be wished. About the beauty and marked character of Mendelssohn's "Liebe wohl" ("Farewell to the woods"), which forms the subject of No. 14, there never has and never can be two opinions; and if possible the expressive charm of the same composer's "Es ist bestimt in Gottes rash" ("Mourn not") is still more immediately apparent, thought not more universally acknowledged. The theme of No. 16, "Binein und aus Gange in Ganze Tyrol" ("The Maidens of Tyrol") is one of the prettiest existing airs in the Tyrolean manner, and none the less welcome for reminding us of a popular tune in Mr. Balfe's Satanella; that of No. 17, "Sehnsucht" ("The heart's desire") is neither more nor less than the erroneously styled Last Waltz of Beethoven (in France "Le Desir"), but which was really composed by Schubert; finally, No. 18 is built upon a very pretty melody, entitled "Loreley," the source of which we are unable to trace. Herr Gollmick would do well to accredit all the themes he has used to their actual composers—at least when that is practicable, as in the instance of Mendelssohn and Schubert. Lorelei is perhaps his own; but who is to know this while such familiar tunes as those of Mendelssohn's part-songs and Schubert's waltz are presented anonymously?

Digitized by Google

"Gondoliera," pour piano—par HAROLD THOMAS, No. 3, Op. 5 (Robert W. Ollivier)—is an unpretending sketch, by no means without grace and movement.

"Une pensée Musicale," pour le piano, composée et dediée à ses Parents—par W. ROOKE (Leoni Lee).

The French title-page is accounted for, we suppose, by Mr. Rooke having received his musical education in Belgium ("un élève au Conservatoire Royal de Bruxelles"). The piece itself might have been composed anywhere. It is not ill-written, but would do very well without so many Italian indications and affixes, which only confuse the performer. The last two bars—consisting of common chords, accompanied by arpeggios—are to be played "pianissimo sino al fine." Good.

"Trois melodies pour Harmonium," par FREDERICK S. CLARK (Chappell and Co.)—may be described as three melodies for the harmonium.

"Der Wirbelwind," galop di bravura, for the pianoforte—by CHARLES FOWLER (Addison, Hollier, and Lucas). Clever and showy, certainly, but too long for the interest belonging to its themes; too diffuse, and too full of superfluous repetitions. A simple idea worked threadbare. Let Mr. Fowler try his hand again, and aim at conciseness. Let him also either make out his title-pages in German, or in Italian, or in English (best), but not in a mixture of all three.

"Lord, I hear of showers of blessings," revival-hymn—MARTIN H. HODGES (Joseph Williams). A smooth piece of four-voiced harmony, of which the accompaniment, for organ or pianoforte, is merely a transcription.

"The Secret of the Sea"—words by LONGFELLOW, music by GEORGE F. GRAHAM (A. S. Nordheimer and R. S. Williams, Toronto). This song might be improved by a revision of the harmony. Such progressions as consecutive fifths in a similar direction, between voice-part and bass, are not canonical (vide page 1, line 3, bar 1—E F, bass, B C, voice part.)

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY.

KULLAK (THEODORE) "Im Grünen" (Pianoforte).
M'KORKELL (CHARLES) "A Summer's Morning" (Pianoforte).
Ditto, "The Voice of the Wind" (ditto).
PERCIVAL (S.) "L'Adieu," Op. 8 (ditto).

ADDISON, HOLLIER, AND LUCAS.

FOWLER (CHARLES) "Der Wirbelwind" (Pianoforte).
SALAMAN (CHARLES) "Good bye! a long good bye" (Ballad).

BOOSEY AND SONS.

YATES (EDMUND) "The brave Volunteers" (Song).
BENEDICT (JULES) "Albion" Fantasia (Pianoforte).
GOLLMICK (ADOLPH) "Farewell to the Woods" (Pianoforte).
Ditto, "Loreley" (ditto).
Ditto, "Mourn not" (ditto).
Ditto, "My own Love" (ditto).
Ditto, "The Heart's Desire" (ditto).
Ditto, "The Maidens of Tyrol" (ditto).
KUHE (WILHELM) "Schubert's Adieu" (ditto).
Ditto, "Schubert's Ave Maria" (ditto).
Ditto, "Schubert's Praise of Tears" (ditto).
Ditto, "Schubert's Serenade" (ditto).
Ditto, "Schubert's Thine is my Heart" (ditto).
Ditto, "Schubert's Wanderer" (ditto).
LAURENT (HENRI) "Château des Fleurs," Schottische (ditto).
MARRIOTT (CHARLES) "The Waterfall Galop" (ditto).

BUSSELL (Dublin).

ROBINSON (FRANCIS) "My thoughts will wander" (Song).

CHAPPELL AND CO.

CLARK (FREDERICK S.) "Trois Melodies" (Harmonium).

ROBERT COCKS AND CO.

THURNAM (EDWARD) "Romanza" (Violincello and Piano).

EMERY.

BRIDGES (WILLIAM) "Scotland's Love" (Song).

HALL AND SON (Cheltenham).

COOPER (Mrs. R.) "Rain Drops" (Harp Solo).
HUTCHINSON (W.) "The Spring of Life" (Song).
Ditto, "When the silvery moonbeams sleep" (Song).

LEONI LEE.

ROOKE (W.) "Une pensei musicale" (Pianoforte).

NOVELLO.

SMEE (FREDERICK) "O Lord, we beseech Thee" (Vocal).

METZLER AND CO.

BORINI (C.) "Forgive and forget" (Ballad).
Ditto, "I cannot breathe farewell" (Ballad).
Ditto, "Nay, do not turn away, Effie" (Ballad).

NORDHEIMER (Toronto, Canada).

GRAHAM (GEORGE F.) "The Secret of the Sea" (Song).

OLLIVIER.

THOMAS (HAROLD) "Gondoliera" (Pianoforte).
Ditto, "Wind of the Western Sea" (Song).

J. WILLIAMS.

HODGES (MARTIN H.) "Lord, I hear of showers of blessings" (Hymn).

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

March 13, 1861.

TANNHÄUSER, like the ascendancy of its composer's musical ideas, is still in futuro. Hitches and squabbles of all sorts continue to retard its production. The other day it was the subject of an action at law, one of the translators of the libretto, M. Lindau, applying to the civil tribunal to oblige the manager to insert his name in the bills announcing the new opera, together with those of MM. Roche and Nuitter. Herr Richard Wagner, through his counsel, the celebrated Emile Olivier—no son-in-law, by the way, of Liszt—opposed the application, on the ground that M. Lindau had not completed his share of the work, and had caused a great deal of delay. Notwithstanding the efforts of his counsel, M. Marie, the plaintiff, was cast, with the reservation of his pecuniary rights as a joint author. Nor has this been the only conflict to which Tannhäuser has given rise; for never was there coming event which cast so huge a shadow before. The German composer has had a squabble with the director of the orchestra, M. Dietsch, the former wishing to take charge of the baton for the first two or three nights of the performance of his opera, as is customary in Germany, Italy, and in England, while the latter refuses to relinquish his post under any plea whatsoever. This contest, it was generally supposed, had been settled, but being a very pretty quarrel, it has not been allowed to subside, and besides which it is very serviceable to keep up the preliminary excitement, without which no new work intended to make a sensation should be produced by people who know their business. Mad. Tedesco's hoarseness was very well for a day or two; but another "row" of some kind was indispensable. At the Italian Theatre L'Italiana in Algeri has been revived for the début of Signor Montanaro, the tenor. This gentleman, who succeeds Gardoni here, was engaged for a musical tour in England, under the generalship of Mr. Willert Beale, and which was to commence on the 4th of April, Mad. Alboni and Mad. Davison-Goddard being his honorable associates. Tenors are a slippery race; and this quality—if no other distinctive of his vocation or vocalisation—is possessed by Signor Montanaro in an eminent degree, for he has eluded, eel-like, the grasp of the British impresario and transferred his services to M. Calzado. Mr. Beale has been in Paris concerting legal hooks the better to grapple his evasive prey. Signor Montanaro's voice is not powerful, but of a most agreeable quality, and he is a thorough master of his art The charming opera bnffa of Rossini has made quite a sensation. Mad. Alboni in Isabella is a sort of vocal Koh-i-noor, overflowing with sparkling melody, and shooting forth multitudinous sound-scintillations—a majestic figure of the genius of Italian song. Signor Perelli continues his evolutions on the key-board, grinding the airs of Norma and La Fille du Régiment into a fine dust, which he throws in the eyes of the public, and makes them (the public) rub them (the eyes) with astonishment.

The new opera by M. Poise, announced as forthcoming at the Opéra Comique, in my last, has been duly produced. It is called Le Jardinier galant, and is placed in the Pompadour period, on which there has been a run of late by the authors of comic opera libretti. The plot is tolerably ingenious, without being complicated. Collé, a celebrated song-writer, having just published a collection of satirical songs directed against the reigning favourite, under the title of Le Jardinier galant, the police have orders to seize the author and his work. The songster finding out these intentions from a stupid police agent—a novice—produces a diversion, and by directing the search to a gardener called Galant, the sort of equivoque and confusion which ensues may be imagined; but all ends happily, by the overthrow of the favourite for the rival who succeeded her. The music of M. Poise is too elaborate for so light a subject, and, like all beginners, he seizes every occasion to write in the grand style. Mlle. Lemercier and MM. Crosti and Ponchard were the principal singers. M. de Saint Georges has just announced his claim to a share in the authorship of the posthumous work of Scribe, La Fiancée du Roi de Garbes, on which Auber is now engaged. The opera can be none the worse for a paternity so divided. Maître Claude, the new comic opera by M. Jules Cohen, is expected in a few days. Mlle. Marimon is to play the principal part which it is expected will be her last "creation" at this house, as she is about to leave the Opéra Comique. At the Théâtre Lyrique there has been a little one-act piece, called Les Deux Cadis, the music by M. Hubert. All I can say of it is that it was quite successful.

Digitized by Google

I notice that, in the course of the debate in the Senate on the address, several members of that august body, newly endowed with most miraculous speech, had the good sense to propose an amendment in favour of science, letters, and art. Prince Poniatowski took music under his especial protection, and the musical prince, if not Prince of Music, pleaded the cause, as one speaking with authority, of the Conservatoire, Théâtre Italien, and Théâtre Lyrique. His advocacy of the interests of their art will be appreciated by the professors of music at least as well as his contributions of music thereunto. I wish some one in the House of Commons would follow this example, and call the attention of government to the neglected cause of art and literature. Government does exert some kind of patronage on some kind of arts, and so recognises the principle, but narrows it to the tinkering, paltry intermeddlement of so-called schools of art, which are confined almost within the limits of a job in favour of Mr. Cole and Mr. Redgrave. As for music, as for the drama—these do not seem to be arts in the squinting eye of the State. The drama only exists in its lowest form, with but few exceptions, and a time is fast approaching when even the tradition of its highest capabilities will be lost from our stage. It is surely as good to see that the furniture of the nation's brains be of an elegant design and peaceful pattern, as that its upholstery and textile fabrics be formed and ornamented in accordance with the excellent principles of Owen Jones. If the State is at the pains to nurture one, it can give no good grounds for neglecting the other, whose importance is incomparably greater, except indeed the narrowest utilitarianism is to guide its actions. The same may be said with respect to music. All the arts, in short, literature and science, in their highest development and functions to which the law of supply and demand has no application, should be encouraged by a State claiming the highest rank in the work of civilisation.

A correspondent from Berlin informs me that M. Roger, now engaged at the Italian Opera of Berlin, is no less triumphantly successful in the Trovatore and Lucia, than he had previously been on the German stage in the Prophète, the Huguenots, and the Dame Blanche. There has been a new ballet at the Royal Theatre in the same city, by M. Paul Taglioni, entitled Ellinor; ou, le Rêve et le Réveil, the music by M. Hertel, scenery and decorations by "the celebrated Gropius." Its success is complete, all the three above-named principal parties thereunto being called before the curtain. M. P. Taglioni is the father of that Marie Taglioni who appeared at Mr. Lumley's theatre in 1847 (the year of the opposition), and whose youthful grace, promising a more complete development when those long limbs had become matured, produced a sensation among the amateurs of the ballet. Marie has fulfilled her early promise, and her personal graces, no less than her consummate skill in her art, render her the idol of Germany, where she is alternately worshipped in Vienna and Berlin. From the same source I also learn that a new comic opera has been produced at the Royal Theatre, called Junker Habakuk. It is music of a light character, but its gaiety is not exactly champagne; however, like the beer of the country, such as it is, it flows abundantly.

M. Rubinstein's opera, the Children of the Landes, was brought out at Vienna on the 23rd of last month, and was received with the quiet approbation of the judicious. It is announced that a posthumous comic opera, by Franz Schubert, will shortly be produced at Vienna.* The event is anticipated with great interest, for the reputation of this composer is everywhere rising to a more general recognition, and one more adequate to his real powers. Long left to a merely popular vogue, serious art criticism is now doing him justice, and preparing his niche side by side with the highest musical geniuses of his country. A Berlin musical paper speaks of Halèvy's "Giralda" not having been very successful at Hamburg—we must all bear the burthen of "Adam's" sins, and why not Mr. Halèvy?—and a very original and charming sin is this opera, though it is one the Hamburghers seem not inclined to.

I read that in the midst of the insurrectionary movement at Warsaw the Poles have found time to hear and applaud a new opera by Dutsch, called The Croatian Woman. It seems singular that political shindies seldom interfere with art, but the rather give a stimulus to it. I doubt whether peace, which is always talked and sung about as so friendly to the arts, does not really enervate the sources of inspiration. I have not time to give instances, but I have no doubt I could support this paradox, or any other, upon reference to the facts of history, which, like Janus, always looks both ways at once.

The new Conservatory of Music at Brussels has just been inaugurated, the first concert of the season having been given there on the 24th of February. A new overture, by M. de Hartog, called Pompey, was produced on the occasion. It is of a grave and severe cast in style, and received the approbation of the artistic portion of the audience. While one building devoted to music starts up, another falls a heap of ruins under the assaults of the "devouring elements," as the penny-a-liners call both fire and water,—I mean fire this time, and allude to the burning of the new theatre at Naples, situated in the Monte Calvario quarter, which had nigh been involved in the conflagration.

A word about the concerts, soirées, matinées, &c. &c., which are in full career. The violinist, M. Sarrasate, Knight of the Order of Charles III., played at the second Tuileries-concert last Friday, and was complimented by their Imperial Majesties. The Italian opera artists made up the vocal part of the concert. The President of the Senate, M. Troplong, and the Minister of Justice, M. Delangle, have also had concerts, the Sisters Marchisio being the chief attraction in each instance. Madame Erard figures also among the munificent and magnificent private concert-givers. In addition to a mansion at Passy, which causes even crowned heads to break the tenth commandment, this lady has just became the mistress of a winter palace in Paris, adjoining,—with the pride which apes humility, the humble source of her great wealth—the great pianoforte manufactory. The apartments here were thrown open to receive the friends of Madame Erard, to add to the attractions of her hospitality, those of a host of artists, vocal and instrumental—among them MM. Armingaud, Ernst Lubeck, Montanaro, and Madame Ida Bertrand.

The fourth concert of the Société des Jeunes Artistes, last Sunday (the 3rd), attracted as usual a numerous audience. Mendelssohn, who is making every day fresh progress with the French, figured in the programme by virtue of the Midsummer Night's Dream, a selection from which was performed, and though the execution was not what it ought to have been, the auditory were raised to a high pitch of enthusiasm, by the countless evidences of the composer's genius, so kindred with that burning in his theme.

Miss Grace Egerton's Entertainment.—In consequence of the continued success which this entertainment has met with at Her Majesty's Theatre, Miss Egerton has been induced to engage St. James's Hall for a limited number of performances, the first of which is to take place on Tuesday next.

* See our Vienna letter.—Ed.

Digitized by Google

JOSEPH JOACHIM IN VIENNA.

(Translated from Der Wanderer.)

The re-appearance of Joseph Joachim on the horizon of musical art here is one of the most interesting events of the day. It affords the careful observer rich materials for the most agreeable reflections on the gradual development of a highly-gifted musical artist, from the time when the wonderful buds first cropped out in the boy of eleven, filling every one who beheld them with the hope that they would one day burst forth in all the maturity of beauty, up to the moment that, after a period of eighteen years, the boughs, artistically blessed, are bent down beneath the weight of the golden fruit upon them. After having heard Joachim in all the various stages of his career, we now see him before us in the prime of his artistic consciousness, with a perfect command of his mental and physical resources,—carried to the very highest pitch,—and thoroughly penetrated with the importance of his artistic mission. Although the report of his coming had long preceded him, and in spite of the fact that there had been no want of notices, richly furnished with epithets, his actual appearance took place with the truly artistic and unpretending modesty peculiar to genuine merit alone. Even the programme of his concert, which, in addition to Beethoven's violin concerto in D major, announced merely an adagio by Spohr, and a sonata by Tartini, was, from its simplicity, very different to the pompous manifestoes wherewith, as a rule, virtuosi manage to raise the curiosity of the public to the highest pitch; but, on the other hand, the execution of the first movement of Beethoven's concerto displayed the perfect mastery of an artist who can afford to dispense with such means of attracting attention. We never heard a violinist whose performance, as far as regards artistic earnestness and simple dignity, we could place above Joachim's. Although availing himself of all the difficulties of his instrument, he never allows himself to be carried away into making concessions to the bravura style, at the expense of the character and dignity of the piece he has to execute. His tone, although not of such imposing grandeur as that possessed by Vieuxtemps, gains in fulness and strength whenever it is the interpreter of deep feeling, while, on the other hand, it never loses its decided expression even in the most tenderly breathed piano passages. The influence exerted upon him by Mendelssohn and Ferd. David is unmistakeable; his style is purely German, and has lost nothing of its essential qualities by his long sojourn in London and Paris. In this respect, as well as in what relates to correctness of execution, his playing reminds us of that of Molique, whom, however, he far excels in spirit. This manly seriousness preserves him, moreover, from that effeminacy which not unfrequently obtains the upper hand with modern violinists, and thus his playing never degenerates into inartistic mawkishness, even in Spohr's adagio,—labouring, as that does, under superabundant sentimentality,—while it keeps aloof from the popular tremolos and vibrandos which Ernst brought into fashion, and which may be called the toilet arts of affected feeling. But, with all its seriousness, his playing is characterised by great depth of sensibility, fervent and exciting inspiration, as well as a thorough appreciation and masterly reproduction of the spirit of the productions which he executes. With regard to the technical part, the bravura portion, properly speaking, of his play, he has, as we have before remarked, brought it to the very acmé of perfection, and we shall have numerous opportunities of returning to it at his subsequent concerts. To sum up, shortly, our opinion of Joachim's individuality, we think that Mendelssohn's opinion concerning it is the most expressive. It is as follows: "That never was more perfect or more wonderful violin-playing heard."

(From the Donau-Zeitung.)

After having been long expected, Joseph Joachim appeared on Saturday before a Viennese public, from whom he took his leave, a very promising boy, eighteen years ago, to the best of our knowledge. In order to appreciate, as we ought, the mature, perfect artist he now is, it is not enough to employ the standard usually employed for virtuosi, who make tours on the strength of their art, or rather their artistic skill. It is not enough to signalise the degree of technical proficiency he has attained, or to celebrate the suppleness of his hand, his astonishing power on one string, or things of this description, which, properly considered, are marked by scarcely a less physical character than the feats of an athlete or the capers of a tight-rope dancer. A sure mastery over his instrument, wonderful technical skill, equally perfect in every particular, and capable of comparison with that of any artist, up to Ernst and Paganini themselves, are for Joachim, as for every other genuine instrumental performer, merely means for the attainment of the highest object of his art, namely, the rendering the works of creative masters in all their originality and peculiar spirit. The fact of his fulfilling this task with such extraordinary self-abnegation; of his being able to make himself, with Protean power, the docile organ of so many different artistic individualities; and of his retiring into the background, even in the case of those who could well bear the assistance of a foreign element—in a word, his perfect objectivity, is the rare quality, which, in our opinion, places him at the head of all the violinists of the present day. We have frequently heard Beethoven's stupendous violin concerto, and heard it performed, moreover, by artists of recognised merit, but never was the spirit of the work and of its author exhibited to us so effectually and completely as by Joachim. The same instrumentalist, however, whose mighty tone could satisfy the intentions of the musical Titan, could shortly afterwards do equal justice to the sentimental softness of an adagio by Spohr, and the virtuoso-like caprices of Tartini, whose original sonnet, when thus played, fully justified its admission into a programme of 1861. The extraordinarily good attendance of the public at this concert—an attendance doubly surprising, from the fact of our being in the very midst of all the tumults of the carnival—encourages us to hope that we shall hear this admirable artist on many other occasions, and, perhaps, in a quartet, which, under his guidance, might produce quite a different effect to what it does when played by our local quartettists, despite their numerous excellencies.

ROSSINI AT HOME.

When in Paris for a few days last week, I was fortunate enough to receive an invitation from Rossini to attend his Saturday evening reception, a musical levée, at which all artists and professors of distinction assemble weekly to pay their respects to the illustrious musician.

Rossini lives on the Boulevard des Italiens, at the corner of the Rue de la Chaussée d'Antin, in a magnificent suite of apartments, au seconde. It is here he holds his court, surrounded by a galaxy of brilliant women, whose wit and conversation are more sparkling than the diamonds of any duchess in St. Germain, and a host of chevaliers, from whose button-holes dangle the gaudy decorations of every potentate in Europe. The hour of reception is nine o'clock, the amusement of the evening, music; no tea or coffee, no ices are allowed; the entertainment is purely intellectual, practically musical. And the tea and coffee are not missed; the music and bons mots of the amiable host afford far greater enjoyment than the most refreshing ice.

Three principal salons are thrown open to the guests. As I entered the first room, and tried to make my way through the crowd which blocked up the entrance to the music hall, peering over the shoulders of the visitors, I saw Rossini seated at the pianoforte, accompanying the Sisters Marchisio in a duet he has composed for his two protegées. In a brown shooting-jacket of the loosest fit imaginable, the sleeves almost covering the tips of the fingers, a very bad wig, nearly of the same colour as the coat, the figure at the pianoforte might, at first sight, have been taken for that of an old country gentleman retired from public life, and fattening to any extent upon the rich produce of his goodly acres. But wait awhile. The duet has but just begun. Let the accompanyist warm up. His indolence leaves him, he sits erect, and becomes excited. See how the loose sleeves flap about, look at the drops of perspiration on his forehead, observe the fire and brilliancy of his eye as he turns round to each of the singers, urging them to a greater effort in some crescendo passage or cadenza.

Yes, there's genius in that figure at the pianoforte, now no no longer resembling an old country gentleman, but easily to be identified as that of Rossini. The duet finished amid the most enthusiastic applause of the assembled guests, applause perhaps heartier and louder than is usual at an evening party. Bravo maestro! Bravo da vero! Everybody crowded round the host as he left the pianoforte to go to his own particular chair in the adjoining room. There was a pause in the music. The courtiers busied themselves with congratulating the two sisters, and through them saying a word of flattery to the composer, who every now and then convulsed the room with laughter by some witty remark, which would be carefully noted in the pocket-book of a soi-disant wit, to be the next day retailed as his own.

Digitized by Google

After a short interval, Badiali and Solieri sung the duet from "Il Barbiere," then Badiali volunteered the bass song in the 'Stabat," after which a very clever amateur, whose name is, I think, Sampieri, joined Solieri in the Elisire duet, and nearly eclipsed the tenor by his remarkable skill in managing a very fine voice and effective declamation.

Seated next Rossini was an elderly lady, slim in figure, and somewhat wrinkled in feature. She wore what is I believe called a robe montante, and evidently was averse to crinoline. She was familiarly addressed by some as Marietta. "Who is that vivacious matron to whom everybody pays so much attention?" "That," said my friend, "is Madame Taglioni." "Not the Taglioni, the celebrated sylphide?" "Yes, the same." I looked again, and fancied I could just trace a resemblance in the elderly lady in the black silk dress to that portrait of a danseuse, standing in an impossible position on one leg, which hangs in Mitchell's shop in Bond Street, covered with the dust of ages. It was a difficult task, the portrait having on a robe montante the very reverse of that which the lady wore who was before me.

Another celebrity of a time gone by was also present — Carafa, the composer of La Prigione d'Edinburgo, Le Valet de Chambre, and a hundred other operas now forgotten, the delight of a former generation.

The old gentleman is far from being in the same excellent condition as his camarade Rossini, but he nevertheless appears to enjoy life, and to carry his age remarkably lightly. Rossini having listened attentively to the songs and duets mentioned, sent his cara sposa, one of the most active housewives I ever met with, to request the Marchisios to sing again. They complied, and he led them to the pianoforte, introducing them to different visitors as they went along in the most eulogistic terms. This time he did not accompany, but stood by and encouraged the young artists with many a "bravo" and smile of approbation. Eleven o'clock was now drawing near, and at that hour the "Reception" always terminates.

The last performance of the evening was by M. Nadaud, who sang some wonderfully lengthy French songs with a sweet voice and great expression.

Then every one prepared to go. Rossini had a kind good night for all. In passing through the ante-room he showed me Dantan's two caricature statuettes of himself and Meyerbeer, in which he is represented sitting in a dish of macaroni, hugging a lyre, and Meyerbeer as writing for dear life half a dozen operas at once. Rossini seemed to enjoy the joke, and to chuckle at his own idleness compared to the constant activity of Meyerbeer.

ANTHATER.

MUSIC AT VIENNA.

(From an occasional Correspondent.)

March 11.

THE concert given, on the 1st instant, by the Gesellschaft der Musik-freunde, may be termed an important event, for it introduced a novelty, which, for many reasons, excited the most lively interest among the musical amateurs and professionals of Vienna. I allude to the operetta,—Der häusliche Krieg;* words by J. F. Castelli, music by Franz Schubert. (Composed in 1819, first represented in 1861.)

The lapse of time between the above dates speaks plainly; it points to the workhouse, and throws additional weight into the scale of the sins of omission which, from time out of mind, are to be laid to the charge of the management of the Imperial Opera; and while, on the other hand, redounding to the praise of the present executive of the Musik-freunde, and their artistic director, proves, also, how many sweeping changes had to be made, even in that body, in order to effect what would appear so easy a result. It is, of course, only the great importance, the intrinsic merit, of the novelty, which induces these observations, for, in the present instance, the work presented is no mere freshly dug-up curiosity, incapable of life, and such as is occasionally brought forward, by the inveterate admirers of Schubert, as a model of old classical, or modern romantic style — it is a musical gem, in the widest acceptation of the word; original, fresh, characteristic, most dramatically worked out, and so overflowing with melody, that we must go back as far as Mozart to find anything like it. The listening soul might refresh itself in such a superabundance of musical riches, and imbibe new life. The book to Der häusliche Krieg — originally entitled *Die Verschworenen — makes no pretension to classicality, but is prettily conceived, and probably would not be ineffective on the stage. The difficulty of representing an entire opera in dress coats and crinoline (the latter, moreover, compelled to struggle with the want of room) was happily surmounted. The purport of the spoken dialogue was communicated very satisfactorily to the audience in the book of the words. But the musical part went off so exceptionally well, that scenic aid would scarcely have improved it. The ladies, Bertl, Hauer, and Hoffmann (an amateur member of the Imperial Opera-house), as well as Herren Olschbauer and Mayerhofer sang the solos "correctly, expressively, surely, plainly, and freshly" (to quote the language, well applied, of the Recensionen). The members of the chorus (pupils of the Conservatory and gentlemen of the Singverein) and "Herbeck's Orchestra," as it is called, were admirable. The whole performance was animated by a spirit of artistic feeling, combined with so much technical certainty, that, considering the value and fascinating quality of the piece, the result was necessarily a brilliant one, so that a repetition of this peculiar concert-operatic representation would satisfy a really general wish, both on the part of those present as well as of those who were absent.†

Among the present race of concert givers, Joachim, as a matter of course, stands out in solitary prominence. His third concert took place, on the 25th ult., in the rooms of the Musikverein, while his fourth, and last, filled the great Redouten-saal, on the 4th inst.

"His performances (writes the Recensionen) carry out, in most things, the statements that have already appeared concerning him in this paper. He does not dazzle—he does not charm—us, by grandeur of tone or fiery temperament, by rapid technical skill or playful grace, but he enlists and captivates our sympathies by his sterling style, his artistic repose, his warmth of feeling, slow in its development, but, on that account, winding around us with greater certainty; by his blameless subjugation of precisely the most solid difficulties, if we may so term them—such, for instance, as the spotless purity of his Doppelgriff—and, in a word, by his always offering us a complete whole, and by his proving himself a thinking, accomplished, and intelligent artist, both in his playing and the path he has selected. To sum up our opinion without more ado, Sebastian Bach possesses no better interpreter than Joachim."

Herr Tausig has given a third concert, at which, for the second time, he tried his hand at orchestral propagandism, with Liszt's compositions. "We have already," observes the Recensionen, "expressed our opinion, with becoming seriousness, of the aims and meanings, as well as the negative results of his enterprise." Let me emphatically endorse this judgment.

PAILLE-EN-CU.

DINORAH.—Some idea of the extensive popularity enjoyed by Meyerbeer's Dinorah may be formed from the fact that it has been represented in no less than 66 towns, 41 of which are in Germany, 18 in France, and the remainder in various parts of Europe.

* "Household War."

* "The Conspirators."

† Energetic measures ought, on the other hand, to be again adopted to stop the abuse of repeating separate pieces, an abuse which has lately been very common. Herr Herbeck, Herr Dessoff, and others, have recently displayed a lamentable facility in giving way to this absurd and infamous custom.

Digitized by Google

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE FIFTEENTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON

(56TH CONCERT IN ST. JAMES'S HALL)

WILL TAKE PLACE

ON MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 18, 1861,

In order to accommodate the numbers who were unable to obtain admission on the occasion of the last Beethoven Concert,

The Programme, Vocal and Instrumental, will again be exclusively selected from the Works of

BEETHOVEN.

First Performance of the GRAND SONATA in A MAJOR, Op. 101, (Pianoforte).

First Performance of the TRIO in D No. 2, Op. 9, (Stringed Instruments).

Ninth Appearance of M. VIEUXTEMPS.

Vocalist: — Mr. SIMS REEVES.

Pianist:—Miss ARABELLA GODDARD.

Violoncellist: — Signor PIATTI.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Trio in D, Op. 9, for Violin, Viola, and Violoncello, MM. VIEUXTEMPS, WEBB, and PIATTI—Beethoven; Song, "Leider Kreis," Mr. SIMS REEVES—Beethoven; Sonata in A major, Op. 101 (first time at the Monday Popular Concerts), Miss ARABELLA GODDARD — Beethoven.

PART II.—Quartet, in F major, Op. 59, for two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello (No. 1 of the set dedicated to Razoumowski) MM. VIEUXTEMPS, RIES, WEBB and PIATTI —Beethoven; Cavatina, "Adelaida," Mr. SIMS REEVES—Beethoven; Grand sonata, in C minor, Op. 30, for Pianoforte and Violin, Miss ARABELLA GODDARD and M. VIEUXTEMPS—Beethoven.

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT. To commence at Eight o'Clock precisely.

Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s., Tickets of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28 Piccadilly; of Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street; and the principal music-sellers.

BY COMMAND.—PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY. — The Directors respectfully announce that the SECOND CONCERT will take place at the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS on MONDAY EVENING next, the 18th instant. Programme:—Sinfonia in D, No. 2 (Beethoven); Overture, "Euryanthe" (Weber); Sinfonia in A minor (Mendelssohn); Overture, "Guillaume Tell" (Rossini). Vocal Performers:—Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON and Mr. SANTLEY. Conductor, Professor STERNDALE BENNETT. To commence at 8 o'clock. Subscription, 4 guineas. Family Tickets of not less than four, 3½ guineas each. Subscriptions received and Tickets issued by Messrs. Addison, Hollier, and Lucas, 210 Regent Street.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE. — Lessee, Mr. E. T. Smith.—Last night of the Season.—Unprecedented success of Wallace's New Grand Romantic Opera of the AMBER WITCH, which will be repeated THIS EVENING (Saturday).—THIS EVENING will be performed, with new scenery, dresses, decorations, and appointments (having been many months in preparation), the new grand romantic opera, in four acts, entitled THE AMBER WITCH. The music composed expressly for this theatre by W. V. WALLACE. Written by HENRY F. CHORLEY. Rudiger (the young Lord of Ravenstein), Mr. SIMS REEVES; The Commandant, Mr. SANTLEY; The Pastor, Mr. PATEY; Claus, Mr. TERROTT; The King, Mr. BARTLEMAN; Elsie, Miss HUDDART; and Mary, Madame L. SHERRINGTON. Early application, to prevent disappointment, should be made at the box office of the theatre, which is open daily from 10 to 6. Doors open at half-past 7; performance commences at 8 o'clock each evening.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Grand Bal Masque, for the BENEFIT OF Mr. E. T. SMITH, Lessee, FRIDAY, March 22.—The Lessee has the honour to inform the Nobility, Gentry, and Public, that, at the suggestion of numerous friends and patrons, he will give a GRAND BAL MASQUE on the above night, when the Pit and Stage will be covered to form a Salon de Danse, on a scale of superlative magnificence and elegance.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—THIS EVENING will be repeated the new Drama, in five parts, arranged by C. J. MATHEWS, Esq., entitled THE SAVANNAH. Principal characters by Messrs. CHARLES MATHEWS, ROBERT ROXBY, RYDER, G. HONEY, MCLEAN, FARRELL, SPENCER, MELLON, Mrs. CHARLES MATHEWS, Mrs. DOWTON, and Miss THIRLWALL. After which, the new Vaudeville, entitled A SMACK FOR A SMACK. Fanchette, Mlle. ALBINA DI RHONA; John Trot, Mr. W. TEMPLETON. To conclude with the grand Comic Ballet entitled LE ROI DES PIERROTS; La Danse des Pierrots executed by Sixty Coryphées and Mlle. Albina di Rhona. Box office open daily from 10 till 5, under the direction of Mr. C. Nugent. Doors open at half-past 6; to commence at 7.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.— Mr. GYE has the honour to announce that the Opera Season of 1861 will commence on TUESDAY, April 2. On the Opening Night will be performed Meyerbeer's Grand Opera,

LE PROPHETE.

The Programme, with full particulars, may be had at the Box Office, under the Portico of the Theatre.

NOTICES.

To ADVERTISERS.—Advertisers are informed, that for the future the Advertising Agency of the THE MUSICAL WORLD is established at the Magazine of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements can be received as late as Three o'Clock P.M., on Fridays—but not later. Payment on delivery.

Terms { Three lines and under ... ... 2s. 6d. / Every additional 10 words ... ... 6d.

To PUBLISHERS AND COMPOSERS.—All Music for Review in THE MUSICAL WORLD must henceforward be forwarded to the Editor, care of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street. A List of every Piece sent for Review will appear on the Saturday following in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

To CONCERT GIVERS.—No Benefit-Concert, or Musical Performance, except of general interest, unless previously Advertised, can be reported in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, MARCH 16, 1861.

WHAT are the prospects of the approaching season, more particularly the prospects of the Italian operatic season? — is a question, no doubt, demanded just now by many,— and its solution awaited with deep interest. Every one will seek information from the MUSICAL WORLD. Let us see how far we can solve the mystery.

We know for certain that the Royal Italian Opera will open. Mr. Frederick Gye has advertised the first night and specified the first performance. The Italian Opera season at Covent Garden will commence on Tuesday, the 2nd of April, with the Prophète, bringing back Madame Csillag and Signor Tamberlik, the hero and heroine of the same opera last season. The subscribers will be right well pleased to find that the admirable Italico-Hungarian tenor is enabled to appear at the commencement of the season. That Grisi and Mario retire from the Covent Garden establishment, is incontestable. The great prima donna and great tenor not only secede, but go over to the rival house. Signor Mario, nevertheless, must not appear this year at Her Majesty's Theatre, in consequence of some stipulation in his agreement with the director of the Royal Italian Opera, which we cannot quite understand. He will sing, however, at the Crystal Palace, in Italian operas, got up especially for him and Madame Grisi, and next season, we may presume, will be seen and heard at the "big" theatre in the Haymarket. Madame Grisi, it is affirmed, will positively take her farewell of the stage this year. We are bound to put credit in the announcement, this being the third time the "Diva" has expressed the same determination. The reappearance of Grisi on the arena of so many of her triumphs will be quite as interesting as her last adieu. How Mr. E. T. Smith will play the politician between the two grand tragic heroines, Madame Grisi and Mlle. Titiens, to both of whom belong nearly the same repertory, it is impossible to conjecture. It is rather difficult to arrange matters between rival prime donne, who claim precedence in such parts as Donna Anna (Don Giovanni), Lucrezia Borgia, Norma, Semiramide — all the acknowledged leading characters, in short, of the lyric drama. There are some characters, however, which properly appertain to one only of the celebrated singers just named, and which are altogether removed from the repertory of the other. We may instance Reiza in Oberon, Martha in Flotow's opera, Fidelio, Agatha in Der Freischütz, the Countess in Le Nozze di Figaro, among others, among all of which the Teutonic songstress has won renown, and not one of which the Ausonian cantatrice has attempted. On the other hand, Madame Grisi has parts peculiar to herself, if she would be prevailed upon to appear in them for the last time, and against the assumption of which Mlle. Titiens would enter no protest, they not being legitimately in her line. These are Ninetta in La Gazza Ladra, Rosina in the Barbiere, Norina in Don Pasquale, Elvira in I Puritani, Elena in La Donna del Lago, &c. &c. So that Mr. Smith has enough to select from both catalogues without bringing the reigning queens into actual conflict. To render the services of the two available in one opera would be an excellent feat of strategy; and we know of nothing to prevent the manager from securing this in the Nozze di Figaro, in which each artist might retain her original part —Madame Grisi, Susanna, and Mlle. Titiens the Countess Almaviva. If a step farther were made in the line of reconcilement, and Mlle. Titiens were induced to appear as Donna Elvira in Don Giovanni, with Madame Grisi as Donna Anna, the managerial achievement would be attractive. In Germany Elvira is considered the most important character of the two, and German sopranos in German companies have been wont to give it the preference in London. We may cite the celebrated Mad. Heinefetter, who invariably selected Elvira in this country. We throw out this hint to the manager of Her Majesty's Theatre, as well worth consideration.

Digitized by Google

How can Mr. Frederick Gye fill up the places left void by the secession of Grisi and Mario?—will no doubt be asked by thousands. Mr. Gye, no doubt, will answer in good time—immediately, indeed, since his prospectus for the forthcoming season must be issued immediately. All we know at present is that an old prima donna, Mad. Ortolani, and a new tenor, Signor Tiberini, are engaged; but whether they are destined to step incontinently into the shoes of their predecessors, we cannot pretend to say. We know, indeed, that the last artist is highly reputed, but our information "extends not a wrinkle farther." That the director of the Royal Italian Opera is bent on eliciting the sympathies of the subscribers and the public in an unusual degree, is declared in a manner not to be mistaken, by the revival of Guillaume Tell, and the production of Auber's Gustavus, which will constitute two special features of the approaching season. Rossini's immortal work belongs to the repertory of the Royal Italian Opera. Gustavus the Third was introduced into this country some quarter of a century ago, at the old Covent Garden Theatre, and was brought out with great splendour, scenic and decorative. The English adaptation, however, was disfigured by curtailments and alterations in the music. About ten years since, an Italian version was produced at Her Majesty's Theatre; but, as in the English adaptation, appropriate reverence was not paid to Auber's score. We have no doubt that Mr. Costa will give the music of Gustavus the Third in its integrity, if not in its entirety, and may consequently look forward to an interesting performance of what we cannot help pronouncing, despite the objurgations and platitudes of M. Fétis, in his Biographie Universelle des Musiciens, one of the greatest masterpieces of the French school. We shall have more to say about the Royal Italian Opera season when the programme appears.

Of the future doings at Her Majesty's Theatre, we know little or nothing beyond what we have already stated,—the engagement of Grisi and Mario. The theatre closes to-night on the English-opera season, and we may expect an early issue of Mr. Smith's prospectus. One thing seems likely, that English Opera will be transferred to Drury Lane. But of these and other matters we shall be better enabled to discourse in a few days. Meanwhile, instead of crying out with Mercutio, "A plague o' both your houses," let us wish success to both, and pray that the best administrator may find the greatest favour, and reap the richest harvest.

[Since the above was in type and "imposed," Mr. Gye's prospectus has been issued. All we can do, at present, is to record the fact. At the same time we append the brief notice of a morning contemporary:—

"Royal Italian Opera.—Mr. Gye's prospectus for the season 1861 has just appeared. We must reserve comment for the present, merely stating that the theatre is to open on Tuesday, April 2, with Meyerbeer's Prophète—Fides, Mad. Csillag; Jean of Leyden, Signor Tamberlik; that the list of singers, with two not unimportant exceptions (Mad. Grisi and Signor Mario), comprises all the favourites of last year, besides two additions to the ladies (Mad. Rudersdorff and Mad. Ortolani Tiberini), and two to the gentlemen (M. Jourdan and Signor Tiberini)—not to mention a third in prospectu (Herr Formes); that Verdi's last new opera, Il Ballo in Maschera, will be produced, Rossini's Guillaume Tell and Bellini's Pirata revived; that the band, chorus, and conductor remain as before; and that all the subordinate arrangements promise to be on the same scale of liberality and completeness for which the Royan Italian Opera has been renowned since its first institution in 1847."

It will be observed that Auber's Gustave III. is metamorphosed into Verdi's Ballo in Maschera. It remains to be seen whether the change is for the better. More next week.—R.]

ONE of the principal features of the ninth Gesellschafts Concert, under the direction of Ferdinand Hiller (at Cologne), appears to have been Beethoven's music to the ballet, Die Geschöpfe des Prometheus (recognised in England, where the overture alone is generally known, as The Men of Prometheus). "This work," says the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung, "with the exception of the overture, which is more generally known, had not been previously heard in Cologne. For the perfect understanding of the various pieces, a detailed plot of the ballet would be highly desirable. Mere headings are insufficient. We suppose, however, that the plot is irretrievably lost, as, only a short time since, doubts were even expressed as to whether Vigano's ballet had really been given at all."

These doubts have been dispelled by a playbill, of the year 1801, preserved at Vienna, and recently discovered by Dr. Leopold Sonnleithner. According to this respectable authority, the first performance of the ballet took place on the 28th March, 1801, in the Hofburg Theater, where it was frequently repeated both in that and the succeeding year. After which it was not again represented while he lived. On the 18th November, 1843, and not before, Prometheus was revived (in two acts and six scenes) at the Kärntnerthor, with music by Beethoven, Mozart, and Haydn. From Beethoven's score only the most interesting pieces were included. In Milan the ballet was produced at the Scala on the 22nd March, 1843, remodelled, and with selections from Beethoven's music.*

Prometheus thus evidently belongs to Beethoven's first, or so-called "Mozartean period," and came immediately after the first symphony (in C major). "The question arises"—adds the Neiderrheinische Musik-Zeitung—"whether the four pieces of dance-music which we now possess, in addition to the overture, are all that Beethoven composed." It is hardly probable that such is the case, for how could these

* According to the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung, Schindler is authority for this. (Vol. i. p. 78, &c.)

Digitized by Google

four pieces have been sufficient for an entire ballet? Pantomimic scenes without music are impossible. In all likelihood, therefore, the connecting links (the incidental pieces) have been lost, or, at any rate, Beethoven allowed the ballet-master to interpolate music by other composers, a was subsequently the case.

The circumstance of the overture commencing with a discord—so enraged the Capellmeister, Herr Preindl (1758—1826) that he vowed eternal enmity against the innovator, and, according to Schindler, redeemed his vow. The leading melody of the last scene of Prometheus subsequently became famous as the theme upon which the finale to the Sinfonia Eroica is constructed; and at the first performance, in Vienna, of that colossal work, the propriety of a great many amateurs, who remembered the ballet, and having once heard the melody could never forget it, was deeply shocked. This melody first appeared, however, in "Six Country Dances," by Beethoven—(Simrock, Bonn)." ." Sechs Contratänze," von Beethoven, (Bonn—bei Simrock); then in the ballet of Prometheus; then as a theme for the "Fifteen Variations," Op. 35,* dedicated to Count Moritz Lichnowski (1803), commencing with "Introduzione col Basso del Thema;" and, lastly, in the Eroica, where it is given out in unison by the basses, and developed with that marvellous invention and ingenuity which constitutes this finale not merely one of the most imaginative compositions of Beethoven, but one of his most successful and masterly contrapuntal displays. The great "tone-poet" must have been enamoured of this theme; and yet how simple, terse, and unaffected it looks:—

The arrangement of Prometheus for pianoforte, solus, by Beethoven himself, published with the Italian title Gli Uomini di Prometeo, Ballo di Vigano, comprising, according to Lenz, the overture and three acts of music, has become (according to the same authority) very rare. This arrangement was dedicated to the Princess Lichnowski. But if there are really, as the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung pretends, only four pieces besides the overture, of what does the "three acts of music" consist? Is it, or is it not, all Beethoven? We submit this question to the decision of Mr. Dwight's indefatigable "Diarist,"—Mr. A. W. Thayer—who is sure to know all about it; and for love of Beethoven, no less than for love of truth, is sure to communicate all he knows.

* The andante in F, originally forming part of the grand sonata dedicated to Count Waldstein (Op. 53), but rejected by Beethoven as too long or as out of character with the rest of the sonata, and afterwards published alone, is, in many editions, erroneously marked Op. 35.

Friday Night.

THE Royal Italian Opera prospectus for the new season has reached us at the "eleventh hour." A few words about its contents are indispensable.

The engagements comprise all the favourites of last year, with the exception of Grisi and Mario, whose contemplated secession has been no secret for months. The new-comers are Madame Ortolani-Tiberini, M. Jourdain, Signor Tiberini, and (in all probability) Herr Formes, who has been absent from England for several years. Madame Ortolani-Tiberini is the Mlle. Ortolani who appeared four or five seasons back at Her Majesty's Theatre—a high soprano, with considerable facility of execution, whose most successful performance was Elvira in I Puritani. We cannot suppose this lady is intended to fill up the void left by Madame Grisi. For a successor to the "Diva" we must therefore look to Madame Penco, who, from her first season at the Royal Italian Opera has been steadily advancing in the favour of the public. Madame Rudersdorff, too, has been added to the list of sopranos. When to Mesdames Penco, Rudersdorff, and Ortolani-Tiberini we add Mesdames Rosa Csillag, Nantier-Didiée, Miolan-Carvalho, Tagliafico, Leva, and Corbari, it cannot be denied that the list of "prima donnas" is efficient if not startling. The tenors have lost Mario—a loss not easy to remedy—and gained M. Jourdan and Signor Tiberini. The former, we believe, comes from the Opéra Comique; the latter from the Scala, Milan. Neither has been heard in England. M. Jourdain—a high baritone, or low tenor, is accounted a fair singer and good actor; but in what parts Mr. Gye is to make use of him we are unable to guess.

The French are encroaching on our Italian Opera more and more and more every year, owing, no doubt, to the scarcity of talent in the genuine "Land of Song." Of the nine "first ladies" in the Royal Italian Opera company this year, only three are veritable Italians, two being German, and four French; of the six tenors, one is French; and of the seven basses, two are German and two French. Signor Tiberini comes, preceded by a solid reputation, and his first appearance cannot fail to excite curiosity. He will, probably, fill the place of Signor Mario, to a certain extent—in such parts, for example, as Fernando, Gennaro, Ernesto (Don Pasquale), Almaviva, &c. Upon Signor Tamberlik, we may conclude, will now devolve those of Raoul, the Duke in Rigoletto, &c. To the tenors already named are added Signors Neri-Beraldi, and Lucchesi. But where is Signor Gardoni?

The barytones and basses exhibit no change—beginning with the incomparable Ronconi, a host in himself, and ending with the universally popular Signor Graziani, whose voice is his fortune. The list also includes M. Faure, who produced so great an impression last year; M. Zelger, the excellent Belgian basso profondo; Signors Tagliafico and Polonini, always useful and always welcome both; and Signor Patriossi, whose name is half Irish and half Italian, and who should be in some degree patriotic.

In another department the prospectus is attractive. The season opens with the Prophète, on Tuesday, April 2nd. In the following week Guillaume Tell will be revived "with," we quote from the programme, "a cast which has seldom, if ever, been equalled." The reader, after this, will be curious to know what that cast is:—Matilda, Mad. Miolan-Carvalho; Gemmi, Mad. Nantier Didiée; Gualtiero, Herr Formes (perhaps); Gesler, Signor Tagliafico; Un Pescatore, Signor Neri-Baraldi; Guglielmo Tell, M. Faure; and Arnoldo, Signor Tamberlik. Bellini's Pirata and Verdi's Ballo in Maschera are the promised novelties. The first-named work, one of the earliest of the composer, has not been heard at the Opera since the days of Rubini, and requires a most skilful singer to interpret the music of the hero. Signor Tiberini, in all probability, will make his first appearance in the Pirata. The Ballo in Maschera of Verdi will, no doubt, engage all the resources of the establishment, and comprise in the cast, Mesdames Penco, Nantier-Didiée and Miolan-Carvalho, Signors Graziani and Tamberlik. The other operas will be selected from the already available repertory. Mr. Gye has, we think, displayed good taste in not making a superabundance of pledges, or indeed more than he can be pretty certain to redeem.

Digitized by Google

Of the ballet we learn no more than that Mlle. Zina Richard and Mlle. Salvioni are the principal danseuses. The former lady is a distinguished artist, and deservedly a favourite at the Royal Italian Opera. The latter is said to be very clever, and something else in the bargain.

We need not say one word about the band and chorus, which for fourteen years, under Mr. Costa's baton, has maintained its supremacy. All the old hands, we perceive, are in their old places; Messrs. William Beverley, Grieve, and Telbin are again the scenic artists; Mr. Augustus Harris is again stage manager; and Signor Maggioni again the poet and translator of librettos. This at present is all we have to say about the Royal Italian Opera. May we have many favourable things to report in the course of the season.

CONCERTS OF HERR KLINDWORTH AND MR. H. BLAGROVE.—Two concerts have been held in the Hanover Square Rooms by Herr Klindworth and Mr. Blagrove, which have attracted more than ordinary attention. The programmes have in each case been most interesting, and rendered still more so by admirable analyses of most of the pieces contained in them from the pen of Mr. Macfarren. At the first (on Tuesday, Feb. 26), among other compositions rarely performed, we had Chopin's sonata in G minor, for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 65), played by Herr Klindworth and M. Daubert. There was also Schumann's trio in F major (Op. 80), for pianoforte and strings, by the same gentlemen with the addition of Mr. Blagrove. The trio has more than once been performed in London, by Mr. Lindsay Sloper and others. It is, nevertheless, one of his strongest as Chopin's sonata is one of his least vigorous productions; and therefore, although the sonata was a quasi-novelty (it has been played before), the trio was the greatest musical treat. Both were capitally rendered. M. Daubert is a violoncellist of more than ordinary talent; Herr Klindworth, one of the favourite pupils of Liszt, and therefore, as may be imagined, a first-class pianist. Of our eminent violinist, Mr. Blagrove—who, at the the same concert gave Bach's "Chaconne" in D minor (the same which M. Vieuxtemps very recently introduced at the Monday Popular Concerts) we need say nothing. Beethoven's trio in E flat (Op. 70) began the programme, and completed the last of the instrumental pieces, which would have been still more satisfactory had Herr Klindworth come forward (like Mr. Blagrove), with a solo. His playing is too good for his patrons to be deprived of this, the most efficacious manner of appreciating it. The vocal music was entrusted to Miss Banks, who sang an air from Spohr's Jessonda, a canzonet by Haydn, and a spring-song (Frühlingslied) by Mendelssohn, and sang them all in her best manner. Having been prevented from attending the second concert (on Tuesday evening), we must trust to the remarks of an intelligent contemporary:—

"The promise held out by Messrs. Klindworth, H. Blagrove, and Daubert, to introduce at their concerts some chamber compositions new to English ears, was justified, at their second soirée musicale in the Hanover Square Rooms, by an admirable performance of a trio in F sharp minor, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, by a composer whose very name was probably unknown to the majority of the audience. The work in question is the first of three trios written, we believe, some twenty years ago, by a certain Cæsar Augustus Franck, a Belgian, then a mere boy, and who has since neglected to fulfil the rich promise of his youth. The trio performed on Tuesday night, unequal as it is, displays such extraordinary power and imagination, that it is incomprehensible how a man of such manifest genius as the author should have been content with the obscurity into which he has retired. The passionate andante with which it opens produced an evident effect. It was deepened by the Beethovenish scherzo, which merges without interruption into the wild and impetuous finale; and, in spite of the unusual length of the last movement, so complete an idea of unity is given to the whole, that the attention was sustained until the very end. Mozart's trio in E—composed in the most prolific period of the composer's life, and certainly a fit companion to the two symphonies in E flat and C, which were written about the same time, and are the most widely appreciated of all his orchestral productions—received ample justice at the hands of the same performers, who were reinforced by Mr. R. Blagrove and Mr. Blakestone, in Mr. Macfarren's admirably quintet in G minor for piano and strings with which the concert terminated. The vocalist was Miss Palmer, whose artistic rendering of two sacred songs of Beethoven was above reproach, and who also essayed Schubert's 'Erl-King' (accompanied by Herr Klindworth)."

Again Herr Klindworth played no solo—Why? At the next concert (the last), when a quintet in C minor by Barwald—another composer unknown here—is to be given, he must compensate for this deficiency.

HERR REICHARDT.—L'Art Musical de Paris, in noticing the recent concerts of Herr Reichardt says: "Herr Reichardt is this winter the 'lion' tenor in our concert-rooms and salons; and he lately gave his own concert at Erard's, in presence of a select assembly, who never ceased to applaud. Herr Reichardt's voice has an incontestable charm, and sings with irreproachable art and taste. He was encored in a melody, entitled, 'Mon Rêve,' said to be the composition of Prince Metternich. Herr Reichardt was also greeted with the warmest approval in the tenor air from Otello, in a beautiful romance of his own composition, 'Belle Etoile' ('Thou art so near and yet so far'), and in a duet with Signor Tagliafico."

HERR PAUER.—The Emperor of Austria has conferred the great gold medal for Science and Art upon Herr Ernst Pauer, the well-known pianist and composer.

A NEW INVENTION IN MUSICAL INSTRUCTION.—We have before us a little tablet, or sliding card, the invention of Mr. Towers, of 16 Grand Parade, which affords to the beginner an easy method of becoming acquainted with the various minor and major keys at one glance, without the aid of books to explain the different keys. It is a very ingenious contrivance, and as it is sold at the various music shops, at a mere nominal price, there is no doubt when it becomes known it will be much sought after.—Brighton Gazette, Dec. 13, 1860.

AN OFFICIAL FARCEUR.—M. Mocquard, the French Emperor's secretary, has become a member of the Paris Dramatic Authors' Society. One of his most amusing works is a farce, entitled, "Correspondance avec quatre marchands de Liverpool." When Dupin went to see Mocquard's Tireuse des Cartes, he observed to Troplong, "Mocquard is not a bad farceur, but he writes dramas as one having authority and not as a Scribe."—(Liverpool Porcupine.)

GREGORIANS AND ANTI-GREGORIANS.—A great dispute is just now going forward upon the subject of the Gregorian chant. This style of Church music, which for centuries has been considered almost as part and parcel of the Catholic religion, has been gradually abandoned in the diocese of Paris, until at last it is maintained in scarcely any of the churches, save at Notre Dame. One reason given for this circumstance is the great difficulty of obtaining singers sufficiently versed in musical science to be able to execute this, the most difficult music of all. An appeal has just been made to the Minister of Public Worship urging the immediate necessity for its re-establishment, and the forbidding of the operatic airs which, proceeding from grave to gay, have become of common introduction in Divine service at most of the churches in Paris. The dispute has run so high of late that it is considered high time for the Minister to interfere. At St. Sulpice on Christmas-day, a formal opposition was offered to the execution of certain modern frivolous tunes, as interpretations of the solemn words of the Catholic service, by the sudden bursting forth into the magnificent and old Gregorian chant of the six hundred pupils of the Seminaire, whose sturdy voices, drowning the hopping capering air with which the organ was about to accompany one of the psalms, produced the effect so long desired, that of silencing the irreverent accompaniment altogether.

Digitized by Google

The Operas.

Her Majesty's Theatre.—Mr. Wallace's Amber Witch has now been performed four times, and, as we anticipated, with each repetition, has made strong head-way with the public. Deficient in the bright and sparkling, and, consequently taking music of Maritana and Lurline, it no doubt disappointed many the first night who expected the Balfian and Wallachian tune to prevail everywhere. But Mr. Wallace was determined this time to dig a little beneath the surface, and strive to bring up a great treasure to the light. That he has done so, we believe. The Amber Witch is all to nothing his best work—best, not merely because it is more masterly and ambitious, but also because it is more melodious—not perhaps "tuny," but "tuneful;" as the public are beginning to find out already. In fact, the popular composer of Maritana has raised himself higher than ever in the estimation of thinking men by his last opera, and has converted many a sceptic into an admirer. As we shall have next week to give a detailed analysis of the music in our review department, we shall not enlarge upon the merits of the opera in this place, but content ourselves with a brief explanation of the book, and a few words about the performance.

The plot of the Amber Witch is taken from Dr. Weinhold's well-known novel of that name, which created so profound a sensation in Germany many years ago. The story is divided by Mr. Chorley into four acts. The first reveals Mary, the Amber Witch, dispensing food and clothing to the inhabitants of Coserow and its vicinity, who are reduced to famine by the consequences of a prolonged and disastrous war (the "Thirty Years' War"). She has inspired both an illicit and an honourable love. The Commandant of the district (of Usedom) endeavours to enveigle her affections through the intervention of his own servant and Mary's jealous rival, Elsie; while Count Rudiger, who has saved the life of her father, a village pastor, woos her in disguise of a peasant, and enlists her sympathy at once. The king being about to visit Coserow in state, Mary is chosen to present him with the congratulations of his loyal subjects; and in the act of discharging this responsibility, is made aware that her supposed peasant lover is Count Rudiger, a favoured courtier of the monarch. Nevertheless, the young nobleman finds opportunity to abate her scruples, and amid the bustle of the ceremony, persuades her to grant him an interview at night. In the second act this interview takes place, the scene being the Streckelberg, a hill supposed to be haunted by witches. Here Mary had discovered the source of that secret wealth by means of which she is enabled to relieve her famished compatriots. An exceptional hill, the Streckelberg, contains a vein of amber, the existence of which is only known to our heroine, and which she gathers and sells at market, through the instrumentality of her father. The meeting of the lovers leads to much the same result as that of Romeo and Juliet in Capulet's garden. They plight eternal troth, but, meanwhile, have been overheard by Elsie and her confederates, who, aided and abetted by the jealous commandant, are devising means of having Mary publicly accused of the practices of witchcraft. Their machinations are successful, and in the third act we find the unfortunate Amber Witch awaiting her trial in prison. Her only plea is unavailable, a storm having completely swept away the vein of amber. The proffered intercession of the Commandant being indignantly declined, on account of the unworthy conditions that accompany it, Mary is arraigned before the judges, until, moved in an equal degree by the affliction of her father and the threat of torture, she confesses her guilt, and is condemned to the stake. In the interval, Count Rudiger has been incarcerated by his own father, who, informed of his ignoble attachment through the agency of the commandant, is resolved upon preventing its consummation at any cost. The young lover is thus deterred from taking steps on behalf of his mistress; and it is not until the fourth act—when a serviceable coup de théâtre makes the obdurate "heavy-parent" die of the effects of a fall from his horse, and instals Count Rudiger in his place, as "Master of Ravenstein," that the latter is enabled to "rush to the rescue." He arrives with a competent band of armed retainers at the nick of time. Mary is to be burnt on the Streckelberg, the scene of her presumed transactions with the evil one, and she having repulsed the proffered aid of the commandant, she is at that instant awaiting her doom. Another opportune arrival, that of the king, is further instrumental in averting the catastrophe. The result will be anticipated. Mary is saved, the Commandant degraded and banished; Elsie dies, as some interpret it, of chagrin and disappointment, while others, judging by the words which Mr. Chorley has put in the mouth of the Commandant—of poison; and the faithful lovers are made happy.

The cast is as follows:—Mary (daughter of the pastor of Coserow), Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington; Elsie (servant to the Commandant), Miss Huddart; Rudiger (the young Lord of Ravenstein), Mr. Sims Reeves; the Commandant, Mr. Santley; the Pastor, Mr. Patey; Claus (a half-witted postman), Mr. Terrott; the King, Mr. Bartleman.

Of course, the chief interest is centred in Mary, who, in some respects, may be likened to Ninetta, in the Gazza Ladra, like her, being falsely accused of a heinous crime, tried, condemned, and spared. Mad. Sherrington sustains the part with great ability, and shows decided improvement on her performance in Robin Hood. She sings delightfully throughout, and occasionally with a finish and beauty of voice, that reminds us evep of Jenny Lind; these remembrances, be it understood, are suggested, not when Mad. Sherrington sings the bravuras, but when she sings the simple, unadorned cantabiles with which the opera abounds. As a specimen of fine ballad singing, we know little to go beyond the song, "When the elves at eve do pass" (act 3). Mr. Sims Reeves has not a strong part, but he renders it attractive and striking by some of the finest and most expressive singing we ever heard. The long scena in the prison (act 4th) exhibits the great tenor to the most signal advantage, and shows how admirably Mr. Wallace can write for the voice, when he has a real voice to write for. The character Mr. Reeves represents does not excite the most intense interest, but the artist himself enlists universal sympathy for the part he undertakes by the force of his genius. Mr. Santley's Commandant is even inferior to Mr. Reeves's Count; but his fine and powerful singing would make amends for even greater drawbacks in a dramatic point of view. Mr. Terrott is harmonious as the letter-carrier, and Mr. Bartleman enacts the King, with a praiseworthy determination to look somebody, at all events.

In conclusion, we have to add that the band and chorus of Her Majesty's Theatre never achieved higher honours, and that the performance the first night was one of the most perfect we have heard for many years in any theatre.

The English Opera season terminates to-night with the Amber Witch. We believe at present it is the intention of Mr. E. T. Smith to carry on the English campaign at Drury Lane with the same principal vocalists who were engaged at Her Majesty's Theatre. If so, the "run" of Mr. Wallace's new opera will merely be suspended for a time. Mr. Smith takes a benefit on Tuesday with a Grand Masked Ball.

Royal English Opera.—The success of the Domino Noir has gone on increasing from the beginning. Not satisfied with this, however, the directors introduced, on Monday night, as appendix to Auber's opera, Mendelssohn's operetta, Son and Stranger, (Heimkehr). This exquisite musical bijou was first heard in England at the Haymarket Theatre, some ten years ago, but, as may be supposed, somewhat indifferently performed. Nevertheless, all musical London went to hear it, and had it been more efficiently executed, it must have proved eminently attractive. In producing the Son and Stranger at Covent Garden, Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison committed two errors: First, in making it follow, instead of preceding, the Domino Noir. Secondly, in not giving the cast greater significance. In short, it would be hardly fair to pronounce a judgment on the performance under the circumstances. The singers employed in the operetta were Miss Thirlwall (who is admirable), Miss Leffler, Messrs. St. Albyn, Corri, and Horncastle.

The season closes to-night, but two extra performances will be given next week, one on Tuesday, for the benefit of Mr. Harrison, and one on Thursday, for the benefit of Miss Louisa Pyne.

Royal Dramatic College.—The late Mr. W. Skelton, of Lincoln Villa, St. John's Wood, has left by his will 100*l.* to this charity.

Digitized by Google

VOCAL ASSOCIATION.

THE fifth season was inaugurated on Tuesday evening, at St. James's Hall, under the direction of Mr. Benedict. The programme was unusually attractive. Among the novelties were two chorales by Luther, harmonised by Sebastian Bach, which, considering the difficulties, the choir sang extremely well. The part-songs were all good, and none was received with greater applause than Mr. Benedict's "Cradle Song" (for twelve ladies), which created an unmistakable sensation. Herr Neithardt's motet for double choir, "Misericordias Domini," although the longest and most pretentious piece in the programme, did not seem to please so much. The Scottish national air, "In the garb of old Gaul," by General Reid, arranged for male voices by Mr. Benedict, was far more successful, in spite of the looseness of the poetry, and its want of harmoniousness.

The instrumental performances comprised Onslow's quintet in C, op. 25, played by the London Quintet Union, Messrs. Dando, Westlake, H. Webb, Pettit, and Reynolds, most excellently, and two pianoforte solos by Miss Arabella Goddard, viz., J. S. Bach's splendid prelude and fugue, Alla tarantella, and a new fantasia on English airs, entitled, Albion, written expressly for her by Mr. Benedict. How wonderfully Miss Goddard executes Bach's extraordinary composition has already been shown at the Monday Popular Concerts. Mr. Benedict's fantasia—the sister of Erin and Caledonia—is as melodious and brilliant as either, and will, no doubt, rival them in popularity. The subjects taken are "Pray, Goody, please," from Midas, and "Come, if you dare," from Purcell's King Arthur, both of which he has used most ingeniously, and with the happiest effect. Miss Goddard's admirable performance of this piece was received with acclamations, and so persistent were the audience that even when she returned to the platform to make her acknowledgment, they would not cease until she had resumed her seat at the piano. Instead, however, of repeating Albion, Miss Goddard performed another of Mr. Benedict's captivating fantasias—"Where the bee sucks," which also was received with no less enthusiasm.

The solo vocalists were Miss Banks and Mad. Laura Baxter. The former sang the air with chorus from Mr. Benedict's Undine, and joined Mad. Baxter in the duet "Vaghi Colli," from Winter's Ratto di Proserpino. Mad. Baxter gave Handel's "Lascio ch' io piange," and the ballad "By the sad sea waves," from Mr. Benedict's opera The Brides of Venice. Both ladies sang admirably, and both were honoured with encores — Miss Banks in "Mark the the waves that rippling play" (Undine), Mad. Baxter in "By the sad sea waves." The concert terminated with the "National Anthem." The Hall was thronged by a brilliant and fashionable audience.

NEW PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.—Dr. Wylde commenced his tenth season—or rather the tenth season of the "New Philharmonic Concerts," in St. James's Hall, on Monday night, with an entertainment equal, if not superior, in attraction to any that has been given since he first undertook the sole direction of the performances. A more efficient band, whether strength or numbers be taken into consideration, never obeyed his baton. Beethoven's overture to Egmont (with which the concert began) was quite enough to prove its excellence. Seldom has this magnificent dramatic prelude been more finely rendered. The piece, however, which most severely tested the capabilities of the orchestra and the readiness of the conductor was the grand symphony in C major of Franz Schubert. This very extraordinary composition, it may be remembered, was introduced last season at one of the concerts of the Musical Society of London, but failed to make an impression at all commensurate with its deserts. This could not be attributed to any weakness in the performance, the band being notoriously one of the best ever assembled in England, and guided, too, by Mr. Alfred Mellon, a conductor about whose eminent ability there are not two opinions. The failure of Schubert must be laid exclusively to the audience, which, at the concerts of the Musical Society of London, is chiefly composed of musicians and amateurs of more or less acquirement, who—we are forced to conclude—whenever a new or unknown work is essayed, attend rather to criticise than to enjoy. Such is not the case at the New Philharmonic Concerts. Dr. Wylde addresses himself to the public at large, and his concerts are patronised by all classes of music lovers. These come prepared to listen with deference and applaud without restraint whatever touches their sympathies, disdaining to inquire into "the reason why." Thus Schubert had a much better chance of appreciation; and his symphony, last night, was almost as great a success as his quartet in D minor recently at the Monday Popular Concerts. In sober truth, this symphony — diffuse as it undoubtedly is, clogged with detail, and so crowded with ideas that the mind is at a loss to grasp them all, while the ear, at times, becomes perplexed no less than satiated — is a work of marvellous originality and power. Its beauties, moreover, are as genuine as they are numerous, and gain rather than lose by closer familiarity. Mendelssohn was not far wrong when he recommended it to the Philharmonic Society, which did itself little credit in ignoring his recommendation. Dr. Wylde, who has shown himself an eclectic in musical taste, was just the man to enter con amore into the claims of a composer of genius who, in a great measure, had been neglected. The admirable execution of Schubert's symphony under his baton and the flattering applause it met with from the audience, may be fairly regarded as a new and legitimate triumph for the concerts he directs with such zeal and indefatigability. Whether the expedients to which he resorted for the purpose of abbreviation were altogether defensible must be left an open question. He will probably repeat the symphony, and challenge criticism on this point.

M. Vieuxtemps, in Mendelssohn's violin concerto, was no less successful than in that of Beethoven at the first concert of the Musical Society of London. He played his very best, and was applauded "to the echo." Another concerto — Weber's in E flat, for pianoforte, with orchestral accompaniments — was as good as a novelty, so rarely is it heard in public. The famous Concertstück has almost wholly cast it in the shade. It is, nevertheless, too fine a composition to be allowed to rest on the shelf; and its revival was an experiment thoroughly warranted by the result. The extreme mechanical difficulty of the first allegro is a stumbling-block in the path of ordinary executants; but the unaffected grace of the slow movement, and the brilliant vivacity of the finale — a genuine Weberian effusion—are calculated to charm even uninitiated ears. If performed with ease and fluency, the entire concerto is pretty sure to please, as in every instance where the ars celare artem is brought to bear on really plastic material. This was proved last night, when the "reviver" was Miss Arabella Goddard, whose predilection for the music of Weber has frequently been shown in her public performances, and who never threw more soul into her task than on the present occasion, and was never rewarded by more hearty and unanimous appreciation. The Concerto in E flat having thus passed the ordeal, the Concerto in C (not the Concertstück), which is still more unfamiliar to our pianists, might be looked after with advantage. Dr. Wylde and his orchestra, by the way, are entitled to unqualified praise for the careful manner in which both the violin and the pianoforte concerto were accompanied. The other instrumental pieces were a bravura solo by M. Vieuxtemps, and the overture to Oberon (why not Cherubini's Abencerragen, as originally announced?) which brought the concert to an end.

The vocal music was unexceptionable, consisting of airs from Der Freischütz, Euryanthe, and the Amber Witch, sung to perfection by Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington; and the "Hunting-chorus" from Haydn's Seasons, which has seldom been so well given in a concert-room. Dr. Wylde was warmly welcomed on making his appearance in the orchestra. The hall was crowded.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—One of the most remarkable features of the present day is the increasing taste for music, and, as historians of the past have recorded the ages of iron and of brass, so those of the time we live in shall describe it as the "age of music." The public appetite is insatiable. "If music be the food of love, play on, give me excess of it," says Shakspeare. "Give me excess of it," echo the British public, and the law of supply following inevitably upon that of demand, we have just now such an "excess" as a few years ago could scarcely have been imagined. One of the healthiest signs is the predilection for the works of the great masters, who never so fully asserted their dominion. Take the forthcoming season, of which the active note of preparation is beginning to be heard. The Old Philharmonic, in the face of difficulties (which at one time threatened its existence) boasts an unusually large subscription list, and, thanks to the pre-eminent ability of its conductor, Dr. Sterndale Bennett, bids fair to do more than sustain its reputation. To say nothing of the New Philharmonic, which advances steadily and prosperously under the auspices of Dr. Wylde, is there not the young and vigorous Musical Society of London, whose concerts are the theme of universal praise, and reflect the highest honour and credit upon their admirable conductor, Mr. Alfred Mellon? Then, turning to chamber music, what city in the world can show anything to match the Monday Popular Concerts in St. James's Hall? The unprecedented success of these entertainments says as much for the taste of their constant and numberless patrons, as for the judgment of their able and zealous director, Mr. Arthur Chappell. Last, not least (nor last, by the way, on reflection), the Sacred Harmonic Society invariably tempts crowded audiences to Exeter Hall, to hear the oratorios of Handel, Haydn, and Mendelssohn, the church music of Mozart, Beethoven, &c. Last Friday the attendance was enormous, and at an early hour even standing room unobtainable. The attraction was Mendelssohn's Elijah. Those who were present will not readily forget the very grand performance of this work. From the first chorus, "Help, Lord," to the final hymn, "Praise," all was good, singers and band alike exerting themselves with a strong will which showed their love for the task, and producing a commensurate effect upon their hearers. Miss Parepa never gave the principal soprano music with greater success; her clear, powerful voice and energetic delivery making every point tell. Madame Sainton-Dolby, who was welcomed with the utmost cordiality, sang superbly—indeed we can recall nothing more thoroughly artistic than her delivery of Jezebel's denunciations, or more tranquilly beautiful than "O rest in the Lord," which was rewarded with an "encore" so loud and unanimous that the singer had no alternative but to comply. The trio, "Lift thine eyes," was fortunately not interrupted, as is frequently the case, and consequently the chorus with which it is connected, "He, watching over Israel," was heard to the best advantage. "If ever music," exclaimed a rhapsodist, "deserved the term heavenly, it is this"; and could we choose the strains with which we should desire to be wafted from this earthly sphere, it should be this passage of Elijah." Madame Laura Baxter, in the air, "Woe unto them," was all that the most fastidious taste could desire; her rich and mellow "alto" contributing materially to the effect of the concerted pieces. Mr. Sims Reeves has so completely identified himself with the tenor music of Elijah that his co-operation at every performance is absolutely indispensable. "If with all your hearts," and "Then shall the righteous," were both given to perfection by this great master of the sacred style, and both created the profoundest sensation. Upon Mr. Santley fell the most arduous labour, and on the whole he has never sustained the character of the Prophet with such impressive dignity, or delivered his music with such power and expression. Mr. Santley's voice is so rich and musical, and so thoroughly under control, as wholly to compensate for the want of weight which would be felt in the case of any other baritone singing one of the most trying parts ever composed for a bass. The choruses were everywhere effective, so much so that it would be difficult to single out any of them for special notice. The instruments were no less efficient in the overture and orchestral accompaniments. In short, this was altogether one of the finest performances of Mendelssohn's work that has ever been heard in the metropolis. C.

Digitized by Google

Plymouth.—(From a Correspondent.) The benefit of Mr. Henry Reed, the highly respected musical director of the Theatre Royal, was a "bumper" in every sense of the word. The performance was under the patronage of Colonel Hamilton and the officers of the 12th Regiment. The entertainment consisted of a drama adapted from Verdi's Trovatore, entitled, The Troubadour, the character of Leonora being sustained by Miss Kate Ranoe, now an immense favourite with the Plymouth audience, and that of Manrico by Mr. James Sullivan. The afterpiece was Mr. Byron's extravaganza of The Lady of Lyons. In the course of the evening Mrs. Henry Reed (wife of the bénéficiaire, and daughter of the highly respected and very popular manager) played, in first-rate style, a solo on the pianoforte, at the conclusion of which she was loudly and deservedly applauded. T. E. B.

THE ENTERPRISING IMPRESARIO.

CHAPTER X.

The troubles and responsibilities of the tour were shared by the manager and his conductor, a jovial little fellow, ready and willing to oblige everybody at any personal inconvenience to himself. As for the artists they gave themselves but little concern about any thing, except their own amusement, and the eating and drinking, which sometimes caused them dissatisfaction. The monotony of Irish cookery does not accord with Italian notions of gastronomy.

The constant recurrence of boiled fowls and haunches of mutton, invariably preceded by a Dublin Bay haddock and the same soup, gave rise to murmurs of discontent which threatened a mutiny.

To think, oh! Randon, that the taxated dainties of thy native land should be refused by the imperious foreigner.

But so it was: they wanted macaroni, and macaroni they must have. A primo basso had volunteered to dress it, but had been refused admission to the kitchen. Could not the matter be arranged? The jealous feelings of the cook in possession, were they not to be appeased! Negotiations were commenced, which led ultimately to a satisfactory understanding, based upon the principles of free-trade. The foreigner was admitted and allowed free use of all the kitchen utensils, which, to his honour be it said, he knew how to handle remarkably well.

Whole days he passed in this his favourite occupation, for which he was more adapted than to represent indignant padres and rejected lovers. The basso had evidently been intended by nature for a cook, an artist-cook, one who can make a savoury dish out of almost impossible materials. I see him now as he stood before the fire anxiously watching the progress of the macaroni boiling in the enormous saucepan, which had been bought by the party by subscription for the purpose. A white nightcap and a small napkin round his waist, gave him a far more professional kitchen appearance than the old lady could present, who, with arms a-kimbo, stared in mute astonishment, and, I have no doubt, admiration at the expertness of her new ally. How warm he got over the fire, and what an exertion it was to lift the saucepan off the bars! A triumph, however, was in store for him. He sent the macaroni up to table, and followed it to witness the reception with which it met. What cheering and shouting! The basso never excited such enthusiasm in any opera. He is embraced by the tenor, thanked by the prima donna, and made to place himself, nightcap, apron and all, at the head of the board, where he presides and distributes the macaroni with a dignity becoming the position. Not a word is spoken for some time.

Those who are served are enjoying the treat prepared so artistically by the good-natured basso, others busy themselves in looking to their spoon and fork, and tying napkins over their shirt fronts, preparatory to receiving the delicacy. The plates are at length cleared, and not a single stick of macaroni remains. The basso was from that day appointed head cook to the tour; and in the operas his parts were played by those of his comrades who too well appreciated his talents in the kitchen to allow him to waste his time upon the stage. Nothing now appeared to be required to render the happiness of the party complete. Their only want had been macaroni, and that had been providentially supplied to an extent which satisfied the most inordinate feeder.

Cologne.—(From a Correspondent.)—At the last Soirée for Chamber-Music, a young pianiste from St. Petersburgh, Mlle. Ingeborg-Starck, who has achieved a certain reputation in Paris and the various Rhenish watering-places, played Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 111, and Bach's Chromatic Fantasia with Fugue. She gave the fugue admirably, but her rendering of the sonata failed to impress not merely the general public but likewise competent judges. Beethoven's violin-quartet in C minor (Op. 18, No. 4) obtained, after every movement, enthusiastic applause. At the band rehearsal on Thursday, Herr Schmidt, from Moscow, proved himself a thoroughly good violoncellist. He created, as stated, the applause no less of the members of the orchestra, than of the amateurs present, by his execution of a concerto by Romberg and a fantasia, with variations, by Servais. Herr Schmidt is very young, and there is every prospect of his attaining a high position.

Digitized by Google

A MOTHER'S FOREBODINGS.*

(Lines for Music.)

By John Young.

If Life's changing currents flow tranquilly by,
And soothe thy young heart as they roam,
'Twill recall each joy spent 'neath this clear purple sky,
That arches in beauty thy now sunny home.
If Care swell their tides, and thy firm bark of love
Be torn from Hope's anchor of peace,
All these sweet recollections thy bosom will move,
And sorrow but tend to increase.

It were not for me to bring clouds o'er thy heart,
They'll rise in the future too soon,
I would rather thy morning of life, ere we part,
Pass free from those clouds which may shadow its noon.
Yet surely I know that, when life's wayward stream
Glides smoothly, thought sleeps at the oar,
'Tis our moment of danger, we wake from our dream,
A wreck on Adversity's shore.

Organ in the Parish Church of Saint Lawrence, Ludlow, rebuilt by Messrs. Gray and Davison, in 1860, according to the plan proposed by the Rev. Sir Frederick A. Gore Ouseley, Bart., Mr. Davison, organ builder, and Mr. Bartholomew, organist of the church. Cost of re-erection and additions 1000*l.*

Compass, Manuals CC to G Pedals CCC to E.

SOLO ORGAN.

1. Grand tuba through, metal, 8 feet.
2. Harmonic flute, to tenor C., metal, 8 feet.
*3. Cornet, to middle C., metal, 4 ranks.

SWELL ORGAN.

1. Bourdon, wood, 16 feet.
*2. Open diapason, metal, 8 feet.
3. Keraulophon, to tenor C., metal, 8 feet.
*4. Stop diapason bass, wood, 8 feet.
*5. Stop diapason treble, wood, 8 feet.
*6. Principal, metal, 4 feet.
7. Fifteenth, metal 2 feet.
8. Mixture, metal, 2 ranks.
9. Cornopean, metal, 8 feet.
*10. Oboe, metal 8 feet.
2 Composition pedals and tremulant by pedal.

GREAT ORGAN.

1. Double stop diapason, wood, 16 feet.
*2. Open diapason, metal, 8 feet.
*3. Stop diapason bass, wood, 8 feet.
*4. Stop diapason treble, wood, 8 feet.
5. Spitz flute, to tenor C., metal, 8 feet.
*6. Principal, metal, 4 feet.
*7. Twelfth, metal, 3 feet.
*8. Fifteenth, metal, 2 feet.
*9. Sesquialtra, metal, 3 ranks.
*10. Furniture, metal, 3 ranks.
11. Trumpet, metal, 8 feet.
12. Clarion, metal, 4 feet.
3 Composition pedals.

CHOIR ORGAN.

*1. Open diapason, metal, 8 feet.
*2. Dulciana, metal, 8 feet.
*3. Stop diapason bass, wood, 8 feet.
*4. Stop diapason treble, wood, 8 feet.
*5. Principal, metal, 4 feet.
*6. Flute, wood, 4 feet.
7. Piccolo, wood, 2 feet.
8. Clarinet, to tenor C., metal, 8 feet.

PEDAL ORGAN.

*1. Open diapason, wood, 16 feet.
2. Violon, metal, 16 feet.
3. Bourdon, wood, 16 feet.
4. Principal, metal, 8 feet.
5. Fifteenth, metal, 4 feet.
6. Trombone, wood tubes, 16 feet.

COUPLERS.

1. Choir to pedals.
2. Great to pedals.
3. Swell to pedals.
4. Swell to great.
5. Choir to great.
6. Solo to great.
7. Swell to choir.

The stops marked thus * were in the old instrument, by Snetzler, given by the late Right Honorable Henry Arthur Earl of Powis, in 1764.

NB. The compass of Snetzler's instrument was Gt and Ch 4½ octaves, G to E, Sw to tenor C only, and 1½ octaves of G pedals.

Hanover. — Herr Augustus Kömpel, the violinist, has resigned his place in the Royal orchestra, and intends spending some time in a professional tour. Herr Kömpel played a piece by his master, Spohr, at one of the concerts of the Philharmonic Society, last season.

* These words are copyright.

Letters to the Editor.

Sir,—I beg to forward you an acrostic on Miss Stephens, the once so celebrated vocalist. It is one of the best of its kind I have ever seen, and has never as yet appeared in print. If you could find a corner for it in the Musical World, I think it would amuse many of the elder portion of your readers, and call back to their memories the great effects Miss Stephens used to produce in her favourite songs.

Alfred Kew,

(A reader of the Musical World for the last twenty years).

S he sings so soft, so sweet, so soothing still,
T hat to the tones ten thousand thoughts there thrill.
E lysian ecstacies enchant each ear,
P leasure's pure pinions poise prince, peasant, peer;
H ushing high hymns, heaven hears her harmony,
E arth envy aids enthralled each ear, each eye,
N umbers need ninefold nerve, nor nearly name
S oul-stirring Stephens, sure seraphs sing the same.

[How about the a ("aids") in the sixth line?—Ed. M. W.]

"Sir,—I take the liberty of troubling you with a hint which, perhaps, if made known, might be the means of doing good. I think that if the managers or lessees of the London theatres were to have a box conspicuously placed near the pay place, many persons would contribute to it. I have frequently noticed that when, one is pleasantly enjoying him or herself, his better nature is touched with the misfortunes of his poorer fellow-creatures. I have no hesitation in saying, that if such a thing were done as I have named, by the liberality of our managers of the various theatres, that a large sum of money would be collected, and such amount might be distributed among such portion of the class as was most deserving of it. I offer this hint to the kind consideration of the managers themselves, knowing that through their sympathetic labours many a weary one has been comforted and sent on his way rejoicing.—I am, sir, yours, very obediently, F. M. M."

THE STORM AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

"Sir,—I regret to have to inform you that during the gale which raged here with excessive violence between 6 and 7 o'clock last evening, the square block which formed the termination of the north wing of the Palace was blown down, carrying with it a portion of the corridor which led to it, and in which the poultry shows have been recently held. Both block and corridor were empty, with the exception of a few garden-seats and trestles stowed there during the winter. No personal injury has taken place, nor has anything been damaged, except the shell of that portion of the structure above mentioned. The main building and the other portions of the company's property are entirely uninjured.

"I may add that the block in question, and its companion at the opposite end of the terrace, were originally designed to carry the tanks for playing some of the fountains. But this idea having been at an early period abandoned, the upper story remained without the weight intended to steady it, and was therefore more subject to the action of the wind. The south block was reduced in height last year, when it was added to the refreshment department, and it was in the contemplation of the directors to do the same by the other.

"It appears that the wind must have first taken the upper part of the block, and that this, in its fall, brought down the adjoining corridor; but as the accident happened after the closing of the building, no precise particulars are known as to the manner of its occurrence.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"G. GROVE, Secretary.

Advertisements.

LURLINE.—CHARLES D'ALBERT'S QUADRILLES and VALSES from WALLACE'S LURLINE.
Cramer, Beale and Co., 201 Regent Street.

ROBIN HOOD.—CHARLES D'ALBERT'S QUADRILLES and VALSES from MACFARREN'S ROBIN HOOD.
Cramer, Beale and Co., 201 Regent Street.

Digitized by Google

GUINEA EDITION
OF
BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS.

Just published, in two volumes, superbly bound in cloth, price each 10*s.* 6*d.*,

BOOSEY AND SONS'
NEW EDITION OF
BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS FOR PIANOFORTE,

Edited by W. DORRELL; with Life of BEETHOVEN by MACFARREN, and Portrait by Lynch.

THIS edition is beautifully printed from newly-engraved Plates, and is the most correct one published.

CONTENTS OF VOL. I.
Price 10s. 6d.

Sonata, No. 1, Op. 2, F minor.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 2, A.
Sonata, No. 3, Op. 2, C.
Sonata, Op. 7, E flat.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 10, C minor.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 10, F.
Sonata, No. 3, Op. 10, D.
Sonata Pathetique, Op. 13, C minor.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 14, E.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 14, G.
Sonata, Op. 22, B flat.
Sonata, with Funeral March, Op. 26, A flat.
Sonata quasi una Fantasia (known as the "Moonlight Sonata"), No. 1, Op. 27, C sharp minor.
Sonata quasi una Fantasia, No. 2, Op. 27, E flat.
Sonata Pastorale, Op. 28, D.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 31, G.

CONTENTS OF VOL. II.
Price 10s. 6d.

Sonata, No. 2, Op. 31, D minor.
Sonata, No. 3, Op. 31, E flat.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 49, G minor.
Sonata, No. 2, Op. 49, G.
Sonata, Op. 53, C.
Sonata, Op. 54, F.
Sonata Appassionata, Op. 57, F minor.
Sonata, Op. 78, F sharp.
Sonata, Op. 79, G.
Sonata Caractéristique, Op. 81, E flat ("Les Adieux").
Sonata, Op. 90, E minor.
Sonata, Op. 101, A.
Grand Sonata, Op. 106, B flat.
Sonata, Op. 109, E.
Sonata, Op. 110, A flat.
Sonata, Op. 111, C minor.

"There are many editions of Beethoven's sonatas, German, French, and English; but there is not one that we have seen, from which, taking all things into account—correctness and clearness of the text, elegance of form, and moderation of price—we have derived so much satisfaction as from the edition now before us. The text, after undergoing the revision of so able an editor as Mr. Dorrell, may be expected to be immaculate; and so, after a close examination, we find it to be; and the clearness and beauty of the paper and printing are not to be excelled. The value of the edition is much enhanced by an able and interesting essay on the life and works of Beethoven from the pen of Mr. G. A. Macfarren; and there is, moreover, an excellent portrait of the composer."—Daily News.

BOOSEY'S ORCHESTRAL OVERTURES, arranged by LAMOTTE. Price 8s. each for full band; 5s. each for small band.

1. Crown Diamonds, Auber.
2. Zampa, Herold.
3. Zanetta, Auber.
4. Oberon, Weber.
5. Fra Diavolo, Auber.
6. Der Freischütz, Weber.
7. Domino Noir, Auber.
8. Gazza Ladra, Rossini.
9. Dame Blanche, Boieldieu.
10. Masaniello, Auber.
11. Part du Diable, Auber.
12. Guillaume Tell, Rossini.

KUHE'S NEW TRANSCRIPTION of SCHUBERT'S FAVOURITE MELODIES, as short and effective Pieces for the Pianoforte, price 2s. 6d. each.

1. Serenade.
2. Ave Maria.
3. Adieu.
4. The Wanderer.
5. The praise of Tears.
6. Thine is my heart.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

NORDMANN'S PIANOFORTE DUETS.—Tutto e sciolto, 3s.; Vi ravviso, 3s.; Ah! non giunge, 2s. 6d.; Ernani involami, 4s.; Solingo errante, 3s.; Ciascun lo dice, 3s.; Rataplan, 3s.; O luce di quest, 4s.; Il segreto, 3s.; In questo semplice, 4s.; Bella figlia, 4s.; A te, o cara, 3s.; Fra poco a me, 4s.; Noble Seigneurs, and Rataplan, 3s.; O fortune, à ton caprice, 3s.; La mia letizia, 3s.; Il balen, and Di quella pira, 4s.; Si la stanchezza, 3s.; Com' e gentil, 3s.; D' un pensiero, 4s.; Suona la tromba, 4s.; Son vergin vezzosa, 3s.; La donna è mobile, 4s.; Ah! che la morte, 4s.; Libiamo, brindisi, 4s.
Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

SONGS by CLARIBEL.—The Old Pink Thorn, Illustrated in Colours by BRANDARD, 2s. 6d.; Janet's Choice, sung by Mad. SAINTON-DOLBY, 3s.; Janet's Bridal, 3s.; Dreamland, 3s.; I remember it, 3s.; The Brook, 2s. 6d.; My mother's farewell, 2s.; Mary, I will wait for thee, 3s.
Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

BRASS BAND, STRING BAND, DRUMS and FIFES, &c.—Booseys' Brass Band Journal, Quick Step Journal, Orchestral Journal of Dance Music, Orchestral Selections from the New Opera, Orchestral Overtures, Drum and Fife Journal, &c.
Full particulars of these unrivalled Publications may be had, post-free, from Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

NEW PUBLICATIONS
OF
DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.,
244 REGENT STREET. (JUST OUT.)

"MAY."—New Duettino, by HENRY SMART, composed for equal Voices. Price 2s. 6d.
"Mr. Henry Smart, in this melodious and truly exquisite little duet, has, if possible, even surpassed in elegance and vocal finish, the pieces so warmly eulogised in our last impression."—Musical World.
London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE BANNER OF ST. GEORGE," by BALFE, a new National Song. The words by John Brougham, written for, and dedicated to, THE ST. GEORGE'S RIFLE CORPS, is published, beautifully illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," Révérie by W. Kuhé, on Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), and "I love YOU," Sims Reeves's popular ballad, transcribed for the Piano by Emile Berger, are published, price 3s. each, by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL," by W. H. WEISS, composed and sung by the composer, with the greatest success, as well as by Mr. WINN and other vocalists of celebrity, is published, handsomely illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

ANDANTE in E flat, by GEORGIANA HOLMES, from a Quintet by FELICIEN DAVID, arranged for the pianoforte, and dedicated to Lady Scott, is just published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, S. W., where "Les Etoiles et leur Langage," Nocturne and "Air with Variations" (both composed by Georgiana Holmes), may be obtained, price 3s. each.

NEW CONCERTINA MUSIC by GIULIO REGONDI.—Reichardt's popular song, "Thou art so near, and yet so far," transcribed for the CONCERTINA and PIANOFORTE by GIULIO REGONDI, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"NEW YEAR'S EVE," by W. H. HOLMES.—This agreeable "Pensée" by the above talented composer, is just published for the pianoforte, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co, 244 Regent Street, W.

TYROLEAN MOUNTAIN SONG, by T. MAUSS (Der Jodelplatz), arranged for the pianoforte, and dedicated to Mr. W. E. Jarrett, of Cheltenham, is just published, price 3s.
Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, S. W.

AGUILAR'S TRANSCRIPTION of WEBER'S LAST WALTZ is just published for the pianoforte, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W., where Aguilar's Reverie, "Sunset Glow," may be obtained, price 3s., and his two latest songs, "Sympathy" (poetry by Mrs. BELL), 2s. "In a wood on a windy day" (poetry by ACTON BELL), 3s. and "Farewell" (poetry by Bishop HEBER), 2s., may be obtained.

DEUX BONBONS FROM THE DOMINO NOIR.

No. 1, "LA BELLEINES." Aragonaise. Price 1s.
No. 2, "AH, QUELLE NUIT," Bolero. Price 1s.

Transcribed for the Pianoforte, by
EMILE BERGER.

The above pieces are very easy transcriptions (without octaves) of the two celebrated songs in Auber's popular opera, sung by Miss LOUISA PYNE with such eminent success at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden, and are published by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW WORK FOR STUDENTS.

THE most important CADENCES and MODULATIONS through the MAJOR and MINOR keys, with HARMONISED SCALES composed for the pianoforte, harmonium, or organ, by IMMANUEL LIEBICH, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

THE AMBER WITCH.—Mr. SIMS REEVES' popular Songs and Ballads in WALLACE'S NEW OPERA, are "Love me and fear not," "Oh right is the palace doom," "Lone, oppressed in prison," and "Go, sing how our troop."
Cramer, Beale and Co., 201 Regent Street.

MAD. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON'S favourite Songs and Ballads in WALLACE'S NEW OPERA, the AMBER WITCH, are, "When the elves at dawn do pass," "O lady moon," "My long hair is braided," and "O never laugh, Sir Knight."
Cramer, Beale and Co., 201 Regent Street.

THE AMBER WITCH.—CHARLES D'ALBERT'S QUADRILLES, VALSES, and POLKA, from WALLACE'S AMBER WITCH.
Cramer, Beale and Co., 201 Regent Street.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 13 James Street, Buckingham Gate, in the Parish of St. Margaret, in the City of Westminster, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, March 16, 1861.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 39—No. 12 SATURDAY, MARCH 23, 1861 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

PASSION WEEK.—HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS.—Mr. FREDERIC PENNA (Pupil of Sir George Smart), assisted by Mad. PENNA at the Pianoforte, will give a SACRED MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENT, entitled "The Oratorio Composers of the 18th and 19th Centuries," on MONDAY Evening, March 25th, and SATURDAY Evening, March 30th; and on WEDNESDAY Evening, March 27th, a MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENT, "Old Friends and New Acquaintance." To commence at 8. Tickets, 3s., 2s., and 1s.; at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, and at the principal Musicsellers.

OPENING OF THE ORGAN IN OAKAMOOR CHURCH, STAFFORDSHIRE.

THE Organ built for the above Church by CONACHER & Co., of Huddersfield, will be OPENED on Sunday, the 7th of April.

OPENING OF THE ORGAN IN DRIGHLINGTON CHURCH, NEAR LEEDS.

THE New Organ, built for the above Church by CONACHER & Co., will be OPENED on Sunday, the 7th of April.
Full Cathedral Services.

OPENING OF THE ORGAN IN HEALEY CHURCH, NEAR ROCHDALE.

THE above Organ, by CONACHER & Co., will be OPENED on Sunday, the 7th of April.

VALUABLE MUSICAL PROPERTIES.

COPYRIGHT WORKS.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS, ETC.

MESSRS. PUTTICK and SIMPSON, Auctioneers of Music and Literary Property, will Sell by Auction, at their House, 47, Leicester Square, W. C. (West side), during the early part of the Season, the following Valuable Musical Properties, viz. on Tuesday, March 26th and two following days, a SELECTION of SURPLUS STOCK of an eminent Publishing House, consisting of above 2,000 engraved Music Plates (many with copyright)—many valuable Unpublished MSS.—Modern Music—the Works of Standard Authors—Scores, &c. Also, Pianofortes by Broadwood, Collard, and other makers—Harps and Musical Instruments of various kinds. Catalogues are preparing.

EARLY in the Season, the important REMAINING STOCK of FOREIGN IMPORTED MUSIC of Messrs. BOOSEY, who are relinquishing this portion of their Business. The Stock includes the Compositions of all the best Foreign Writers—Overtures—Symphonies in Score and for the Orchestra—Solos and Concerted Music for various Instruments—Pianoforte, Harp, and Organ Music—Vocal Music, Sacred and Secular. Catalogues are preparing.

IN APRIL, a COLLECTION of VIOLINS, upwards of forty in number, principally the property of a Gentleman, with Selections from the Collections of various Amateurs, comprising some very celebrated and well-known Instruments by

Stradivarius	Ruggerius	Gagliano
Guarnerius	Carlo Bergonzi	Sancto Seraphin
Amati	Maggini	Vuillaume

and other eminent makers. Among them are the celebrated Guarnerius, known as the Giant—Amatis of the grand modèle, &c.—a splendid Violoncello by Guarnerius—with Bows and Cases.

 Sales of Musical Property are held Monthly during the Season; for which occasion [illegible] small Consignments can be received at any time.

STOCK OF VALUABLE ORGANS, SUITED FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS, &c.

MR. MURRELL will SELL by AUCTION (in consequence of a dissolution of partnership), on the Premises, No. 34 Brook Street, Euston Road, on TUESDAY, March 26, several well-built and valuable ORGANS, suited for Churches, Chapels, Concert Rooms and Public Institutions. They are well built, in handsomely designed Mahogany, Grained, and other Cases, varying in size up to 16 ft. 6 in. high by 9 ft. wide, and 7 ft. deep, with all the requisite Pedals and Stops, got up at great cost. Also, fine BARREL ORGANS of various sizes, some unfinished Stock. This Sale offers a favourable opportunity to parties wanting a good Organ for any public place.

The Property may be viewed the day preceding and morning of Sale, and Catalogues had on the Premises, and of Mr. Murrell, Auctioneer and Land Agent, 1 Walbrook, City.

MR. WIENIAWSKI will arrive in London on the 20th MAY. All letters and applications to be addressed to Messrs. CHAPPELL & Co., 50 New Bond Street.

MR. MELCHOR WINTER begs to announce that his ANNUAL GRAND VOCAL AND INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT will take place early in the Season, at which eminent artists will appear. Full Particulars will be duly published. Address care of Messrs. BOOSEY & SONS, Holles Street, Cavendish Square, W.

MRS. MELCHOR WINTER, Professor of the Piano and Singing, begs to inform her Pupils and the Public that she has REMOVED from St James's Square to No. 230 Marylebone Road, Regent's Park, where all letters concerning Pupils and Public or Private Concerts may be addressed, or to Messrs. BOOSEY & SONS, Holles Street, Cavendish Square, W.

MR. ALBERTO LAURENCE having finished his Operatic Engagements at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden, begs to announce that he does not return to Italy until the autumn, but will remain in London during the Season, and is open to ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Oratorios, &c.—14 Russell Place, Fitzroy Square, W.

MR. WALLWORTH (in answer to numerous inquiries), does not leave London with the Pyne and Harrison Opera Company, but REMAINS in TOWN for Concerts, Pupils, &c.—81 Park Street, Grosvenor Square, W.

COLLARD and COLLARD'S NEW WEST-END ESTABLISHMENT, 16 Grosvenor Street, Bond Street, where all communications are to be addressed. Pianofortes of all classes for Sale and Hire.

THE AMBER WITCH.—Mr. SIMS REEVES' popular Songs and Ballads in WALLACE'S NEW OPERA, are "Love me and fear not," "O bright is the palace dome," "Lone, oppressed in prison lying," and "Go, sing how our troop."
Cramer, Beale and Co., 201 Regent Street.

MAD. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON'S favourite Songs and Ballads in WALLACE'S NEW OPERA, the AMBER WITCH, are, "When the elves at dawn do pass," "O lady moon," "My long hair is braided," and "O never laugh, Sir Knight."
Cramer, Beale and Co., 201 Regent Street.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S QUADRILLES, VALSES, and POLKA, from WALLACE'S OPERA, THE AMBER WITCH. Solos or Duets.
Cramer, Beale and Co., 201 Regent Street.

SONGS by the Rev. C. KINGSLEY, set to Music by C. A. BARRY.
Oh! that we two were maying, 2s.; Elizabeth's Prayer, 2s.; Three Fishers, 2s.; Margaret to Dolcino, 1s.; Dolcino to Margaret, 1s.; The Ouldt, 2s.
London: Cramer, Beale, and Chappell.

JUST PUBLISHED, PRICE 2s., POST FREE 26 STAMPS,

THE ART OF SINGING,
By the Rev. W. W. CAZALET, M.A.
London: Addison and Co., 210 Regent Street; Bosworth and Co., 215, Regent Street; Renshaw, 356, Strand.

LAMENT FOR GLENCOE.—New Song, the Words and Music by the author of "The March of the Cameron Men." Price 2s.
London: John Shepherd, Newgate Street, and of all Music and Booksellers.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S NEW SONGS, sung with immense success at St. James's Hall, the principal Concerts, &c.—Hawking Song, 3s.; Rest, 2s. 6d.; Now, 3s. The Music expressly composed by VIRGINIA GABRIEL.

C. Lonsdale's Musical Circulating Library, 26 Old Bond Street; where may be had all the latest and most approved compositions of Signori Garcia, Schira, Perugini, Campana, Badia, Marrus, Vianesi, and Verdi.

TWO MUSICAL SKETCHES for the PIANOFORTE, dedicated to Mr. Charles Hallé, by JAMES LEA SUMMERS, price 2s. 6d. each, "are cleverly written and stamped with real musical feeling."—MUSICAL WORLD.
London;—Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210 Regent Street.

Digitized by Google

NEW AND POPULAR

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY

ASHDOWN AND PARRY, 18 HANOVER SQUARE.

G. A. OSBORNE. LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM. Brilliant Fantasia. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. LES ENFANTS DE LA GARDE. Grande Marche brillante. Price 4s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. VEDRAI CARINO. Transcription (Don Juan). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. BATTI, BATTI. Transcription (Don Juan). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

A. SCHLOESSER. THE MERMAID'S SONG. Transcription of Haydn's Canzonet. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. PRAEGER. MALBROOK. Brilliant Piece on the old French air. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

F. PRAEGER. JOCK O' HAZELDEAN. Fantasia. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

WILHELM GANZ. SANTA LUCIA. A brilliant transcription of the popular Neapolitan air. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE MAUSS. PROMETHEUS. Grand Galop brillant. Price 4s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

JULES BRISSAC. THE HARP THAT ONCE THRO' TARA'S HALLS. Transcription. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. JOSEPHINE. Mazurka de Salon. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. LA VALLÉE DES ROSES. Deuxième Mazurka de Salon. Price 3s. 6d.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

HENRI ROUBIER. LE LANGAGE DES FLEURS. Troisième Mazurka de Salon.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

E. SILAS. ROMANCE. Price 2s. 6d.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

E. SILAS. IMPROMPTU (à la Mazurka). Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

EMANUEL AGUILAR. THE BIRDS AT SUNSET. Characteristic Piece. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

STEPHEN HELLER. IN WALD UND FLUR. Troisième Suite de Promenades d'un Solitaire. 6 Nos. Price 3s. and 4s. each.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE KULLAK. LES ARPÈGES. Etude de Concert. Price 5s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

THEODORE KULLAK. CAPUCINE. Legende. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 Hanover Square.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN AND PARRY

(Successors to Wessel and Co.),

18 HANOVER SQUARE.

1861.

NEW ALEXANDRE HARMONIUMS.

Lower in price and superior to all other cheap Harmoniums.

THE

NEW FOUR-OCTAVE HARMONIUM,

In Oak Case. Size 2 ft. 8 in. by 1 ft.; height, 2 ft. 4 in.

Price Five Guineas.

THE

NEW FOUR-AND-A-HALF OCTAVE HARMONIUM,

Compass, C to F. Size, 2 ft. 11 in. by 1 ft. 2 in.; height, 2 ft. 6 in.

Price—Oak, Five and a-half Guineas; Mahogany, Six Guineas.

THE

ALEXANDRE COTTAGE HARMONIUM,

Five Octaves. In Oak Case, with Two Foot Boards. Size, 3 ft. 4 in. by 1 ft. 2 in.; height, 2 ft. 8 in.

Price Six Guineas.

ALSO,

THE NEW ALEXANDRE CHURCH HARMONIUMS,

WITH

TWO ROWS OF KEYS.

NO. 1. EIGHT STOPS

(Three and a-half Rows of Vibrators), Rosewood Case. Size, 3 ft. 9 in. by 1 ft. 11 in.; height, 3 ft. 3 in.

Price Forty-five Guineas.

NO. 2. TWENTY-TWO STOPS

(Six Rows of Vibrators), Polished Oak or Rosewood Case. Size, 4 ft. 4 in. by 2 ft. 6 in.; height, 3 ft. 5 in.

Price Seventy Guineas.

NO. 3. TWENTY-TWO STOPS

(Eight Rows of Vibrators), Rosewood Case, 2½ Octaves of Pedals.

Price Eighty-five Guineas.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50 NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"A Collection of Sanctuses, Kyries, and Doxologies"—selected and arranged by J. E. RICHARDSON (Aylward, Salisbury; Cocks and Co., London).

A worthy offering to the Right Rev. Father in God, the Lord Bishop of Salisbury, on the part of the assistant organist of Salisbury cathedral. Themajority of the Sanctuses and Kyries comprised in this rich and very interesting collection are now (as Mr. Richardson himself informs us), for the first time published, having been appropriated from the MSS. belonging to the Cathedral. The editor would have done well, we think, to indicate in each particular instance the pieces thus derived. We might fairly devote a column to the contents of this handsome little volume, but have really so much on hand, that a few words must suffice. A "Sanctus" and "Kyrie" in E flat, by Mr. C. W. Lavington (organist of Wells Cathedral), inaugurates the work with good harmony and true devotional expression. A "Sanctus" and "Kyrie" in G, by Mr. E. Bunnett, Mus. Bac. (assistant organist of Norwich Cathedral) is clever, but not written with the same purity as its precursor. The style of the harmonisation is here occasionally rather of the French Opera than of the English Church. Two valuable specimens of Weldon (who died in 1736), and Bortniansky, the Russian composer, of whom a good deal has been said of late, come next. The former is a short and solemn "Sanctus" in F, the latter, in E flat, a smooth and melodious setting of the Greek "Kyrie Eleison." Mr. Richardson himself, too, offers a very favourable example of his acquaintance with the legitimate ecclesiastical style in the shape of a "Sanctus" and "Kyrie" in F, the melody of which is judiciously unornate, the harmony neat, correct and effective. The "Sanctus" from Spohr's Last Judgment; specimens of W. B. Earle, and Travers, both composers of the last century; a well-written "Kyrie," by Mr. A. J. Corfe (organist of Salisbury Cathedral); a smooth "Sanctus" and "Kyrie" by H. Sandford; a "Sanctus" and "Kyrie" bearing the name of Jomelli, whose once famous Chaconne in E flat serves for music to both movements (a somewhat questionable expedient); "a Sanctus" and "Kyrie," in E, from the respected pen of Dr. J. Elvey; a valuable example of John Reading (organist of Winchester Cathedral, died in 1692); a melodious, though somewhat florid "Sanctus" and "Kyrie," in E, by Thomas Attwood (Mozart's pupil, and late organist of St. Paul's Cathedral), one of the best things in the book; a very nice "Kyrie," by Bishop (once organist of Windsor Cathedral—who died in 1737); a somewhat dry "Sanctus," beginning in A minor and ending in C major, by Graun, composer of the once celebrated Tod Jesu; a vigorous "Kyrie," by C. King (who died in 1748); together with other contributions from Mr. Corfe, the Rev. Mr. Caley, Mr. Edward Lear, Mr. H. Sandford, and Mr. C. B. Wollaston; are all more or less deserving attention. Nevertheless, we have said as much as we can find room for; and must conclude with a word of unqualified approval for the six "Doxologies," at the end of the volume, which are exclusively from the pen of Mr. J. E. Richardson.

"The Ball-room Music Book," for the pianoforte (Boosey and Sons). This splendid volume contains no less than 50 waltzes, 40 polkas, 10 galops, 12 sets of quadrilles, two "Varsovianas," and two schottisches, among the best and most sparkling of their kind, and from some of the most popular dance-composers of the day. Such a publication as "The Ball-room Music Book" is not to be criticised; but happily, standing in no need of criticism, it may be commended without reserve.

"Oberon," grand duo—WILHELM GANZ (Chappell and Co.); "Guillaume Tell," grand duo—do. (do. do.); "Paroles d'Amour," romance—do. (do. do.); "Le Bonheur suprême," nocturne mélodique—do. (do. do).

These pieces have little pretension to novelty of any kind. They are, however, very well done. In the duets, which are brilliant and tolerably easy at the same time, Herr Ganz has shown excellent discretion in selecting themes from Weber and Rossini, and has manufactured a couple of dainty pot-pourris. He has also, with "Le Bonheur suprême," evinced a "bonheur suprême" in imitating (designedly?) an air sung by Maria, in the last act of La Figlia del Reggimento. Apart from this quasi-plagiarism, the piece is unquestionably attractive. The Paroles d'Amour, too, are expressed in a strain which bears so close an affinity (melodically, be it understood) with Lied No. 2, Book 4, of Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne Worte, and is, moreover, pitched in the same key (E flat), that we cannot think the resemblance wholly accidental. Apart from this quasi-plagiarism, &c. &.

"Romanza," for violoncello and pianoforte—by EDWARD THURNAM (Cocks and Co.)

Moderately difficult and extremely well written for both instruments. The romanza is prefaced by a few bars of introduction. The principal movement—"andante grazioso e cantabile"—is based on a smooth and melodious theme, calculated to display the tone of a ready violoncellist to as good advantage as the passages introduced further on are likely to show off his execution. The movement is conducted on a regular plan, and is agreeable and interesting from first to last. (By the way, have we not already noticed this piece? Our memory does not serve us; perhaps Mr. Thurnam's may be more retentive).

"Nydia," romance for the pianoforte—by HENRY W. GOODBAN (Addison, Hollier, and Lucas). The opening of this graceful little movement is much in the style of some of Henselt's romances, and might have been signed "Henselt" without any danger of its authenticity being brought into question. The theme is just as carefully worked out as it is fresh and melodious. The middle part, or episode (in the subdominant), pleases us less, although by no means devoid of merit. The return of the first subject, however, is as welcome as the sun breaking through a cloudy atmosphere, when the gloom of overhanging vapour has become a trifle monotonous. Bravo! Mr. H. W. Goodban. Write more, and prosper!

Answer with a smile, ballad—words by HENRY THURSTON THOMPSON, music by HENRY W. GOODBAN (Addison, Hollier, and Lucas). The words of this ballad are pretty and unaffected, and the music to which they are allied is precisely and appropriately in the same strain. Moreover, the ballad is a singable ballad, wherein it fulfils one of the most indispensable conditions of ballad music.

"Solitude," andante pour pianoforte—FERDINAND ALBERT JANECK, op. 9 (Ashdown and Parry). A song without words, neatly finished, graceful in feeling, and only chargeable with want of variety. An instant's pause in the triplet accompaniment, and a thought less of B minor in the middle would be a decided improvement. Nevertheless, allowing even for a little monotony, "Solitude" in the present case is by no means "bitter," but rather brief and sweet.

Digitized by Google

"The Harp that once through Tara's Halls," transcribed for the pianoforte—by JULES BRISSAC. (Ashdown and Parry.)

"Molly Astore" appears to great advantage in this transcription. She is brilliantly decked out, and yet in such a manner as not to puzzle those who wish to scrutinise and admire her charms. Bref—Mr. Jules Brissac can write music that is effective and showy without being at all difficult. The "transcription" before us is an instance in point. But why, in the name of Daniëlis of Bondael—whose house was submitted to the Chapter of Gronendael, four centuries and a half since—"transcription?" Why "transcription," when it is not "transcription" but variation?

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

ADDISON, HOLLIER, AND LUCAS.

PATTEN (W.) Six Anthems (Vocal).

ROBERT COCKS AND CO.

GLOVER (STEPHEN) "Consuelo and Haydn" (Vocal).
FILBY (W. C.) "The Mariner's Evening."
BARTON (HENRY) "The Charlotte Waltz Song." (Pianoforte).
RICHARDS (BRINLEY) "Annie o' the banks o' Dee" (ditto).
Ditto, "My mother's gentle word" (ditto).
WRIGHT (ADAM) "As you like it polka" (ditto).
WEST (G. F.) "Le Rayon du Soleil" (ditto).
RICHARDS (BRINLEY) "Warblings at eve" (Pianoforte Duet).

J. H. JEWELL.

FILBY (W. C.) "Pensées joyeuses" (Pianoforte).
Ditto, "La Volée des Oiseaux" (ditto).
Ditto, "Past, present, and future" (Vocal).
Ditto, "The infant's prayer" (ditto).

R. W. OLLIVIER.

HARVEY (R. F.) "M'apparì tutt' amor" (Pianofore).
THOMAS (HAROLD) "Dream of a far off land" (ditto).
"Wave spray" (ditto).
"Album Leaves Waltzes" (ditto).

WEBER'S CONCERTO IN E FLAT.—Miss Arabella Goddard—who, in addition to her great powers as a performer, has the happy faculty of never failing to give either beauty or novelty, in fact generally both, to the subjects she selects—performed Weber's concerto in E flat—a work less known than some, but equally possessing the charms of romance, brilliancy, and tenderness, with almost every one of Weber's compositions. Too high praise cannot be given to her pure and delicate execution of each movement of this charming work, so expressive, as well in its most brilliant as in its most tender passages, and marked in each by the most touching grace and tenderness, every phrase of which was perfectly rendered by the executant.—Morning Herald.

ITALIAN FREEDOM AND ITALIAN ART.—The prospectus of the Royal Italian Opera gives us little to expect in the way of new operas. Indeed one only is promised—the latest production of Verdi—Il Ballo in Maschera, which, during the past year, has had considerable success in Italy. Verdi, the last of the Italian dramatic composers, has sacrificed his vocation on the altar of politics. Having become an ardent liberal and a Sardinian deputy, he has, it is said, abandoned the musical stage, and has left no successor. Will Italian freedom revive Italian art? Let us hope it may: and in the mean time we have glorious and abundant works of Italian art to fall back upon, could our theatrical impresarii only be induced to do so. How much better it would be than the present practice of supplying the opera stage with French and German pieces done into Italian!—Daily News.

THE SISTERS MARCHISIO.—These young ladies whose duet singing is of such remarkable merit as to have attained an extraordinary continental celebrity, will not visit London during the ensuing season. Several "enterprising entrepreneurs" have placed the most tempting offers before them, but their engagements in the principal cities of France are so numerous that the Demoiselles Marchisio have been forced to decline all negotiations.

NOTHING LIKE LEARNING.—"What a lot of money Mounseer Scribe made by his plays," said the Wiscount to Sir Plymouth Sound. "He didn't make it by his plays," replied the member for Brighton; "he says in his motto Inde Fortuna, which means that he made his fortune in Indy." "Oh!" said the Wiscount.—Punch.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

March 21, 1861.

I MENTIONED in my last a new opera buffa in one act at the Théâtre Lyrique, called Les Deux Cadis, of which all I stated was that it had been perfectly successful. I propose now to trace you a little sketch of the piece, which is sufficiently amusing, and has given occasion for a promising début on the part of the composer, M. Ymbert. The two Cadis, to whom the title refers, are two of the most unmitigated scoundrels that even Eastern civilisation could produce, devoting their leisure evenings, after the fatigue of taking bribes all day in the discharge of their magisterial duties, to the more direct robbery of the Caliph's lieges on the highways in the environs of Bagdad. Unfortunately a traveller, whom they had stript in the most careful way of every valuable thing about him, turns out to be the son of the Grand Vizier. It so happens also that the Prince, thus travelling incognito, has fallen in love with the daughter of one of these Cadis, Bakbarok by name, to whom he presents himself the next day in the character of a ruined fisherman, desirous to become his slave. Having thus got a footing in the household of one Cadi, he presents them both with a missive, sealed with the imperial signet, commanding them forthwith to discover the robbers who had stript the Grand Vizier's son. In a panic, they dress up the slave in the rich spoils of their victim, pretending to be loading him with gifts. He is then arrested and condemned to death by the Cadis, on the strength of his possession of the stolen property, when he reveals his identity by the usual sign—a birth-mark on his left arm. The Cadis believe their last hour has come, but the marriage of the prince with Bakbarok's daughter settles everything amicably, and the curtain descends, leaving a fixed impression, that if the two Cadis have escaped the rope this time, it is only that it may be more surely and tightly fastened round their necks hereafter. There has also been a pleasant trifle produced at the Bouffes Parisiens, called La Servante de Nicolas, the music of which is by M. Erlanger, and the words by MM. Desarres and Nuitter. Nicolas is a peasant, whose uncle has left him his property, as is supposed, on condition he should not marry. Of course nobody will marry the luckless youth, who, in despair, espouses his own servant. It is then discovered that a codicil to the will adds that the property is to go to whomsover Nicolas shall marry, as it will be certain that she has not become his wife out of interest. The music is generally graceful and pleasing, and sometimes original. Mad. Chabert, as the servant, is a pattern for the class which, to all appearance, has so much deteriorated of late. Before quiting the lyrical theatres I have to announce the forthcoming production, at the Théâtre Lyrique, of a new opera by M. Reyer, in three acts and six tableaux, entitled La Statue. Next week Gil Blas will be revived, and Mlle. Girard will appear in the principal part. Orphée will also be revived for a few nights, with Mad. Pauline Viardot. The Val d'Andorre will be unavoidably interrupted in its most successful run in consequence of engagements contracted by the principal performers.

A report has been published in the Moniteur, drawn up by M. Hiltorf, a member of the Institute, giving the result of the labours of the jury charged with examining the plans submitted by the competing architects for a new Opera House. The report concludes thus:—"Having reached the term of their mission, the jury regret that their desire to award the grand prize could not be realised, and express their hope that a competition may be opened among the authors of the five best designs, to be rewarded by the execution of the building. In expressing this wish the committee believe they are ensuring the justice of the final choice, and leading to the realisation of the hope that Paris will possess an Opera House worthy of the capital of France." I alluded in my last to an application made by M. Lindau, one of the translators of the book of Tannhäuser, to have his name printed in the bills. It is now definitively decided that no other name than that of Herr Wagner as sole author of the music and poem of Tannhäuser shall so appear. Now that the German bard's great work has, after the excessive pother made about it, turned out a ridiculous fiasco, no one will regret this decision. The same evening that Tannhäuser was produced, Henri Herz had fixed on for his grand concert, and the salle in the Rue Victoire exhibited no signs on the occasion of a powerful attraction in another direction. The long-famed pianist was assisted by Mad. Grisi, Signor Badiali, and M. Servais, erewhile crowned in the back office of a French musical journal, "Emperor of the Violoncello." But why this carnival joke should survive Shrove-Tuesday I cannot divine. M. Servais must have enemies. But to our old friend, Henri Herz; he bravely acquitted himself of his lion's share in the programme, and presented his well-ripened artistic skill in every variety of light—Grand Concerto—a new one of his own with orchestra and chorus; Reverie; Turantella—eke new, Grand Sonata; Clochette; the entire and complete panoply of a brave knight of the grand piano. So much for the music of the present; and if it defy ostentatiously fearless the music of the future, let us record that it paid loyal homage to that of the past by the execution of the overture to Don Giovanni. Paris is at this moment as full of fierce lions as an Indian jungle. "They are of the species, leo claviferieris or key-smiting lion, a very terrible and obscene beast, striking terror in them that behold or hear him afar off, and raising in the breast likewise many dolorous pangs. I have an aguish fear of them, a quotidian tremor, for they be foul beastes every one and fearful. With their fore paws, which they do handle very swift to the right and to the left and crosswise, they do fear and maul, pound and pash their prey that it is an agony to see and to hear. Great gouts of sweat they do scatter the while from their fronts and chaps, humecting the earth far around as a dog that quitteth the water, their eyes very fiery and rolling. The bloudy arena of the Romans had no spectacle more appalling. I am told they have all come of one stock, an ould lion that hath retired him to the Black Forest or thereabout, where he is kept in a great cave for the sport of a prince and many ladies of his court. Fanby or Franz I think they classed him, and sure he hath many whelps issued of his loins, and marked so with his fell likeness, that he might vainly deny them his. The chief mark or feature of this prowling and savage beast is his mane, or as some do call it Etude Pathétique, composed of many horned hairs matted hideously one within another, which he doth shake portentously, filling the air with piteous sounds. The next mark or feature is his tail, long, and twisted curiously, with a frisking mesh at the end thereof, and this some do call Tarantella, and it is used by them with many quick lashes, as a cow doth driving the flies from her hide, but the lashes be quicker, so that it is scarce possible to see the motives thereof, albeit they do miss many flies, they seem to aim at which is called 'dropping of notes.' When they have very full manes and long tails and wag these quickly, they are very dangerous. So that has come to be a cant saying, 'Doth he wag his tail? Then I am a lost man!' From divers foreign countries have these roaming and fearful quadrupeds — or quadrumanes, I should say, for their two hands be equal to any four in strength and valliance — assembled in this fair citie. Exempli gratiâ, one very fierce and eke foul out of Germânia, hight Hans de Bulow — another out of Italia, hight Perelli, a most shaggy and obscene beast, right horrid to behold and hear his mad lashings — another native unto the French soil, Emile Forgues, his name with a most terrible mane (Etude Pathétique), and a tail (tarantella) whereof no end,—and many more there be no less wild and voracious, (croque-notes) which it were tedious to enumerate, and little profitable." Thus far the true and faithful chronicler Sir Kay de la Plume-mal-taille.

Digitized by Google

I learn from a German paper that Count Hans Harrach has offered two prizes, of 600 florins each, for two operas in two acts, and two more prizes of the value of 200 florins for the texts thereunto requisite, in the Tscheque language. What is the Tscheque language? I will offer a prize (my blank tscheque on Aldgate pump) to any one who will answer this. A most persuasive language the Tscheque, I opine. And I know many tongues (ladies') which the Tscheque would suit indifferently well. But to these operas. One is to be based on a historical subject, and the other on the ordinary life of the Sclavonian people either in Bohemia, Moravia, or Silesia. Verdi's latest production, Un Ballo in Maschera, is on the grand tour. It was lately played at Madrid, and the cast included the following artists: Mads. Julienne Dejean, De Meric, Lablache, and Sarolta, and MM. Fraschilli and Geraldini—all of whom were selected by Verdi himself, for the performance of his work. A Spanish paper speaks in the warmest terms of Mad. Dejean, and of Fraschilli and Geraldini, and represents the lady to have exhibited an amount of dramatic power and entraînement which produced a startling effect. It must be remembered, however, that a few degrees of latitude greatly modify æsthetical impressions. A pair of twin stars have dawned of late over the musical horizon—the brother songsters Lyonnet, of whom the Belgian papers recount marvellous things, in the execution of that peculiar natural product, the chansonnette, which is their spécialité. The chansonnette is not to me an admirable thing. It bears the same relation to a chanson that a chemisette does to a chemise. It is only half a song — an undeveloped namby-pambyism, and makes up for deficient substance by a frill of outrageous affectation. I love not such songlets, and will avoid the Lyon-nets (little lions), who warble them, warble they them ever so sweetly.

M. B. Damcke—the Beethoven Damcke of critical notoriety, who took part in the Galitzin controversy concerning the three Galitzin posthumous quartets—is now in Paris, and lately convoked an assembly of musicians, critics, and amateurs to hear his own productions. Critics are so often open to the charge of not being producers, that when one bears his back to the lash he has wielded with frequency and effect, there is sure to be no lack of attention to the fact. Well, M. Damcke has passed the ordeal triumphantly. His music is pronounced to be excellent, simple, impressive, and even grand, marked by pure and sweet melody, and entirely free from any species of affectation. A thorough pianist in art, all feats of skill, all thundering chords and lightning variations are scrupulously omitted.

The first volume of the correspondence of Felix Bartholdy Mendelssohn, reaching from 1830 to 1832, is announced for speedy publication. These letters are dated from France, Italy and England, and much curiosity, both in the literary and artistic world, is felt to read the unaffected effusions of the heart and mind of this great and excellent man. We fear, however, much disappointment will be the result, not because the thoughts and opinions of that large and highly-cultured intellect are likely to fall below the high standard his renown must cause him to be judged by, but because these letters will have undergone, there can be little doubt, such a decimatory and castratory process at the hands of his morbidly timid family—that they will be reduced to mere caput mortuum—all the life and spirit of them which would consist in his free judgments and appreciations of contemporary artists carefully eliminated. Would that he had appointed a literary and musical executor out of this nest of sensitive plants!

I conclude with a statement of the gross receipts of all places of entertainment during the month of February last past: —

Imporial theatres subsidised . . .	493,563fr. 72c.
Second-rate theatres for vaudeville and light performances	964,048fr. 95c.
Concerts, dramatic concerts, café-concerts, balls, ...	277,868fr. 95c.
Various exhibitions	15,880fr. 95c.
Total	1,751,361fr. 62c.

About 70,000*l*. The receipts of the Opéra Comique on Thursday in mi-carême amounted to 6,700fr., or 268*l*. The attraction was Auber's new opera, La Circassienne.

Lo! Another lion from the Hyrcanian forests—Alfred Jaell. To be seen alive, at Erard's concert room, March the 26th. Walk in! walk in! Ave Imperator! ne réveillez pas le lion qui dort. Wake not the sleeping Jael, rather call for Sisera, otherwise it will be Jael and Sisera with a vengeance!—Yours, Daniel in the Lion's Den.

Princess's Theatre.—Mr. Augustus Harris, who, as lessee and manager of the Princess's Theatre, has deservedly gained the support of the public and the estimation of his professional friends, announces his benefit for this evening. The entertainments will be selected from all that has proved most attractive during his management, and comprise the talents of the most popular members of his company.

Digitized by Google

"TANNHAUSER" IN PARIS.*

IMPRIMIS:—On the approach of Passion Week, considering it a duty to place ourselves in a state of grace before Tannhäuser, we demanded absolution for all we might have said, written, or thought, about the Music of the Future; in a word, we gave full scope to piety, and concluded an armistice with what was repulsive to us. Nay, the better to report the impression produced on the audience generally, and ourselves in particular, we felt bound to entrust the analysis of the score to a strictly musical pen, which will examine every single piece, or, rather, recitative, down to the slightest details of the score. This analysis will form the basis of a second article. Our colleague, Paul Bernard, has consented to undertake the delicate and laborious task. Thus, free from anxiety, we entered the theatre with the resolution of yielding not only to our own impressions but also to those of our neighbours. We belong to those who, in matters of art, do not exclude impulse, and, without absolutely sacrificing at the shrine of mere vulgar popularity, protest against music especially intended to flatter the egotism of a few individuals of ethereal or metaphysical temperament, who indulge in the strange pretension of seeing and appreciating, half a century in advance, that which, according to their belief, our grandchildren will be compelled to admire. In our opinion, the essence of music consists in the charm and sentiment of melody, which is intimately connected with harmony, the one, indeed, being inseparable from the other. If the hearer is neither pleased nor moved to the heart, the composer has lost his cause; he may dazzle, surprise, and even interest, but without securing a Future for his music. Now, let us ask the audience present at the Opera, on Wednesday last, whether they were once really moved during the evening? In the absence of that profound emotion which seizes an entire assembly, were they charmed by any new and striking trait of melody, or harmony, or both?—by any uncommon effect of instrumentation?—by any fresh rhythmical construction? Assuredly no. To speak plainly, they were over-excited by an orchestration invariably noisy, by laboured and interminable dissonances; by complications without end as without evident purpose, by superfluous conglomeration of details, by monotonous abuse of the first string of the fiddles, and a superabundance of recitative, tending to produce a dangerous state of torpitude among the audience.

"I have survived it!" exclaimed a robust and well-known feuilletoniste, at the end of the last grand rehearsal; how many intrepid dilettanti and strong-minded women were able to say as much after the first performance! And yet what compensation to the eye—a compensation of which the mind, the heart, and the ear stood equally in need—was offered by the appearance of the house; by the boxes, which wore a festive air; by the presence of the Emperor and that of the entire diplomatic body, and by the eagerness of the notable persons from all parts who had come to witness the performance. How magnificent, too, was the mise-en-scène; what marvels were lavished upon the Music of the Future, by the genius of contemporary art! Assuredly, Herr Wagner will not complain of want of hospitality on the part of the Imperial Academy of Music. If it is impossible for him to be equally satisfied with the public, the reason is to be found in causes inherent to the system of which he believes himself to be the messiah. A gran maestro recently said to him, "You are very fortunate in being able to write new music; may the public be with you! If they declare against you, be a martyr; viewed in a proper light, the death of a martyr is both enviable and glorious!"

Now, in the opinion of the public, the author of Tannhäuser is "going in" for martyrdom. It is evident to every one that the talent, the lofty character, and the broad style of certain pages of the work, indicate the hand of a great musician (!); that the general plan of the story declares both a thinker and a poet; but that the musician, the thinker, and the poet have come to an understanding among themselves to perpetrate a homily, sacrificing form to matter, matter to form, to develop superabundantly the recitatives of Gluck, without the concise and profoundly dramatic genius of their creator!

Thus much for the vocal part. With regard to the orchestration, it was unanimously condemned, from box to box and from stall to stall—as the simultaneous negation of temperance, charm and harmonious effect—an avalanche of notes, descending tediously and pitilessly on the musical desert of Herr Wagner's background. The "March of the Knights" in the first act, the "Chorus of Pilgrims," the andante of the septet, and the first part of the finale to the second act, are equally grand and beautiful (!); but by what title are they found in Tannhäuser, unless as irrefutable protests against the work in its entirety! This is what the public failed to understand, while greeting, in too reserved a manner, the self-condemnation of the offender. Is not the march a worthy sister of the marches in the Prophète, the Juive, and Sémiramis? Is not the andante a fragment that Bellini and Donizetti might have signed, allotting to the singers what Herr Wagner has allotted to the violins? Is not the "Chorus of Pilgrims," with its characteristic accompaniment, a page from the genius of Weber? Only Weber would have stopped in time; he would never have developed, to satiety, under every shape, and during three eternal acts, a mere formula of accompaniment—no matter how beautiful—which in the very overture, is as indefinitely prolonged, as the transatlantic cable itself—that gigantic hyphen between the Old and New Worlds.

To sum up our impressions, or, rather, the impressions of the public: while doing justice—often inwardly, it is true—to the talent of the author of Tannhäuser, even to the genius imprinted upon certain pages, they condemned by their silence, their exclamations, their laughter, and occasionally by their hisses, the excess of a system, of which Tannhäuser is no more than the modified, or, rather, nascent expression—if we go back to the origin of the movement in Germany. Had the audience preserved an unbroken silence throughout the opera, as they did during the first act, they would have adopted a still more dignified course. But how was it possible to endure philosophically the bravos of a claque, whose services, it was reported, had been nobly declined? This led to antagonistic demonstrations from the impartial listeners, which, it must be confessed, were much to be regretted.

From all that occurred, it may be concluded that Paris, the capital of the arts, whatever Germany and Italy may think (!) is resolved not to follow dreamers and atheists in their so-called discoveries: that, definitively, all who possess a feeling and taste for music, without refusing to acknowledge the new conquests of real genius, are by no means ready to disown the past, or to abandon recognised masterpieces, to ignore their Raphaels, Michael Angelos, and Rubens, for the sake of an imaginary something, which is to delight a century hence, but is intolerable now.

To conclude with a word or two about the performers. Mlle. Marie Sax, Mad. Tedesco, MM. Morelli, Cazaux, and Niemann (the titular accomplice of Herr Richard Wagner), may fairly exclaim, "All is lost, except honour!" They could not possibly have exhibited more conscientious resignation in fulfilling the ungrateful task that devolved upon them. It was really worth while to see these intrepid mariners avoiding, to the best of their power, the rocks so plenteously studded about the Ocean of Recitative; to behold them steering, without a compass, through inextricable concerted pieces, and braving unexpected squalls of orchestration, even in the progress of the most insignificant details. Mlle. Sax is an Elizabeth without a flaw, and worthy, in all respects, of a better lot. Mad. Tedesco was a superb Venus, substantial to behold; the eye was satisfied, but that was all. M. Cazaux, as the Landgraf Hermann, gave full scope to his paternal notes. M. Morelli sang the character of Wolfram like an Italian de bonne source; while M. Niemann responded, like a stalwart Teuton as he is, disturbed, however, by occasional qualms of home-sickness. Great care should be taken in the transplantation of certain artists. Acclimatisation is in frequent instances impossible. M. Niemann is an example in point. His face is expressive and distingué, but monotonous; his voice, although some of the notes are not deficient in dramatic power, is marked by the same character of monotony; in a word, we regret our inability to recognise in him those qualities which should go to make up the standard of our first lyric theatre. M. Niemann appears to ignore the art of singing just as Herr Wagner disowns that of form and melody in music.

We are assured, however, that the German tenor enjoys a high

* Translated and abridged from Le Ménéstrel.

Digitized by Google

reputation on the other side of the Rhine. But were there not equally flattering reports of Tannhäuser itself, which has, nevertheless, been condemned at more than one theatre in Germany, before receiving its "quietus" in Paris?

We have still the orchestra and chorus to speak of. Their admirable discipline reflected the highest credit on MM. Dietsch and Victor Massé, conjointly with M. Vauthrot, who had devoted the greatest care to the vocal department. While M. Dietsch found among his friends some who were opposed to his intention of retaining at any price the conductor's bâton, advisers equally well intentioned reproached Herr Wagner with desiring to burn his ships without reserving for himself the means of retreat. Besides, would it have been prudent to brave in person unfavourable demonstrations directed only against the work, its weaknesses, its excesses, representing, in a word, the constituent elements of what every one reasonably styles the system of the Music of the Future? We are well aware that Herr Richard Wagner takes exception to this denomination of his apostleship; but how are we to designate music so far beyond the intelligence of contemporary French musicians, music destined, according to its disciples, to mark a new era —at some late period, as far off, let us hope, as possible?

What is said to-day by certain circles even in Paris, and what will be said to-morrow in Germany?—"Tannhäuser has not been understood by the Parisians. It has met with the same fate as Beethoven's symphonies.* Now it is against this enormous piece of pretension that Paris protests and is bound to protest. We understood what was comprehensible in Tannhäuser; what we have unreservedly condemned, both for the present and the future, is the detestable system it inculcates—a system which would lead to nothing less than the complete negation of that which has hitherto obtained unanimous acceptance as music.

J. L. Heugel.

P.S.—We have just been informed that the second representation of Tannhäuser has been postponed with the object of affording the orchestra and singers time to become acquainted with the "cuts" and modifications Herr Richard Wagner proposes making. Whatever sentiment may have induced such concessions on his part, the public will thank him, and appreciate all the better the real beauties of the work.

Musical Services.—"Now when liturgies were all in all the happiness of the ancient Church, and the excellency of its pastors in preaching and praying being turned by the lamentable degeneracy of the following ages into chanting and reading, Origen says, the worship of God was fearfully corrupted: the native plainness and simplicity of it, most amicable to God and all that are like him, was vitiated and defaced with the paint and patches of bold and wanton fancies. . . . There was more compliance with the heathen than with the Scripture; and so the Church was far from being, as Origen says, what God, in sending Christ and the Gospel, designed them to be, congregations opposite to the assemblies of the superstitious, &c. The Christian worship was made more ceremonious than that of the Jews, and clogged with more batches of thraldom, whereby the state of Christians was rendered far more intolerable than theirs under the law."—Clarkson on Liturgies, 1689. In 1536 "A protest was addressed to Henry VIII. from the clergy of the Lower House against 'the faults and abuses of religion,' in which it is set forth that 'singing and saying of mass, at matins or evensong, is but rorying, howling, whystling, conjuring, and joseling.'"—Burney's Hist. of Music, iii. p. 2. This was before the Reformation. For Burnett's opinion see Phases of Convocation, p. 125.—P.

Mr. George Collins, our accomplished violoncellist, and M. Rémusat, flautist to the Queen, have been giving a series of concerts on the Continent. At Pau, Bordeaux, and Toulouse, we understand Mr. Collins created quite a sensation by his admirable performances.

* It was the difficult execution of Beethoven's symphonies, at a period when the orchestra of the Conservatory was far from being what it now is, which rendered time indispensable to place these immortal works fairly before the public. But their success has been decided, without having ought to do with the fogs and vapours of the "Future."

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(From a Correspondent.)

After having appeared, in the capacity of conductor and pianist, at his first concert exclusively as the interpreter of the Lisztian muse, Herr Carl Tausig gave a second concert, at which he figured merely as a pianist. Following a plan now very popular and frequently adopted, he gave his programme a historical character by commencing with Sebastian Bach, and concluding with — Liszt. (!) The selection of the pieces played by Herr Tausig does not prove that he has been inspired by the more essential qualities of the great masters — I allude to Bach and Beethoven — for neither Bach's organ-fugue (in B minor, arranged by Liszt for the pianoforte), nor Beethoven's three and thirty variations (Op. 36), properly belong to the number of those works which are stamped with the more profound and individual genius of the masters. To make manifest, as one of the initiated, their great qualities to the masses, a man must first have his artistic taste excited. It appears, however, that Herr Tausig has taken up his position with regard to art, with all the unsatisfactory, unfeeling abjectivity of the genuine virtuoso, while his enthusiasm for Liszt excludes, according to universal psychological laws, all possibility of anything like a deep feeling for real art. Besides the above-named pieces, Herr Tausig played Weber's Polonaise in E flat major (Op. 21), a waltz by Chopin, and Liszt's fantasia on Don Juan. All these compositions he gave without book, (for, in the virtuoso-like training of his memory, he is not behind his master Liszt, or his rival Bülow), with iron calm, and without the slightest indication of inward emotion. It is very true that this force of memory, and this easy, sure mastery over the technical material afford indisputable testimony of energy, and are qualities which involuntarily extort appreciation, but on those who are accustomed to listen for the beating of the warm pulse of feeling, and who wish to see the inward fire of passion "purified," as the Recensionen expresses it, "into an ideal flame, shooting heavenwards," an artist playing in this fashion, and believing that he fulfils all the requirements of art if he simply preserves due light and shade in the mere technical details, produces the effect of an automaton, the outward artistic arrangements of which, and the precision with which the various portions work together, we are, indeed, compelled to admire, but whose appearance of life rather frightens and repels than delights and attracts. Similar sentiments seemed to be entertained by the public, whose attendance, by the way, was not at all numerous, for, without any injustice being shown towards the real merits of the concert-giver, a most unmistakable feeling of coolness and want of enthusiasm reigned throughout the room the whole evening. It is true that I did not wait to hear the "Don Juan fantasia," and cannot say, therefore, whether the audience allowed themselves to be taken in by the wild, frantic system of storming up and down the keys, a system of which Herr Tausig had previously shown himself a consummate master. One might have supposed that Liszt, and consequently his pupils and admirers, would not, at the present day, acknowledge this style of his productive muse, seeing that it has long since been condemned by every educated judge; but not only Herr Tausig, even Liszt himself, by his recently-published fantasia on themes from Ernani and Il Trovatore, prove the contrary. "On revient toujours à ses premières amours," and everything depends upon "the system of demonstrating by uninterrupted action what our Ideal is."

Paille-en-cu.

Crystal Palace.—The Glee and Madrigal Union terminated their engagement yesterday. The performances were varied each day during the week, Thursday's being specially selected from the songs of Shakspeare.

Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir.—The third Concert took place on Thursday evening, and attracted a very large attendance. The selection was one of the best ever given by the choir, and the audience were so pleased with the performance throughout, that they seemed desirous of having every piece over again. Mr. Leslie, however, was not anxious to accede to their request in every instance, but could not always resist their importunities. The following were repeated:—Webbe's glee, "Mighty conqueror;" Mr. Walter Macfarren's part song, "Love's heigh-ho;" Mr. Leslie's part song, "When the shades of eve;" Mendelssohn's 43rd Psalm, "Judge me, O Lord;" and Reay's part song, "Dawn of day." Mendelssohn's magnificent setting of the 43rd Psalm, and Webbe's exciting glee were splendid performances, which indeed the choir itself never surpassed. The other pieces worthy of special mention were Morley's madrigal, "Thus saith my dainty darling;" Wilbye's madrigal, "Flora gave the fairest flow'rs;" Mr. Leslie's part song for male voices, "Evening;" and Bishop's "Chough and crow," and "Tramp chorus." The programme was varied by two instrumental performances—Moschele's duet, "Hommage à Handel," executed by Miss M. A. Walsh and Miss C. Thomson, and an arrangement of an air by Weber, for pianoforte and concertino, by Messrs. J. G. Callcott and John C. Ward—which, notwithstanding their being well performed, did not appear to create any great sensation. The enthusiasm was all absorbed in the performance of the choir. Mr. Henry Leslie's new cantata, Holyrood, which was produced with so much success at the first concert, will be repeated at the fourth concert, on the 5th of April.

Digitized by Google

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE SIXTEENTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON

(57TH CONCERT IN ST. JAMES'S HALL)

WILL TAKE PLACE

ON MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 8, 1861,

The Programme, Vocal and Instrumental, will again be selected from the Works of

VARIOUS COMPOSERS.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF

MR. CHARLES HALLE.

Tenth Appearance of M. VIEUXTEMPS.

Pianist:—M. CHARLES HALLE.

Violoncellist:—Signor PIATTI.

Vocalists:

Miss BANKS.

AND

Mr. SIMS REEVES

Conductor — MR. BENEDICT.

For full Particulars, see PROGRAMME.

Front Sofa Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Sofa Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Unreserved Seats, 1s. Tickets of Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street; Cramer, Beale, and Chappell, 201 Regent Street; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48 Cheapside; Mr. Austin, at St. James's Hall; and of the principal musicsellers.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—The Last Night of this Season.—THIS EVENING, the new and successful Drama, in five parts, arranged by C. J. MATHEWS, Esq., entitled THE SAVANNAH. Principal characters by Messrs. CHARLES MATHEWS, ROBERT ROXBY, RYDER, G. HONEY, MCLEAN, FARRELL, SPENCER, MELLON, Mrs CHARLES MATHEWS, Mrs. DOWTON, and Miss THIRLWALL. After which, the new Vaudeville, entitled A SMACK FOR A SMACK. Fanchette, Mlle. ALDINA DI RHONA; John Trot, Mr W. TEMPLETON. To conclude with the grand Comic Ballet entitled LE ROI DES PIERROTS; La Danse des Pierrots executed by Sixty Coryphées and Mlle. Albina di Rhona. Box office open daily from 10 till 5, under the direction of Mr. C. Nugent. Doors open at half-past 6; to commence at 7.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.—Lessee Mr. E. T. SMITH.—THE AMBER WITCH.—In consequence of the unprecedented success of Mr. Vincent Wallace's chef-d'œuvre, the Lessee, by the advice of numerous patrons and subscribers, and in order that the successful run of this magnificent Opera may not be interrupted, has arranged for its reproduction at the above theatre, on a scale of completeness and excellence on Easter Monday, April 1, 1861.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.—Mr. GYE has the honour to announce that the Opera Season of 1861 will commence on TUESDAY, April 2. On the Opening Night will be performed Meyerbeer's Grand Opera,

LE PROPHETE.

The Programme, with full particulars, may be had at the Box Office, under the Portico of the Theatre.

NOTICES.

TO ADVERTISERS.—Advertisers are informed, that for the future the Advertising Agency of the THE MUSICAL WORLD is established at the Magazine of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements can be received as late as Three o'Clock P.M., on Fridays—but not later. Payment on delivery.

Terms { Three lines and under ... ... 2s. 6d. / Every additional 10 words ... ... 6d.

TO PUBLISHERS AND COMPOSERS.—All Music for Review in THE MUSICAL WORLD must henceforward be forwarded to the Editor, care of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street. A List of every Piece sent for Review will appear on the Saturday following in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

TO CONCERT GIVERS.—No Benefit-Concert, or Musical Performance, except of general interest, unless previously Advertised, can be reported in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, MARCH 23, 1861.

THAT the highest respect should be paid, and the deepest sympathy exhibited, on the death of a member of the Royal Family, more especially of one so nearly and dearly connected with Her Majesty as the Duchess of Kent, and so universally respected and beloved for her private virtues, none will deny. The mother of our Queen, and the amiable and benevolent lady who commanded our love and veneration while living, demands our sorrow when dead. No one can withhold his condolence, or refuse to pay a tribute to so much worth. But there is a point at which even regret and reverence stop, and when injury and wrong commence. The closing of the theatres on Saturday night, by order of the Lord Chamberlain, as a mark of respect to the memory of the Duchess of Kent, who died that day, may be defended on precedent, and on precedent alone. It has been the case from time immemorial, and his lordship only fulfilled the duties of his office in enforcing the shutting up of playhouses on the occasion of a royal demise. It is the law of the office, and must be carried out perforce. Red tape and routine take the form of a statute, and a royal edict is the result. Nevertheless, having little faith in red tape, we ask why should theatrical places of amusement be interdicted from opening their doors, and taverns, public-houses, billiard-rooms, and cafés be allowed their usual licence? Is hearing an opera or a tragedy more directly opposed to that mental state which best consorts with mourning than gin-drinking, chess, or a game at pyramids? Is an overture more suggestive of levity than a hand at skittles, or a cavatina more indecorous than a wager at horse-racing? Let his lordship, the Chamberlain, propound these questions to his head clerk, and write down the answers in his common-place book. Our wisdom to a beggarly denier the clerk's responses would be inimical to the law or practice.

The closing of the theatres last Saturday constitutes an unmistakeable grievance—a grievance of a special kind indeed, to the case of the directors of Her Majesty's Theatre and the Royal English Opera, since at both theatres it was the last night of the season, and at both very large attendances were confidently expected. Every place, we are informed, was secured at Her Majesty's Theatre, and in all probability the performance would have realised the highest receipts of the year. No doubt Mr. E. T. Smith is a loyal man—right loyal, we may say; but we cannot believe that the direct loss of three or four hundred pounds, in consequence of the order of the Lord Chamberlain, would have the effect of inducing him to mourn for anybody but himself. And, indeed, in this particular case, we can hardly imagine a greater hardship. The manager of Her Majesty's Theatre has struggled hard to keep English Opera on its legs during the past season, and, but for certain obstructions and drawbacks, would, doubtless, have secured an eminent success. A "bumper-night" would have been a godsend, and upon this he confidently reckoned the last night of the season. At the very moment, however, of opening the theatre, with carriages and cabs blocking up every access, comes from the Lord Chamberlain's office a prohibitory notice against any performance that evening, on pain of &c., &c., &c. The visitors are disappointed—but that's not much; the first tenor and soprano are mulcted of large salaries—that's a good deal; and Mr. Smith just misses the chance of replenishing the coffers of the treasury. Of course the same thing happened at Covent Garden, the circumstances being precisely similar; and Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison were in no less a mood than the impresario of Her Majesty's Theatre to pour out their souls in loyal grieving.

Digitized by Google

The greatest hardship falls on the small actors, the ballet-dancers, carpenters, scene-shifters, and money-takers, all of whom are penalised in the sixth of a week's salary, some of them, no doubt, thereby deprived of their Sunday's dinner. Is this a proper method of awakening tender regrets for the departed; or, if prayers can avail, of provoking blessings from multitudinous tongues? Will it not rather prove the means of turning the milk of kindness into gall? Thousands, by this order of the Lord Chamberlain, have been deprived of their daily bread. It such a course politic?

Either abrogate the custom altogether; or, if government prefer to prolong it, let it be paid for. If theatres are to be closed on certain occasions let managers send in their bills. The process would be unattended with difficulty. No one will be dissatisfied; and universal mourning will be none the less sincere. R.

THE one hundred and twenty-third anniversary festival of the Royal Society of Musicians, as usual, assumed the shape of a substantial dinner at Freemason's Hall, to which about 150 musicians and patrons of music sat down. The President on this occasion was the Hon. F. H. F. Berkeley, M.P., who, in proposing the toast of the evening, "Prosperity to the Royal Society of Musicians," adverted to a multitude of topics more or less connected with the subject immediately under consideration, and made one of the lengthiest speeches to which we ever listened at a convivial and non-political meeting, and (a thing unprecedented) absolutely read a petition which had been committed to him for presentation in the House of Commons. Nevertheless, although at the commencement of his speech he drew an unfavourable comparison between himself and Mr. Charles Dickens (the President of last year), the Hon. Mr. Berkeley at first proved that he had more to say about things in general, if not about the Royal Society of Musicians, than his eminent predecessor; and went through his task with such evident earnestness that he found willing hearers, was frequently interrupted by manifestations of approval, and resumed his seat amid loud and unanimous plaudits from the whole assembly. The toast of "The President of the day," proposed by Mr. Wyld, M.P., took the form of an elaborate panegyric (of which Dibdin, the "sailor's poet," came in, by the way, for a large share), and was acknowledged with becoming brevity. The conventional toasts, loyal and patriotic, were in almost every instance illustrated by remarks from the President, whose eloquence seemed to gush unimpeded from an inexhaustible fountain. The main point, however, was to ascertain whether the committee of management in the interval between the present and the last festival had been efficiently performing its duties to the society; and that this was satisfactorily elicited may be gathered from the subjoined general statement of receipts and expenditure from Jan. 1st, to Dec. 31st, 1860:—

RECEIVED.	£.	s.	d.
Interest of stock, ground-rent, &c.	1837	9	0
Honorary life and annual subscriptions	215	5	0
Professional members' subscriptions and premiums	578	15	0
Donations, profit of dinner, &c.	81	11	0
	£2713	0	0

EXPENDED.
In monthly payments to aged musicians, widows, and orphans	£2187	1	10
Temporary relief and funerals	174	6	6
Premiums with apprentices, and schooling	44	15	0
Gratuities	30	0	0
Benefactions to aged claimants; also, to indigent musicians, widows, &c., having no claim on the institution	33	0	0
Officers' salaries	160	0	0
Repairs	41	19	0
Printing, incidents, &c. (including loss on concert)
	£2671	2	4

STANLEY LUCAS, Secretary, 210, Regent-street, W.

Between the first and second parts of the musical entertainment, a list of new contributions was read aloud, in conformity with established usage, by Mr. G. F. Anderson, honorary treasurer. Some of these were on a liberal scale, and the sum total was more than respectable; so that the general aspect of affairs may be appropriately represented as couleur de rose.

The music was of the best quality. The order of proceeding was, as usual, grace before dinner by the Rev. J. C. Rowden, chaplain to the society; "Non nobis Domine" after dinner, by a company of practised singers (all members, of course); after "The Queen" the National Anthem; and between every two of the succeeding toasts music, vocal or instrumental. Miss Augusta Thomson introduced a specimen from MM. Scribe and Auber's last new opera, La Circassienne—a sparkling bravura ("Pouvoir du chant"); Miss Banks gave "The Bailiff's Daughter of Islington," one of the most genuine ballads in Mr. W. Chappell's Music of the Olden Time; Mad. Reider sang Paer's variations on "La biondina in gondoletta;" Miss Roden gave "Home, sweet home;" two of the best English glees (by Horsley and Bishop), as well as a part song to words by Longfellow (by Mr. T. Coward), were sung by members of the society; some of Mendelssohn's part songs were executed by a band of wind instruments, under the direction of Mr. Lazarus; M. Vieuxtemps, the distinguished violinist (accompanied by Mad. Vieuxtemps on the pianoforte), performed his brilliant fantasia on themes from Verdi's Lombardi; Miss Arabella Goddard played Benedict's popular fantasia on "Where the bee sucks," and being compelled to return to the instrument, gave the same composer's no less attractive "Albion," founded upon "Pray Goody," and "Come if you dare," which appearing directly after the allusions to Dibdin and English national music, contained in the speech of Mr. Wyld, M.P., and the reply of the President, were agreeably àpropos. All these performances, included in the first part of the concert, were heard with unequivocal satisfaction, and in several instances elicited uproarious applause. In the second part there was a selection from Fra Diavolo (for the wind band); a duet for the Messrs. Wells; a glee, by the Earl of Mornington, and a madrigal by W. Beale. Mr. W. Cusins accompanied the vocal solos, and Mr. T. Coward the glees, so that the visitors had no reason to complain of the musical part of the entertainment provided for them by the indefatigable honorary treasurer. It should be added that the artists accorded their gratuitous services, as is always the case at these anniversaries, and on that account seemed to exert themselves the more strenuously to please.

Digitized by Google

Nothing could possibly have gone on more cheerfully, the only drawback to the unanimous satisfaction being that "the ladies who honoured the festival with their presence," and who were gallantly toasted by the President, were mere lookers on, instead of (as Mr. Dickens suggested last year) partakers in the convivialities of the evening. The best means of aiming a blow at this ungracious anomaly would be for the Royal Society of Musicians and the Royal Society of Female Musicians, now existing as separate institutions, to amalgamate and make one. Such an amalgamation has several times been hinted at, nor is there any feasible argument against its being effected—in which case "union" would be doubly "strength."

THE compliments of "Mr. Dwight's indefatigable Diarist" to the dexterous flatterer of the MUSICAL WORLD, with doubts whether he (the Diarist) is able "to communicate all he knows" about Beethoven's Prometheus within reasonable limits. However, here is a part of "all he knows" upon the particular topic which has led to the call upon him: —

A translation of the original play bill, copied in Vienna.

"NEW BALLET.

In the Imp. Roy. Court Theatre adjoining the Palace, and by the Imp. Roy. Court Operatic Troop, to-day, Saturday, the 28th of March, 1801, performed for the benefit of Mademoiselle Casentini,

THE VILLAGE BARBER,

An operetta in one act, drawn from the comedy of the same name.

After which (for the first time)

THE CREATIONS OF PROMETHEUS,

A heroic, allegorical Ballet in two acts, invented and produced by Sig. Salvatore Vigano.

PERSONS.

Prometheus	Herr Cesari.	Thalia	Mad. Cesari.
Children	Mlle. Casentini.	Melpomene . . .	Mad. Renth.
	Herr Salvatore Vigano.	Apollo
Bacchus	Herr Ferdinand Gioja.	Amphion
Pan . .	Aichinger.	Arion
Terpsichore	Mad. Brendi.	Orpheus.

"The foundation of this allegorical Ballet is the Fable of Prometheus. The philosophers of Greece, to whom he was known, explain the fable to this effect: — they picture him as a sublime genius, who found the men of his time sunk in ignorance, refined them through science and art, and elevated them morally.

"Starting from this idea, we see in the present ballet two statues, which are gradually endowed with life, and which through the power of harmony are made susceptible to all the passions of human life.

"Prometheus conducts them to Parnassus to place them under the instructions of Apollo, the God of the fine arts. Apollo commands Amphion, Arion and Orpheus to teach them Music, Melpomene and Thalia to instruct them in Tragedy and Comedy, Terpsichore and Pan in the Pastoral Dance invented by the latter, and Bacchus in the Heroic Dance of which he was the inventor.

"The music is by Herr Van Beethoven.

"The decorations are by Herr Plätzer, Imp. Roy. Court Chamber-Painter, and Court Theatre-Decorator.

"Next Easter Monday, the 6th of April, a masked ball will be given in the Imp. Roy. Redoute Hall.

"Commencement (of the theatrical performance) at half an hour before 7."

There is your programme, about as literal as it "can be, done into y^e^ Englyssche tongue." Now for the MS. score which is preserved in the "Imp. Roy. Court-Library" at Vienna. On the title-page you may read, when you go there —

"Coppia corretta dall' Autore, Proprieta del Negozio Artaria e Comp."

Ballo Serio

DIE GESCHÖPFE DES PROMETHEUS

composta del

Sign. LUIGI V. BEETHOVEN."

The score, on large quarto music-paper, consists of the overture; the movement representing a tempest, into which it leads; and sixteen numbers, viz.: —

No. I. Adagio $3\frac{1}{8}$ pages, Allegro 3, Adagio $1\frac{1}{2}$, Allegro $22\frac{1}{2}$.
II. Adagio $3\frac{1}{2}$, Allegro con brio $11\frac{1}{2}$.
III. Allegro vivace 22.
IV. Maestoso 1, Andante 4.
V. Adagio 7, Andante quasi Allegretto 27.
VI. Un poco Adagio 1, Allegretto 13.
VII. Grave 18.
VIII. [no heading] 68, Presto 10.
IX. Adagio ($\frac{3}{4}$ tempo) 4, Adagio ($\frac{4}{4}$) $2\frac{3}{4}$, Allegro molto $17\frac{3}{4}$.
X. Pastorale, Allegro 34.
XI. Coro di Gioja 4.
XII. Solo di Gioja ($\frac{4}{4}$) $5\frac{1}{2}$, Adagio ($\frac{2}{4}$) $3\frac{3}{4}$, Allegro ($\frac{4}{4}$) $17\frac{1}{2}$.
XIII. Groteski Terzettino 43 (each dancer has a solo).
XIV. Solo della Signora Casentini, Andante 3, Adagio 13, Allegretto 22.
XV. Adantino Coro di Vigano 2 [2 braces per page], Adagio 6, Allegro 28.
XVI. Finale, Allegretto [the famous melody of the Heroic Sym.] 44 Allegro molto 27.

One meets with divers incomprehensible things in periodicals, the sentence which you quote from the Neiderrheinische Musik-Zeitung being one, viz., thus: — "The question arises whether the four pieces of dance-music which we now possess, in addition to the overture, are all that Beethoven composed." How can such a question arise? For, in 1801, Artaria and Co. advertised, —

"Beethoven (Van) Gli Uomini di Prometeo, ballo per il clavicembalo o pianoforte, Op. 24."

Again, in 1804, quartets arranged from Prometheus.

Again, the next year, the "Kunst und Industrie Comptoir" published "Pièces choisies du ballet, Gli Uomini di Prometeo."

Then, about 1815, Vigano produced it in Italy, introducing the "Earthquake," from Haydn's Seven Words, the Chaos and the duet of Adam and Eve from the Creation, and possibly another piece or two.

The pianoforte arrangement of it is quite a recent publication, with a picture of Prometheus rushing through space, impelled by the divine afflatus, and bearing a burning torch.

Query, what is the evidence that the famous melody of the finale appeared first in the contre-tänze?

A. W. T.

AS there has been a good deal of misapprehension in certain quarters with regard to a matter in which very many of our readers must take an interest, we are glad at being able to publish the circular which was transmitted by the secretary of the Philharmonic Society to every one of those members of the orchestra who were forced by circumstances over which they had unluckily no control to secede from its ranks, and whose places have by good fortune so completely been filled up:—

Digitized by Google

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

"DEAR SIR,—I have laid before the Directors of the Philharmonic Society your letter in which, for the reasons therein assigned, you decline to accept the engagement offered to you in the orchestra next season, unless under reservations to which the directors find it impossible to accede. The number and dates of the concerts were expressly fixed by the last general meeting of the society, and you are aware that the engagement with the orchestra must necessarily provide for their regular and personal attendance at every concert and rehearsal.

"It is with sincere and deep regret that the directors find themselves deprived of the assistance of many friends and professional brethren. While they do not complain of your having consulted what you consider as being your own interest in yielding to the influence under which you have acted, they must be permitted to say, that this influence, as you and the musical public cannot but feel, is of an arbitrary and oppressive character, and such as no theatrical manager or musical director has ever, till now, thought of exercising. What advantage can be derived by any one from such an interference, is a question into which the directors will not enter. But in separating from so many valued members of the orchestra, they cannot refrain from reminding you of the relation in which the Philharmonic Society has so long stood with the musical profession of London, and of the circumstances under which this separation has now been forced upon them.

"I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

"London, Dec. 22, 1860. "GEO. HOGARTH, Secretary."

Nothing could possibly be more considerate, gentlemanly, clear, and to the purpose than the above letter. The involuntary seceders themselves must have thought so after perusing it.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

(From the Morning Post).

THE concert of last night, devoted, like many others given during the present season, to the works of Beethoven, was attended most numerously, the more expensive places being occupied by company belonging to the highest classes of society. The programme included, amongst other masterpieces, Beethoven's great pianoforte sonata in A major, Op. 101, played on this occasion for the first time at the Monday Popular Concerts by Miss Arabella Goddard, who, judging by her performance of this and the other solo sonatas of Beethoven's so-called "third period" (need we remind our readers of her triumphant successes with the 106, 109, and 111?), seems to have discovered the clue which can alone direct the executant through the new world of sound which the mighty Ton-Dichter created, and to have penetrated the intensest of those golden mists, "dark from excessive light," which enshroud, like a sunny haze, the inspirations of the poet "hidden in the light of thought." For Miss Arabella Goddard, Beethoven, the most inventive and imaginative of musicians, has no secrets. She knows him by heart; and, what is more, can put her heart into her fingers, and thus render him intelligible and delightful even to the ears of a mixed audience, such as that of the Monday Popular Concerts, which (such is the gradation of the admittance fees) included nearly every class of the community. Never did the great English pianist, who so chivalrously plays superb works in public which no other pianist can, or at any rate does attempt, except perhaps for the delectation of the "select few" who may patronise a quasi private chamber-concert—never did the "reine et le roi aussi" of the most fashionable of instruments distinguish herself more honourably than on the present occasion. The exquisitely beautiful love song with which the sonata commences, the vigorous march movement so utterly unlike any other march composed before or since, and the sterlingly brilliant finale, with its charmingly capricious humour and fugue, ingeniously wrought as it is difficult to execute, were one and all played to perfection. A few more such performances cannot fail to work what many may consider a kind of artistic miracle—that is, to render Beethoven's sonata in A major, Op. 101, generally popular.

Of Mr. Sims Reeves' wonderfully beautiful execution of the famous "Lieder-Kreis" we have often spoken in terms of warmest admiration, and can add nothing to the eulogy already bestowed, unless it be that which belongs to the repetition of a most perfect exhibition of genius combined with skill of the highest order. Mr. Sims Reeves was equally happy in his rendering of "Adelaide," accompanied by Miss Arabella Goddard; and each performance was such as we believe no tenor singer of the present day could hope to surpass. The magnificent violin-playing of M. Vieuxtemps, we need scarcely say, was one of the leading features of the concert. Beethoven's too-rarely heard trio in D major, Op. 9, the Rasoumowski Quartet in F, Op. 59, and the Grand Sonata in C minor, Op. 30, were the pieces in which the great Belgian violinist displayed his genius on this occasion; and in saying that in every instance he did the amplest justice to Beethoven, we award the highest praise which could be given to any executant. In the trio and quartet with M. Vieuxtemps, the viola, second violin, and violoncello parts were capitally played by Mr. Webb, Mr. Ries, and Mr. Piatti, and the pianoforte part of the sonata was performed by Miss Arabella Goddard. The conductor was, as usual, Mr. Benedict, who in Beethoven's "Lieder-Kreis" showed us the art of accompaniment in its highest perfection. We sincerely congratulate Mr. Arthur Chappell, the director of these concerts, upon the extraordinary success of entertainments so greatly beneficial to the cause of art.

[The above relates to the 15th concert of the present season—56th concert at St. James's Hall—which took place on Monday last, and of which our own reporter has sent us the notice subjoined.]

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.—The fifteenth concert of the present season, and third "Beethoven night" within little more than a month, was in every way as complete a success as its predecessors. An undertaking may succeed in more ways than one—a crowded room may be an illustration only of the mercantile view of the subject, while a fine performance to almost empty benches may be yet a success judged artistically. In using the term, therefore, of "complete success," we do so advisedly, for at the Monday Popular Concerts each element is thoroughly represented, the hall being invariably filled by an audience no less discriminating than numerous, while the selection is always unexceptionable and the execution the nearest imaginable approach to perfection. Last Monday fully sustained the deserved reputation of these weekly gatherings, including as it did two novelties, in addition to pieces which had already received the highest approbation. The new comers were the trio in D major (No. 2, Op. 9) for violin, viola and violoncello, which, in the hands of M. Vieuxtemps, Mr. Webb and Signor Piatti, we need hardly say, was heard to the utmost advantage, the andante and finale eliciting the largest share of applause; and the sonata in A major, Op. 101, for pianoforte alone, given by Miss Arabella Goddard with a delicacy and force of expression impossible to surpass, awakening an enthusiasm as genuine as it was unanimous. The Rasoumowski Quartet in F major (Op. 59), and the sonata in C minor, for pianoforte and violin, were the other instrumental pieces. Both had previously been given. The former, despite its great length, was again listened to devoutly, while the latter, though last in the programme, kept everybody in their places, and afforded as much satisfaction to the judicious as the renowned Kreutzer. There were but two vocal pieces—but such pieces!—the "Lieder-Kreis" and "Adelaide!" When we say that they were both given by Mr. Sims Reeves, who was in magnificent voice, and singing in his most magnificent manner, what more need we add? Language fails to do justice to music thus executed.

PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.—Although the sad event which the country is now deploring deprived the second Philharmonic Concert (on Monday) of the anticipated presence of the Queen, the programme, which had met with Her Majesty's approval, and more than probably, indeed, was of Her Majesty's own choice, remained unchanged. There was, however, an appropriate prefix, in the shape of the "Dead March" from Handel's Saul—a strain of sublime simplicity, which, time out of mind, has been introduced on such occasions, as the most fitting and graceful tribute to departed worth. The march was performed with the accustomed solemnity, and produced the accustomed impression. The following selection was then gone through:—

Digitized by Google

PART I.

Sinfonia in D, No. 2	Beethoven.
Aria, "Lungi dal caro bene" (La Sposa Fedele)	Pacini.
Romanza, "Il sogno"	Mercadante.
Overture (Euryanthe)	Weber.

PART II.

Sinfonia in A minor, No. 3	Mendelssohn.
Duetto on Styrian melodies, "I Montanari"	Benedict.
Overture (Guillaume Tell)	Rossini.

Conductor—Professor Sterndale Bennett.

It will be perceived that, as is ordinarily the case when the Philharmonic Concert is honoured by a "command," there was no solo—in one sense, doubtless, a loss to subscribers and the general public, but, in another sense, a gain, the brevity of the programme, combined with the excellence of the materials that composed it, insuring its appreciation and enjoyment to the end. This was manifestly the case in the present instance, when (rare occurrence) the concluding overture was listened to with unabated satisfaction, the whole audience, with very few exceptions, remaining attentive in their places until the last note. The execution of the two symphonies, under Professor Bennett's admirable direction, fully confirmed all that was said in praise of the (comparatively) new band, in noticing the first concert of the season a fortnight since. The symphony of Mendelssohn was the more interesting on this occasion as being the one which, nearly twenty years ago, was dedicated by its composer to Her Majesty Queen Victoria. That of Beethoven, one of his earliest and freshest works, is always welcome as the culminating point of what has been termed his "first period," while Mozart still influenced his style, and just before he had declared his absolute independence in the Eroica. The overtures of Weber and Rossini—severe tests of the capabilities of any orthestra, however pretentious—were both magnificently given, the two principal violoncellos (Messrs. Pettit and Pezze) in the opening movement of the latter exhibiting a richness of tone and purity of intonation to which we have not recently been habituated. Every one of the orchestral pieces was followed by hearty and unanimous applause. The singers were Madame Lemmens-Sherrington and Mr. Santley. More finished execution than that of the lady in Pacini's somewhat hacknied aria (violoncello obbligato, Sig. Pezze) more admirable vocal declamation than that of the gentleman in Mercadante's dry but clever romanza, could not have been desired,—nor anything more perfect than their united efforts in Mr. Benedict's melodious and characteristic duet. The concert was in all respects calculated to sustain the reputation of the Philharmonic Society at its height. There is now no further doubt about the thorough excellence of the band. By the way, the chief contrabasso, Mr. Rowland, is a whole host in himself. Even the drums would be irreproachable, if they were always in tune.

The NATIONAL CHORAL SOCIETY'S first Concert of unaccompanied part music was given on Wednesday night, at Exeter Hall, under the direction of Mr. G. W. Martin. The choir numbered six hundred voices. The hall was tolerably well filled, though no doubt the boisterous state of the weather prevented many from attending. The programme, which opened with the National Anthem, included Spofforth's four-part glee, "Hail, smiling morn;" "The last rose of summer," harmonised as a four-part song by G. W. Martin; old English melody, "Hearts of oak," harmonised by G. W. Martin; Stephen's five-part song, "The cloud-capt towers;" G. W. Martin's prize glee, "All hail, thou queen of night;" Purcell's glee, "In these delightful pleasant groves;" Danby's glee for four voices, "Awake, Æolian lyre;" part song, "Our Saxon fathers;" the English melody, "Brightest hopes are fleetest," harmonised by G. W. Martin; glee, "Haste, ye soft gales," composed by G. W. Martin; and "Barbara Allen," "Scots wha hae," and "Rule Britannia," all harmonised by the conductor. In fact Mr. Martin's name shows in the selection no less than nine times out of sixteen. The chorus sang extremely well, and in some instances indeed irreproachably, and are evidently on the high road to excellence. Finer sopranos and basses could hardly be found in London; and Mr. Martin, by his perseverance and attention turns their good voices to the best account. "It might perhaps be objected," urges a contemporary, "that 'The last rose of summer' is not well adapted for so very large a number of voices, and that the effect of songs which are written in the first person such as 'Once I loved a maiden fair,' and the pathetic 'Barbara Allen,' is injured from the same cause; but Mr. Martin, the indefatigable conductor, has executed his self-imposed task in so judicious a manner that we are not disposed to quarrel with him on that ground." Old Purcell's fine glee, "In these delightful pleasant groves," and Danby's effective "Awake, Æolian lyre"—which, in spite of its difficulty for a large choir, was one of the most satisfactory performances—were both very welcome; and two of Mr. Martin's own compositions, "All hail, thou queen of night," and "Haste ye soft gales," also came in for considerable applause, and with justice, since they are both remarkably pretty. One of the most striking of the choral performances was the part song, "Our Saxon fathers" (R. Story), which was superbly sung and rapturously encored. The National Choral Society bids fair to become one of the most busy and prominent of our numerous amateur associations, as it is already the most comprehensive in the particular description of music, the advancement of which it aims at promoting. We have recently had occasion to report two excellent performances of the Messiah, and now (not for the first time, by the way) in a concert of unaccompanied part music, the six hundred choristers which form the working force of the institution proved that they were no less efficient in secular than in sacred compositions.

Mrs. Suchet Champion had been announced to sing two solos, but being prevented at the last moment by illness, Mr. Suchet Champion filled her place, and gave two songs instead—Blumenthal's "Far away where angels dwell," and "My pretty Jane." The programme was further enriched with two performances on the pianoforte by Miss Arabella Goddard, viz. the fantasia on English airs, entitled, "Albion," composed expressly for her by Mr. Benedict, and Thalberg's "Home, sweet home." In speaking of the former a contemporary says, "and though last, not least, the new pianoforte fantasia, entitled 'Albion,' the brilliant, genial, and elegant attractions of which were displayed in their fullest force by the superb playing of Miss Goddard, whose surpassing powers as an executant of modern pianoforte music (a widely different style of art from that of Sebastian Bach, in which, as all the world knows, she is an equal proficient) it served to render most agreeably conspicuous. This was likewise honoured with an enthusiastic and irresistible encore. 'Albion' is certainly one of the worthiest illustrations we have met with of Mr. Benedict's powers as a pianoforte writer of the brilliant school, and can scarcely fail to become generally popular." Both "Albion" and "Home, sweet home" were enthusiastically redemanded; but Miss Goddard could only be persuaded to repeat one of them. Mr. Benedict's "Albion" is evidently destined to rival, if not surpass, his "Erin," and his "Where the bee sucks"—both masterpieces of in the fantasia style—universal popularity.

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—At a meeting of the committee on Monday for conducting this approaching triennial festival, it was announced that it is proposed to devote the Tuesday morning to the performance of Elijah; on Thursday, the Messiah; on Friday, Beethoven's grand service in D, and a selection from Israel in Egypt. On Tuesday or Wednesday evening, the Creation; on Friday evening, Judas Maccabæus. The Wednesday morning's performance has not yet been determined upon; "the committee hoped to have had the gratification of announcing that they had succeeded in obtaining a new oratorio composed expressly for the occasion; but circumstances have prevented that expectation being realised." Mr. Costa will again be conductor, and arrangements have already been made with Mad. Sainton-Dolby and Mr. Sims Reeves. The orchestral committee have ascertained by direct communication with Mad. Clara Novello, that it is not that lady's intention to reappear in public. [The foregoing grammatical announcement is taken from the Birmingham Journal. The "new oratorio, (not) composed expressly for the occasion," is reported to be from the pen of Mr. Costa.—ED.]

OLE BULL.—We hear it is the intention of this celebrated "lion"-fiddler to visit London this season, with a view to the publication of his compositions.

HERR STRAUS, the violinist, who played with eminent success at one of the Monday Popular Concerts, near the end of last season, has arrived in London.

Digitized by Google

Royal English Opera.—Saturday would have been the last night of the season, but that the theatre was closed that night, peremptorily, by order of the Lord Chamberlain, in consequence of a recent bereavement in the Royal Family. That all places of public amusement should be closed on certain occasions, where the feelings of the highest personage of the realm are deeply involved, we think can hardly be gainsaid: nevertheless, we think the hardship involved so great, the grievance so universal, that Government should be called upon to make some compensation. On Saturday night so great was the demand for tickets at the two English Opera houses, that many could not be supplied. Here was a windfall for the managers after a season characterised by no brilliant success. But at the eleventh hour comes the authoritative firman—the theatre is shut up—the public is disappointed—the managers lose hundreds—the servants of the establishment are mulcted of a day's pay (how little some are able to afford it, need we aver)—and no one person benefited thereby. This is the way to go in mourning indeed; but we cannot help feeling it would be more agreeable to reason and good policy to allow everybody to purchase his own crape and wear it after his own fashion. It certainly was most unfortunate, as far as the two theatres were concerned, that the royal death should have occurred the day it did. The managers, however, had nothing to do but bear it and make no sign. Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison were less aggrieved than Mr. E. T. Smith, inasmuch as the Royal English Opera was opened two nights this week—one on Tuesday for Mr. Harrison's benefit, and another on Thursday for Miss Pyne's—when the friends of the establishment were presented with an opportunity of attending; whereas Saturday was positively the last night of the season of Her Majesty's Theatre, and Mr. Smith's patrons had no chance after that night of exhibiting their good feeling towards the manager. The performance on Tuesday for Mr. Harrison's benefit comprised Maritana and a concert, Mr. Harrison assuming his original part of Don Cæsar de Bazan in the opera, and Miss Louisa Pyne that of Maritana. On Thursday Miss Pyne took for her benefit Donizetti's Figlia del Reggimento, in which she sustained the part of Maria for the first time, as did Mr. Harrison that of Tonio. The success of the two was so decided in their new characters, that we have no doubt the Daughter of the Regiment will constitute a feature in the repertory of next season. The benefit-programme was made out with an act of the Bohemian Girl.

The Arion Choir.—This newly-constituted amateur society gave its first orchestral concert on the evening of Friday, the 15th instant, at the Hanover Square Rooms, and was honoured with a brilliant and numerous attendance. The programme was somewhat too ambitious and far too long, both of which faults we expect to find amended at the second concert. Mozart's symphony in G minor severely tested the qualities of the band, which has excellent materials in it; and will no doubt, with the assistance of strong professional hands, train on. Spohr's cantata for eight-part chorus, "Jehovah, Lord God of Hosts," was a still greater ordeal for the choir, who, nevertheless, mastered its difficulties and realised its beauties in the most creditable manner. Two manuscript compositions—"Salve Regina," by Mr. W. C. Filby, and a cantata, by Mr. J. Parry Cole—were both effective performances and liberally applauded. Mr. Cole's cantata is a long, elaborate work, not written certainly after the severe models, but more in accordance with the modern romantic school. It is extremely tuneful, and is likely to please more on repetition. Mr. Filby's piece evidences much care and skill, and exhibits a thorough acquaintance with the resources of the band and choir. There were many solo vocal pieces given, of which the most admirable and striking in effect was Miss Susannah Cole's "Hear ye, brave," from Elijah. The other singers were Mad. Weiss, Mad. Gilbert, Mr. Wilbye Cooper and Mr. Weiss. The instrumental performances comprised M. Vieuxtemps' sonata for pianoforte and viola—the same introduced with such striking effect at the Monday Popular Concerts—executed by the composer and Miss Arabella Goddard in the most faultless manner; one of Bach's chaconnes, for the violin, played by M. Vieuxtemps; and Mr. Benedict's new fantasia, "Albion," performed by Miss Arabella Goddard. Of the last piece and the performance we must look to the correspondent of the Morning Herald for a description:—

"'Albion,' in which are introduced the old airs, 'Pray, Goody,' and 'Come if you dare,' is admirably suited to the display of the executant's power, as well of interpreting simple melody in the most graceful manner as of rendering every faculty, so to speak, of the instrument completely subservient to the artist's will. Whilst the melodies simply played as such would not fail to interest the feelings of the audience, the skill and facility with which the brilliant variations founded upon them were poured forth seemed to prolong indefinitely, and at pleasure, the ideas of beauty and expressiveness that had been excited. The effect produced last night by this fantasia was marvellous, and the audience, not content with the acknowledgments that Miss Goddard evidently intended them to accept in place of a repetition, so prolonged their applause that a compliance with their demand became inevitable, and Miss Goddard returned to the piano and played with equal grace and power another fantasia by Mr. Benedict, based upon Ariel's song in the Tempest."

Musical Society of London.—The first trial of new chamber compositions took place at the Marylebone Institution on Wednesday evening, when the following pieces were played:—

Trio in G minor (M.S.), pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (S. W. Waley, F.); sonata in G (M.S.), pianoforte (E. Aguilar, F.); sonata in A minor (M.S.), pianoforte and violin (A. Ries, A.); quartet in B flat (M.S.) pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello (Alice M. Smith, L. A.)

While all the above compositions were praised for their classical feeling and structure, Mr. Aguilar's sonata—played by himself—found special admirers, and Miss Alice M. Smith's quartet created evident surprise. This young lady is a pupil of Mr. Macfarren's, and betokens unusual ability, for one of her sex, in the highest school of writing. The trials of new compositions given by the society are worthy the attention of all composers, and should be noted by them emphatically. Such opportunities occur but seldom, and of such the best possible use may be made. At the next concert of the society the following programme will be performed:—Mendelsohn's First Walpurgis Nacht, Beethoven's Symphony in B flat, Mozart's pianoforte Concerto in C major, Macfarren's overture tm Chevy Chase, and scene from Faust.

Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts.—This Society held its second conversazione for the season on Wednesday evening at the Portland Gallery, Regent Street, and a most delightful evening it was. The walls of the rooms were hung with the pictures forming the newly-opened exhibition of the Institution of Fine Arts, and brilliantly lighted with gas, presented a magnificent appearance. The company was very numerous, a large proportion being ladies. No paper was read on this occasion, but a most agreeable performance of vocal and instrumental music was given, under the able conduct of Mr. Alfred Gilbert. The programme was as follows:—

Trio, "Ti prego," Madame Gilbert, Madame Andrea, and Mr. Frank Elmore (Curschmann); song, "The Kelpie's Bride," Miss Jane Palmer (Dürrner); fantasia caprice, violin, Mr. Brand (Vieuxtemps); German lied, "Im Wald," the German Mäuner Chor. (Helser); song, "To thee," Madame Andrea; song, "Love me and fear not," Mr. Frank Elmore (Wallace); aria, "Dove sono," Madame Gilbert (Mozart); air, var. pianoforte, Mr. A. Gilbert, and violin, Mr. Brand (Beethoven); ballad, "Why do I weep for thee?" Madame Gilbert (Wallace); duet, "The sailor sighs," Miss Jane Palmer and Mr. G. Stanley Betjemann (Balfe); German lied, "Die Capelle," the German Mäuner Chor. (Kreutzer.) Conductors, Mr. Benedict and Mr. Alfred Gilbert.

This programme, in which too great length was wisely avoided, went off with great spirit and in a most satisfactory manner, terminating a little after eleven o'clock. Mad. Gilbert gave the "Dove Sono" with great taste and effect, and was equally successful in Wallaces's ballad, "Why do I weep for thee?" Miss Jane Palmer was warmly applauded in "The Kelpie's Bride," and jointly with Mr. Betjemann in Balf's duet, "The Sailor sighs." Mr. Brand's performance on the violin was a decided success.

M. Henri Wieniawski (the violinist) has decided on visiting London this season.

The San Carlo.—It is reported thar Mr. Lumley has become lessee of this great operatic establishment. We heartily wish him success. A little while ago Mr. E. T. Smith was the accredited lessee of the same theatre.

Digitized by Google

Provincial.

MADAME CATHERINE HAYES and her party have been entertaining the Liverpool public, and delighting in no small degree the critics, if we may take as specimens the accounts furnished by the Daily Post and Mercury of Wednesday last respecting the concert given at St. George's Hall the preceding evening. It was a shilling concert, and pronounced by the Mercury "a colossal success." "Every inch of standing ground and sitting room," writes the same journal,—

"Was crowded in all parts of the hall, and even in the reserved seats the crowd was so great, that all notion of getting the particular seat marked on the card of admission had to be given up as hopeless. The sight was very fine, especially at moments of enthusiasm, which were not few or far between, for the programme was an excellent one, the artists were of the first order, and their performances worthy of them."

Both papers sound the praises of the artists with equal loudness. The Mercury, which goes more into details, thus notices the special features of the programme: —

"Madame Catherine Hayes had an overpowering reception, and sang her best in return. With the exception of a share in Rossini's duet, 'Serbami ognor,' and a concerted piece by Niedermeyer, in which 'Auld lang syne' is introduced in quartet, all Madame Hayes's pieces were of the ballad order. Her 'Marble halls,' 'Savourneen deelish,' 'Home, sweet home,' and 'The harp that once,' never were given with greater pathos and finish, and never went more surely to the hearts of her audience. Miss Lascelles used her splendid contralto voice to excellent purpose, shining especially in the song from Dinorah, 'Ye maidens in spring time,' and in a song by Macfarren. Mr. Tennant, the tenor, gave a difficult romanza of Campana's with great certainty of tone and elegance of delivery. He is a robust rather than a sweet tenor, and produced a legitimate effect in everything he did, winning an encore in 'Annie, good bye,' a song written for him by Mr. Wallace. Signor Burdini sang his music with richness and weight, but yet with considerable vivacity of tone. In Massé's Muletier de Calabre, he was especially successful. The great violinist, Herr Becker, played four times, and surprised the groundlings by some wonderful tours de force His rendering of Dussek's Sonata in B flat, with Mr. Berger as pianist, was an admirable specimen of his powers. Mr. Berger accompanied admirably, and was encored in his own 'Band passing,' a very pretty pianoforte effect."

The next Philharmonic concert takes place on the 2nd of April, when Mesdames Rieder and Lemaire, Messrs. Henry Haigh and Lawrence, will be the singers. On the 16th, Mad. Alboni and Miss Arabella Goddard, the two great artists at that time forming part of the Willert-Beale provincial tour, are engaged, and will perform at the third concert.

The Messiah was performed in the Victoria Hall, LEEDS, on Saturday evening, the proceeds being in aid of the Town Hall Concert Society. The performers gave their services gratuitously. The principal vocalists were, Mrs. Sunderland, Miss Walker, Miss Crosland, Mr. Wilson, and Mr. Brandon; chorus, the Leeds Concert Choir; band, the West Riding Orchestral Union, Mr. Haddock being the leader. Mr. Spark was organist, and Mr. Jackson, of Bradford, conductor. The profits were between 60*l.* and 70*l.* We learn from the Leeds Intelligencer that there is still a deficiency in the society's funds to about the same amount. It is to be hoped that it may be removed without the necessity of drawing upon the guarantee fund.

The second of Messrs. Hargett and Howard's Subscription Concerts took place in the Music Hall, EDINBURGH, on Friday the 15th. The chief feature of the performance was Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise (Lobgesang), the solo parts taken by Mad. Catherine Hayes, Miss Lascelles and Mr. Tennant, the Choral Union acting as chorus. The Evening Courant is not enthusiastic about the execution. "To give full effect," it says, "to the splendid choruses in the Lobgesang, at least a hundred more voices would have been requisite; and even then the gentlemen who officiated on the brass instruments might have spared a good deal of their energy." The writer adds that his task with regard to the performance of the chorus was very simple, as, with the exception of a few occasional notes, he heard not a note of it. The indignation of the critic is only appeased when he vents it in the following sentence: —

"The Hymn of Praise, as Mendelssohn wrote it, and as he intended it to be heard, was not heard last night, and therefore, with the best intentions, an injury was done to the reputation of the composer. We are glad to learn that a larger body of singers will be provided for the Messiah next week."

Surely, under the circumstances, the best endeavours of the best singers would have been rendered null and void, and indeed it appeared to have affected the soloists in no slight degree. In the second part of the concert, which was miscellaneous, Herr Becker played Mendelssohn's violin concerto, and received unqualified applause. The band executed Beethoven's overture to Prometheus; and Mesdames Catherine Hayes and Lascelles, Messrs. Tennant and Burdini, sang popular songs.

The fourth and last subscription concert of the Sacred Harmonic Society of Brighton took place on Tuesday evening. The programme consisted of selections from the Messiah. Miss Strong, Messrs. Weller and Afflick were the singers.

RICHARD WAGNER'S MUSIC BEFORE THE TRIBUNAL CIVIL DE LA SEINE.

THE German composer, whose noisy and conquering music has, for the last six months, engrossed the energies of every one connected with the Imperial Opera, wanted nothing but a public trial in the courts of justice to attract attention to his famous Tannhäuser.

This trial Herr Wagner has just obtained. At the present moment he is, therefore, one of those mortals who have reached the pinnacle of happiness, if, indeed, such a man is only a mortal, or if it is even allowable to designate him as such. However this may be, three translators —they are mere mortals, at any rate— have been employed in turning Tannhäuser into French. Of these three translators, one alone will have the glory of seeing his obscure name— which is Nuitter— figure side by side with that of the refulgent star of the new school. The other collaborators, MM. Roche and Lindau, have been thrown in the shade, the first, because he acknowledges having composed blank verse in the recitatives, where rhyme was required, and the second, because it has been proved that he wrote neither blank verse nor rhyme.

"What did he do, then?" our readers will inquire. He simply read in French the original German. As every kind of work, however, deserves to be paid for, M. Lindau demanded a share of the dramatic cake of which M. Roche had secured a portion beforehand.

The following is the judgment of the Court:— "Whereas it is certain that Lindau co-operated with Ed. Roche in translating the words of Tannhäuser, of which Richard Wagner is the author; but, whereas it appears by the documents produced, and especially by the declarations made in the name of Roche himself, that the work done by him was not accepted by the management of the Opera, and that the whole book had to be rendered, almost entirely, over again; and as, under these circumstances, the translation made by Lindau gives him a legitimate claim upon Wagner — which the latter, by the way, does not dispute — but cannot give him a right, any more than to Ed. Roche, who formally declares he cannot claim it, to require that he should, as a collaborator, have his name appear either in the playbills, or on the libretto.

"Whereas the tribunal, up to the present time, is not in possession of the data sufficient to determine the amount of remuneration due to Lindau. For these reasons, the Court decides that Roche is not concerned in the case; declares that Lindau has no ground for his application; nonsuits him; but reserves his right to obtain the remuneration due to him from Wagner, and condemns him to pay all the costs."

Maître Marie conducted M. Lindau's case, while Maître Emile Ollivier defended the rights of Herr Wagner in a brilliant speech, which was a perfect lesson of musical æsthetics. We wish, for the amusement and instruction of our readers, we could give the whole of M. Ollivier's lesson; but, as we have not space enough, we will content ourselves with a quotation. M. Ollivier, impressed with the utility of persuading the judges of the Tribunal Civil de la Seine that, despite the contrary opinion so often slightly expressed everywhere, that his client is the most melodious of composers, gave them the following explanation, with which they must have been deeply interested. "M. Wagner's music," said M. Ollivier, "is not the absence of melody, but continuous melody, instead of melody by intervals. Take the most remarkable of Rossini's chefs-d'œuvre, the sublime trio in Guillaume Tell; compare it with the "Prayer of Elizabeth," and "Wolfram's Song," in the third act of Tannhäuser, and tell me whether the music of the German maestro cannot, looking at it in a purely melodic light, boldly bear a comparison with the music of the illustrious Italian, and whether the genius of the one is not equal to the genius of the other."

Digitized by Google

I do not know whether the honourable magistrates, to whom M. Ollivier addressed these words, will comply with the learned counsel's request, and compare the trio from Guillaume Tell with the "Prayer of Elizabeth," and "Wolfram's Song;" but I do not mind betting that, if they do, they will decide in favour of the trio from Guillaume Tell. The conclusion of M. Ollivier, however, is illogical. If, in the trio from Guillaume Tell, as in all pieces of music before the appearance of Herr Wagner, the melody proceeds by intervals, while in the works of the German maestro, it is one continuous stream, the superiority evidently belongs to Herr Wagner, whose genius, consequently, is superior to that of Rossini. But we are speaking too much of an opera which the public has not yet heard. The first representation of Tannhäuser is fixed for this evening.* He who lives will hear, and he who hears will judge.

THE SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—In no country but this are serial performances of the greatest musical works, on the grandest possible scale, given, as they have for some years past been by the Sacred Harmonic Society. The general character of these great concerts is doubtless conservative rather than progressive, and it may with equal safety be averred that there is quite room enough for another institution, on a similar scale, in which the claims of living composers would meet with more attention, and where works would not be objected to merely because they are new; and this would probably prove in the end far more beneficial to the cause of art than any radical change in the politics of the Sacred Harmonic Society at this advanced period of its public existence. There should be one temple of art dedicated to the conservation of monumental works, and where all the traditions of their true performance may be religiously preserved, and "handed down" as the phrase goes, to an admiring and venerating posterity. Such an institution could scarcely lack patronage. Look at the delight experienced by elderly persons on finding themselves able to join in the familiar old Handelian strains that formed part of their childhood's joys, those tones still so brightly coloured by life's morning sun! Old Mrs. Johnson remembers well how her mother taught her to sing, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," long, long years ago before pale pain crossed her path, and tears of "speechless praise" fall tremblingly from her eyes as she listens to the holy music. The budding girl, too, has heard "mamma" sing it when mamma was young and silver-voiced. She can also sing it herself, and loves it, if only for the endearing associations that surround it like a halo. Then there is old Mr. Johnson, who used to hunt foxes, drink strong port, and delight in the manly song of Braham, Heaven knows how many years ago; who intensely loved to hear "Sound an alarm," and other grandly heroic effusions, in which Handel has surpassed every other composer. And likewise Mr. Jones, who preferred the deep, and to whom an "alacrity in sinking" presented the greatest musical charms. Well, old Johnson and Jones (who probably used to sing, no less than admire, their favourite pieces) still exist, and although their voices have perhaps turned again to "childish treble," continue to feel a peculiar and inexpressible pleasure in listening to the airs that charmed their spring-time. All such persons require an institution like the Sacred Harmonic Society, and will unfailingly support it no less than those who, thoroughly cognisant of the merits of all schools and periods of art, will always go to Exeter Hall for the sake of the fine music itself, so grandly performed there apart from all adventitious circumstances. The Sacred Harmonic Society will, therefore, do well to maintain their conservative policy, eschewing all such ultra-modern works as Beethoven's wonderful mass in D, which, by the way, judging from their recent treatment of the score, so strongly and properly condemned by a contemporary, seems to be beyond the comprehension of the management, or the powers of the choral executants, or both.

But then are we to have nothing for the peg-tops and crinolines of the present day. Is there no serious side to our "fastness" as there was to the fastness of our forefathers? Is there no profound intelligence to appeal to in those bewhiskered faces — no sensitive heart ready to sympathise with the beautiful and new palpitating above those wiry petticoats which grace all our fashionable assemblies? Surely the "very age and body of our time, its form and pressure," exemplified in serious musical works, would attract attention and command respect in an equal degree with those productions which reflect the characteristics of another age. Surely the particular sentiments and forms of expression that distinguish the civilised world of 1861 deserve artistic illustration, and must have as much historical interest as the physiological peculiarities and differently coloured feelings of any other period.

Let us hope, then, that we may soon have a "New Sacred Harmonic Society" devoted entirely to works of the present day, and by which every possible encouragement may be offered to living genius. Such an institution is absolutely wanted, and could do no possible harm to the old society, whose concerts are quite unrivalled in their way, and likely to remain so. Indeed, were proof demanded of the very superior excellence of the Sacred Harmonic Society's performonces, we should cite at once the magnificent execution of Mendelssohn's Elijah on a very recent occasion. Never was this colossal oratorio (in which, by the way, the best characteristics of the ancient and modern schools are more equally and harmoniously blended than in any other work known to us) more worthily rendered. From the overture, in which the composer at once reveals in its fullest vigour and extent that rare power which can give a "fine checking" to expectation, and, as observed by Bacon (who seems to have deeply considered the science of sound as he did everything else), is "well-known to the musicians when they have a special grace in flying the cadence"—from the masterly recitative and prelude in D minor to the no less admirable chorus in D, which terminates the oratorio, the executancy nearly approached perfection.

POST.

* Namely, the 14th March, on which day the above article appeared. The writer of it was, however, mistaken, and the Parisian public were doomed to wait a little longer for the treat of hearing the chef-d'œuvre of Rossini's musical superior!—ED. M. W.

AUBER'S NEW OPERA,

LA CIRCASSIENNE,

NOW PERFORMING WITH

IMMENSE SUCCESS

AT THE

OPÉRA COMIQUE, PARIS,

WILL SHORTLY BE PUBLISED BY MESSRS.

ADDISON, HOLLIER, and LUCAS,

Who have Purchased the

COPYRIGHT.

London, 210 Regent Street, W.

WALLWORTH'S ART OF SINGING. Second Edition, just out, full music size, price 7s. A new and modern method for cultivating the voice, and for gaining a perfect vocalisation—a practical work—contains 35 pages of music. With a true method of acquiring the Shake, now for the first time introduced in a Singing Tutor. By T. A. WALLWORTH, Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.

Published by A. W. Hammond (late Jullien), 214 Regent Street; and may also be had of the Author at his residence, 81 Park Street, Grosvenor Square, W., where Pupils are also received.

Digitized by Google

BOOSEY'S ORCHESTRAL OVERTURES, arranged by LAMOTTE. Price 8s. each for full band; 5s. each for small band.

1. Crown Diamonds, Auber.
2. Zampa, Herold.
3. Zanetta, Auber.
4. Oberon, Weber.
5. Fra Diavolo, Auber.
6. Der Freischütz, Weber.
7. Domino Noir, Auber.
8. Gazza Ladra, Rossini.
9. Dame Blanche, Boieldieu.
10. Masaniello, Auber.
11. Part du Diable, Auber.
12. Guillaume Tell, Rossini.

KUHE'S NEW TRANSCRIPTION of SCHUBERT'S FAVOURITE MELODIES, as short and effective Pieces for the Pianoforte, price 2s. 6d. each.

1. Serenade.
2. Ave Maria.
3. Adieu.
4. The Wanderer.
5. The praise of Tears.
6. Thine is my heart.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

BRASS BAND, STRING BAND, DRUMS and FIFES, &c.—Boosey's Brass Band Journal, Quick Step Journal, Orchestral Journal of Dance Music, Orchestral Selections from the New Opera, Orchestral Overtures, Drum and Fife Journal, &c.

Full particulars of these unrivalled Publications may be had, post-free, from Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

MISS GODDARD'S New Solo, ALBION. Fantasia on English Airs, by J. BENEDICT; performed with the greatest success by Miss ARABELLA GODDARD. "The melodies upon which 'Albion' is constructed—'Pray Goody,' and 'Come if you dare'—are varied, ornamented, and otherwise elaborated with no less elegance than skill."—The Times. "Elaborate as the variations are, they never, as in similar compositions, obscure the melody, but rather enhance its beauty."—Daily Telegraph. Also the companion pieces, ERIN and CALEDONIA, by J. BENEDICT. Price 4s. each.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

GOLLMICK'S SIX NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE, being the third set of German Volkslieder, transcribed for the piano. Price 2s. 6d. each.

"My Own Love."
"Mourn not."
"The Heart's Desire."
"Lorely."
"The Maidens of Tyrol."
"Farewell to the Woods."

"Herr Gollmick has produced a set of pianoforte pieces which will be found highly attractive, not only from the beauty of the airs themselves, but from the taste and skill with which he has treated them."—Illustrated London News.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

THE GUINEA EDITION of BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS for the Pianoforte. Edited by W. DORRELL. With Life and Portrait, complete in two volumes, handsomely bound, 10s. 6d. each.

"There are many editions of Beethoven's sonatas, German; French, and English but there is not one that we have seen, from which taking all things into account—correctness and clearness of the text, elegance of form, and moderation of price—we have derived so much satisfaction as from the edition now before us.—Daily News.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

RICHARD WAGNER'S TANNHAUSER.—BOOSEY and SONS beg to announce the publication of a complete edition of the celebrated Opera, "Tannhäuser," for Pianoforte Solo, with an introduction describing the plot and music. Price 7s. 6d., in cloth. "Tannhäuser" has been performed in every theatre in Germany, and has just been produced in Paris with unprecedented success. It is considered the best work of its author, whose compositions are now the subject of discussion throughout the musical world. Boosey and Sons believe therefore that the present publication will be acceptable to the English public as a specimen of the genius of one of the most remarkable men of the age.

28, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S NEW SINGING METHODS for LADIES' and GENTLEMEN'S VOICES, by J. L. HATTON. Price 1s. each.—BOOSEY and SONS have much pleasure in stating that these two Methods, which have been so long announced (and unavoidably postponed), will be ready for delivery in a few days. The publishers believe that amateurs and students will find these Methods of more practical use than any other similar publications. They are entirely original in form and contents, embodying in a small compass the result of the experience of their distinguished author. Each Method is distinct and complete in itself. Early orders should be given to musicsellers and booksellers to secure copies of the first edition. Price 1s. each, or post free, 1s. 2d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

NOTICE.—The SHILLING EDITION of IL TROVATORE, for Pianoforte Solo (being No. 40 of "Boosey's "Musical Cabinet") is now ready, and may be had of every bookseller and musicseller in the United Kingdom. Price 1s. 2d. post free.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

TO BE PUBLISHED BY SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MUSIC, a new work; being Three Essays which appeared in the MUSICAL WORLD. By JOSEPH GODDARD. Readers of the MUSICAL WORLD and the Public, wishing to encourage the publication of the above, may do so by forwarding their names to Mr. J. GODDARD, 3 St. Paul's Crescent, Camden Square, N.W. Price 5s. For further particulars, see the MUSICAL WORLD of Dec. 15th, 1860.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.

Their Catalogues, which contain a great variety of Music calculated for teaching purposes, may be had, post-free, on application.

London: 18 Hanover Square.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

OF

DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.,

244 REGENT STREET. (JUST OUT.)

"MAY."—New Duettino, by HENRY SMART, composed for equal Voices. Price 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Henry Smart, in this melodious and truly exquisite little duet, has, if possible, even surpassed in elegance and vocal finish, the pieces so warmly eulogised in our last impression."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE BANNER OF ST. GEORGE," by BALFE, a new National Song. The words by John Brougham, written for, and dedicated to, THE ST. GEORGE'S RIFLE CORPS, is published, beautifully illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," Rêverie by W. Kuhé, on Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), and "I love YOU," Sims Reeves's popular ballad, transcribed for the Piano by Emile Berger, are published, price 3s. each, by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL," by W. H. WEISS, composed and sung by the composer, with the greatest success, as well as by Mr. WINN and other vocalists of celebrity, is published, handsomely illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

ANDANTE in E flat, by GEORGIANA HOLMES, from a Quintet by FELICIEN DAVID, arranged for the pianoforte, and dedicated to Lady Scott, is just published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, S. W., where "Les Etoiles et leur Langage," Nocturne and "Air with Variations" (both composed by Georgiana Holmes), may be obtained, price 3s. each.

NEW CONCERTINA MUSIC by GIULIO REGONDI.—Reichardt's popular song, "Thou art so near, and yet so far," transcribed for the CONCERTINA and PIANOFORTE by GIULIO REGONDI, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"NEW YEAR'S EVE," by W. H. HOLMES.—This agreeable "Pensée" by the above talented composer, is just published for the pianoforte, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co, 244 Regent Street, W.

TYROLEAN MOUNTAIN SONG, by T. MAUSS (Der Jodelplatz), arranged for the pianoforte, and dedicated to Mr. W. E. Jarrett, of Cheltenham, is just published, price 3s.

Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, S. W.

AGUILAR'S TRANSCRIPTION of WEBER'S LAST WALTZ is just published for the pianoforte, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W., where Aguilar's Reverie, "Sunset Glow," may be obtained, price 3s., and his two latest songs, "Sympathy" (poetry by Mrs. BELL), 2s. "In a wood on a windy day" (poetry by ACTON BELL), 3s. and "Farewell" (poetry by Bishop HEBER), 2s., may be obtained.

DEUX BONBONS FROM THE DOMINO NOIR.

No. 1, "LA BELLEINES," Aragonaise. Price 1s.
No. 2, "AH, QUELLE NUIT," Bolero. Price 1s.

Transcribed for the Pianoforte, by

EMILE BERGER.

The above pieces are very easy transcriptions (without octaves) of the two celebrated songs in Auber's popular opera, sung by Miss LOUISA PYNE with such eminent success at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden, and are published by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW WORK FOR STUDENTS.

THE most important CADENCES and MODULATIONS through the MAJOR and MINOR keys, with HARMONISED SCALES composed for the pianoforte, harmonium, or organ, by IMMANUEL LIEBICH, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

THE COLLEEN BAWN QUADRILLES (by FORDE), as nightly performed at the New Adelphi Theatre, arranged for Orchestra by C. HALL, Conductor of the Band, postage free, 3s.; for Piano, finely Illustrated, 4s.

London: Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington Street.

PREMIERE TARANTELLE, for Piano, by BRINLEY RICHARDS, dedicated to M. CHARLES HALLE, 5s.

"In a first tarantelle, Mr. Brinley Richards has obviously aimed at something superior and more important than the arrangements, fantasias, &c., &c., with which his name has been principally associated . . . . . Mr. Richards has done his best; care and ingenuity have not been withheld by him in working out and in finishing his work."—Athenæum, March 16.

"We may confidently predict a speedy and lasting popularity to this brilliant piece, which is unapproached by anything its composer has hitherto produced . . . . . The character of the 'Tarantelle' is admirably sustained throughout."—Manchester Guardian.

London: Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, W., and of all Musicsellers.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 12 James Street, Buckingham Gate, in the Parish of St. Margaret, in the City of Westminster, at No. 5 New-street Square in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, March 23, 1861.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 39—No. 13 SATURDAY, MARCH 30, 1861 PRICE {4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Mr. HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.—FRIDAY next, April 5. Repetition of HOLYROOD—Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, Miss PALMER, Mr. WILBYE COOPER and Mr. WEISS. The following will be included in the Programme:—The Finale to the first act of "Euryanthe," Madrigals, Glees, Part-Songs, &c. The Orchestra will be complete. Conductor, Mr. HENRY LESLIE.

Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Area, reserved, 2s.; Gallery, 1s.

Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210 Regent Street; Cramer, Beale and Co., 201 Regent Street; at the Hall, and at Keith, Prowse and Co., 48 Cheapside.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—MR. RANSFORD'S ANNUAL GRAND CONCERT, on TUESDAY EVENING, April 2nd. Doors open at Seven, to commence at Eight o'clock. Vocalists: Mesdames AUGUSTA THOMSON, POOLE, EYLES, RANSFORD, MARIAN, MOSS, C. WILLIAMS, HARRIET LEE, JANE PALMER, REBECCA ISAACS, ELIZA HUGHES, M. WELLS, and Madame SAINTON-DOLBY; Messrs. GEO. PERREN, J. MORGAN, ALLAN IRVING, WILLIAM MERRICK, and RANSFORD. Instrumentalists: Grand Pianoforte, Miss ARABELLA GODDARD; Violin, M. VIEUXTEMPS; Clarionet, M. LAZARUS; Violoncello, M. ERNEST VIEUXTEMPS. The Band of the Coldstream Guards will perform selections from the most popular operas. Conductors: Messrs. W. GANZ, LINDSAY SLOPER, E. BERGER, and J. L. HATTON.

Sofa stalls, 6s.; balcony, 3s.; body of the hall, 2s.; gallery or orchestra, 1s. Stalls and tickets to be had at the hall, and of Messrs. Ransford and Son, 2 Princes Street, Oxford Street, Regent Circus.

THE VOCAL ASSOCIATION.—ST. JAMES'S HALL, WEDNESDAY, April 3rd, at 8 o'clock.—Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, Miss AUGUSTA THOMSON, Miss E. BODEN, and Miss MESSENT; Mr. RICARDO (his first appearance). Solo, Violin, M. SAINTON; Clarionet, M. LAZARUS; Fantasia Pianoforte, Miss ELEANOR WARD; Accompanyist, HERR WILHELM GANZ. Mendelssohn's Psalm "HEAR MY PRAYER," Solo parts by Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON. Organ, M. LEMMENS. Choir of 200 Voices. Conductor, M. BENEDICT.

Tickets, 5s., 3s., 1s. each, at all the Music Shops, and St. James's Hall.

SCHWEIZER SANGER GESELLSCHAFT. — ST. JAMES'S HALL, Piccadilly.—Mr. MITCHELL begs to announce an ENGAGEMENT with Herr DECKER SCHENK and his Company of FEMALE SWISS SINGERS, who have obtained a great Continental celebrity, and who will have the honour of appearing, for the first time in this country, attired in their national costume, on EASTER MONDAY next, April 1, and every Evening during the week, at Eight. Day Performance on Easter Tuesday, and every afternoon at 3. For programmes see small Bills. Stalls (numbered and reserved), 3s.; Area, 2s; Gallery, 1s. Tickets may be secured at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond Street; at the St. James's Hall Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly; and at all the Libraries and Musicsellers.

THE MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON. THIRD SEASON, 1861. The SECOND CONCERT (Orchestral and Choral) will take place at St. James's Hall, on Wednesday Evening, APRIL 10, at half-past Eight o'clock punctually. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED MELLON. Programme:—Part 1st. Mendelssohn's Cantata, "The First Walpurgis Night" (the Eve of the first of May), Op. 60. Orchestra, Chorus, and Solos, for Contralto, Tenor, and Baritone. Mozart's (Posthumous) Concerto in C for Pianoforte.—Part 2nd. Beethoven's Symphony, No. 4, in E♭ flat, Op. 60. Spohr's Scena, "Si lo sento," (Faust). Barnett's Trio, "A Father's look" (Fair Rosamond). Macfarren's Overture "Chevy Chace." Vocalists, Miss Louisa Pyne, Madame Laura Baxter, Mr. George Perren, and Mr. Weiss. Pianist, Mr. John Francis Burnett.

A limited number of Tickets for the Gallery, at 3s. 6d. each, to be had of Messrs. CRAMER & Co., 201, Regent Street; and at St. James's Hall.

CHARLES SALAMAN, Hon. Sec.
36, Baker Street, Portman Square.

St. James's Hall,
28 Piccadilly. W.

MR. DYSON'S GRAND FULL DRESS MORNING and EVENING CONCERTS, at the Theatre Royal, Windsor, on Thursday, APRIL 4th, when the following eminent artists appear:—Miss Martin (soprano), Miss Palmer (contralto), Mr. Dyson (tenor), and Mr. Lambert (basso), Mr. Gunnis (violin), and Mr. Schroeder (violoncello), Her Majesty's Private Band, and Mr. Pearsoe (pianist.) Director, Mr. Dyson.

VOCAL MUSIC. — Gratis and postage free, a select ADDENDUM to ROBERT COCKS and Co.'s VOCAL CATALOGUE, containing their most popular songs, duets, and trios, giving the key, compass, and voice for which each song is adapted.

London, No. 6, New Burlington Street; and of all musicsellers and booksellers.

W. VINCENT WALLACE. — TWENTY-FOUR PRELUDES and SCALES, Composed, Arranged, and Fingered by W. Vincent Wallace (Composer of "The Amber Witch," "Lurline," &c.), 4s. "A work held in high estimation by professors."

London: Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, W.

ORGANIST WANTED, for an Independent Chapel. Salary 25*l*. Apply to T. J., Maldon, Essex.

MR. WIENIAWSKI will arrive in London on the 20th MAY. All letters and applications to be addressed to Messrs. CHAPPELL & Co., 50 New Bond Street.

MADAME CATHERINE HAYES has returned to Town for the Season. 13, Westbourne Park, W.

MR. MELCHOR WINTER will sing at Peckham, April 6th; Beaumont Institution, April 15th; and Myddelton Hall, April 30th. Engagements for Oratorios, Concerts, and English or Italian Opera, to be addressed care of Messrs. Boosey, Holles Street, Cavendish Square, W.

MR. GEORGE COLLINS, Violoncellist, will be in London (after his tour through France and Italy) on Saturday, March 30th. All letters to be addressed to the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden.

MR. WALLWORTH (in answer to numerous inquiries), does not leave London with the Pyne and Harrison Opera Company, but REMAINS in TOWN for Concerts, Pupils, &c.—81 Park Street, Grosvenor Square, W.

COLLARD and COLLARD'S NEW WEST-END ESTABLISHMENT, 16 Grosvenor Street, Bond Street, where all communications are to be addressed. Pianofortes of all classes for Sale and Hire.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A COLLECTION of SANCTUSES, KYRIES, and DOXOLOGIES, in score, and with accompaniments, selected and arranged by J. E. RICHARDSON, Assistant Organist of Salisbury Cathedral, price 3s. 6d.

Salisbury: W. P. Aylward, New Canal. London: Messrs. Cocks & Co., 6 New Burlington Street; Messrs. Addison & Co., 210 Regent Street; and Mr. J. Willis 119 New Bond Street.

EWER & CO.'S LIST OF NEW PUBLICATIONS.

		s.	d.
BENEDICT, J. MALCOLM, Marche Triomphale		4	0
BERGER, FRANCESCO, Bon repos, chérie, Nocturne		2	0
" Lena, Serenade		2	0
GAUDE, LOUIS DE LA, Evelyn, Polka Mazurka		2	6
GARIBALDI, Viva Italia, March and National Hymn (with Italian words)		2	0
JUNGMANN, A., Souvenance		2	6
KRUGER, W., Les Cloches du Soir		4	0
LISZT, J., Grand Paraphrase sur Il Trovatore		6	0
" Rigoletto		6	0
" Ernani		6	0
MAGNUS, H., Carnaval Napolitain		4	0
PACHER, J. A., Op. 9, La Harpe		4	0
" Op. 34, Le Ruisseau		3	0
" Op. 50, Twelve Melodious Studies		7	6
" Op. 53, Tendresse		3	0
SCHULTHES, W., Op. 27, Stella Matutina, mélod. rélig.		2	6
SILAS, E., Op. 49, Costanza Impromptu		3	0
SPINDLER, F., L'Oisillon		2	6
WOLLENHAUPT, H. A., Op. 19, Grande Marche de Concert		3	0
" Op. 28, La Gazelle		3	0
" Op. 24, Galop di Bravura		4	0
" Op. 26, Helene. Grand Valse Brillante		4	0
" Cordelia. Schottisch		3	0
" La Violette. Polka de Concert		3	0
MOLIQUE'S ORATORIO—"ABRAHAM."
Soprano Airs.—I will extol Thee, my God		4	0
" Hear my prayer, O Lord		3	0
" Unto Thee lift I up mine eyes		4	6
Contralto Air.—They kept not the law		1	6
Tenor Airs.—Who walketh uprightly		2	6
" Pour out thy heart before the Lord		2	6
Baritone Airs.—Lead me, O Lord, in Thy righteousness		3	0
" Let there be no strife		2	6
" The joy of my heart is ceased		4	0
" Lord have mercy upon me		4	6
Duets.—Cast out this bondwoman. Alto and Baritone		4	6
" It is of the Lord's great mercies. Soprano and Baritone		3	0
Trio.—Alto, Tenor, and Bass. Let all those rejoice		3	0
Quartet.—S. A. T. & B. Go in peace before the Lord		4	6
March.—Arranged for Pianoforte Solo		2	6
" " " Duet		4	0
" " " Organ (arranged by W. T. BEST)		3	0

EWER & CO. 87 REGENT STREET,

Universal Circulating Musical Library.

Digitized by Google

BRILLIANT CONCERT PIECES

FOR THE

PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
A. SCHLOESSER. GRAND FANTASIA—"Il Trovatore"	6	0
A. SCHLOESSER. GRAND FANTASIA — "Guillaume Tell"	5	0
A. SCHLOESSER. GRAND FANTASIA—"Martha" ...	5	0
A. SCHLOESSER. GRAND FANTASIA—"La Favorita"	5	0
WILHELM GANZ. GRAND FANTASIA—"La Traviata"	6	0
STEPHEN HELLER. IMPROVISATA on MENDELSSOHN'S Melody, "On song's bright pinions," played by Miss ARABELLA GODDARD	4	0
THEODORE MAUSS. "MAY BREEZES," FANTASIA on a Popular German Air	4	0
ROBERT GOLDBECK. GRAND FANTASIA on "Le Prophète"	5	0
A. FUMAGALLI TAÏAUT. "Chœur de Chasse" ...	3	6
F. LISZT. The MARCH from WAGNER'S "Tannhäuser"	4	0
THEODORE KULLAK. LES ARPEGES. Etude de Concert	5	0
JULES BENEDICT. FANTAISIE MILITAIRE on HALEVY'S Opera, "Les Mousquetaires de la Reine" ...	5	0
POLYDORE DE VOS. FANTASIA—"Norma"	5	0

IN THE PRESS.

MAD. OURY. GRANDE FANTAISIE, on "Il Barbiere di Seviglia"	5	0

ASHDOWN AND PARRY
(Successors to Wessel and Co.),
18 HANOVER SQUARE, LONDON.

EASY TEACHING MUSIC, by J. BAPTISTE CALKIN.

SIX SACRED PIECES:	s.	d.
1 Most beautiful, appear. From Haydn's Creation	1	0
2 I waited for the Lord. Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise	1	0
3 Rousseau's Dream	1	0
4 But thou didst not leave. Handel's Messiah	1	0
5 Every valley. Ditto	1	0
6 The Spanish chant	1	0

SIX OPERATIC PIECES:
1 La ci darem. Don Giovanni	1	0
2 Batti, Batti. Ditto	1	0
3 Suoni la tromba. I Puritani	1	0
4 Va Pensiero. Nabuco	1	0
5 Libiamo, Brindisi. La Traviata	1	0
6 Parigi o cara. Ditto	1	0

SIX POPULAR PIECES:
1 Jock o' Hazeldean	1	0
2 The harp that once thro' Tara's halls	1	0
3 Yankee doodle	1	0
4 Where the bee sucks.	1	0
5 The lass o' Gowrie	1	0
6 Cease your funning. Beggar's Opera	1	0

SIX CLASSICAL PIECES:
1 Andante, varied, from Septett, Op. 20 (Beethoven)	1	0
2 Andante, con moto, from Symphony in C minor (ditto)	1	0
3 Adagio, Cantabile, from Symphony in B flat (Haydn)	1	0
4 Finale, from Symphony in D (ditto)	1	0
5 Adagio, from Symphony No. 4, in C (Mozart)	1	0
6 Andante, from Sonata in B flat (ditto)	1	0

The above Pieces, intended for very young Pupils, are written in a musicianlike manner, and are carefully fingered.

LONDON:
ASHDOWN AND PARRY
(Successors to Wessel and Co.).
18 HANOVER SQUARE.

1861.

NEW ALEXANDRE HARMONIUMS.

Lower in price and superior to all other cheap Harmoniums.

THE

NEW FOUR-OCTAVE HARMONIUM,

In Oak Case. Size 2 ft. 8 in. by 1 ft.; height, 2 ft. 4 in.

Price Five Guineas.

THE

NEW FOUR-AND-A-HALF OCTAVE HARMONIUM,

Compass, C to F. Size, 2 ft. 11 in. by 1 ft. 2 in.; height, 2 ft. 6 in.

Price—Oak, Five and a-half Guineas; Mahogany, Six Guineas

THE

ALEXANDRE COTTAGE HARMONIUM,

Five Octaves. In Oak Case, with Two Foot Boards. Size, 3 ft. 4 in. by 1 ft. in.; height, 2 ft. 8 in.

Price Six Guineas.

ALSO,

THE NEW ALEXANDRE CHURCH HARMONIUMS

WITH

TWO ROWS OF KEYS.

NO. 1. EIGHT STOPS

(Three and a-half Rows of Vibrators), Rosewood Case. Size, 3 ft. 9 in. by 1 ft. 11 in.; height, 3 ft. 8 in.

Price Forty-five Guineas

NO. 2. TWENTY-TWO STOPS

(Six Rows of Vibrators), Polished Oak or Rosewood Case. Size, 4 4 in. by 2 ft. 6 in.; height, 3 ft. 5 in.

Price Seventy Guineas.

NO. 3. TWENTY-TWO STOPS

(Eight Rows of Vibrators), Rosewood Case, 2½ Octaves of Pedals.

Price Eighty-five Guineas.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50 NEW BOND STREET, LONDON

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"Hail to thee! Hail to thee!"—composed by JOHN RAYMOND (Joseph Williams).

THE words of this canzonet are by Moore—one of the songs, in short, which give occasional brightness to the sombre and heavy lyric-narrative of the Veiled Prophet of Khorassan (Lalla Rookh). The music of Mr. John Raymond is unaffected and pleasing, besides being easy and singable. In bars 2—3, of the symphony (page 1); and in bars 1—2, page 1, line 3 ("Hail to thee!") the chord of the six-four, on C, is quitted after a manner less ceremonious than uncanonical—in the first instance going to the dominant seventh on G, in the second to the common chord of F. These slight inaccuracies rectified, Mr. Raymond's canzonet would be irreproachable.

"Good night, good night, beloved," serenade—by W. SEYMOUR SMITH (Ransford and Son).

This is a new setting of Longfellow's well-known "Serenade," which Mr. Balfe has so charmingly rendered. We cannot compliment Mr. Smith on his arrangement—for treble, alto, tenor, and bass. The harmony is incorrect, and a partiality for discords of suspension occasionally leads "to grief." The opening is better than the episode (setting off with the bass), which is at once bald (not bold) and assumptious; but there is nothing remarkable in the melody anywhere. Mr. Smith should "try again."

"Afternoon in February,"—words by LONGFELLOW, music by ARTHUR COTTAM (Rudall, Rose and Carte; and Keith, Prowse and Co.).

Here we have not only Professor Longfellow at his best, but a musician in all respects worthy to keep him company. We must quote the words:—

"The day is ending,
The night is descending,
The marsh is frozen,
The river dead.
Through clouds, like ashes,
The red sun flashes,
On village windows
That glimmer red.

The snow recommences,
The buried fences
Mark no longer
The road on the plain;
While through the meadows,
Like fearful shadows,
Slowly passes
A funeral train."

Mr. Cottam has set this to a truly congenial tune, enriched, too, by harmony at once expressive and uncommon. Either Mr. Cottam is a practised musician (as well as one by sentiment and feeling), or like the ex-King of Holland, and a certain Duke of Saxe-something, he keeps a musician to note down his inspirations. We will wager that Mr. Cottam is a poet; and in this faith recommend him some verses of Wordsworth, conceived in a strain just as joyous as those of Longfellow's "Funeral" are gloomy. He may, perhaps, remember them by the lines subjoined (we quote from memory, having lent our Wordsworth, some years ago, to the author of The Gordian Knot and Silver Cord):—

"The cock is crowing,
The stream is flowing,
The small birds twitter,
The lake doth glitter,
The green fields sleep in the sun.
* * * * * *
* * * * * *

(Mr. Shirley Brooks can fill up this vacuum.)

The cattle are grazing
Their heads never raising,
There are forty feeding like one.
The snow doth fare ill,
On the top of the bare hill;
Small clouds are sailing,
Blue sky prevailing;
The rain is over and gone."

There, Mr. Cottam—try your music upon that. We are quite sure you can harmoniously fit it.

"The Hesse-Darmstadt Polka"—by YOUENS (Pearson and Co.)

This is the first time we have seen the name, "Youens," in print. Nevertheless, "Youens," whoever he may be, has written a very lively and danceable polka, almost our only objection to which is the catastrophe. Perhaps, however, it is a Hesse-Darmstadt catastrophe. Let such of our readers as have been to the dullest of all the Middle-Rhine court-cities expound:

"March of the 18th Hussars," for the pianoforte—by MRS. GREATOREX (Rudall, Rose and Carte).

A spirited tribute to a valiant regiment, appropriately dedicated to H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief. The introduction of "Home, sweet home" as a trio, is happy.

"Triumphal March," for the pianoforte—by W. SEYMOUR SMITH (George Peachey).

As this march (which is not by any means without vigour) is inscribed by the composer "to his friend and master," Charles Edward Horsley, we are at a loss to guess how certain points can have escaped the eagle-eye of so acute and far-seeing a musician.

"Teach me, O Lord, the way of Thy Statutes," sacred song—words from the 119th Psalm, music by W. SEYMOUR SMITH. (George Peachey).

From the title-page of this sacred song we learn that Mr. W. Seymour Smith is organist of St. John's, Walthamstowe. He writes—or at any rate, publishes—too fast. It is well that he did not set the whole of the 119th Psalm, or it might have been prolix. Nevertheless, Mr. Smith has musical feeling. He must endeavour to combine with that desirable quality, musical purity, and we shall then have a right to entertain some hopes of him.

"Wind of the western sea," song—words by ALFRED TENNYSON, music by HAROLD THOMAS (R. W. Ollivier).

"Sweet and low—sweet and low"—we should like to quote the whole, but cannot afford it. Longfellow and Wordsworth have engrossed our leisure space. Mr. Harold Thomas has set these beautiful words with the utmost grace and finish. The melody, though neither new nor striking, is in thoroughly good keeping; and the accompaniment, as far as execution goes, is irreproachable. But why, in the names of Michel de Backere (vice pléban of St. Gudule), and Jean de Woluwe (rector-curate of St. Nicholas) so elaborate an accompaniment to so extremely simple and altogether unpretending a tune? Is that the way the west wind blows? Pierre Vanden Heede was not of that mind, nor Arnold de Buton either; nor any of the Dukes of Brabant. What says the poet, Tennyson, himself?

Digitized by Google

"Sweet and low,
Low, low, breathe and blow," &c.

Shelley adduces as much, and more, in verse that is immortal. He asks the west wind to let him be the west wind's lyre; but happily the forest already enjoyed the monopoly of that (no sinecure by the way). We suppose Mr. Harold Thomas has a notion of the wind peculiar to himself. If so, he is welcome to it; always provided he expresses himself with such elegant refinement as in the song before us. He is an ambitious, and still better, a promising, musician; but he would lose nothing by endeavouring now and then to write a little less ornately; to dress up a simple idea simply. Where is Professor Sterndale Bennett all this time—and Cinderella's glass slipper?

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

ADDISON, HOLLIER, AND LUCAS.

SMITH (W. SEYMOUR) "Matin Song" (Vocal).
Ditto, "Even Song" (ditto).

AUGENER AND CO.

WHITEHOUSE (DAVID) "Grande Marche Brillante" (Pianoforte).

BUSSELL (Dublin).

ROBINSON (FRANCIS) "My thoughts will wander" (Vocal).

CRAMER, BEALE AND CHAPPELL.

BARRY (C. A.) "Vivien Mazurka" (Pianoforte).
Ditto, "Echos from the old church aisle" (ditto).

CHAPPELL AND CO.

TREKELL (J. THEODORE) "L'ange gardien" (Pianoforte).
Ditto, "Sparkling dew drops" (ditto).

DUNCAN DAVISON AND CO.

HARVEY (R. F.) "Pensée à moi" (Pianoforte).
Ditto, "Cupid's repose" (ditto).
MORLEY (H. KILLICK) "I never knew how dear thou wert" (Vocal).

EWER AND CO.

BERGER (FRANCISCO) "Bon répos, chérie" (Pianoforte).

JEFFREYS.

WATSON (W. T.) "The ear-drop waltzes" (Pianoforte).

J. H. JEWELL.

STEED (A. ORLANDO) "Four songs from the Idylls of the King" (Vocal).

OLLIVIER.

THOMAS (HAROLD) "Promenade solitaire" (Pianoforte).
Ditto, "Across country" (ditto).
BARRY (C. A.) "Sleep little birdie, sleep" (Vocal).
THOMAS (HAROLD) "Wind of the western sea" (ditto).

PEACHEY.

SMITH (W. SEYMOUR) "Teach me, O Lord" (Vocal).
Ditto, "Triumphal march" (Pianoforte).

PEARSON AND SON.

YOUENS (?) "The Hesse-Darmstadt polka" (Pianoforte).

RUDALL, ROSE AND CARTE.

COTTAM (ARTHUR) "Afternoon in February" (Vocal).
GRESTOREX (Mrs.) "March of the 18th Hussars" (Pianoforte).

RANSFORD AND SON.

SMITH (W. SEYMOUR) "Good night, beloved" (Vocal).

JOHN SHEPHERD.

ANONYMOUS—"Lament for Glencoe," words and music by the author of the "March of the Cameron Men" (Vocal).

J. WILLIAMS.

RAYMOND (JOHN) "Hail to thee! hail to thee!" (Vocal).

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Easter Monday.—A troupe of six Swiss national singers, all ladies, who have obtained a continental celebrity as the "Schweizer Sänger Gesellschaft," has been engaged by Mr. Mitchell of Bond Street, and will appear under his auspices on Monday evening next, at the minor St. James's Hall.—During Easter week performances will be given twice daily.

THE ENTERPRISING IMPRESARIO.

CHAPTER XI.

ONE of the party, a baritone, was particularly partial to the macaroni. He had met with immense success at the theatre—had sent the galleries mad with a Swiss tune he introduced in Linda di Chamouni; they made him repeat it three or four times every night, and yelled with delight when the symphony of the song began. They called for it, and would have it too, in Lucia, much to the scandal of the less enthusiastic portion of the audience, to whom the "Yodel" was inconsistent with Donizetti's music and the plot of the opera. His extraordinary reception at the theatre turned his head, a surfeit of macaroni upset his stomach. In a short time the poor baritone was prostrate with fever and indigestion. In vain he disregarded the first symptoms of indisposition, and continued to eat and sing: every round of applause increased his excitement, every mouthful of food made him worse. He complained to no one, but his flushed cheeks and swollen appearance were the subject of general remark. At length the fever affected his brain. One night, when everybody was in bed, the whole hotel was aroused from slumber by his singing the "Yodel" song at the top of his voice. Upon the door of his room being opened, he was found with a blanket thrown across his shoulders (to imitate a Swiss peasant's costume), in bare legs, and a night-cap, singing and gesticulating most violently before the looking-glass, which he had placed upon the floor with two candles in front of it. Means were at once taken to get him into bed. The basso-cook, who slept in the adjoining room, declared he knew well enough what remedies to adopt to render it unnecessary to send for a medical man. He forthwith took his patient in hand and subjected him to the following extraordinary course of treatment.

Two large mustard poultices were applied to the calves of his legs, and two to the soles of his feet; the night-cap being removed, a smooth shining scalp was presented to view—a sort of broad, bony, uncultivated desert, with not a single hair to break the monotony of its expanse. A large piece of brown paper steeped in vinegar, and perforated with innumerable holes, was placed upon his crown and forehead, which covering made the broad, bony desert look like a round of à la mode beef, the holes, the highly polished skin shining through them, making the likeness more striking by their resemblance to bits of bacon. Having completed these applications, the basso, who apparently was as great an adept in pickling a baritone as he was in cooking macaroni, begged one of the bystanders who stood round the bed watching the operations with the greatest possible interest (a strange group we formed, every one with a candle in his hand, and in night attire), to fetch a nail-brush! For what purpose such an article could be required at such a moment, puzzled every one who heard the request. Many nail-brushes were brought, and curiosity gratified by one being used upon the invalid's chest, which, as may be supposed, quickly became inflamed by such an unusual means of friction. The lookers-on winced at the vigorous efforts of the basso. Not so the baritone, upon whom the rubbing, or more properly the scrubbing, had at first but little effect. He continued yodelling as well as he could, lying on his back, and every now and then would make an attempt to bow to the audience, to whom he imagined he was singing. At length the poultices beginning to tingle, the vinegar to cool his head, and the smart pain inflicted by the brush, gradually restored him to consciousness. He began to speak rationally, and to recognise those around him. Could he have seen the figure he presented, with his à la mode beef head, and the poultices upon the lower extremities, he might, I dare say, have relapsed, from sheer fright, into his former state. This danger was averted by the applications being removed. However, after a short time he began again to wander, and attempted the "Yodel" once more. It was but feeble compared to the former outburst. Some more brown paper was prepared, and the amateur doctor recommenced using the nail-brush, this time extending the scrubbing to other parts of the body besides the chest. A powerful dose of medicine was also administered, and in the course of a few hours a decided change for the better was observable in the invalid. He improved daily, and soon became anxious to make his re-appearance, having heard that it was contemplated by the Impresario to engage another baritone to supply his place. This idea nearly made him ill again. The fear of somebody else coming to imitate the "Yodel," and rob him of his laurels, haunted him night and day. He insisted upon being allowed to sing. His Doctor the basso consented, stipulating that he should not attempt the Swiss song or look at macaroni for a fortnight. He was announced to appear in his original character in Linda di Chamouni. Would the galleries allow him to omit the famous "Fol-di-rai-ti?" Had they perhaps forgotten it? — not a bit. They would not even wait until the scene where it used to be introduced, but insisted upon his singing it the moment he came upon the stage. Excuses in dumb show were of no avail; the opera was not allowed to proceed without the song being sung, and sung it was, with even greater success than ever.

Digitized by Google

Those who demanded it so vociferously little thought what an effect their applause had had upon the singer. How it had nearly turned his brain, and obliged him to submit to the violent remedies just described. The medico-basso-cook, or cook-medico-basso, whichever may be the most correct form of expressing the various accomplishments so felicitously combined in this most useful member of the touring party (I am almost inclined to believe he was least proficient in the basso line), accompanied the convalescent baritone to the theatre, and stood at the side scenes to watch his re-appearance before the footlights. Upon hearing the forbidden song demanded, his pantomine was most expressive of displeasure should the baritone attempt to break his promise. But in vain. In vain he threatened; the galleries would have their way, and the medico-basso-cook, or cook-medico-basso, was disregarded. He had his revenge, however, in private life, and kept his patient on low diet for a very much longer time than was necessary, as a punishment for his breach of promise as regarded the song.

The series of Italian operas in Dublin having terminated, the party prepared to go on to Cork, where, according to the newspaper paragraphs which announced the fact, "the enterprising manager of the Theatre Royal, Dublin, had arranged to give three operatic performances, supported by the most distinguished artists." Compared to the ease and luxury they had enjoyed since their arrival in Ireland, this journey entailed great labour and trouble upon the party. It was with no little consternation they learned that the train started early, and that they must be up and about by eight o'clock in the morning, an hour apparently before unheard of by some of the travellers. They retired to rest sooner than usual the night previous, in order to prepare for such exertion. The hotel was astir betimes. At seven o'clock the bustle of departure commenced, and increased to an alarming pitch until the last cab, carrying the Impresario and the conductor, drove off to the railway station. The basso-medico-cook was the first to come down to breakfast. He had undertaken to call the rest, and before doing so, fortified himself against all emergencies, by making a hearty meal undisturbed by any intruders. This done, he proceeded to fulfil his promise, and to pull the more sleepy of his companions out of bed. His patient, the baritone, he helped to dress, as well as to drink a cup of chocolate, which had been clandestinely brought into the room by "boots," whose admiration of the "Yodel" was unbounded. The basso-medico-cook declared chocolate contrary to his régime, and likely to necessitate another course of brown paper and mustard poultices. One by one the tourists assembled at the breakfast-table, all more or less sleepy. The sallow-faced Frenchman seemed particularly so, and looked more yellow than ever, his countenance being moreover slightly tinged with green. I used to wonder how he got such an extraordinary colour, and whether he washed in cod-liver oil to attain that peculiar plaster-cast sort of complexion. Alphonso was the only talker of the party. He was as cheerful as though early rising was his great delight, and a treat of unusual occurrence. Amina's mother did not altogether appreciate his good humour, but was, nevertheless, obliged to laugh outright at some of his jokes. It was, perhaps, for this reason that she made an observation, the only one she had ventured for some days, to the effect that there was a time for all things, and that now everybody ought to be eating their breakfast instead of talking and playing the fool: a remark to which Alphonso replied by offering the good old lady another chop and half a dozen eggs. Lucrezia made her appearance when the others had nearly finished breakfast. She evidently did not approve having been disturbed at such an hour. Not that she was decidedly out of humour, but in that frame of mind apparently when the slightest accident would have made her so. At such a moment it is advisable for the enterprising Impresario (if he happen to be travelling with the party) to keep out of the way. His presence might have an irritating influence upon his prima donna, he being looked upon as the sole cause of all the inconvenience and annoyance. It is for his benefit alone that all the trouble is incurred; moreover, he it is who arranges the departure of the train at such an unreasonable time; he is also to blame if the waiters are not prompt in their attention, and it is his fault and none other's, if the eggs are boiled too hard. Yes, my dear friend, for your own peace of mind, and the tranquillity of everybody concerned, it is better you should avoid meeting Lucrezia under such circumstances. Leave her alone, and she will eat her breakfast quietly, and be quite herself again by twelve o'clock. Gennaro, of course, was the last to appear. As usual, he had given himself so many minutes to dress, so many to take a cup of tea, and had timed the distance from the hotel to the railway station to the greatest nicety. He came into the room for his cup of tea, when everybody else was ready to start, and sat down to table with his watch before him, determined not to be hurried. The party moved off in detachments, and finally all reached the railway station. Here they were joined by the manager of the Theatre Royal and his body of retainers, consisting of choristers, musicians, scene painters, one or two trusty box-keepers, and his private secretary,— the latter, a very remarkable person, well deserving especial notice. The private secretary in this, as in a former instance, was of the gentler sex. Why theatrical managers generally employ female secretaries, is a question which I have not been able to answer to my own satisfaction. She was middle aged, or rather of that age which defies a definite opinion. From her appearance she might in her youth have been some theatrical property, or pantomime trick which the manager had made serviceable when no longer useful on the stage. Her occupation during the day (at least I never found her doing anything else) was to count the checks and receipts of the night before. With what patience she used to pick up those metal counters, and pile them into so many little hillocks along the manager's table! At night she wandered about the stage, as gaoler of the private boxes, the keys of which used to hang in a tremendous bunch from her waistband, and rattle fearfully. She was an important person, that private secretary on an opera night, when she had it in her power to pass you on to the stage to have a look at the Italians. At least so thought, I dare say, many a young, theatre-going Hibernian, who fostered a hopeless passion for the prima donna of his choice. The secretary at the railway station seemed as if she missed her daily checks, or rather the counting of them, for she had brought them with her. They were in a tin box which the good soul guarded most carefully. It might have contained so many golden coins, such was the attention with which she looked after it. There was a great crowd and great confusion at the railway, the prima donna's many prodigious trunks, bigger than any I ever saw before or since, each one large enough to live in, the cases containing the theatrical dresses, numerous stage properties, and choice bits of scenery not to be found in Cork, and which seemed ashamed to be seen by daylight, to say nothing of the double basses and other trifles, made the personal baggage of the opera party most formidable, and were the cause of a vast amount of swearing on the part of the porters. A compartment was secured for our tourists, who had provided themselves with draught-boards, chess-men, a pack of cards, and other means of amusement to pass the time away. The last bell was rung, everybody took their places, the train moved slowly out of the station. An hour did not elapse before anxiety was evinced by the party generally as to where they would lunch or dine. No satisfactory information could be obtained on the subject until the cook-medico-basso, who had taken a carriage for himself and his patient the baritone, in answer to inquiry, passed word that he, in his capacity of purveyor to the party, had foreseen the necessity of refreshment on the road, and brought an ample stock of provisions. He ratified this statement by holding a roasted fowl and a mysterious paper-bag out of the window. This prudence met with great approbation, particularly from Amina's mamma, who twirled her thumbs and smiled happily, declaring the basso to be the most good-natured fellow in the world. She had had a better view of the fowl and the mysterious bag as they were held out of the window than the rest of the party. Any fear of starvation being thus removed, various games were commenced among the travellers. Gennaro set up his railway chess board and challenged Alphonso to a trial of skill, in which neither displayed any very great prowess, although both were as serious over the matter as though their lives depended upon the result. Gubetta and the Frenchman began a game at écarté, in which there was decided superiority evinced on the part of sallow face. Lucrezia looked on at the chess-board for a short time, but then went off into a doze, which lasted until it was disturbed by the fowl and mysterious bag being thrust in at the window from the next carriage by means of a stick. The games were at once abandoned in favour of the more substantial amusement thus offered. The fowl was forthwith torn limb from limb, and divided between the three ladies and Gennaro. The mysterious bag was opened, and found to contain the remains of what once had been a pigeon pasty, but now was an indescribable mass of jelly and pie-crust.

Digitized by Google

A request was passed to the basso for a fork. He had not got one, but handed out a bottle of claret instead, which was readily accepted, and drank out of a silver mug providentially found in Lucrezia's dressing-case.

The luncheon, notwithstanding the primitive mode in which it had been served, was a great success, and put everybody into good humour. Anima's mother declared she enjoyed it immensely, and in fact could not be persuaded to leave her chicken bones, which she took up a second time, having had a very fair share of the pigeon pie between whiles. At length everything was consumed, and nothing left of what the basso had provided except the greasy bag and the empty claret bottle. These were handed back to him in token of how his provisions had been appreciated. Eating being over, chess and écarté were again resumed, and lasted until the players were tired out and took to smoking instead.

In due time the train reached its destination. The party arrived at the Imperial Hotel, Cork, somewhat knocked up with their long journey from Dublin.

ANTBATER.

MUSICAL FESTIVAL AT BARMEN.*

THE taste for music has increased during the last ten years in the Wupperthal. When rebuilding the casino last year, Elberfeld did not forget a spacious concert-hall which was inaugurated by a two days' musical festival, and, on the 25th and 26th February of the present year, Barmen also opened a magnificent music-room, which forms part of the new building belonging to the Concordia Society, and is a great ornament to the town.

The hall has been erected at a cost of more than 40,000 thalers, which the society procured at only two per cent. interest. with a sinking-fund at one per cent., by means of contributions, and an increase in the rate of subscription. The most important feature in the hall is an organ at the end. This organ has four-and-twenty stops, three manuals and a pedal, and comes from the celebrated manufactory of Herren Ad. Ibach and Sons, in Barmen. It is a magnificent work, which alone cost six thousand thalers, the voluntary offering of the musical inhabitants of the town. Where a love for music contributes so liberally towards the prosperity of the art, we shall find, also, a conviction that the influence of music upon the heart and disposition must be numbered among the most efficacious instruments of education, civilisation, and that moral ennoblement of man, which, reposing upon the spirit and truth of Christianity, does not—by restricting itself to a dogged belief in the mere letter—forget love to one's fellow-creatures, or that delight in God's creations and in the Ideal, by means of which art raises us above everyday life.

The new hall is 103 feet long, 46 feet broad, and 35 feet high. It is built very tastefully, in the antique style, and when brilliantly illuminated by forty stars, each provided with eight gas burners, and suspended by a gilt pipe, produces a most striking effect on the spectator immediately he enters. If it were only ten or twelve feet longer, it would without doubt, be one of the very finest concert-rooms in Germany. There is, however, room enough, if such a course should be deemed advisable, to lengthen it at some future time. Its acoustic qualities, also, are so good, that in the adjoining smaller hall the music can be heard nearly as well as in the large hall itself. In a niche in the middle of the side wall, opposite the row of windows, there is a colossal bust of the King, upon a marble column. On either side there are two mirrors, eleven feet high, in gilt frames, the gift of a musical amateur, residing in France, but born in Barmen. The middle of the end wall is occupied by the organ, which is placed between two Corinthian columns. Five caryatides support the architrave, while between them are forty of the principal organ pipes, of English pewter. Directly opposite, and above the three entrances to the hall, there is a gallery, projecting from the wall, although only four or five feet.

The concert on Saturday, the 23rd February, commenced with Beethoven's overture, Zur Weihe des Hauses, Op. 124. After the overture, Herr C. Siebel spoke a prologue, in which he introduced the five priests of the temple of the German Muses: Bach, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, and referred, in very eloquent terms, to the object for which the hall was erected. Handel's Messiah was now given, in almost its entirety—only a few pieces being omitted—for the first time in Germany with an orchestra and organ accompaniment in a music-hall. Herr Kranse conducted, and, in the successful performances of one of the masterpieces of German composition, reaped the reward of his untiring efforts in the cause of art. Herr Carl Schneider, from Wiesbaden, Herr Schiffer, of Cologne, Mlle. Francisca Schreck, of Bonn, and Mlle. Marie Büschgens, of Crefeld, acquitted themselves admirably in the solo parts.

On Sunday, February 24th, the programme included Beethoven's Leonora Overture, C. M. von Weber's Jubel Overture, and songs by the soloists we have mentioned above. In addition to this, Franz Seiss played Mendelssohn's violin-concerto, and his younger brother, Isidor, the pianoforte-concerto, in E flat major, of C. M. von Weber.* The whole proceedings, on both days, went off with the greatest éclat.

* From the Niederrheinische Musik-Zietung.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

(Communicated.)

THE Annual General Meeting of the Society was held at Exeter Hall last week. The report stated that the amount received for subscriptions during the last year was 1505*l.* 14s. After allusion had been made to the increased regularity of attendance at rehearsals, which the committee considered indispensable to progress, the Orpheonist Concert was thus noticed:—

"A most interesting event, in connection with the last year's proceedings, was the concert, on the 29th of June, given by the Society to the Orpheonists of France. The members will, doubtless, have in their recollection, that this body of vocalists—mostly amateurs—visited England specially to give some of their part-song performances at the Crystal Palace. Numbering between 2000 and 3000, and selected from upwards of 160 of the Choral Societies of France—many coming from as far south as Lyons and Bordeaux—they produced an enthusiasm in the minds of the English people almost without parallel. This country not possessing any musical institutions supported by aid from the Government, the committee, considering that it would not be satisfactory to permit this large number of intelligent and enthusiastic votaries of the musical art to leave the country without some appropriate compliment, felt it incumbent upon the Sacred Harmonic Society, as occupying the leading musical position in the metropolis, to give a special performance, mostly of Handel's music, to their foreign fellow-lovers of the art, which took place in Exeter Hall, on Friday, 29th June. It is only requisite for the committee to remind the members of the extreme enthusiasm with which this performance was received by the Orpheonists, to induce a conviction that the occasion was one which commended itself to every one present, and, in the opinion of the committee, it was also one of the most gratifying events in the history of the Society."

The following allusions were made to the library:—

"The greatly increased extent of the library, together with the very considerable additions made during the last few years to the stock of orchestral music, having rendered the space hitherto occupied for their accommodation insufficient for that purpose, an extra room adjoining to the Society's offices in Exeter Hall has been taken and fitted up for the reception exclusively of the library, the cases formerly occupied by which are now appropriated to the orchestral music. It may not be out of place here to remind the members that, unlike the ordinary usage of Musical Societies, no portion of the scores and separate parts required for use in the orchestra at the Society's rehearsals and performances, is considered as belonging to the library, properly so called; but that the stock of orchestral music, and the very large and valuable assemblage of music and works

* The same which was recently performed by Miss Arabella Goddard at the first New Philharmonic Concert.

Digitized by Google

relating to music, commonly designated as 'The Library,' are completely distinct collections."

The choral practices of the "London Contingent," the famous 1600, naturally elicited remark:—

"Having in view the recurrence of a great musical festival in the year 1862, as alluded to in the last annual report, the Committee have continued the great choral meetings of the Handel Festival Choir. It is so manifest that the greatest possible advantage to future festivals must arise from the continued practice and association of this large body of choralists, that no further comment on the desirability of their continuance can be requisite. It is, however, important to note that great present advantage also results to the Society, from the opportunity gained of recruiting its ranks by selection from so large a body of vocalists. The knowledge which the vocal superintendents acquire of the capabilities of those intrusted to their supervision, enables them to make choice of thoroughly practised amateurs; and at no time have the great vocal rehearsals been of more general service to the Society than during the past year. At the beginning of the present season the lists of the 1600 members composing the choir were carefully revised, and all vacancies in the number filled up, after careful trial of each applicant. As this course has been rigidly followed since the establishment of the choir, it results that a degree of efficiency may be looked for in the coming festival far beyond that of its predecessors."

It then transpired that the Crystal Palace Handel Festival commemorations were likely to be constituted (like the provincial music meetings) triennial:—

"The mention of the choral rehearsals naturally leads to special reference to the great triennial musical festival which it is intended to hold at the Crystal Palace in the summer of next year, and with a view to which the rehearsals have been continued. It is with much pleasure the committee acquaint the members that the arrangements between their own body and the board of the Crystal Palace Company have within the last few days been completed, and that steps will at once be taken to place the subject under public notice. The committee of the society are, equally with the directors of the Crystal Palace, alive to the necessity for combined and strenuous exertion, in order, if possible, to render the festival of 1862 even still more successful that the festivals of 1857 and 1859. The committee feel that they have no easy task before them in attempting to outrival the 1859 festival. They are perfectly conscious that the efforts of the unparalleled body of musical executive talent then assembled to do honour to the mighty name of Handel, cannot easily be outvied. They have entire faith, however, that with the improved organisation brought about by long-continued association, from the general increased musical knowledge of those who may be chosen to take part in the festival, from the spread of musical societies in England and other countries, and from the experience gained by the committee in organising the three memorable choral events of the age, viz., the opening of the Crystal Palace in 1854, and the Handel festivals of 1857 and of 1859, far greater musical efficiency may be realised than on any previous occasion. The acoustical arrangements of the centre transept of the Crystal Palace—immensely improved as they were in 1859—are still capable of further development. When these shall have been perfected, there exists no doubt whatever in the minds of the committee that, aided by the indomitable energy and the unrivalled talent of their conductor, the coming festival will be worthy of the memorable year in which it is to be held, and the members of the Sacred Harmonic Society may be led confidently to anticipate that they will be able to offer to the representatives of the nations assembled at the International Exhibition, in 1862, such a series of musical representations as could be offered in no other country or place."

More about the International Exhibition:—

"The members of the Society have, no doubt, in their recollection, the vote of the special general meeting held in May last, by which the the sum of 1000*l.* was agreed to be guaranteed to the commissioners of the International Exhibition of 1862. All preliminaries having been arranged, the deed of guarantee has been duly signed by the treasurer, on behalf of the Society; and it is with pleasure the committee are able to announce that the amount of the guarantee fund now exceeds the sum of 325,000*l.*

* * * * * * * * *

"The committee, in allusion to the announcements which have been made public as to the recognition of music as an art in the International Exhibition of 1862, state their opinion to be, so far as the views of the promoters of the exhibition could be ascertained, that no satisfactory issue would be likely to follow the proposed attempt, particularly if it was intended to undertake musical performances concurrently with the exhibition. The committee appeal to the experience they have gained in musical arrangements generally during the past quarter of a century as justifying them in thus early expressing their opinion."

The success of Elijah last year warrants the production of the Creation on the same scale:—

"The committee beg to announce that, with a view to keeping alive the interest in the 1862 festival, they have made arrangements with the directors of the Crystal Palace for a great performance of the Creation, on Wednesday, 1st May, on a similar scale to the performance of Elijah last May. And they indulge the anticipation that as great an amount of success will attend the proposed performance as resulted from that of last year."

The audited accounts of the Society for the past year were found to include, on the payment side of the account, some unusual items of expenditure (beyond the ordinary annual expenses), viz:—

	£	s.	d.
Purchase of £1000 Consols for Benevolent Fund, per vote of General Meeting	948	15	0
Purchase of Handel Statuettes for Festival Committee, per vote of General Meeting	315	0	0
New Cushions for Reserved Seats	309	1	10
Fittings and Furniture for New Library with Office Expenses, &c.	265	10	9
	£1,838	7	7

This extra expenditure had occasioned a necessity for selling out during the past year 1000*l.* Consols, part of the Society's invested stock. The balance in hand at the commencement of the account was 1,534*l.* 9*s.* 11*d.* After payment of the entire expenses of the year, including those of a special nature above mentioned, the balance in hand at the close of the year was 421*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.* Independently of which balance, the property of the Society might be estimated as follows, viz.:—

Stock in the public funds—	£	s.	d.
New 3 per Cents.	1,750	0	0
Three per Cent. Consols	2,250	0	0
	4,000	0	0
Estimated value of Library, Stock of Music, Copyrights, Furniture, Fittings, &c.	4,000	0	0
	£8,000	0	0

* * * * * * * *

After the usual complimentary votes to the officers of the Society and the election of the committee, a special resolution was passed, voting one hundred guineas to the Hullah Testimonial Fund.

Miss Louisa Pyne's Benefit.—In our notice of Miss Pyne's benefit last week, the name of Mr. Harrison was, by a typographical error, printed for that of St. Albyn, whose performance of the part of Tonio, in the Daughter of the Regiment, obtained him such unanimous and well-merited applause.

Madame Rosa Csillag.—This eminent artist has arrived in London, to fulfil her engagement at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden. The Viennese papers speak of her last appearance at the Kärntnerthor Theatre, in Trovatore, on Saturday last, as a remarkable scene of public excitement and expression of regret at the departure of such a favourite. On this occasion it would appear that all "rules and regulations" were set at defiance, contrary to the laws of the Imperial Theatres, which forbid any artist "de reparaître après la fin du spectacle sous quelque pretexte que ce soit, et surtout d'adresser la parole au public." (Art. XIX.) Mad. Csillag was recalled innumerable times after the opera, and in a short speech, almost inaudible from her emotion, bade farewell to an audience before whom she made her first appearance on any stage, about ten years ago, and since which her name has always been the most attractive of the artists forming the Opera Company at the Kärntnerthor Theatre.

From a Daventry journal we learn that Mr. Walter Tilney, a pupil of Mr. Sparks of Leeds, has just been appointed organist and choir-master of the parish church and of St. James's.

Digitized by Google

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF

MR. CHARLES HALLÉ.

THE SIXTEENTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON

(57TH CONCERT IN ST. JAMES'S HALL)

WILL TAKE PLACE

ON MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 8, 1861,

The Programme, Vocal and Instrumental, will again be selected from the Works of

VARIOUS COMPOSERS.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Quartet in E major, Op. 59, MM. VIEUXTEMPS, RIES, SCHREURS, and PAQUE—Haydn; Song, "Now summer hath departed," Miss BANKS—Dussek; Song, "Dalla sua pace." Mr. SIMS REEVES—Mozart; Sonata Appassionata, Op. 57, Mr. CHARLES HALLE—Beethoven.

PART II.—Sonata in F, Op. 24, for Violin and Pianoforte, Mr. CHARLES HALLE and M. VIEUXTEMPS—Beethoven; Song, "The Hunter's Song," Mr. SIMS REEVES—Mendelssohn; Impromptu in B flat—Schubert; Valse in A flat, Mr. CHARLES HALLE—Chopin; Song, "Ave Maria," Miss BANKS—Schubert; Quartet for Pianoforte, Violin, Viola, and Violoncello, Mr. CHARLES HALLE, M. VIEUXTEMPS, M. SCHREURS, and M. PAQUE—Mozart.

Conductor — MR. BENEDICT.

To commence at Eight o'clock precisely.

Front Sofa Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Sofa Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Unreserved Seats, 1s.

Tickets of Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street; Cramer, Beale, and Chappell, 201 Regent Street; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48 Cheapside; Mr. Austin, at St. James's Hall; and of the principal musicsellers.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—MR. CHARLES HALLE'S BEETHOVEN RECITALS.—Mr. Charles Hallé begs to announce that he intends giving EIGHT PERFORMANCES of CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC, in the large Room of St. James's Hall, on the afternoons of the subjoined dates:—Friday, May 17th; Friday, May 24th; Friday, May 31st; Friday, June 7th; Friday, June 14th; Friday, June 21st; Friday, June 28th; and Friday, July 5th.—To commence each day at Three o'clock precisely.

The Programmes will be exclusively devoted to the Sonatas composed by Beethoven, for Pianoforte without accompaniments—the whole to be introduced in regular succession, according to the original order of their publication, for which the numbered "Operas" respectively assigned to them are warrants. The universal popularity of these works in England, as elsewhere, and their admitted superiority to all other compositions of the class to which they belong, support Mr. Hallé in the belief that such an uninterrupted presentation of the entire series may elicit the attention both of students and of connoisseurs. Many of the Sonatas never having been publicly performed, though familiar to professors, are unknown to the majority of amateurs; and some of these are quite as worthy admiration as others which, owing to their frequent appearance in concert programmes, have obtained unanimous acceptance.

As exemplifications of the gradual advance of their composer's talent, from its early stages to its ripe maturity, the Pianoforte Sonatas of Beethoven may be consulted as advantageously as the Quartets or the Orchestral Symphonies. They begin at the commencement of his "First" manner, play a very conspicuous part in his "Second," and extend far into the meridian of his "Third." No less than Thirty-two in number, there are enough of them to illustrate, more or less pointedly, every phase of the great musician's artistic progress; and, if merely regarded as a series of compositions for a single instrument, in variety, beauty, and originality, they stand wholly unparalleled.

At each of the Eight Performances two Vocal Pieces will be introduced. The Programmes will contain descriptions, historical and analytical, of the Sonatas as they occur. The object aimed at in these descriptions—from which criticism will, as a matter of course, be excluded—is not to guide the taste, but to assist the appreciation of the audience.

Prices of Admission:—Sofa Stalls (numbered and reserved), for the series, 2*l.* 2s.; single ticket, 10s. 6d. Reserved Seats (Balcony and Area) for the series, 1*l.* 11s. 6d.; single ticket, 5s. Unreserved Seats, for the series, 1*l.*; single ticket, 3s.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.—FIRST NIGHT OF THE SEASON.

On TUESDAY next, April 2,

LE PROPHETE.

Principal Characters by Mad. CSILLAG and Mlle. CORBARI, Signor TAGLIAFICO, ZELGAR, NERI BARALDI POLONINI, ROSSI, LUCCHESI and TAMBERLIK.

The Opera commences at half-past 8.

To Correspondents.

E. W. F.—Next week.

Death.

On Tuesday, the 26th inst., at 22 Warwick Street, Regent Street, Henri Laurent, of atrophy, in the 34th year of his age.

NOTICES.

To ADVERTISERS.—Advertisers are informed, that for the future the Advertising Agency of the THE MUSICAL WORLD is established at the Magazine of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements can be received as late as Three o'Clock P.M., on Fridays—but not later. Payment on delivery.

Terms { Three lines and under ... ... 2s. 6d. / Every additional 10 words ... ... 6d.

To PUBLISHERS AND COMPOSERS.—All Music for Review in THE MUSICAL WORLD must henceforward be forwarded to the Editor, care of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street. A List of every Piece sent for Review will appear on the Saturday following in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

To CONCERT GIVERS.—No Benefit-Concert, or Musical Performance, except of general interest, unless previously Advertised, can be reported in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, MARCH 30, 1861.

THE question of theatres versus music-halls appears to be set at rest for the present by Mr. Morton's withdrawal of his notice of appeal from the decision of the Lambeth magistrate. It is evidently illegal to play pantomimes at Canterbury Hall, and accordingly no more "Enchanted Hashes" will be served up by the spirited proprietor of that establishment to his patrons; or, at all events, not until next Christmas, when it is just possible that the whole dispute will be renewed. In the meanwhile let us try and understand what the quarrel has been all about, and who has had the right and who the wrong side in it.

We find, from a recently-published letter of the plaintiff, in the case of Webster v. Morton, that "the summons was originally taken out to prevent the encroachment of saloons and music-halls on the exclusive rights of theatres, where," adds our beloved Benjamin, "the source of profit almost entirely arises from the permitting smoking and drinking."

"What! in theatres? smoking and drinking in theatres?" the reader naturally exclaims.

No! for a somewhat explanatory "which" follows, and certainly not one moment before it was wanted.

"Which," says the amiable adversary of Morton, "cannot take place in a theatre, nor is it desirable."

It is in saloons and music-halls, then, that smoking and drinking take place, and we think the representative of the London managers might as well have said so plainly and at once.

"I wish it to be clearly understood," continues the author of the letter in question, "that in proceeding against Mr. Morton, it was not because he was by any means the most offending against the law, but from his being the head of those species of establishments, in the same way that my name was used as being the oldest manager. Some music-halls and saloons have—though apparently not known to one gentleman who has written on the subject—not only acted regular farces, dog-melodramas, &c., but have expensive scenery, and were preparing to proceed much further; hence the reason of managers moving to protect their rights."

Here the question at issue between Mr. Webster and Mr. Morton is fairly defined. Are persons who hold no theatrical licenses justified in giving theatrical performances? The law can only answer in the negative; but then another question presents itself, namely: "What constitutes a theatrical performance?" Certainly not the mere telling of a story, nor the exhibition of character by means of dialogue. Scenery, appropriate costumes, and all the external means usually employed to produce stage illusion, seem to us to be essential in a theatrical representation; and we are assured that, as a rule, the performances at music-halls (which, as they consist chiefly of operatic selections, ought to annoy, if any one, not our dramatic but our operatic managers) take place without either.

Digitized by Google

These music-halls seem to us to stand midway between regular taverns on the one hand, and theatres and concert-rooms on the other; and the important question to consider is, whether they take away more persons from the former or from the latter places of entertainment. If from the former, they do positive good; if from the latter, they just as certainly do harm. The matter cannot be decided experimentally; at least, it would be impossible for a Committee of Inquiry to institute an effective examination into the previous festive habits of the present habitués of music-halls; and, judging from our own circle of acquaintances, we can only say, that we never knew any one who went more than once to a music-hall, and that once purely as a matter of curiosity. We can understand, however, that a man wishing to spend a portion of his evening in smoking and drinking would rather, in a great many cases, take his glass of grog and his cigar at Weston's or the Canterbury than at some ordinary unmusical "public;" though we can*not* understand a man wishing to see Mr. Fechter at the Princess's in Hamlet, or Mr. Boucicault at the Adelphi in the Colleen Bawn, and being kept away from either of those performances by the attractions of a music-hall. Doubtless, an evening at a music-hall would be preferable to an evening at Drury Lane if nothing but Savannah was to be performed, or at the Haymarket if the principal piece in the playbill was the Babes in the Wood; but so also would be stopping at home. Otherwise, though no great admirers of what are called "progress principles," nor of those who profess them, we fully believe that, in art, those who have once acquired a taste, however slight, for the good, are not afterwards to be satisfied with the bad; and that the cultivator of art, whether as a producer or as an appreciator, rises as surely from good to better, as the man who is addicted to vice sinks from bad to worse. We do not believe that Weston's or the Canterbury Hall will produce a large class of refined amateurs either of music or of the drama; but a few, enjoying the tolerably good performances of operatic pieces that, we understand, may be heard at those establishments, will, doubtless, from time to time, be led to go to the Italian Opera, where they may hear them played and sung to perfection. On the other hand, we cannot imagine any frequenter of the Italian Opera being tempted from such a performance (we will say) as we shall soon be able to hear in London of Guillaume Tell, by the ignoble inducement of a glass of brandy and water and a bad cigar (the cigars are sure to be bad), to be taken simultaneously with ill-assorted and indifferent music.

However, let us not be too hard on the artists engaged at these halls, many of whom, we are assured, possess considerable merit. Next week we shall probably go and hear some of them, and, in the meanwhile, we may remark that, if the singers and musicians of establishments where operas by Donizetti, Meyerbeer, and Verdi are executed—according to some trustworthy accounts that have reached us—very creditably and correctly, but where they are, at all events, executed somehow, so as to call forth the applause of audiences of a thousand and fifteen hundred people;—if these singers and musicians, we say, are not worth listening to, then the myriads of amateurs with which London is infested, and of which every house possesses at least one specimen, ought to close their pianos and shut their mouths for ever and ever. It has often occurred to us that it is better to hear no music at all than to hear music only indifferently performed; but the enormous majority of mankind are decidedly of a very different opinion, and the performances at music-halls must at least be a great improvement on ninety-nine out of a hundred that are to be heard in private drawing-rooms.

We shall return to the subject next week, and in the meanwhile we strongly recommend any reader who, some Monday evening, may wish to devote a couple of shillings or so to smoking, drinking, and music, not to take them all three together at a music-hall, but to go, from eight to ten, to the Monday Popular Concerts, where he will hear the best chamber music possible, and afterwards to proceed to a respectable coffee-room, and there smoke and drink as much and as long as he can continue to do with his remaining twelvepence. A better plan still would, of course, be for him to save his remaining twelvepence for the concert of the Monday following.

FOR the first time since Herr Richard Wagner began to preach the "Art-work of the Future," he has made concessions.

In the opening scene of the second act of Tannhäuser, there is an air, sung by a herdsman, while Tannhäuser (and the audience?) are asleep. After the air sung by the herdsman comes (or came) a trait de chalumeau, executed upon the oboe, in which the learned M. Fiorentino detected a resemblance to a chansonnette—by who knows what composer of vaudevilles?—and familiar to the "gamins de Paris" as "J'ai du bon tabac dans ma tabatière." In the finale to the second act there is (or was) a "trait de violons" (we quote M. Paul Smith d'Edouard de Monnaie), "éclatant dans les hauteurs de la chanterelle—like the last cry of an animal passing from life to death." In the finale to Act I., there is (or was) a "meute (a pack) de chiens" (of dogs). In the third act there is (or was) a re-apparition of Venus.

Well, on the night of the first representation of Tannhäuser, at the Imperial Opera in Paris, the "trait de chalumeau," which reminded M. Fiorentino of "J'ai du bon tabac," &c., the "trait de violon," which reminded M. Smith of a moribund pig, the "meute de chiens," and the "re-apparition of Venus," caused the audience to laugh—creating, in short, infinite merriment through the house. At divers rehearsals the excision of these same "traits" had been strenuously advocated; but the preacher of the "Art-work of the Future" was inexorable. He would consent to no changes, to no omissions. The evening of the first performance found him equally entêté; but the "lendemain," after a night's feverish reflection, found him softer. He yielded, in fact. The peccant "traits" were "biffés." Large curtailments, moreover, were practised in various morceaux. Lastly, a curtain of print gauze was dispensed with.

To what end were all these concessions made? The learned M. Fiorentino prophesied that they would be made; but no German or Germanised-Frenchman in Paris believed him. Nay, it was boldly stated that Herr Wagner had boldly stated that he would sooner allow his works to perish than his principles ("Périssent mes ouvrages plutôt que mes principes!") Nevertheless M. Fiorentino proffered a wager.

Digitized by Google

"I will bet" (said he) "Don Juan, Fidelio, Les deux Journées, Der Freischütz, Il Barbière, Guillaume Tell, Masaniello, and the Huguenots, against the Fliegender Holländer, Tannhäuser, Lohengrin, Tristan und Iseult and the Niebelungen (with which last M. Fiorentino is not yet intimately acquainted), that at the second performance the 'trait de chalumeau,' and that incredible fusée de violons, which at the first excited Homeric hilarity, will be suppressed." They were suppressed; and if any one had clenched M. Fiorentino's proffered fist, M. Fiorentino would have won his wager; but as no one did, he didn't — consoling himself, nevertheless, with the certainty of not having lost it.

"Tout aumônier est plus hardi qu'un page."

M. Paul de Saint Victor would not have presumed to offer such a wager; nor the editor of La France Musicale; nor M. Durillon d'Engelure; nor M. If. Was there, peradventure, a secret understanding between Herr Wagner and M. Fiorentino, that M. Fiorentino should publicly suggest to Herr Wagner a "constitutional," which Herr Wagner should privately swallow, and then publicly exhibit its "effects"? M. de Villemessant might have enlightened us on this point; but M. de Villemessant has bestowed his dressing-gown upon M. Jouvin, his slippers upon M. Charles Monselet, his night-cap upon M. Jean Non-Jacques Rousseau. Il a bien fait.

Homme propose, Dieu dispose. Herr Wagner (for the first time), made concessions; but with what result? Read the subjoined compte rendu from the Révue et Gazette Musicale de Paris (March 24):—

"A second trial has come off, far from being more successful than the first. On the contrary, the public disapprobation was manifested with increased energy, and we do not recollect such another evening in the arena, ordinary so calm and serene, of our Grand Opera. We coveted a decisive judgment, and begged the judges to preserve a grave demeanour; but advice of this kind is easier to give than take. True that we can manage to dispense with hissing; but to avoid laughing is another affair; and, on the very first night, we involuntarily yielded more than once to the feeling which had irresistibly laid hold of the entire audience. On the second night precautions had been taken to guard against such inconvenient manifestations. The oboe solo after the 'Herdsman's song,'* the redoubtable trait de violons, the pack of hounds, at the end of Act. I., and the re-apparition of Venus in the third were one and all suppressed. Curtailments, too, had been effected in various pieces, and the rose gauze curtain (so decorously shutting out a logical but undramatic contingency) sent back to the property-room. But, alas! nothing could save Tannhäuser. This time there was less laughter, perhaps, but a great deal more hissing; and for a plain reason —the applauders (claque?) being numerous, the vigour of the disapprobation was regulated by that of the approval.

. . . . . "We have been assured, nevertheless, that Richard Wagner continues obstinate — attributes the check he has received in Paris to a cabal organised against him by his enemies. In his double capacity of poet and composer, the author of Tannhäuser is, doubtless, furnished with a double dose of pride, and should, therefore, perhaps, be accorded a double amount of indulgence. This last we willingly extend —nay, we can even pity him, for we know of nothing more sad and hopeless than the fatuity, too common now-a-days, which induces authors to contemplate and admire themselves in their works, and to pronounce in a tone of sovereign authority, without the slightest deference to public opinion, that those works are good. Et vidit quod esset bonum.

"The second performance of Tannhäuser merely served to bring out in still bolder relief the talent and courage of the singers, who had to answer in person for the sins of the composer. The tenor, M. Niemann, especially distinguished himself in this painful struggle, and the audience took care to make him understand his reputation was not at stake. Mads. Tedesco and Marie Sax, MM. Morelli, Cazeaux, Coulon, and the rest, equally deserved protection from the storm of disapprobation which, even the august presence of their majesties, the emperor and empress, was powerless to allay.

"PAUL SMITH."

Well did Herr Wagner designate the Parisians "those unbelieving and thick-headed people," &c. This was in his chapter on Berlioz, in the famous book called Oper und Drama, a translation of which, from the pen of Mr. J. V. Bridgman (most impartial of translators), appeared in the independent columns of the MUSICAL WORLD. By the way, there was a passage in this chapter which we remember to have greatly struck us at the time. It related to Berlioz:—

"It certainly was not the reputation of a mere mechanical inventor that excited Berlioz at the beginning of his career. A really artistic impulse lived within him, and this impulse was burning and consuming in its nature. That in order to satisfy this impulse, by means of what was unhealthy and inhuman in the tendency, we have already discussed minutely, he should have been driven to such a length, that as an artist he must perish in mechanics, and as a supernatural fantastic enthusiast, sink into an ell-engulphing materialism — this, besides setting him up as a warning, renders him so much the more lamentable example, inasmuch as, even at the present day, he is still devoured by really artistic yearning, while he already lies irretrievably buried beneath the ruins of his own machines." (Opera and Drama, Book i. chap. 5).

Might not the foregoing, by a slight application of the "tu quoque" be reasonably applied by Berlioz to Herr Wagner himself?

OUR well-informed contemporary, the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung, returns again, in his number of March, to the subject of Beethoven's Prometheus. We translate as much of his article as bears immediately on the matter under consideration:—

"The first pianoforte arrangement of this music appeared at Vienna soon after the performance of the ballet (March 28th, 1801.) It now lies before us, and bears the title, 'Gli Uomini di Prometeo, Ballo per il Clavicembalo o Pianoforte, composto e dedicato a sua Altezza la Signora Principessa Lichnowsky, nata Contessa Thun, da Luigi van Beethoven. Opera 24. In Vienna presso Cappi e Cᵒ." Price 3 fl. 36 kr. (56 pages oblong folio).

"According to a letter, which accompanies the work, kindly sent to us by A. Schindler, Beethoven, when giving him this copy, said in in relation to its completeness, 'This is all.' That he," continues Schindler, "assisted in making this arrangement, I heard him say afterwards. And as to the bad style of the title-page, he himself scolded about it:—'Ballo per il clavicembalo!' In those days he was an out-and-out Italian, and continually 'breaking the language on the wheel;' it was in the 'Giulietta Guicciardi' epoch, 1801. Our thanks are due to M. Thayer for certainty in regard to the year of Beethoven's life in which that catastrophe fell, the same in which the three letters to the beloved one were written, letters which have for date only the day of the month, but not the year. Thayer has examined all sorts of church records in Vienna for the year and day of the marriage of Giulietta with Count Gallenberg, and discovered that it took place in 1801. "Hitherto this date has been given much later—as 1805 or 1806: Schindler, also, in the new edition of his work, is of opinion that it was in 1803. According to Thayer's discovery, then, it was in Beethoven's thirty-first year. (Compare Schindler, 3d edition, vol. i. page 98 et seq.)

"The opus number, 24, on the title of the pianoforte arrangement, gives us also a clue to the time when the Prometheus was composed (the number in the catalogues of Beethoven's works being given falsely Op. 43). Moreover, the sonata in F, for pianoforte and violin, appears as Op. 24, and in fact appeared — published by Mollo in Vienna — also in 1801.

"The ballad, then, belongs to the period of Op. 20 (the septet in E b); Op. 21 (the symphony in C); Op. 22 (the sonata for pianoforte in B b); Op. 23 (sonata for pianoforte and violin in A minor); Op. 24 (already mentioned); Op. 25 (serenade for flute, violin, and viola); Op. 26 (the sonata for pianoforte in A b); Op. 27 (the two sonatas 'quasi fantasia,' of which No. 2 is that in C ♯ minor:—'Alla Contessa Giulietta Guicciardi,' familiarly known as the Mondschein's-sonata."*)

* M. Fiorentino's "trait de chalumeau."

* The Moonlight Sonata.

Digitized by Google

M. Thayer, however, who has seen the remarks of our contemporary, requests us to correct a misconception, which appears in the above-cited portion of Herr Schindler's letter to the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung. "If Herr Schindler" (he writes) "will turn again to the notes of our conversations last autumn in Bockenheim, he will see that he has confounded the date of the letters to Julia Guicciardi, which were written in the summer of 1801, with that of her marriage to Count Gallenberg, which was celebrated, Nov. 3, 1803, a few days before she had completed her nineteenth year. Whatever may be the true date of the 'catastrophe'—as Herr Schindler names it—that is, the rejection of Beethoven for Gallenberg by the young lady, the composer appears to have been upon good terms with the family down to June or July in 1803, if his going with the once celebrated mulatto violinist, Bridgtower, to dine with a Countess Guicciardi be any proof of this. I know of no family in Vienna of that name, at the time, except the one to which Julia belonged."

Crystal Palace.—The order which prohibited the opening of the theatres in London on Saturday se'nnight, in consequence of the death of the Duchess of Kent, did not extend to the Palace at Norwood, for the Saturday concert took place as usual. The feature of the programme was a pianoforte concert by Mr. Henry Baumer, a King's Scholar of the Royal Academy, a selection from an oratorio of whom occasionally is performed at the Crystal Palace orchestral concerts. A composer naturally takes all possible pains with the performance of his own work, but the firm, clear, and decided pianoforte playing of Mr. Baumer should not be passed over without a word of acknowledgment. The pièce de resistance of the concert was Schumann's fourth symphony in D minor. With many gleams of the poetic beauty which is never totally absent in Schumann, the fourth symphony is less satisfactory than the first—in B flat—which Mendelssohn is said to have highly esteemed, and the performanee of which he once conducted. Mendelssohn's glorious violin concerto was played in masterly style by M. Sainton, whose unaffected expression—untainted as it is by the slightest tinge of exaggeration—makes us listen to his performance with a pleasure more completely unalloyed than that excited by many more celebrated virtuosi. M. Sainton also played his own Rigoletto fantasia, which is always well received, because the charming melodies are allowed to tell their tale in all their original simplicity. The fresh voice of Miss Emily Spiller, a débutante, gained her an encore in Schloesser's "Queen of the Sea;" and she also sang the scena, "Ah! fors è lui." Madame Sainton-Dolby showed such good taste in selecting Haydn's lovely "Spirit song," that we were surprised at her choosing "The skipper and his boy," the absurdity of which even fine singing can never conceal. The orchestra, under Mr. Mann's direction, performed with great care, although want of sufficient rehearsal was at times perceptible. The number of visitors amounted to 2,966.

The programme of Saturday's concert was as brief as that of the previous Saturday was long. There was no concerto, but one overture; and the only instrumental music in addition to the symphony—Haydn's, in E flat—was two violin solos, by Mr. H. Weist Hill, the first, a "Souvenir de Verdi," from Il Trovatore, the latter an impromptu on "The power of love." Mr. Hill was loudly applauded at the conclusion. The overture, Mendelssohn's "Calm sea and prosperous voyage," was splendidly played, but the effect of the opening movement was marred by what a humorous contemporary denominates the "audiential exodus." The vocalists were Miss Louisa Pyne—who, strange to say, sang for the first time at the Crystal Palace—and Mr. Henry Haigh. The lady sang the scena from Lurline and the ballad from Bianca, "In vain I strive," creating much enthusiasm, especially in the scena, which she sang superlatively. Mr. Henry Haigh sang Mercadante's "Bella adorata," from Il Giuramento, and the serenade "Wake my love," from Giselle.

The Palace presented a scene of considerable activity during the week—Passion week. On Monday a selection of sacred music by Handel, including portions of the Funeral Anthem, the "Dead March" in Saul, the last part of the Messiah, &c.; on Tuesday, Elijah; on Wednesday, the Creation; and on Thursday, the Messiah. The rehearsal organ of the Sacred Harmonic Society, built by Mr. Walker, of Francis-street, Tottenham-court-road, removed from Exeter Hall for the occasion, and Miss Banks, Miss Laura Baxter, Miss Martin, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, Mr. Santley, &c., the principal vocalists. Good Friday is always a great day at the Crystal Palace. For the past two years upwards of 35,000 persons were present on the Good Fridays. A sacred concert, comprising an unusual number of the most celebrated and well-known pieces, took place yesterday, in the centre transept at three o'clock. Mr. Sims Reeves, Madame Rudersdorff, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Weiss, were the singers. Particulars in our next.

Hanover Square Rooms.—Mr. Frederic Penna, a pupil of Sir George Smart, and a barytone singer, commenced a series of three musical entertainments on Monday evening, at the above rooms, with a discourse on the "Oratorio composers of the 18th and 19th centuries, Handel, Haydn, Spohr and Mendelssohn." The discourse, partly critical and partly biographical, was illustrated by songs and recitations taken from the most popular works of the composers, and sung by Mr. Penna, whose voice is powerful and flexible, and who appears to have studied sacred vocalisation to some purpose. The illustrations were from Handel, "The people that walked in darkness" (the Messiah), "Why do the nations" (the Messiah), and "Honor and arms" (Samson); from Haydn, "Rolling in foaming billows," (the Creation), and "Now Heaven in fullest glory shone" (the Creation); from Spohr, "Tears and Sorrows" (the Crucifixion), and "Oh! what is man" (the Fall of Babylon); and from Mendelssohn, "Consume them all," (St. Paul) and "It is enough" (Elijah). No one will gainsay that this was a splendid selection, but all being bass songs gave somewhat of a monotonous tone to the illustrations. Mad. Penna accompanied the songs on the pianoforte very skilfully. The entertainment on Wednesday was entitled "Old friends and new acquaintance," and was more varied and discursive in its aim, having reference to composers of operas from Handel to Messrs. Balfe and Wallace, and including many of the most celebrated cantata and song writers. The profane lecture appeared to afford more gratification than the sacred, and was certainly more amusing. The illustrations, with two exceptions, were all good. The exceptions were "Oh! no, we never mention her," about the very poorest specimen extant of Henry Bishop's genius, and "When time hath bereft thee," which was not composed by Auber at all, but was constructed on a phrase from the overture to Gustavus by the late Mr. T. Cooke, and converted into a bass song for Mr. Henry Phillips. Mr. Penna's apology that there was no bass song in the opera of Gustavus was no extenuation, since he was not compelled to select from that opera. Why not sing Pietro's barcarole in Masaniello? In all other respects the discourse was excellent and exceedingly well delivered. To-night the lecture of Monday evening will be repeated, when the series will terminate.

The Vocal Association.—The second concert on Wednesday evening next, at St. James's Hall, promises to be extremely interesting. Mendelssohn's magnificent psalm, "Hear my prayer," will be performed, with Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington as principal soprano, and M. Lemmens, the justly celebrated organist, will accompany the psalm throughout. In addition to this, M. Lemmens is to perform a Fugue in C minor of his own composition. To conclude, M. Sainton and M. Benedict will perform Beethoven's Romance in F on the violin and pianoforte.

Sacred Harmonic Society.—The first public dinner of the Society will be held at St. James's Hall, on Wednesday, 24th April, Sir Joseph Paxton, M.P. in the chair, supported by a numerous and influential body of stewards. Beethoven's great Mass in D, which has been in active rehearsal for some months past, will be produced on Friday, 12th April.

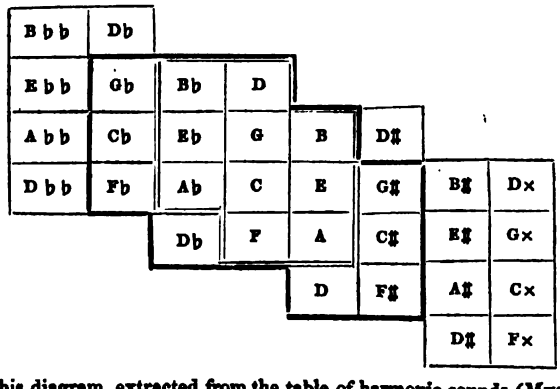
Princess's Theatre.—Mr. A. Harris, the respected lessee of this establishment, took his benefit on Saturday evening. The house was crowded in every part; and we need hardly say that the extraordinary performance of M. Fechter in Hamlet, the first three acts of which were given, excited the utmost enthusiasm.

Digitized by Google

Letters to the Editor.

THE THEORY OF ACCIDENTALS.

Sir,—In an investigation of the principles which govern the introduction of accidentals, either in melody or harmony, we shall be much assisted by a clear perception of the nature and properties of the primary and secondary sounds. The term "accidental" is here used to designate a sound not denoted by the usual signature of the key, or not pertaining to the diatonic scale, also the sign of elevation will be expressed by the word sharp, and the sign of depression by the word flat, the sign of restoration will not be accounted an accidental. In my letter on the theory of Harmonics it was shown that, discarding octaves, which may be considered merely as reproductions of the original sound, the first harmonic, or primary sound, is a perfect fifth above, and the second harmonic, or secondary sound, is a major third above the generating sound, and as these sounds become in a similar manner the generators of others, therefore taking C as a primary sound, a series of perfect fifths, as C, G, D, A, &c., is a series of primary sounds, and the sounds a major third above these, as E, B, F♯, &c. (also a series of perfect fifths), are secondary sounds as compared with the former series. Now, as the series C, G, D, &c., are secondary sounds as compared with the series a major third below them, as primaries, as A♭, E♭, B♭, &c., it follows that when C, G, D, &c., are primaries, E, B, F♯, &c., are positive secondary sounds, and A♭, E♭, B♭, are negative secondary sounds; whence it is evident that the secondary sounds are the thirds, major and minor, of the primary chords; the positive secondary sounds, being major thirds above the roots of the primary chords, belong to the major scale, and the negative secondary sounds, being major thirds below the fifths, or minor thirds above the roots of the primary chords, belong to the minor scale, the primary sounds being the same in both the major and minor scales. Now every diatonic scale consists of four primary, and three secondary sounds, the second primary sound being the first of the scale, key note, or tonic; thus F, C, G, D are the four primary sounds, and A, E, B the three secondary sounds of the scale of C major. The primary sounds have this peculiar property, in the relative tonic keys (as primaries), they become secondary sounds forming thirds of the primary chords; thus, in the key of A minor, related as tonic to C major, they are the thirds of the minor chords, and admit of being made sharp in the synonymous major chords, also in the key of A♭ major, related as tonic to C minor, they are the thirds of the major chords, and admit of being made flat in the synonymous minor chords; in like manner the secondary sounds become the primaries of the relative keys—these facts, as well as others, will be evident from a careful consideration of the following diagram, and admit of the clearest demonstration.



This diagram, extracted from the table of harmonic sounds (Musical World, June 30th, 1860) contains all the sounds related to the key of C as tonic, which lie between D♭♭ relative subdominant, and D× relative supertonic; the sounds within the darker lines are those of the key of C major, with its relative tonic key, A minor, and its major; the key of C minor with its relative tonic key, A♭ major, and its minor; those within the double lines are the keys of C major and minor only, which may serve as a model for the other keys, the order of the sounds being the same in all; whence it will be seen that F, C, G, the primary basis of the key of C, appear in both the relative tonic keys as secondary sounds, or thirds major and minor of the primary chords. Now, as the primary bases of any key are those of the subdominant, tonic, and dominant of that key, therefore all primary sounds which can possibly appear in connection with any key are those of the scales of the subdominant, tonic, and dominant; then connected with the key of C are the primary sounds B♭, F, C, G of the subdominant, F, C, G, D of the tonic, and C, G, D, A of the dominant, that is, they are B♭, F, C, G, D, A, a series of perfect fifths, and being the minor thirds of the, chords in the relative, are all the sounds upon which the accidental sharp can possibly occur, as B♮, F♯, C♯, G♯, D♯, A♯; of these sounds B♮ (derived from B♭ belonging to the key of F, the subdominant) is flatter in pitch in the ratio 80.81, than B in the key of C, and can only appear in connection with the subdominant harmony; moreover, as the notation of both these sounds is the same, it will never appear as an accidental. Also A♯ (derived from A belonging to the key of G, the dominant, which A is sharper in pitch in the ratio 81.80 than A in the key of C) can only appear in harmonics connected with the dominant; hence all the accidental sharps in the key of C major are F♯, C♯, G♯, D♯, A♯; and as A♯ can only appear in connection with the dominant harmony, the accidental sharps will generally fall upon F, C, G, D, the primary sounds of the key. In like manner the accidental flats will fall upon D, A, E, B, the primary sounds of the relative tonic key. In modulations to the keys of the dominant and subdominant, the F♯ and B♭ will not be the identical sounds of those above given; nevertheless, as the notation is the same, the rule may be said to include these sounds, otherwise they would appear as the signature of the new key, and thus not be accounted as accidentals. As these are all the accidentals which can occur in harmonics in immediate connection with the key of C major, consequently they are also those which appear in the relative tonic key, A minor; hence the accidentals belonging to a minor key are those of the major key, whose root is a minor third above that of the minor key. A knowledge of these principles is of importance in enabling us to determine, with certainty, the true ratios of the chromatic intervals, with respect to any given key, as well as the true sounds and correct notation of chords, in which these intervals occur; and also their derivation from the simple harmonies, as contained in the "Systems of Sounds," and thus account for the different effects of chords apparently the same. In the remarks contained in the thirteen concluding lines of my last letter (Musical World, Nov. 24), which were added at the last moment, and without due consideration, I find I have somewhat mixed up the two varieties of the chord of the added sixth, so that the meaning is very dubious, and the passage in other respects incorrect. Perhaps the simplest way of making a correction is to consider that portion of my letter as expunged, especially as I shall again have occasion to recur to the construction of the above-named chords.

I am, Sir, yours truly,

Cheetham Hill, Manchester,
March 14th, 1861.

W. W. Parkinson.

THURNHAM IN RE THURNHAM.

Sir,—I am not aware that my "Romanza" for violoncello and piano has been previously noticed, as supposed in your review of the same on Saturday last.

Certainly, I forwarded a copy of the work to your office for that purpose, some eight or ten months since, and as no notice appeared, I called your attention to it, in reply to which, you informed me (through your journal of Dec. 29th, 1860) "that the copy had been mislaid, but should be sought for immediately."

I think it right to mention this, after the way in which you have concluded your notice of my Romanza.

I am, Sir, yours truly,

Edward Thurnham.

Reigate, March 25th, 1861.

KITTY STEPHENS.

Sir,—I regret that there should have been an error in the copy of the acrostic I forwarded you. The sixth line should read, "Earth envy ends," instead of "Earth envy aids."—Yours respectfully, Louth, March 21st. Alfred Kew.

Birmingham Musical Festival.—The oratorios selected for the music meeting at Birmingham next August, writes Barror's Worcester Journal, are Mendelssohn's Elijah, Handel's Messiah, Beethoven's Grand Service in D, and a selection from Israel in Egypt, Haydn's Creation, Handel's Judas Maccabæus, and Handel's Samson. [This is the first time we ever heard a "Grand Service" and a "Selection" entitled oratorios. Ed.]

Advice to a Musician of the Future.—Try Bach.—Punch.

[Bach, we presume, to be pronounced Back, otherwise the pun will scarcely hold good.—Petipace.]

Digitized by Google

Provincial.

The Norfolk and Norwich papers speak in high terms of the second annual concert of the Norwich Volunteer Rifle Band, which took place in St. Andrew's Hall (March 5th), under the patronage of the officers of the corps, and the major and officers of the 10th Hussars. The Norfolk Chronicle says:—

"The fine band of the latter regiment took part in the performance—a special compliment to the Rifle Corps band, and an evidence of the entente cordiale between the two services. The hall was well filled. The Rifle Corps band opened the performance with Mendelssohn's 'Wedding March,' and after an interval of singing were followed by a selection from Der Freischütz by the 10th Hussars' band. Without instituting any comparison between the two bands, where a comparison would certainly be unfair to the younger one, it is sufficient to say that the volunteers acquitted themselves in a way which left no cause for them to feel ashamed. Their performance of the selection from Maritana was very effective, and warmly applauded. The second part was opened by the 10th Hussars' band with the overture to Zampa, and the same band also gave a selection from La Traviata. Among the other instrumental pieces was Pierson's 'Mariners of England,' which, as a part song, created such an impression at the late festival; and a lively composition by the talented bandmaster, Mr. Horace Hill, entitled the 'Norwich Volunteers' Galop,' in which was introduced a chorus of volunteers, sung by the band, with very good effect. The vocalists were Fraulein Malmene, Herr Malmene, and Mr. Proops. Fraulein Malmene, who on this occasion made her second public appearance before an English audience, is possessed of an excellent voice, of considerable sweetness and fulness, and will no doubt, with cultivation, being very young, become a vocalist of no mean order."

The Norfolk News is also very complimentary to the new singer:—

"This concert introduced two new vocalists into the Norwich orchestra, Herr Waldemar Malmene and his sister, Fraulein (or Miss) Hedwig Malmene. The former has rather a light bass voice, and is a most accomplished musician. He seems equally at home in German and English, and met with a deservedly warm reception. The lady has a soprano voice of much freedom and richness of tone. Her manner is modest and prepossessing, and she shared numerous encores with her brother."

At Manchester the "Undress Concerts" are growing rapidly into favour. At the concert, which took place on Wednesday the 20th instant, the programme comprised Haydn's symphony in E flat, Beethoven's Chorul Fantasia, Mozart's "Ave verum," choruses from Glück's Iphigenia and Armida, part-songs by Mendelssohn, "Impromptu and Mazurka" for pianoforte, by Chopin, the overtures to Egmont and Ruy Blas, and some vocal pieces. It was a good concert in many respects, and the performance was greatly enhanced by the engagement of Mr. Charles Hallé, who played the pianoforte part in the Choral Fantasia and Chopin's piece in the most admirable manner. The novelty of the evening was M. Garcia, a singer, who made his first appearance, and about whom the Manchester Weekly Times writes as follows:—

"M. Garcia is a young baritone, who we feel inclined to believe will some day win a share of that applause which the musical world has so long awarded to the Garcia family. This gentleman sang on three or four occasions recently at the Free Trade Hall Concerts, under the name of Sarti, and there gave considerable satisfaction to those who looked for good promise in so young a vocalist, rather than for an approach to perfect singing. That he has had good training there can be no doubt, and he possesses a voice fresh, pure in quality, and flexible; nor should we think that he is devoid of judgment and good taste, both of which—or, indeed, we may say all of which—time and study can scarcely fail to advance."

A correspondent from Bromley, St. Leonard, informs us that on Tuesday the 19th instant, seven candidates played in competition for the appointment of organist at the above-named parish, before the Rev. T. Driffield, rector of Bow, and two other judges:—No. 1, Mr. Barton; 2, Mr. J. R. Harris; 3, Mr. Rycroft; 4, Mr. Parsons; 5, Mr. Hill; 6, Miss Couves; 7, Mrs. Boswood. Miss Couves, who has been for the last five years organist of St. Saviour's, Chelsea, and who obtained two first-class certificates for harmony and composition and instrumental music, from Queen's College, London, was returned by the judges as the best performer, which decision the vestry confirmed at their meeting on Friday the 22nd inst., by electing the said Miss Couves to the office. The salary is 40*l.* per annum. Each candidate had to play:—1st, St. Bride's Tune, three times, with interludes; 2, Extempore; 3, Bach's fugue, No. 31, of the 48; 4, Psalm tune, melody only given; 5, Spohr's Quartet, C major (Adagio movement as a test of sight-reading; 6, "Sing unto God" (Judas) Handel

Correspondence from Reading yields us the following intelligence:—

"The South Berks Hunt dinner took place on Tuesday, March 12th. The banquet was of a recherché character, and gave much satisfaction to the guests. Mr. M. G. Thoyts was president, and Mr. T. Floyd vice-president. The grace, 'Non nobis,' having been sung on the removal of the cloth, the chairman gave 'The Queen,' which was followed by the National Anthem. The Windsor trio, consisting of Mr. Marriott (alto), Mr. Dyson (tenor), and Mr. Lambert (basso), were engaged for the vocal department. These gentlemen possess very fine voices, which blend effectively together. Their glees were given with a vigour, freshness, and precision we have seldom heard equalled. The contrast of the soft passages with the 'forte' was exquisite. The serenade, 'Maiden fair,' and the glees 'O Willie brew'd,' 'Life's a bumper,' and 'Mynheer van Dunck,' were among the gems of the evening in the concerted music. Mr. Dyson's 'Old Towler' and 'Excelsior' (by desire) were capitally rendered—the latter is always a trump card in his hands. It was applauded 'to the echo.' Mr. Lambert was enthusiastically applauded in the national song 'Soldiers, sailors, and volunteers,' and exhibited his wonted fire in 'The Knight's Vigil,' a bold and telling song, while Mr. Marriott's chaste singing 'Down where the blue bells grow,' and 'Sally in our alley,' met with the most hearty applause. Mr. Pearson presided in a highly satisfactory manner at the pianoforte, and the musical arrangements were under Mr. Dyson's direction. The company did not separate till a late hour."

The last Dublin Philharmonic Concert seems to have gone off well, if we may believe the Mail, and the report of our own correspondent. We can only find room for an extract or two:—

"The concert presented some instrumental compositions of great interest. Mendelssohn's symphony in C minor, now too much neglected, is a work of genius, and foretelling the future of the illustrious composer."

We entirely agree with the Mail, who severely criticises the execution of the first and last movements. The andante seems to have been more fortunate:—

"We are bound to say that the exquisite andante was rendered with much more delicacy; and the lights, and shades, and delicious phrases given to the wind instruments clearly revealed. Onslow's overture to Le Colporteur was played with much fervour, doing credit to orchestra and conductor. As the Philharmonic Society is the only exponent of first-class orchestral compositions in this country, the greater the excellence of the works produced, the more carefully should they be rehearsed."

No doubt. The miscellaneous items of the concert are unreservedly extolled:—

"Mr. Gerhard Taylor played two solos on the harp—one on themes from Dinorah, the other from La Traviata. Both exhibited rapidity of execution, delicacy of touch, and musicianlike treatment of the subjects. Herr Elsner's solo on the violoncello—on La Figlia—likewise demands special mention. This gentleman handles the instrument like a master, and all he does is intelligible and pleasing. Miss Julia Cruise's admirable rendering of the scena—written for poor Madame Bosio when she first appeared and charmed all the opera-goers of London—in Fra Diavolo; and Mr. R. Smith's excellent singing of Wallace's fine song, 'The Bell-ringer,' both deserve recording. Miss Clara McKenzie, who has a well-toned contralto voice, but little art, sang 'Se Romeo' and 'The Three Fishers.' Miss Emily Spiller, who really possesses a soprano voice, gave 'Ah fors e lui' with much expression; and though 'Sempre libera' was rather beyond her powers, she was recalled, and sang it again. She also sang Schloesser's pretty song, 'The Queen of the Sea,' with much charm of manner. There were some vocal quartets pleasingly rendered by Miss Cruise, Messrs. Dunne, R. Smith, and O'Rorke; and the company were 'played out' with Rossini's overture, Il Turco in Italia. Altogether the concert betokened progress, and showed that our 'Philharmonic' is still anxious to make known the works of the great orchestral writers, which would be unheard in Dublin but for its advocacy."

Digitized by Google

At the concluding concerts of the Choral Union of Glasgow a new cantata, by Mr. Lambeth, was the principal attraction, and was received with unbounded applause. Of the composition a Glasgow morning journal writes as follows:—

"The style is at once fresh and striking, and bears upon it the decided stamp of genius, from the first plaintive chords of the despairing Israelites to the fierce denunciation of Edom and Babylon, with which the cantata concludes. Dispensing with an overture, a symphony of but a few bars duration leads at once to the wail 'By the waters of Babylon' (in A minor), where is feelingly pourtrayed the woe and desolation into which the captives were plunged. To this succeeds a duet between the prisoners and the Babylonians, in which the latter insist upon the former singing the songs of Zion. A peculiar effect is here introduced through the bass taking up the strain 'Sing us one of the songs of Zion,' which ever and anon impetuously breaks in upon the lament, 'how shall we sing?' Indeed, this is one of the finest effects produced, and to it the chorus did ample justice, with due and proper regard to light and shade, the diminuendo from forte to pianissimo being especially well exemplified. The next little gem, although this time more from the beauty of the instrumentation, occurs in the passage 'If I prefer not thee, Jerusalem,' to which succeeds a strikingly bold and original chorus, 'Down with it to the ground;' but the culminating point is reached at the finale, 'Blessed shall he be who taketh thy children and dasheth them against the stones' (in A major). This one chorus more than any other in the work, will at once stamp the composer as a man of genius, one, in fact who has the real 'smeddum' in him. The treatment of the subject is vigorous yet appropriate, and the effect produced upon the audience by the rendering of the last four or five bars was evidence sufficient that within the mind of Mr. Lambeth is a mine of, as yet, undiscovered talent. Why has this gentleman allowed Psalm cxxxvii. to slumber so long in obscurity, and when are we to have produced his L'Allegro et Il Penseroso?" As a whole, the cantata was a triumphant success.

The rest of the programme comprised selections from Judas Maccabæus, the execution of which appears to have been highly creditable to the choir and band. The principal vocalists were Mad. Rudersdorff, Miss Kirk, Miss Campbell, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, Mr. John Morgan, and Mr. Winn, whose respective performances left nothing to criticise.

From our Leeds correspondent we learn that at a meeting of the orchestral committee last Saturday, Mr. Spark, organist of the Leeds Town Hall, was unanimously elected organist for the approaching festival. A meeting of the general committee was also held on the same day, when it was decided to hold the festival on the 3rd, 4th, 5th, and 6th days of September. The conductor elect (Dr. Bennett) is actively engaged in the arrangements for the festival; and as the guarantee fund already amounts to about 6000*l.*, success is looked upon as certain. It is feared, however, that the Royal Agricultural Show, which is to be held here in July, will militate somewhat against the pecuniary receipts of the Festival, for the inhabitants are looking forward to the show as the great event of the year, and will make doubtless free with their "holiday cash" at that period.

Royal Academy of Music. The first concert by the students, appropriated to what is called the Lent Term, was given at the institution, Tenterden Street, on Saturday afternoon, when the following programme was provided:—

Part I.

Funeral Anthem		Handel.
The 95th Psalm		Mendelssohn.
Rondo, for pianoforte, "Le Retour à Londres"		Hummel.
Recit.	(Mount of Olives)	Beethoven.
Solo, "Praise ye the Saviour's goodness."	(Mount of Olives)	Beethoven.
Chorus, "Be joyful, ye redeemed . (Mount of Olives)		Beethoven.

Part II.

Scena Cantante, for violin .	(A minor) .	Spohr.
Air, "Rejoice greatly." . .	(Messiah) .	Handel.
Adagio and last movement from Concerto in E flat, for pianoforte		Sterndale Bennett.
Recit.	(Jephtha) .	Handel.
Air, "Farewell, ye limped streams."
Sacred Cantata,		Spohr.
Conductor		Mr. Lucas.

This was a most admirable selection, irreproachable, indeed; nevertheless, we should like to have seen one or two compositions of the pupils among the rest. Having to speak of the performance only, little need be said, generally, except that nothing went amiss, and that Handel's Funeral Anthem, and Mendelssohn's setting of the 95th Psalm—two works by no means easy of execution—were very creditably rendered. In the former the quartet, "When the ear heard her," was sung by Misses Spence and Armytage, Messrs. Wheeler and Barnaclough; while the principal soloists in the latter were Misses Sellman and Poncione, Messrs. Wallace, Wells, and Wheeler. A very decided impression was produced by Miss Robertine Henderson in the air from the Mount of Olives, in which she revealed a charming voice and an admirably pure and fervid style, winning the universal suffrages of the audience. The young lady was no less successful in the air from Jephtha, which brought out the same excellent qualities. Miss Thompson, in Hummel's rondo, indicated so much talent that we entertain high expectations as to her future career. We particularly mention these young ladies, as the sensation they both created was quite unusual. Mr. Amor played Spohr's concerto very skilfully, and Mr. Westlake was as steady and careful as might be desired in the movements from Professor Bennett's too-much neglected concerto. There was a large attendance, and everybody seemed gratified; nevertheless, as we said before, we should like to have seen one or two compositions of the pupils in the programme.

Mr. Willy's Quartet Concerts.—The third concert, postponed from Wednesday, the 6th inst., was given on Wednesday week. The programme consisted of the following pieces:—

Quartet in C major, No. 75	Haydn.
Quartet in C major, No. 9	Beethoven.
Sonata in B flat, Op. 45	Mendelssohn.
Quartet in A major, No. 5	Mozart.

The quartets were played in an admirable manner by Messrs. Willy, Carrodus, Westlake, and Lidel; the finale, allegro molto of that of Beethoven (the third of the "Rasamowsky" set) being perfectly rendered. The sonata of Mendelssohn is one of the few works of its class left to us by the greatest composer of our generation; and the genius displayed in its ideas and mechanism heighten our frequently felt regret that he did not live longer and write more. The sonata, which is for pianoforte and violoncello, was played by Mrs. H. Webb and Herr Lidel. Mrs. Webb has appeared but seldom, and it has not till the present occasion been our privilege to hear her. She possesses an excellent touch, rapid and facile execution, and musicianly reading and interpretation; and perseverance in the course of study, which has carried her so far, will assure her a place in the foremost rank of instrumentalists of our day. The violoncello playing of Herr Lidel is well known for purity of tone and expression, and it was exhibited to admiration in the sonata. Miss Hughes was the vocalist, and did her duty well.

Opening of the Oxford Hall, Oxford Street.—We say "Oxford Hall," although Mr. Morton chooses the gentish abbreviation of "The Oxford." The new Music Hall in Oxford Street was inaugurated on Wednesday evening with a concert, in which Miss Parepa, Messrs. Swift, Santley, Grattan Kelly, Genge, and sundry ladies and gentlemen, vocalists and instrumentalists, belonging to the Canterbury Hall company, assisted. The performance commenced with the "National Anthem," sung by the whole of the artists, Miss Parepa and Mr. Swift taking the solos, which was received with thunders of applause. The programme was miscellaneous, made up of the most popular pieces from popular operas; Mr. E. L. Hime accompanied on the pianoforte; and Mr. Jonghmans conducted. The new hall is remarkably handsome and commodious, and one of the very best hearing rooms we know. As a Music Hall for the million, we have no doubt the "Oxford" will be enabled to compete with any place of amusement of the kind in the metropolis.

Jenny Lind.—There is still a belief, writes our contemporary the Court Journal, that the great Jenny is really engaged; ay, and rumour adds, the sum that she is to pipe at is 1000*l.* per week. Never did the voice of mortal woman sound so sweet—to her husband assuredly—as does Jenny's. Fudge!

Digitized by Google

Beethoven's Sonata in A Major, Op. 101.—Although Herr Rellstab's dictum (cited in p. 7 of the well-written book of the concert) "that whatever Beethoven wrote must be played" will be cheerfully acknowledged by all musicians of any taste, there are few who can practically endorse the opinion of the German critic. Miss Arabella Goddard is, of all living pianists, the one entitled to adopt the maxim for a motto. It is to her that the present generation of English amateurs is indebted for opening the book of wonder and sublimity which Beethoven penned in his days of deprivation of that sense that to a musician is what sight is to a painter. While we accord to Miss Goddard the credit due to her taste and foresight in introducing these inspirations to the world, we do not doubt that others would have gladly undertaken the task had they possessed the capability; but the united spirit to will and capacity to execute have gained her a reputation which will not easily be dimmed in lustre, or confined in duration. The Op. 101 is the first of five sonatas which are one in manner and spirit, in grandeur and beauty, in wildness, restlessness, and pathos, and in mechanical difficulty. It is impossible to describe this work in all its parts, our readers must go and hear it. But the third movement (marked Adagio ma non troppo con affetto, una corda) may be cited as the representative. All sublimity is expressed in its twenty bars. It was played in a faultless manner; not a weak note, not a questionable tempo, and not the slightest obscurity from beginning to end.—Sunday Times (Notice of 56th Monday Popular Concert.)

Weber's Pianoforte Concerto in E Flat.—The other piece in the list which demands particular notice affords us a more grateful task. It is Weber's concerto in E flat, played by Miss Arabella Goddard. The adagio is a movement of pathetic beauty, and wild and romantic in spirit. The allegro, difficult in the extreme, is, under the hands of Miss Arabella Goddard, perspicuous enough to defy stupidity, while the finale may claim the distinction of one of the most graceful and unobtrusively rapid pieces extant. The concerto was, throughout, played with the peerless execution and elaboration which belong to Miss Goddard, and the adagio suits no one's fingers but hers, the chief and most excellent of slow movement players.—Sunday Times (Notice of the 1st New Philharmonic Concert.)

Mr. Ransford has announced, among other things, in the programme issued for his concert at St. James's Hall, on Tuesday next, the performance of Dussek's Sonata in B flat, for pianoforte and violin, by Miss Arabella Goddard and M. Vieuxtemps, which has been so often admired at the Monday Popular Concerts. Miss Arabella Goddard will also play M. Benedict's new and brilliant fantasia, Albion, founded on the airs, "Pray Goody," and "Come if you dare." Miss Augusta Thompson will introduce an aria from Auber's new and successful opera, La Circassienne; Mad. Sainton-Dolby will give two of Miss Virginia Gabriel's new songs, 'Rest," and the "Hawking song;" and Mr. and Miss Ransford will sing several of their most favourite songs and concerted pieces.

Metropolitan Free Hospital, Devonshire Square, Bishopsgate, N.E.—A sermon in aid of the funds of this truly valuable institution was preached in the church of St. Andrew Undershaft, St. Mary Axe, on Sunday morning the 24th inst., by the Rev. F. G. Blomfield, M.A. The rev. gentleman took for his text the 40th verse of the 4th chapter of St. Luke's gospel, and delivered a most eloquent discourse; in the course of which he took occasion to remark upon the great usefulness of the charity, which, although entirely without endowment, offered relief and assistance to every sick and needy person who applied for it: the number of daily attendances last year was 77,832. The rev. gentleman bore testimony to the great benefits the poor of his own and the surrounding parishes derived from it, and concluded a forcible appeal by calling upon his hearers to give freely of their gold and silver; adding, "Freely ye have received, freely give." An exhortation which was most liberally responded to, the collection amounting to 43*l.* 10*s.* 3*d.*

Mr. Pittman's Lectures on the Opera.—On Monday evening last, Mr. Pittman closed his course of lectures "on the progress and power of music as exemplified in lyric and dramatic representations," delivered before the members of the London Institution, Finsbury Circus. The lecturer traced the origin of the opera from its first rise in Italy, and demonstrated how remarkable and decided had been the advance in the forms of musical composition in association with the drama. The labours of Alessandro Scarlatti, Handel, Glück, Piccini, Grétry Paesiello, Rossini, Auber, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, and Spohr, Bellini and Donizetti; and lastly, Meyerbeer and Verdi, were examined, and their different characteristics illustrated by numerous examples. The vocalists were Mad. Laura Baxter, Miss Augustus Thomson, Miss Banks, Miss Eliza Hughes, Miss Hersee; Masters Lister and Unwin; Mr. George Perren, Mr. Patey, Mr. Williams, Mr. Genge, Mr. Lester, Mr. Thomas, Mr. Smythson, together with a strong chorus selected from the Royal Italian opera troupe, Covent Garden. The illustrations were selected from the chefs-d' œuvre of the different composers, and were performed throughout with attention, zeal, and earnestness. The lectures were attended by crowded auditories, and at the termination of the course Mr. Pittman and his assistants were greeted with hearty applause.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S NEW SONGS, sung with immense success at St. James's Hall, the principal Concerts, &c.—Hawking Song, 3s.; Rest, 2s. 6d.; Now, 3s. The Music expressly composed by Virginia Gabriel.
C. Lonsdale's Musical Circulating Library, 26 Old Bond Street; where may be had all the latest and most approved compositions of Signori Garcia, Schira, Perugini, Campana, Badia, Marrus, Vianesi, and Verdi.

TWO MUSICAL SKETCHES for the PIANOFORTE dedicated to Mr. Charles Hallé, by James Lea Summers, price 2s. 6d. each, "are cleverly written and stamped with real musical feeling."—Musical World.
London:—Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210 Regent Street.

JUST PUBLISHED, PRICE 2s., POST FREE 26 STAMPS,
THE ART OF SINGING,
By the Rev. W. W. CAZALET, M.A.
London: Addison and Co., 210 Regent Street; Bosworth and Co., 215, Regent Street; Renshaw, 356, Strand.

JUST PUBLISHED—Price 2s. 6d.
"HAIL TO THEE! HAIL TO THEE!" Canzonet. Words from Lallah Rookh. Music by John Raymond. To be obtained o the Publishers, J. Williams & Co., 123 Cheapside, London; and by order of al Musicsellers.

AUBER'S NEW OPERA,
LA CIRCASSIENNE,
NOW PERFORMING WITH IMMENSE SUCCESS
AT THE
OPERA COMIQUE, PARIS,
WILL SHORTLY BE PUBLISED BY MESSRS.
ADDISON, HOLLIER, and LUCAS,
Who have Purchased the
COPYRIGHT.
London, 210 Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

BOOSEY'S ORCHESTRAL OVERTURES, arranged by LAMOTTE. Price 8s. each for full band; 5s. each for small band.

1. Crown Diamonds, Auber.
2. Zampa, Herold.
3. Zanetta, Auber.
4. Oberon, Weber.
5. Fra Diavolo. Auber.
6. Der Freischütz, Weber.
7. Domino Noir, Auber.
8. Gazza Ladra, Rossini.
9. Dame Blanche, Boieldieu.
10. Masaniello, Auber.
11. Part du Diable, Auber.
12. Guillaume Tell, Rossini.

KUHE'S NEW TRANSCRIPTION of SCHUBERT'S FAVOURITE MELODIES, as short and effective Pieces for the Pianoforte, price 2s. 6d. each.

1. Serenade.
2. Ave Maria.
3. Adieu.
4. The Wanderer.
5. The praise of Tears.
6. Thine is my heart.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

BRASS BAND, STRING BAND, DRUMS and FIFES, &c.—Booseys' Brass Band Journal, Quick Step Journal, Orchestral Journal of Dance Music, Orchestral Selections from the New Opera, Orchestral Overtures, Drum and Fife Journal, &c.

Full particulars of these unrivalled Publications may be had, post-free, from Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

MISS GODDARD'S New Solo, ALBION. Fantasia on English Airs, by J. BENEDICT; performed with the greatest success by Miss ARABELLA GODDARD, "The melodies upon which 'Albion' is constructed—'Pray Goody,' and 'Come if you dare'—are varied, ornamented, and otherwise elaborated with no less elegance than skill."—The Times. "Elaborate as the variations are, they never, as in similar compositions, obscure the melody, but rather enhance its beauty."—Daily Telegraph. Also the companion pieces, ERIN and CALEDONIA, by J. BENEDICT. Price 4s. each.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

GOLLMICK'S SIX NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE, being the third set of German Volkslieder, transcribed for the piano. Price 2s. 6d. each.

"My Own Love."
"Mourn not."
"The Heart's Desire."
"Lovely."
"The Maidens of Tyrol."
"Farewell to the Woods."

"Herr Gollmick has produced a set of pianoforte pieces which will be found highly attractive, not only from the beauty of the airs themselves, but from the taste and skill with which he has treated them."—Illustrated London News.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

THE GUINEA EDITION of BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS for the Pianoforte. Edited by W. DORRELL. With Life and Portrait, complete in two volumes, handsomely bound, 10s. 6d. each.

"There are many editions of Beethoven's sonatas, German, French, and English but there is not one that we have seen, from which taking all things into account—correctness and clearness of the text, elegance of form, and moderation of price—we have derived so much satisfaction as from the edition now before us.—Daily News.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

RICHARD WAGNER'S TANNHAUSER.—BOOSEY and SONS beg to announce the publication of a complete edition of the celebrated Opera, "Tannhäuser," for Pianoforte Solo, with an introduction describing the plot and music. Price 7s. 6d., in cloth. "Tannhäuser" has been performed in every theatre in Germany, and has just been produced in Paris with unprecedented success. It is considered the best work of its author, whose compositions are now the subject of discussion throughout the musical world. Boosey and Sons believe therefore that the present publication will be acceptable to the English public as a specimen of the genius of one of the most remarkable men of the age.

28, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S NEW SINGING METHODS for LADIES' and GENTLEMEN'S VOICES, by J. L. HATTON. Price 1s. each.—BOOSEY and SONS have much pleasure in stating that these two Methods, which have been so long announced (and unavoidably postponed), will be ready for delivery in a few days. The publishers believe that amateurs and students will find these Methods of more practical use than any other similar publications. They are entirely original in form and contents, embodying in a small compass the result of the experience of their distinguished author. Each Method is distinct and complete in itself. Early orders should be given to musicsellers and booksellers to secure copies of the first edition. Price 1s. each, or post free, 1s. 2d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

NOTICE.—The SHILLING EDITION of IL TROVATORE, for Pianoforte Solo (being No. 40 of "Boosey's "Musical Cabinet") is now ready, and may be had of every bookseller and musicseller in the United Kingdom. Price 1s. 2d. post free.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

TO BE PUBLISHED BY SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MUSIC, a new work; being Three Essays which appeared in the MUSICAL WORLD. By JOSEPH GODDARD. Readers of the MUSICAL WORLD and the Public, wishing to encourage the publication of the above, may do so by forwarding their names to Mr. J. GODDARD, 3 St. Paul's Crescent, Camden Square, N.W. Price 5s. For further particulars, see the MUSICAL WORLD of Dec. 15th, 1860.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.

Their Catalogues, which contain a great variety of Music calculated for teaching purposes, may be had, post-free, on application.

London: 18 Hanover Square.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

OF

DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.,

244 REGENT STREET. (JUST OUT.)

"MAY."—New Duettino, by HENRY SMART, composed for equal Voices. Price 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Henry Smart, in this melodious and truly exquisite little duet, has, if possible, even surpassed in elegance and vocal finish, the pieces so warmly eulogised in our last impression."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE BANNER OF ST. GEORGE," by BALFE, a new National Song. The words by John Brougham, written for, and dedicated to, THE ST. GEORGE'S RIFLE CORPS, is published, beautifully illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," Rêverie by W. Kuhé, on Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), and "I love YOU," Sims Reeves's popular ballad, transcribed for the Piano by Emile Berger, are published, price 2s. each, by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL," by W. H. WEISS, composed and sung by the composer, with the greatest success, as well as by Mr. WINN and other vocalists of celebrity, is published, handsomely illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

ANDANTE in E flat, by GEORGIANA HOLMES, from a Quintet by FELICIEN DAVID, arranged for the pianoforte, and dedicated to Lady Scott, is just published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, S. W., where "Les Etoiles et leur Langage," Nocturne and "Air with Variations" (both composed by Georgiana Holmes), may be obtained, price 3s. each.

NEW CONCERTINA MUSIC by GIULIO REGONDI.—Reichardt's popular song, "Thou art so near, and yet so far," transcribed for the CONCERTINA and PIANOFORTE by GIULIO REGONDI, is just published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"NEW YEAR'S EVE," by W. H. HOLMES.—This agreeable "Pensée" by the above talented composer, is just published for the pianoforte, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co, 244 Regent Street, W.

TYROLEAN MOUNTAIN SONG, by T. MAUSS (Der Iodelplatz), arranged for the pianoforte, and dedicated to Mr. W. E. Jarrett, of Cheltenham, is just published, price 3s.

Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, S. W.

AGUILAR'S TRANSCRIPTION of WEBER'S LAST WALTZ is just published for the pianoforte, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W., where Aguilar's Reverie, "Sunset Glow," may be obtained, price 3s., and his two latest songs, "Sympathy" (poetry by Mrs. BELL), 2s. "In a wood on a windy day" (poetry by ACTON BELL), 3s. and "Farewell" (poetry by Bishop HEBER), 2s., may be obtained.

DEUX BONBONS FROM THE DOMINO NOIR.

No. 1, "LA BELLE INES," Aragonaise. Price 1s.
No. 2, "AH, QUELLE NUIT," Bolero. Price 1s.

Transcribed for the Pianoforte, by

EMILE BERGER.

The above pieces are very easy transcriptions (without octaves) of the two celebrated songs in Auber's popular opera, sung by Miss LOUISA PYNE with such eminent success at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden, and are published by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW WORK FOR STUDENTS.

THE most important CADENCES and MODULATIONS through the MAJOR and MINOR keys, with HARMONISED SCALES composed for the pianoforte, harmonium, or organ, by IMMANUEL LIEBICH, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"FRESH AS A ROSE," sung by Sims Reeves, and enthusiastically encored at Mr. Howard Glover's concert, St. James's Hall, was composed expressly for the occasion by BALFE, and is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street. W.

"THAT HANDSOME VOLUNTEER," sung by Miss Lucette, and invariably encored, in Captain Morton Price's entertainment, as well as by Miss Emma Stanley in the "Seven Ages of Woman," composed by EMILE BERGER, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street. W.

SIMS REEVES' Popular Song, "WERT THOU MINE." Sung with immense applause at St. James's Hall, composed expressly for him by FRANK MORI. Poetry by CHARLES MACKAY. Price 2s. 6d. Published by Duncan Davison & Co, 244 Regent Street. W.

MEYERBEER'S setting of THE LORD'S PRAYER, (Paternoster), to be sung by the Vocal Association, at St. James's Hall, on WEDNESDAY NEXT, is published in Vocal Score (Organ or Piano accompaniments, ad. lib.) price 3s., and in separate Vocal parts, price 6d. each, only by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street. W.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 12 James Street, Buckingham Gate, in the Parish of St. Margaret, in the City of Westminster, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, March 30, 1861.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 39—No. 14 SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1861 PRICE {4d. Unstamped 5d.}

PECKHAM AMATEUR MUSICAL UNION.—ELEVENTH CONCERT, SATURDAY, April 6th. Artists: Madame LAURA BAXTER, Miss ROSE HERSEE, Mr. GEORGE PERREN, Mr. MELCHOR WINTER, Mr. GEORGE GENGE, Mr. ALLEN IRVING, and Mr. FRANK BRAINE (pianoforte.) Conductor, Mr. F. OSBORNE WILLIAMS. To commence at Seven. Carriages at Half-past Nine. Mr. F. Osborne Williams's new Part song, "The Mountaineer's Return," will be repeated, by desire.

HENRY HERSEE, JUN., President, Brunswick Terrace, Camberwell,
HENRY QUARE, Camberwell Grove, } Hon. Secs.
WALTER CHEESMAN, Queen's Road, Peckham, }

THE MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON. THIRD SEASON, 1861. The SECOND CONCERT (Orchestral and Choral) will take place at St. James's Hall, on Wednesday Evening, APRIL 10, at half-past Eight o'clock punctually. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED MELLON. Programme:—Part 1st. Mendelssohn's Cantata, "The First Walpurgis Night" (the Eve of the first of May), Op. 60. Orchestra, Chorus, and Solos, for Contralto, Tenor, and Baritone. Mozart's (Posthumous) Concerto in C for Pianoforte.—Part 2nd. Beethoven's Symphony, No. 4, in B flat, Op. 60. Spohr's Scena, "Si lo sento," (Faust). Barnett's Trio, "A Father's look" (Fair Rosamond). Macfarren's Overture "Chevy Chace." Vocalists, Miss Louisa Pyne, Madame Laura Baxter, Mr. George Perren, and Mr. Weiss. Pianist, Mr. John Francis Burnett.

A limited number of Tickets for the Gallery, at 3s. 6d. each, to be had of Messrs. CRAMER & Co., 201, Regent Street; and at St. James's Hall.

CHARLES SALAMAN, Hon. Sec.
St. James's Hall, 36, Baker Street, Portman Square.
28 Piccadilly, W.

NEW PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.—ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Conductor, Dr. WYLDE. The SECOND CONCERT of the Tenth Season will take place on MONDAY EVENING, April 22nd. The PUBLIC REHEARSAL on SATURDAY AFTERNOON, April 20th, when will be performed Beethoven's GRAND CHORAL SYMPHONY, and other great instrumental works. Pianist, Mr. C. HALLÉ; violin, M. VIEUXTEMPS.

M. SAINTON has the honour to announce a series of FOUR CHAMBER CONCERTS, to take place at his own Residence, No. 5 Upper Wimpole Street, on the following WEDNESDAY EVENINGS: April 24, May 15, 29, and June 12, to commence at Half-past Eight o'clock. M. Sainton will be assisted by the most eminent artists, including M. BERETTI, Mr. DOYLE, Mr. WEBB, Signor PIATTI, M. PAQUE, and M. HALLÉ. An eminent vocalist will appear on each occasion. Subscription for the series, £1 11s. 6d.; single ticket, half a guinea each; to be obtained at the principal musicsellers, and of M. Sainton, at his residence.

MOLIQUE'S ORATORIO, "ABRAHAM."—Under the immediate patronage of Her Majesty, H.R.H. the Prince Consort, and other members of the Royal Family. HERR MOLIQUE will conduct his Oratorio "ABRAHAM," for the first time in London, for the BENEFIT of the MIDDLESEX HOSPITAL, at Exeter Hall, on WEDNESDAY EVENING, April 17. Principal Vocalists: Madame LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, Madame SAINTON-DOLBY, Mr. WILBYE COOPER, Mr. SANTLEY, and Mr. SIMS REEVES. An engagement has also been offered to Signor BELLETTI. Reserved Seats in the Area, One Guinea (to be had only at Messrs. Cramer's, 201 Regent Street; and Messrs. Ewer and Co., 87 Regent Street); Western Gallery, 10s. 6d.; Western Area, 5s., at the principal musicsellers.

THE VOCAL ASSOCIATION, ST. JAMES'S HALL, WEDNESDAY, April 17th.—OLE BULL, the Great VIOLINIST.—The Directors have much pleasure in announcing that they have made Arrangements for the Appearance of this great Artist at their next SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT, WEDNESDAY April 17th. Conductor, Mr. BENEDICT. Tickets, 5s., 3s., and 1s. each, at St. James's Hall.

MR. WALTER MACFARREN'S THREE CONCERTS of Solo and Concerted Pianoforte Music, at the Hanover Square Rooms, on TUESDAY EVENINGS, April 23 and June 11, and SATURDAY MORNING, May 18, assisted by M. SAINTON, Mr. H. BLAGROVE, Mr. LAZARUS, Signor PIATTI, &c. Programmes illustrated by Mr. G. A. MACFARREN. Subscription £1 1s., of Mr. Walter Macfarren, 58, Albert Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The EASTER TERM commences on MONDAY, April 22nd, 1861.

Candidates for Admission must attend at the Institution for Examination by the Board of Professors on SATURDAY AFTERNOON, the 20th instant, at Three o'clock. By order of the Committee of Management,

Royal Academy of Music, J. GIMSON, Secretary.
Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, April 3rd, 1861.

MISS LASCELLES has RETURNED to Town for the SEASON. 35 York Street, Portman Square.

MADAME CATHERINE HAYES has returned to Town for the Season. 13, Westbourne Park, W.

MISS STEELE begs to announce her Change of Residence, and that she will give TWO CONCERTS of Sacred and Classical Music, at Messrs. Collard's, 16 Grosvenor Street, April 6th and May 16th, at Half-past Two, at which Miss A. GODDARD, HALLÉ, PIATTI, LIDEL, BLAGROVE, &c., will assist. Tickets 7s., of Miss Steele, 28 Upper Gloucester Place, Dorset Square.

HERR JOSEPH HERMANNS, Primo Basso, of Her Majesty's Theatre, begs to announce that he is free to accept engagements for Concerts, &c. &c. Address Herr Joseph Hermanns, 68 Newman Street, Oxford Street.

MR. F. T. V. HONEYWELL, Organist of St. Mary Woolnoth, Lombard Street, Professor of the Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello, is ready to RECEIVE PUPILS on moderate terms.—Letters addressed to the care of Mr. A. W. HAMMOND, 27 Lombard Street, City, will meet with attention.

COLLARD and COLLARD'S NEW WEST-END ESTABLISHMENT, 16 Grosvenor Street, Bond Street, where all communications are to be addressed. Pianofortes of all classes for Sale and Hire.

A GENTLEMAN, who has devoted a considerable time to the study of MUSIC, and who has had opportunities of hearing the first Artists, is desirous of being employed as SECRETARY to a Lady or Gentleman connected with the MUSICAL WORLD, or as MANAGER of CONCERTS, &c. The Advertiser also would be eligible to fulfil an Engagement as TRAVELLING AGENT to any person concerned in Musical Speculations, and who may be in search of Talent.—Apply personally, or by letter, to "H. C.," 27 Upper Charlotte Street, Fitzroy Square.

WANTED, a CONDUCTOR for the Belfast Presbyterian Musical Association. He must be competent to give instruction, not only in the theory and practice of Congregational Psalmody, but in the higher departments of Sacred Music. Salary 100*l.* per annum. A performer on the pianoforte or organ preferred. Application to be addressed, on or before the 20th April, to Rev. W. C. McCullagh, Ballysillan Manse, Belfast.

PIANOFORTE PLAYING.—A peculiar opportunity for advancement is offered to a Pianist capable of performing Classical Music in public. Address (prepaid) H. N., care of Messrs. Augener, 86 Newgate Street, E.C.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S NEW SONGS, sung with immense success at St. James's Hall, the principal Concerts, &c.—Hawking Song, 3s.; Rest, 2s. 6d.; Now, 3s. The Music expressly composed by VIRGINIA GABRIEL.

C. Lonsdale's Musical Circulating Library, 26 Old Bond Street; where may be had all the latest and most approved compositions of Signori Garcia, Schira, Perugini, Campana, Badia, Marrus, Vianesi, and Verdi.

TO PARTIES DESIRING A SECURE AND ADVANTAGEOUS INVESTMENT.

TO BE DISPOSED OF, 500 SHARES (in One or Smaller Lots of £1 each), in a first-class COMMERCIAL UNDERTAKING, of Limited Liability, and under the Management of a Board of Directors of the highest respectability. The Dividend declared at the last Meeting was at the rate of Ten per Cent. per Annum.—Every information may be obtained on application to Mr. TEMPLEMAN, Surveyor, 110 Fenchurch Street, London.

JUST PUBLISHED—PRICE 2s. 6d.

"HAIL TO THEE! HAIL TO THEE!" Canzonet. Words from Lallah Rookh. Music by JOHN RAYMOND. To be obtained of the Publishers, J. Williams & Co., 123 Cheapside, London; and by order of all Musicsellers.

TWO MUSICAL SKETCHES for the PIANOFORTE, dedicated to Mr. Charles Hallé, by JAMES LEA SUMMERS, price 2s. 6d. each, "are cleverly written and stamped with real musical feeling."—MUSICAL WORLD.
London:—Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210 Regent Street.

Digitized by Google

BRILLIANT CONCERT PIECES

FOR THE

PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
A. SCHLOESSER. GRAND FANTASIA—"Il Trovatore"	6	0
A. SCHLOESSER. GRAND FANTASIA — "Guillaume Tell"	5	0
A. SCHLOESSER. GRAND FANTASIA—"Martha" ...	5	0
A. SCHLOESSER. GRAND FANTASIA "La Favorita"	5	0
WILHELM GANZ. GRAND FANTASIA—"La Traviata"	6	0
STEPHEN HELLER. IMPROVISATA on MENDELSSOHN'S Melody, "On song's bright pinions," played by Miss ARABELLA GODDARD	4	0
THEODORE MAUSS. "MAY BREEZES," FANTASIA on a Popular German Air	4	0
ROBERT GOLDBECK. GRAND FANTASIA on "Le Prophète"	5	0
A. FUMAGALLI. TAÏAUT. "Chœur de Chasse" ...	3	6
F. LISZT. The MARCH from WAGNER'S "Tannhäuser"	4	0
THEODORE KULLAK. LES ARPEGES. Etude de Concert	5	0
JULES BENEDICT. FANTAISIE MILITAIRE on HALEVY'S Opera, "Les Mousquetaires de la Reine" ...	5	0
POLYDORE DE VOS. FANTASIA—"Norma"	5	0

IN THE PRESS.

MAD. OURY. GRANDE FANTAISIE, on "Il Barbiere di Seviglia"	5	0

ASHDOWN AND PARRY
(Successors to Wessel and Co.),
18 HANOVER SQUARE, LONDON.

EASY TEACHING MUSIC, by J. BAPTISTE CALKIN.

SIX SACRED PIECES:	s.	d.
1 Most beautiful, appear. From Haydn's Creation	1	0
2 I waited for the Lord. Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise	1	0
3 Rousseau's Dream	1	0
4 But thou didst not leave. Handel's Messiah	1	0
5 Every valley. Ditto	1	0
6 The Spanish chant	1	0

SIX OPERATIC PIECES:
1 La ci darem. Don Giovanni	1	0
2 Batti, Batti. Ditto	1	0
3 Suoni la tromba. I Puritani	1	0
4 Va Pensiero. Nabuco	1	0
5 Libiamo, Brindisi. La Traviata	1	0
6 Parigi o cara. Ditto	1	0

SIX POPULAR PIECES:
1 Jock o' Hazeldean	1	0
2 The harp that once thro' Tara's halls	1	0
3 Yankee doodle	1	0
4 Where the bee sucks	1	0
5 The lass o' Gowrie	1	0
6 Cease your funning. Beggar's Opera	1	0

SIX CLASSICAL PIECES:
1 Andante, varied, from Septett, Op. 20 (Beethoven)	1	0
2 Andante, con moto, from Symphony in C minor (ditto)	1	0
3 Adagio, Cantabile, from Symphony in B flat (Haydn)	1	0
4 Finale, from Symphony in D (ditto)	1	0
5 Adagio, from Symphony No. 4, in C (Mozart)	1	0
6 Andante, from Sonata in B flat (ditto)	1	0

The above Pieces, intended for very young Pupils, are written in a musicianlike manner, and are carefully fingered.

LONDON:
ASHDOWN AND PARRY
(Successors to Wessel and Co.),
18 HANOVER SQUARE.

1861.

NEW ALEXANDRE HARMONIUMS.

Lower in price and superior to all other cheap Harmoniums.

THE

NEW FOUR-OCTAVE HARMONIUM,

In Oak Case. Size 2 ft. 8 in. by 1 ft.; height, 2 ft. 4 in.

Price Five Guineas.

THE

NEW FOUR-AND-A-HALF OCTAVE HARMONIUM,

Compass, C to F. Size, 2 ft. 11 in. by 1 ft. 2 in.; height, 2 ft. 6 in.

Price—Oak, Five and a-half Guineas; Mahogany, Six Guineas

THE

ALEXANDRE COTTAGE HARMONIUM,

Five Octaves. In Oak Case, with Two Foot Boards. Size, 3 ft. 4 in. by 1 ft. 2 in.; height, 2 ft. 8 in.

Price Six Guineas.

ALSO,

THE NEW ALEXANDRE CHURCH HARMONIUMS

WITH

TWO ROWS OF KEYS.

NO. 1. EIGHT STOPS

(Three and a-half Rows of Vibrators), Rosewood Case. Size, 3 ft. 9 in. by 1 ft. 11 in.; height, 3 ft. 3 in.

Price Forty-five Guineas.

NO. 2. TWENTY-TWO STOPS

(Six Rows of Vibrators), Polished Oak or Rosewood Case. Size, 4 ft. 4 in. by 2 ft. 6 in.; height, 3 ft. 5 in.

Price Seventy Guineas.

NO. 3. TWENTY-TWO STOPS

(Eight Rows of Vibrators), Rosewood Case, 2½ Octaves of Pedal

Price Eighty-five Guineas.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50 NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

MUSICAL WORLD

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"The Congregational Hymn and Tune-Book"—by the Rev. R. R. CHOPE, B.A. (J. Wright and Co., Bristol); "'Routledge's Church and Home Metrical Psalter and Hymnal,' containing 101 Psalm and Hymn Tunes, adapted to 640 Psalms and Hymns"—edited by CHARLES H. PURDAY (Routledge, Warne, and Routledge); "'One Hundred and One Popular Psalm and Hymn Tunes,' arranged in short score for voices, with organ, piano, or harmonium"—selected and arranged by CHARLES H. PURDAY (same publishers).

THE above publications may be dismissed as useful in their way, and compiled with sufficient discretion, but offering no new feature to elicit either comment or criticism.

"'The Orpheon,' a collection of songs and choruses, in two, three, and four parts"—Vol. I. (Ewer and Co.).

Volume I. includes no less than 32 pieces. We have an objection to offer which we cannot but think worth consideration. Not only are the names of celebrated composers affixed to number after number of this compilation, without any reference to the source whence the music, thus made to serve the purpose of mere "book-making," is derived; but in one or two instances, to music of which they were never guilty. No. 3 already presents us with a flagrant example of this, viz., a part-song, with words by Mr. Charles Swain, to which no less distinguished a name than that of Beethoven is unceremoniously attached. We present the music (without the words) as it stands:—

Now we put it to the (anonymous) editor of The Orpheon whether Beethoven could ever have produced such a clumsy concoction as the above? Of course the real concoctor knows well enough that it is a mere arrangement (a very bad one) of a dance-tune by Schubert, which was long foisted on the world as Beethoven's Last Waltz, and which rivalled in popularity that other dance-tune by Reissiger, attributed in a similar manner and with a similar design, to Weber. "Music by Beethoven!" Proh pudor!

"L'homme est crédule, et dans son foible cœur Tout est reçu; c'est une molle argile."

There are cases, however, in which the "molle argile" hardens into stone, and the most credulous becomes sceptical. This is one in point. We should, indeed, be sorry to think that, in the advanced state of musical taste, any amateur, much less professor, would credit Beethoven with such a piece of workmanship as we have quoted. Poor Rossini, too, is treated in a most cavalier manner. On the other hand, the first volume of The Orpheon contains some excellent things. No. 4 is a three-voiced canon (or round) by Cherubini; No. 12 a good specimen of Himmel (the "Hymn to Hope," from Tiedge's Urania—the words translated, moreover, by no less eminent a hand than Mr. John Oxenford); No. 15, Dr. Calcott's fine glee, the "May Fly," one of the purest English examples extant of three-part writing for voices; No. 16 an impressive piece of four-part vocal harmony from the inexhaustible mine of John Sebastian Bach; No. 19 a vocal trio from Grétry's opera of Azor et Zemira; No. 24 ("Funeral Hymn"), a welcome excerpt from Zumsteeg, a composer as little known to us in England as Himmel and Grétry; No. 25, Samuel Webbe's capital three-voiced round, "In vain would fortune," another genuine specimen of the English school; and No. 26, a two-voiced psalm ("As the hart panteth"), with figured bass, by Marcello. All these are valuable; and if the rest of The Orpheon were composed of similar materials, it might be commended both emphatically and without reservation. Is it too late to reconsider Vol. I.—en attendant Vol. II.?

"'Six Anthems,' adapted for large or small choirs," with accompaniment for organ and pianoforte—by WILLIAM PATTEN (Addison and Hollier).

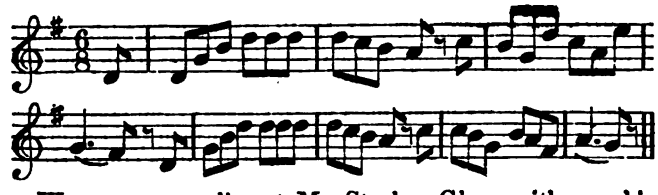
If Mr. Patten may not be justly congratulated on having exhibited any great originality of idea or of form in these anthems, he has at least full right to the credit belonging to a composer of taste and purity. We have seen few publications of the kind more uniformly entitled to praise for correctness of harmony and propriety of style. Mr. Patten has evidently studied our best church writers, and with such earnestness, that he has caught and profited by all their best qualities. We cannot single out any one of the six anthems for special eulogy, but without an instant's hesitation recommend the whole of them, both as essentially good music, and as admirably adapted to the purpose for which they are intended.

"The Mariner's Evening Song"—words by AUGUSTUS L FITZHERBERT, music by W. C. FILBY; Op. 48 (Robert Cocks and Co.)—is, though by no means original, not devoid of a certain grace. But why in the name of St. Job de Pacheco, "Op. 48"? A simple ballad hardly deserves to be presented as an "opus," seeing it has cost no labour. Mozart and Beethoven would offer six grand quartets as an opus, with six hundred thousand million billion times as much thought, and more than a trillion times that quotient as much ingenuity in each page of each quartet as in a quadrillion of such things as Mr. Filby's ballad. Why then, in the name of Villalpandus (who wrote voluminously on Ezekiel), "Op. 48"?—or, indeed, in the name of common sense and propriety, "Op." at all?

Digitized by Google

"Consuelo and Haydn"—words by J. E. CARPENTER music adapted by STEPHEN GLOVER (R. Cocks and Co.).

This is at the best a mere "catchpenny." Mr. Carpenter has founded his words on an incident in George Sand's romance of Consuelo; the music is concocted (the word is appropriate) out of themes from Haydn's symphonies, one being that of the popular slow movement which suggested its title to The Surprise. The principal burden, however, is carried by the subject of the rondo-finale in one of the twelve symphonies written for Salomon. It will easily be remembered:—



We cannot compliment Mr. Stephen Glover either on his idea, or on the manner in which he has carried it out. He had much better have left "Papa Haydn" to himself.

"'The Charlotte Waltz,' COMPOSED for the pianoforte"—by HENRY BARTON (R. Cocks and Co.)—is founded on "the favourite song, 'Her bright smile haunts me still,'" of which we now hear for the first time. But why—in the name of Mr. W. T. Wrighton, who, from the inner title, we learn to be the author of that "favourite song"—"composed for the pianoforte by Henry Barton?" What has become of our favourite word "transcribed?" In these days, when almost every new piece is a "transcription" of something or other, surely the "Charlotte Waltz" (if anything at all) is a "transcription" too.

"Stephen Glover's admired ballad, 'Annie o' the Banks o' Dee,' TRANSCRIBED for the pianoforte"—by BRINLEY RICHARDS (R. Cocks and Co.).

See Mr. Brinley Richards; he is more conscientious than Mr. Henry Barton. Although he has really done something for Mr. Stephen Glover in this elegantly easy arrangement (modulating, for instance, into the flat third of the key, and back again—besides varying and ornamenting), he, with true modesty, a stern sense of justice, and in the fashion of the day, entitles his piece "transcription." He does not say Mr. So and So's admired so and so, "composed for the pianoforte," but Mr. So and So's admired so and so, "transcribed for the pianoforte." May his honesty never grow less!

"W. T. Wrighton's admired ballad, 'My mother's gentle word,' transcribed for the pianoforte"—by BRINLEY RICHARDS (same publishers).

For "Stephen Glover," read "W. T. Wrighton;" for "Annie," &c., read "My mother's," &c.; then re-read the remarks just immediately above, and they will hold as good here as there. Mr. Brinley Richards has got the "knack" of these things. He "transcribes" to perfection. By the way, what a number of "admired" ballads there appear to be.

"'As you like It,' polka élégante,"—composed by ADAM WRIGHT (R. Cocks and Co.)—is a polka of some water. We "like it" as it stands; but should like it still better if it did not assume a virtue that it don't possess. It is anything, Mr. Adam Wright, but "elegant." "Polka lively," or "Polka sprightly," would have been a fitter name.

"'Le Rayon de Soleil,' fantaisie à la valse, composée pour le piano"—par G. F. WEST (R. Cocks and Co.)—would be still more welcome if the title were translated into English. Still there was no reason for styling it "Fantaisie," there being nothing in the fantasy manner in any bar of it. Brilliant, without being at all difficult, "Le Rayon de Soleil" is likely to find its way into more than one fashionable drawing-room—we beg pardon, salon, and fashionable seminary—we beg pardon, pension.

"'M' appari tutt' Amor,' from Flotow's 'Martha,' transcribed and varied for the pianoforte"—by RICHARD FREDERICK HARVEY (R. W. Ollivier)—belongs to the same category, as the pieces by Mr. Brinley Richards already described, but though not wanting in a certain cleverness, more pretentious and less genuine.

"Warblings at Eve," romance for the pianoforte—by BRINLEY RICHARDS (Cocks and Co.).

A little gem, as pleasant and cheerful as it is unobtrusive. Any one can play it, and everybody should play it. As solo or duet (in both which shapes it lies before us), it is equally attractive; such "warblings" are welcome. They are worth a thousand transcriptions.

"La Volcé des Oiseaux," pour piano, Op. 59; "Dix Pensées Descriptives," pour piano, Nos. 1 and 2, Ops. 35 and 37; "The Infant's Prayer," Op. 52, written by the late Rev. R. Montgomery, M.A.; "Past, Present, and Future," Op. 26, for tenor voice, written by the late Professor Smith—par, or by, W. C. FILBY (J. H. Jewell).

Five more "operas!"—"59," "35," "37," "52," and "26." Mr. Filby is more fecund than Donizetti, or even Cimarosa, who wrote a hundred operas, and probably as many oratorios, before he was forty-seven years of age. "35" is a pensée (or pensées), joyeux (or joyeuses). There is a phrase in this (page 2, line 2, bars 2, 3) that begins like a phrase in the drinking song of Robert le Diable, but it is by no means so happily worked out. The best part of this thought joyous (or thoughts joyous—we are compelled nowadays to review with a French dictionary before us) is an episode in A flat, page 3, which is not joyous, but sentimental. The rest is hardly so good. "37" is a pensée (or pensées) tranquille (or tranquilles). The best part of this is an episode in E flat, page 2, which is not tranquil, but troublesome, especially to the left hand. It is clever, however, and far superior to the first theme, which begins like a well-known ballad ("Rise, gentle moon!"?), but is not so happily worked out. "59," "La Volée des Oiseaux," is a somewhat monotonous flight. Like the skylark, Mr. Filby's birds soar very high; but, unlike the skylark, they never descend at all, remaining poised in his melodious clouds an octave higher than G in alt—

—where they leave off, poised; so that, if they were real birds, they would be invisible; and but for Shelley's line—

"Thou art unseen, but yet I hear thy shrill delight"—

—inaudible, more especially by Mr. Filby, supposing him to be represented by the left hand, which stands, abashed, u o the two lowest E-flats on the key-board. Mr. Filby's songs are better, far better indeed, than his pianoforte music. The pure lines of "the late Rev. R. Montgomery"—by whose permission, we are informed in a foot-note, they have been published (posthumous permission?)—are set with true feeling for harmony; those of "the late Professor Smith," if possible, still better. By the way, the late Professor Smith, if we may judge him by his verse—

Digitized by Google

"Oh! shades of the past! rise not thus to my view—
Ye are Sorrow and Pain, I would bid you adieu!
Oh! scenes of the future! approach not so near!
Away from my gaze—ye are Darkness and Fear!"
Cease, cease, thou poor mortal! thy wishes are vain!
The future must come, and the past must remain!
Alas! that thy cheek should thus change and look pale!
The present is thine, and it yet may avail"— was, tant soit peu, a poet.

"Selle's Marche Triomphale," pour piano (Ashdown and Parry).

For "Selle" read Sellé. The following progression, in the trio of this march—is, to speak in metaphor, a "sell." The following progression—is, to speak in metaphor, a "sell." The following progressions—to speak plainly, are "sells." So that it is to be feared "Sellé's Marche Triomphale," notwithstanding its spirited opening, its equally spirited coda, and its running accompaniment to "Auld lang syne" (introduced as a second trio), may be in one sense a "sell," and in another sense not a "sell."

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

CRAMER, BEALE AND CO.

Barry (C. A.)	"Three Fishers"	(Vocal).
Ditto.	"Margaret to Dolcino"	(ditto).
Ditto.	"Dolcino to Margaret"	(ditto).
Ditto.	"The Oubli"	(ditto).
Ditto.	"Oh! that we two were maying"	(ditto).
Ditto.	"Elizabeth's prayer"	(ditto).

CHAPPELL AND CO.

Brissac (Jules) "La Sirène du Rhin" (Pianoforte).

LEADER AND COCKS.

Allen (George B.)	"Soft may thy slumbers be"	(Vocal).
Ditto.	"Down in yon green vale"	(ditto).
Ditto.	"See the shepherd swains"	(ditto).
Ditto.	"The wind in the tree tops"	(ditto).
Ditto.	"May"	(ditto).
Ditto.	"Morning"	(ditto).
Smart (Henry)	"Bird of the morning"	(ditto).
Ditto.	"The happy hours"	(ditto).
Ditto.	"Him I love dearly"	(ditto).

NOVELLO.

Barry (C. A.)	"Saviour when in dust to Thee"	(Vocal).
L. P.	"Go, lovely Rose"	(ditto).

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(From a Correspondent.)

Joachim has taken leave of us, but, we trust, only to return very soon. This worthy man, as genuine and admirable in his private as in his professional character, must, on his side, have contracted kindly feelings for a city, which, like Vienna, has been so lavish in its marks of approbation. The recollection of Austria will, we feel sure, follow him, like some warm spring breeze from the south, as far as the heaths of Lüneburg. May Joachim soon experience home-sickness. This is the only ill we wish him. His third concert, the last but one—in the rooms of the Musik-Verein—began with Spohr's concerto in E minor, Op. 7, played with all the roundness and sweetness by which Spohr himself once enchanted his hearers, and, at the same time, with a grandeur of tone peculiar to Joachim. Beethoven's Violin Romance in G major followed, as a pendant to that in F, which was performed some days previously. A Fantasia with full band (Op. 131), by Schumann, was new to us. As Joachim possesses none of the vanity of a virtuoso, it was, we suppose, a feeling of tender respect that induced him to select this piece which is as difficult as it is unsatisfactory. Schumann wrote it in the decline of his faculties, and dedicated it to Joachim. It is a dark chasm, over which two great artists stretch out their hands to each other. Tortured, gloomy, and obstinate, the Fantasia drags on its length in continuous figurations and with very little melodic substance. It is extremely seldom that the wearisome effect produced by it is broken by a clever instance of harmony or orchestration.

On taking leave of the Viennese public, Joachim followed up the more select soirées in the rooms of the Musik-Verein, by a grand musical rout. Since the concerts of Jenny Lind, we never remember having seen the grand Redoutensaal so full, or the Josephsplatz so besieged and barricaded by carriages. On this occasion, Beethoven's overture to Coriolanus merely served as a march to usher in the numerous late-comers, who wandered in long files to their places. The audience were not perfectly settled before the "Hungarian Concerto." This, which Joachim had performed at his second concert, was repeated by desire. In so doing, he rendered a service to the public, and to his own reputation as a composer. The "Hungarian Concerto" is one of those characteristic pieces which interest us at the first time of hearing, and please at the second or third.

Like many others, we ourselves thought the work more expressive and sympathetic than we did at its first performance, which, by the way, was given in too confined a space. Grand and richly-scored compositions, like fresco-paintings, require distance in order to be properly appreciated. In the first movement there were many lengths—among them the cadence—the existence of which we can no more deny than the restless monotony of the finale, but the pathetic grandeur, which pervades the entire work, the marked character of all the motives, and the clever manner in which they are worked out, not merely greatly excited our feelings, but, moreover, satisfied us, artistically speaking. The remaining pieces Joachim played were a fugue by Bach, and Mendelssohn's oft-heard concerto in E minor. Joachim's great aim was the plastic and well-marked expression of the sustained melody, and grandeur combined with unity of style. How perfectly the softest tenderness and the most transient brilliancy may be united with the above qualities was proved by his rendering of the adagio and of the final movement—the latter being taken in the most rapid time. The public seemed to find it a difficult task to part from him. It was not till he had been called on several times that he took leave of us—a conqueror and a friend.

The fourth and last of the Philharmonic Concerts did not display, despite its varied programme, the same vigorous freshness as its predecessors. Gade's well-known Ossian overture, which never produced any very lively interest in Vienna, was to have been followed by a sacred air by A. Stradella. The air was, however, omitted, owing to the indisposition of Herr Ander. Herr Gunz's rendering of Don Ottavio's air in B flat major, was a very sorry compensation for the disappointment. The next piece was the "larghetto" from Spohr's third symphony. (!) Richard Wagner's "Faust-Overture" was performed, some years since, at a charity concert, and discussed in this paper. The work displeased us, but we did not know at the time how great a crime this involved on our part. Herr von Bülow had not written his pamphlet on the overture, proclaiming Wagner the legitimate successor of Beethoven, and, with a profusion of abuse against all persons of a different opinion, degrading Beethoven's production into the "starting-point" of the "Faust-Overture." According to Herr von Bülow, Schumann's overture to Manfred is not to be compared, even in the remotest degree, with Wagner's work. This is an opinion to which we willingly assent, provided it be—entirely reversed. Nay, did we not know that Wagner had sketched out his overture to Faust during his first visit to Paris in 1840, we should look upon it as a caricatured imitation of the overture to Manfred. The overture to Faust imposes on people by its highly consequent character, and a uniformity of structure very wonderful for Wagner. The materials, however, which fill up this structure are marked by a degree of impotence which really excites our pity. When we hear, at the very commencement, the "bass-tuba" indulging vigorously in a comically lofty theme, we cannot help thinking of a successful travestie of Faust, rather than of Goethe's poem itself. In the allegro this motive is much better treated, being, as we have already said, carried out with iron consequence. Would that the "Unity of Feeling" were not manifested in so rudely material a manner, causing a viola-figure (similar to the first Coriolanus-motive) in the accompaniment to pursue us incessantly under every circumstance and on every instrument, through all the half-tones of Herr Wagner's chromatics. Towards the conclusion of the overture, it struck us that any one who was not obliged to listen to this viola-figure enjoyed a happy and honourable privilege. We can understand, at a push, that even the weakest of Wagner's operas may revel in an enthusiastic audience and a few idolising critics; but how any one can possibly admire Wagner as a symphonetic composer, and write a whole treatise, exclusively devoted to the interpretation of the overture to Faust, we cannot, for the life of us, comprehend. On this occasion, the work was received with a tolerably equal amount of applause and hisses.

Digitized by Google

A very modest and graceful contrast to Wagner's tone-metaphysics was afforded by another specimen of programme-music, on which, however, as far as we are aware, no one has ever written a book. This was Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony. The excellent manner in which it was performed, so delighted the audience that they manifested their approbation of the orchestra, and its meritorious conductor, Herr Dessoff, with a degree of warmth which affords the most pleasing guarantee for the "Future" of the Philharmonic Concerts. We have been unable to attend the performances of the fair harpist, Mlle. Mösner, who has given two concerts. According to all accounts, however, they were highly successful.

On Sunday we had a concert of the Euterpe Society, and one of the Männergesang-Verein, in the morning, while a quartet-concert was given by Herren Hofman, Türk, Steiner and Möser, in the afternoon. The members of the Männergesang-Verein displayed their excellent training and capabilities in the performance of various choruses, of greater or less value. The Euterpe Society provided an agreeable programme, composed of an overture by Ferdinand Ries, pieces for flute, violoncello, and harp, several songs, and Beethoven's First Symphony, the whole under the direction of Herr Langwara, who conducted in his usual unpretending manner. As a composer, also, Herr Langwara achieved, a short time since, a gratifying success, with a new quartet, performed on the 2nd ult., by the members of the Hofman Quartet. These gentlemen, who have gained a reputation by the introduction of attractive novelties, gave on the 10th ult., a new quartet by Rudalf Bibl, which was much praised. On the 17th ult. they concluded their second series.

The 17th ult., by the by, was one of the most important days, in a musical sense, we have had to chronicle this year. Herr Herbeck, responsible conductor of the Gesellschaft der Musik-freunde, had announced his intention of executing on that day, at the fourth Gesellschafts-concert, Beethoven's Mass in D, the rehearsals of which he had conducted with indefatigable zeal. The result proved a triumph for the Society, and for Herr Herbeck. The performance, which, with a few drawbacks, always to be expected, was eminently successful, reflects the greatest credit, not merely on Herr Herbeck, and the instrumental performers, but also on Herr Joseph Hellmesberger, who, with the greatest readiness, placed himself at the head of the orchestra, and undertook the violin solos; on Herr Bibl, who presided at the organ; on the choruses, consisting of members of the Singer-Verein, and female students at the conservatory; and on the solo singers, Mlles. Krauss, Schmidt, Herren, Gunz, and Panzer. On the same day, there was a performance at the Theater an der Wien, for the benefit of the families of the comedians Götz and Schierling, lately deceased. The proceeds were satisfactory. Mdlle. Mösner, the harpist, also selected the 17th for her second concert.* This young lady possesses taste and technical skill; but it is to be regretted that she should have devoted her exclusive attention to the harp, which is not a concert instrument, and, though once so popular, cannot boast even a respectable repertory of compositions.

PAILLE-EN-CU.

RICHARD WAGNER'S "TANNHÄUSER" IN PARIS.†

I HAVE not been in too great a hurry to send the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung an account of the circumstances attending the performances at the Imperial Opera House, on the 13th and 18th ult., since the political papers have taken care to make the whole world already acquainted with the fate of Tannhäuser. I must, however, assure you that the mode in which the audience of the Grand Opera, generally so well-behaved, expressed their dissatisfaction on the occasion in question, has been described by the press in strict accordance to truth, and without exaggeration. The fact is indisputable, but the attempts that have been made to account for it, by the supposition of a systematic, well-matured and organised opposition, are founded upon erroneous premises and gross ignorance of the state of things here. That a success may be achieved, by certain influences, is in Paris very possible. There are plenty of instances ready to our hand, and even Wagner's own concerts might, if only in an inferior degree, be adduced as a proof. But for any persons to resolve that a piece shall prove a failure, and that they shall have the power to carry out their determination, is not possible. The only considerable and determining power which successfully opposed Tannhäuser was French good taste, which revolted both against the tendentious and supernatural subject of the Legend Drama, and the unmelodious music.

This will furnish every one acquainted with the mind and taste of the French people, with an explanation of the failure of the opera—a failure which might have been predicted with tolerable certainty. For the circumstance, however, that this non-satisfaction of the national taste was not confined within the usual limits of a cool reception, but assumed the character partly of ridicule and partly of contempt, was owing to Wagner's conduct alone; his boundless self-laudation, his literary self-mirroring, his reformatory bombast, and his revolting degradation of the greatest composers of dramatic music, obliged the public to apply a severe standard to his artistic productions, for the purpose of testing what grounds there were for justifying, or even simply excusing, his wordy bragging. The public looked upon the performances of Tannhäuser as a case of "Hic Rhodus, hic salta," and as the leap was not successful, easily remembered the words of their countryman Voltaire: "Du sublime au ridicule il n'y a qu'un pas." Considering the insignificant result of such stupendous efforts, and such a lavish expenditure to satisfy the composer's most preposterous demands, is the public voice so very wrong, when it says: "According to his own statement, Wagner did not come to Paris to submit to the judgment of the French public. Not a bit of it! 'As an exile, he is the only German who has never heard Tannhäuser and his other works.' He came, therefore, and took advantage of the resources of our Grand Opera, and 250,000 francs for the mise-en-scène, in order to enjoy the highly justifiable pleasure of hearing and admiring himself."

I have not the slightest intention of again discussing the weaknesses of Wagner's music, especially of his Tannhäuser, in your pages, in which they long ago met with thorough appreciation. In the exhaustive criticisms, forming a long series of articles, and published in the Niederrheinische Zeitung, as far back as 1852, every instance of beauty to be found in detached scenes was freely acknowledged, though at the same time everything ridiculous or unmusical was mercilessly shown up, precisely in those portions of his work which the Paris public have laughed at and hissed. If the French read German newspapers, they would have known long since what they had to expect. They had, however, carefully been led to suppose that all Germany was overflowing with admiration for Tannhäuser and Lohengrin, and, as the poet-composer set himself above all his predecessors in the Halls of Grand Opera, not only in social conversation, but also in official manifestoes (such, for instance, as his last Brief an einen Freund über

* Mdlle. Mösner appeared at the Monday Popular Concerts in 1859, when she performed, with Joseph Joachim, a sonata by Spohr for harp and violin.—ED.

† From the Neiderrheinische Musik-Zeitung.

Digitized by Google

Zukunftsmusik)* a violent reaction—such as always attends grandiloquent promises, followed by disappointed hopes—was the inevitable result.

It is, however, highly important, perhaps, for the history of the Music of the Future, that I should give your readers the heads of the Paris criticisms. It is a very remarkable fact, to begin with, that not a single paper defends Tannhäuser as a whole, but, at the utmost, pronounces only some few detached pieces to be effective. Anything like a musico-æsthetic quarrel, arising from the division of the public into two factions, like those in the time of the Glückists and Piccinists, is something entirely out of the question; the last hope of the composer to create a sensation, and preserve a leading position for some short period longer, by such means, must vanish before the unanimity of public opinion. We will begin with the following short specimen of the latter:—

* * * * * * * *

All this is true to the very letter. The critic might have added that there were three grand rehearsals, with dresses, scenery, and properties, and that, after these rehearsals, well-meaning composers advised Wagner to cut out most of the passages, afterwards greeted by the laughter of the public, but that he proudly refused to do so. Never was a German composer so thoroughly favoured in France, and that, too, by the management of the first art-institutions in the empire, at whose portal native composers knock for years and years before they are admitted, while some never obtain admittance at all.

* * * * * * * *

Wagner certainly has admitted this during his stay here, but he added that he remodelled a great deal in Tannhäuser—as, for instance, the dialogue between the Knight and Venus, in the first act—in accordance with the spirit of his later system, as it appears, perfected, in Tristan und Isolde. This is really the fact, for the scene just mentioned is now almost twice as long as it was at first. Immediately after the rehearsals, a writer in one of the papers remarked:—"Nous entendrons du Wagner plus pur et plus abstrait que les Allemands: en sommes-nous dignes?" Referring to the dialogue in question, the critic of the Moniteur (De Rovray, i.e. Fiorentino) says—

* * * * * * *

Yet Wagner is ungrateful to Niemann, for, as I have been confidently informed, he said, at the rehearsal: "Had I heard him sing before I engaged him, I would not have done so."

Cologne.—The hope generally expressed, two years ago, at the first performance of J. S. Bach's grand Matthäus-Passion, that this work, which is unique of its kind—for Bach himself is the only person who has, in the Johannes-Passion, produced a pendant to it—might be turned to account annually for the celebration of Palm-Sunday, has, by the performance last year, and by that on the 24th ult., been realised; and this magnificent music of the "past" will, without a doubt, delight and edify the "future" and its descendants, when many other productions shall have long since perished and been forgotten. The most gratifying fact connected with the matter is, that the interest manifested by the public continues to increase. At the performance on the 24th ult., under the direction of Herr Ferdinand Hiller, the municipal Capellmeister, not only were the subscribers' places all occupied, but the attendance of visitors, some of whom came a long distance—from Switzerland, for instance—was very great, necessitating the issue of nearly 350 additional tickets. The last grand rehearsal, too, produced 121 thalers, at 10 silver groschens a head. We trust that this may serve as a lesson for the hyper-orthodox of both creeds, who would banish music from the Church, and prove to them how deeply a religious feeling, combined with the love of music, is implanted in the breasts of the German nation; for who could fail to perceive that, at the performance of Bach's Passion, the spirit of devotion and pious stillness of the audience, as well as the deep impression produced upon every one present, resulted from the union of faith and a love for its musical expression? The beautiful manner in which Bach's music is adapted to the simple and, for that very reason, so deeply moving, story of suffering told by the Evangelist, and the wonderful power of choral song, are the two principal points which endue Bach's Passions-Musik with the irresistible influence it exercises over all persons of feeling. A great deal of the effect of the whole work depends on the mode in which the solo parts are rendered. On the 24th ult. these was most admirably given by Herr Julius Stockhausen, Herr Rudolf Otto, Mlle. Genast, and Mad. Potthof-Diehl, the latter lady being a fair amateur from Aix-la-Chapelle. The chorus, too, were excellent, and all persons engaged deserve the thanks, not only of the public but of every one connected with art, whose interest it is that a work of this kind should be revived—a desideratum which would, however, be an impossibility but for the zeal and assistance of dilettanti.

Paderborn.—At the fifth concert of the Musik-Verein, the fair violonist, Mlle. Amalie Bidó, from Vienna, was highly successful. Among other compositions, two of Ferdinand Hiller's quintets for soprano and male voices—the "Reiselied" and "Frühlings-Einzug"—were greatly applauded.

A new "Swedish Nightingale."—L'Univers Musicale states that a new "Swedish Nightingale" has been found in Gothland by a great lady, and sent at her cost to Paris to learn to sing. Her name is Christine Nilsen.—Gothland-Fudge.

Christy's Minstrels.—Of all the sooty tribes of vocalists who have crossed the Atlantic and scaled the white cliffs of Dover, with the determination of taking England by musical storm, the Christy's Minstrels are those who have attuned their voices sweetest to British ears, have made banjos most tuneful, bones most expressive, and the pirouettes of niggers most elastic and original. Other "Minstrels" have appeared before and after them, but no company of "darkie" melodists have come between them and the favour of John Bull. Other vocalists, be they never so well blackened, and let them have exhibited for never so long a time in the country, may absent themselves for the longest period, and when they have departed no difference is felt. They are no sooner removed than they are forgotten; and should they come back, they have to commence anew all the preliminaries of solicitation, and begin all over again their courtship to the public. Not so with the Christy's Minstrels. Their absence is not only felt, but regretted; and not only regretted, but a certain section of the London public live in darkness until their "darknesses" come back. That the nigger melodies have an extraordinary fascination for most ears, no one can deny. They supersede even Verdi's tunes on the barrel organs, and adults at their work, and juveniles in the gutter, alike indulge in humming "I'm off to Charlestown," "Darling Nelly Gray," "I'm leaving thee in sorrow, Annie," "Hoop de dooden do," &c., &c. No doubt the nigger melodies are old friends with new faces; but whatever they be, they are very attractive, and some of them are really beautiful. Now the Christy's Minstrels were the first, unless we are much mistaken, who made the sentimental songs of the niggers a feature of the performance, or at least introduced sentimental songs without any attempt at extravagance or burlesque. Their new performance, at the Bijou Theatre attached to Her Majesty's Theatre, has lost none of its old attraction, either in humour or sentiment, but has received a great accession of strength in a new burlesque opera, taken from Somnambula, written by Mr. William Brough. This is an admirable bit of fun, and the Dinah of Mr. Collins—the "bones" of the company—as the prima donna, is literally excruciating. In short, the attractions are greater and more varied than ever; and it behoves all who love what is mirthful, tuneful, and original, to pay a visit to Her Majesty's Theatre, and hear and see the Christy's Minstrels.

Taffy Orpheonists.—The Star of Gwent says (says the Wiltshire County Mirror) that steps are about to be taken to form a company of Welsh singers on a similar plan to that of the French Orpheonists, who attained such celebrity last year in the metropolis. Wales has for ages been the land of song, and her inhabitants eminently musical in their tendencies. If a union of the chief singers of the principality be formed as anticipated, it will enhance the national character, and create a nucleus of attraction, which cannot fail to be beneficial in improving the taste and aspirations of the Welsh people, and raise them in the estimation of their neighbours.—Gwent-Fudge.

Tytiens and Giuglini (writes the Leeds Intelligencer) are about to pay Leeds another visit. We observe that Signor Vialetti and Signor Arditi, the composer and conductor, are also of the concert party.

---

* "A Letter to a Friend on the Music of the Future."

Digitized by Google

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(Regent Street and Piccadilly.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF

MR. CHARLES HALLÉ.

THE SIXTEENTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON

(57th Concert in St. James's Hall)

WILL TAKE PLACE

ON MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 8, 1861,

The Programme, Vocal and Instrumental, will again be selected from the Works of

VARIOUS COMPOSERS.

PROGRAMME.

Part I.—Quartet in E major, Op. 59, MM. Vieuxtemps, Ries, Schreurs, and Paque—Haydn; Song, "Now summer hath departed," Miss Banks—Dussek; Song, "Dalla sua pace," Mr. Sims Reeves—Mozart; Sonata Appassionata, Op. 57, Mr. Charles Halle—Beethoven.

Part II.—Sonata in F, Op. 24, for Violin and Pianoforte, Mr. Charles Halle and M. Vieuxtemps—Beethoven; Song, "The Hunter's Song," Mr. Sims Reeves—Mendelssohn; Impromptu in B flat—Schubert; Valse in A flat, Mr. Charles Halle—Chopin; Song, "Ave Maria," Miss Banks—Schubert; Quartet for Pianoforte, Violin, Viola, and Violoncello, Mr. Charles Halle, M. Vieuxtemps, M. Schreurs, and M. Paque—Mozart.

Conductor — Mr. BENEDICT.

To commence at Eight o'clock precisely.

Front Sofa Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Sofa Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Unreserved Seats, 1s.

Tickets of Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street; Cramer, Beale, and Chappell, 201 Regent Street; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48 Cheapside; Mr. Austin, at St. James's Hall; and of the principal musicsellers.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—MR. CHARLES HALLE'S BEETHOVEN RECITALS.—Mr. Charles Hallé begs to announce that he intends giving EIGHT PERFORMANCES of CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC, in the large Room of St. James's Hall, on the afternoons of the subjoined dates:—Friday, May 17th; Friday, May 24th; Friday, May 31st; Friday, June 7th; Friday, June 14th; Friday, June 21st; Friday, June 28th; and Friday, July 5th.—To commence each day at Three o'clock precisely.

The Programmes will be exclusively devoted to the Sonatas composed by Beethoven, for Pianoforte without accompaniments—the whole to be introduced in regular succession, according to the original order of their publication, for which the numbered "Operas" respectively assigned to them are warrants. The universal popularity of these works in England, as elsewhere, and their admitted superiority to all other compositions of the class to which they belong, support Mr. Hallé in the belief that such an uninterrupted presentation of the entire series may elicit the attention both of students and of connoisseurs. Many of the Sonatas never having been publicly performed, though familiar to professors, are unknown to the majority of amateurs; and some of these are quite as worthy admiration as others which, owing to their frequent appearance in concert programmes, have obtained unanimous acceptance.

As exemplifications of the gradual advance of their composer's talent, from its early stages to its ripe maturity, the Pianoforte Sonatas of Beethoven may be consulted as advantageously as the Quartets or the Orchestral Symphonies. They begin at the commencement of his "First" manner, play a very conspicuous part in his "Second," and extend far into the meridian of his "Third." No less than Thirty-two in number, there are enough of them to illustrate, more or less pointedly, every phase of the great musician's artistic progress; and, if merely regarded as a series of compositions for a single instrument, in variety, beauty, and originality, they stand wholly unparalleled.

At each of the Eight Performances two Vocal Pieces will be introduced. The Programmes will contain descriptions, historical and analytical, of the Sonatas as they occur. The object aimed at in these descriptions—from which criticism will, as a matter of course, be excluded—is not to guide the taste, but to assist the appreciation of the audience.

Prices of Admission:—Sofa Stalls (numbered and reserved), for the series, 2*l.* 2*s.*; single ticket, 10*s.* 6*d.* Reserved Seats (Balcony and Area) for the series, 1*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*; single ticket, 5*s.* Unreserved Seats, for the series, 1*l.*; single ticket, 3*s.*

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

M. W. (Oxford). Miss Louisa Pyne is the same Miss Pyne as the Miss Pyne alluded to by our correspondent. For the other question we must refer "M. W." to our leading columns.

In consequence of press of matter, several important concerts are unavoidably postponed until our next.

Deaths.

On the 2nd instant, at his residence in the Hampstead Road, Mr. H. Saker, the well-known comedian, of small-pox.

On the 28th ultimo, in the State Lunatic Asylum, Vienna, Joseph Standigl, the celebrated German bass-singer.

NOTICES.

To Advertisers.—Advertisers are informed, that for the future the Advertising Agency of the The Musical World is established at the Magazine of Messrs. Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements can be received as late as Three o'Clock p.m., on Fridays—but not later. Payment on delivery.

Terms { Three lines and under ... ... 2*s.* 6*d.* / Every additional 10 words ... ... 6*d.*

To Publishers and Composers.—All Music for Review in The Musical World must henceforward be forwarded to the Editor, care of Messrs. Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street. A List of every Piece sent for Review will appear on the Saturday following in The Musical World.

To Concert Givers.—No Benefit-Concert, or Musical Performance, except of general interest, unless previously Advertised, can be reported in The Musical World.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1861.

AS yet the prospects for the forthcoming season of the Italian Opera do not shine with any especial brilliancy. The promises held out by the Covent Garden programme are not of that kind to create unwonted interest or excitement. The enterprising and provident impresario, doubtless, has done all within his power to ensure the patronage of the subscribers and the public; and has presented them a fair, if not an unusually striking, bill. But talent is not of perennial growth, and industry and money can no more purchase good artists, than they can procure sunshine and flowers. If, however, Mr. Gye's new tenor be what everybody pronounces him, he is likely to bring about a reformation at the Royal Italian Opera, which cannot fail to afford unbounded gratification to the lovers of real Italian music. For too long a period, and with too much exclusiveness, many have thought and think, that the great establishment in Covent Garden has devoted its energies and resources to the works of French and German masters. Instead of depending on those composers who created Italian Opera, and infused into it vitality and strength, the director called to his assistance foreign musicians, and entirely changed the nature and character of Italian Opera proper, as far as his theatre was concerned. But who can blame him? He but followed a necessity of the times, which cried out for variety, for novelty, for something unheard, unseen before. The necessity proceeded from a deficiency of singers rather than from a change in musical taste. Had an artist like Rubini been at the head of the establishment, we question if French operas would have been dreamt of. Unfortunately for the perpetuation of pure Italian Opera, Signor Mario had a larger intellect, a more plastic mind, and a more susceptible organisation than even his illustrious predecessor; and with Signor Mario, we need hardly hint to our readers, originated, in a great measure, the foundation of French Opera at Covent Garden. Unfortunately, too, for Signor Mario, the step to him was by no means profitable; and he soon found out the different effect produced on his voice through singing in the Huguenots and singing in the Barbiere.

The success of French Opera at Covent Garden cannot be denied; but now there seems a hope that the Italian School may once more assert its supremacy. A contemporary has asked, why all this talk about novelties, when there are chefs-d'œuvre of the best Italian masters lying on every publisher's music shelves, which no manager thinks of producing? How few of the works of Rossini—perhaps the most popular of all operatic composers—are known to the English public. How many of his finest operas are entirely neglected? In the days when opera buffa was the fashion, the Italiana in Algeri, L'Inganno Felice and Il Turco in Italia were all exceedingly attractive; but the Opera could boast of very different singers then. Now, even Cenerentola is overlooked, the Barbiere and La Gazza Ladra alone, of all the galaxy, remaining. Of Rossini's serious operas we hear even less than of his comic. Twice in a quarter of a century Mosè in Egitto—next to Guillaume Tell, perhaps, the grandest achievement of the composer's genius—has been produced; once, the Siege of Corinth; once, Zelmira; and Armida, we believe, never. Would it not be worth while trying some other of Cimarosa's multitudinous operas besides the Matrimonio Segreto? Is Paesiello, once the glory of the Italian Opera, to be for ever despised? Is old Piccini (or Piccinni) not worth a thought? The success of Signor Tiberini may involve the elucidation of some of these problems. For our own part, we love to hear Italian operas at Italian theatres performed by Italian singers, if obtainable, and think that French opera should have a theatre especially set apart for it.

Digitized by Google

The lessee of Her Majesty's Theatre was dumb, and made no sign. We are wrong. He had announced his intention of not opening the theatre until the expiration of the Court mourning—an act of loyalty unparalleled in the history of operatic managers. No doubt cognizance will be taken of this in the proper quarter, and Mr. Smith be liberally remunerated. Meanwhile the Royal Italian Opera has opened with Meyerbeer's Prophète, the great success of last season; and Mr. Smith——has issued an advertisement. R.

Friday night.

AT the eleventh hour we are enabled to state positively that there will be no performances of Italian Opera this year under the direction of Mr. E. T. Smith. That enterprising gentleman, it would appear, is not inclined to pursue (at least for the moment) a speculation which, for reasons unnecessary to recapitulate, has hitherto proved anything rather than remunerative. He secedes, then, from the management—not of Her Majesty's Theatre, of which he must continue to hold the lesseeship (unless the Earl of Dudley should consent, on fair terms, to take it off his hands), but of the Italian Opera, in that (to employ an unhacknied phrase) "time-honoured" establishment. He secedes, moreover, magnanimously—without a stain upon his managerial escutcheon. Every one of his artists—from Alboni, Titiens, and Giuglini, to the humblest ballet-girl and machinist (machinists are also artists, in their way)—is paid to the uttermost farthing they have a right to claim. Thus, though Mr. Smith will keep clear of the "Italian irons" (vide speech at the dinner of the Theatrical Fund) during the current year, he can—if circumstances look more smilingly upon him, quod this especial department of his enterprise—resume them (and be rescorched) when the International Exhibition of Commerce, Industry, and Art (from which music is, as a matter of course, excluded—being neither a commercial, industrial, nor artistic pursuit) comes off, in the year of our Lord, 1862. He may do this, or he may leave it alone, just as what a well-known writer would call the "freak," or the "whimsy," leads him.

Meanwhile, what plea is Mr. Smith likely to put forth in the public journals for this proceeding, tant soit peu (we beg pardon—more or less) ab retro? Will he say that, in resigning the future direction of Italian opera, at Her Majesty's Theatre, he feels it a duty to offer some explanation to his kind friends in particular, and to the (of course) still kinder "public" in general? Will he continue—that, in consequence of unanticipated so and so, he finds himself compelled to take such and such a step? Will he—to be brief—state, openly and frankly, that his expenses became by degrees so overwhelming that success was literally impossible? We know not; but we do know that he might say as much, without either transgressing the absolute truth, or lessening his reputation one doit* in public esteem. He might also say that, with the salaries he had to pay to his foreign artists, the house crammed to the ceiling, from one end of the season to the other, could only have brought him in —— a loss. Had Mr. Smith been satisfied with his English opera—his Robin Hood, his Amber Witch, his Sims Reeves, &c.—during the winter; had he, in short, &c., &c., &c., he might, no doubt, &c., &c., &c. It is very easy to reason after the fact—to bar the door when the ass is stolen. Nothing is more easy, on one hand, and nothing more stupid on the other. The long and short of the matter is, that Mr. Smith has learned a new lesson, and, there is every reason to believe, contemplates profiting by his experience.

Whether there will be any performances of Italian Opera at Her Majesty's Theatre this season, or the contrary, is entirely another matter. Mr. Smith has washed his hands of the undertaking; but that is no reason why the undertaking should be abandoned in toto. Why, in the name of the Madellonnettes of Béthanie—who built a church and a chapel in honour of the Sacrament of Miracles, on the site of the mansion of the Cattenbroecks—why, in the name of the Madellonnettes of Béthanie—who were all excellent singers, at morning Mass, and (as the author of The Amber Witch might say)

"By night, frequented Theatre—"

why, in the name of the Madellonettes of Béthanie—who invited the curate of Mattaincourt to concerts of secular harmony in the "middest" of the seventeenth century, and sung so divinely that Philip IV. accredited them with letters-patent—why, in the name of the Madellonnettes of Béthanie, should not Titiens and Giuglini (comparable pair); Mario and Grisi (incomparable pair); Everardi and Gassier; Ciampi and Violetti; Borghi-Mamo and Albo—no, Alboni is "to let;" Benedict and Arditi; &c. and &c.; &c. and &c. (&c.); club together, institute a republic (as was done at the Royal Italian Opera, after the flight of Signor Persiani, and the secession of Mr. Delafield), and appeal to the world on their own account? Mr. E. T. Smith, "lessee," might manage, and they "sub-tenants," might sing. Surely the company is strong enough (supposing they can be brought to fraternise glibly) for any emergency or strait.

We have thrown out this hint for just so much as it may be worth. Let M. Gassier prepare the macaroni (which he can do like another Polonini), and all will go well. "Anteater" can tell us something on this head; and if he will condescend to entertain the question next week, our columns are open to him. A republic, though difficult, is not impossible; and here, at any rate, is a crisis at which the motto must perforce be "Republic or nothing."

THE performance of Hamlet now being given at the Princess's Theatre involves one of the most remarkable facts connected with the history of the drama in this country.

* Or "dump." See J. V. Bridgeman's Ethics.

Digitized by Google

A French actor, for many years on the French stage, who by some means had acquired a knowledge of the English tongue, and could speak it fluently, has appeared in the principal character of Shakspeare's tragedy, and with so much success as to absorb nearly all the dramatic interest of the day. M. Fechter, we understand, was born in England; but his parents were French, and his stay in this country was restricted to a short period during his infancy. The language, consequently, could have made no impression upon him; and, indeed, we gather from his pronunciation that his ears could have imbibed none of our modes of speech, our accents or vocal inflections. He speaks English clearly and distinctly, just as a foreign artist by long practice and study and intercourse might have learned to do; he has got rid of the French nasal tone, but not of that peculiar see-saw cadence which we find so hard to reconcile with English speaking, and certainly cannot endure in blank verse. This terrible drawback would seem at the very outset to militate entirely against the impersonation of a character in which more, perhaps, than any in the whole range of the Shaksperian drama, perfect and musical reading was required. M. Fechter cannot conceal his French intonation, nor that emphasis which appears the life and soul of French elocution. An Englishman delivering Shakspeare's lines after the same fashion would be laughed at. Not so the Frenchman. The auditor at first may feel inclined to smile at the sing-song enunciation of the speaker, and the continual elevation of the voice at the end of a sentence, when his ear has been accustomed to the contrary; but his desire to find fault is arrested, and his attention is soon engaged in considering the high and special merits of the actor. After a while he thinks no more of accent or cadence, and M. Fechter, in a short while, exercises a perfect mastery over his imagination.

The Hamlet of the new tragedian is altogether original. The conception appears to have been founded on that part of the young Prince's advice to the players, in which he recommends them "to use all gently;" and "in the very torrent, tempest, and whirlwind of passion, to acquire and beget a temperance that may give it smoothness." This advice M. Fechter religiously follows, and, we must acknowledge, now and then evidently in direct opposition to the poet's intention. In the great soliloquy, for instance, at the end of the second act, "Now I am alone," in which Hamlet works himself up almost to a pitch of madness, by dwelling on the murder of his father and his own irresolution in not following up the revenge to which he has been incited by the ghost, M. Fechter begets a temperance, we are inclined to think, that gives his passion somewhat too much smoothness. Nay, even when he puts his "antic disposition on" before the King, Ophelia or Polonius, he never "o'ersteps the modesty of nature," but still keeps within bounds, as though gentleness were inseparable from Hamlet's nature, even when he desired to assume the contrary. The French actor, indeed, is the very opposite of a ranter, and seems to depend but little on his physical powers for his effects. A more intellectual Hamlet we certainly have not seen; and never one who so thoroughly and profoundly impressed us without our being aware of it. The absence of all the usual "points" prevents those sudden bursts of applause to which the public has long been accustomed, and consequently the Hamlet of M. Fechter does not arouse the thunders of the audience in the same degree as other Hamlets — even the most indifferent — are wont to do. That the actor is deficient in power, we do not think, but rather that the suavity and delicacy of the impersonation assumed as properly belonging to Hamlet. That M. Fechter has studied the character profoundly there is not a shadow of doubt. Every word, look, and act, betrays a meaning drawn from the poet, or the poet's master, Nature. Nothing is done without a purpose; nothing submitted to chance. We may have witnessed scenes elaborated with greater skill, heard speeches delivered with more musical voice, and nicer subtlety of art; have been more deeply impressed, and our admiration more highly excited; but we have seen and heard nothing more earnest and intense, nothing which affords us a clearer glimpse into the poet's soul, and nothing which more thoroughly fills the imagination with a sense of ideal beauty. M. Fechter's Hamlet, according to our notions of Shakspeare and English tragic acting, will hardly bear criticising too closely in detail. It must be judged as an intellectual whole, when, we fancy, it cannot fail to produce a powerful impression. It is not a performance of "shreds and patches," nor can it be compared to reading the play by flashes of lightning, as Coleridge said of Edmund Kean's acting. All things considered or not considered, however, one thing is certain: the French tragedian has created an extraordinary sensation — a greater sensation, indeed, than any actor since Macready. All London is being drawn to the Princess's Theatre, and the principal subject in most conversations is the Hamlet of M. Fechter. It must be owned that the actor appeared at the most favourable time, when the stage boasted no first-rate performer, and when the mind was on the stretch for what was novel, as well as what was excellent. We doubt if M. Fechter would have elicted such unbounded applause in the days of the Kembles, Kean, Young, and Macready; but all these Titans of the boards having passed away, and nothing being left in their place, the public were but too glad to accept real talent, although under the greatest difficulties, and with views somewhat opposed to their preconceived notions of Truth and Shakspeare. M. Fechter has achieved, perhaps, the greatest miracle of the modern stage by his performance of Hamlet. Whether he can sustain the interest he has created, and essay with like success another character of Shakspeare, remains to be proved.

Molique's Abraham.—This oratorio, which achieved so triumphant a success at the last Norwich festival, and which, it was fully anticipated, would be performed in London, by the Sacred Harmonic Society, is announced to be given at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday, April 17th, in aid of the funds of the Middlesex Hospital. The principal vocal parts will be distributed among the following eminent singers: Mad. Lemmens-Sherington, Mad. Sainton-Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, and Mr. Santley. Herr Molique will conduct, and the band and chorus will be complete and numerous. Her Majesty, the Prince Consort, their Royal Highnesses the Duke of Cambridge, the Duchess of Cambridge, and the Princess Mary, together with a long list of the nobility and gentry, have accorded their names as patronesses and patrons. In short, the performance of Herr Molique's Abraham at Exeter Hall, on the present occasion, promises to be the greatest event of the musical season.

Mr. Willert Beale's Tour.—Mad. Alboni, Miss Arabella Goddard, and the other vocal and instrumental artists engaged on this new provincial expedition, organised by Mr. Willert Beale, started from London by the Great Western, on Wednesday afternoon. Their first concert was to be at Plymouth, their second at Exeter, their third and fourth at Bath, and their fifth at Clifton (Bristol).

Digitized by Google

MSS. of Beethoven's Symphonies.—Can any reader of the Musical World give information where the original manuscripts of Beethoven's First Symphony (in C), Second ditto (in D), and Sixth, the "Pastoral," are now preserved?

The score of the "Pastoral," was sold in Vienna some years ago to a "Gentleman in Holland," according to the statement of one of the firm of Artaria and Co., the well-known publishers. Should the MS. be still preserved in that country, its possessor would confer a favour upon the public by publishing its title exactly, together with the date, if (as Beethoven was in the habit of doing) the composer has dated it himself.

Ries says of the MS. of the Second Symphony, that Beethoven presented it to him, but that some one borrowed and never returned it. As it is not likely to have been destroyed, any information relating to it would be of importance, especially the date of its composition. A. W. T.

Royal English Opera.—Miss Susan Pyne, Mr. Honey, and Mr. Santley are to form part of the Covent Garden English Opera Company next winter.

Jenny Lind.—The rumour that Jenny Lind is going to reappear before the public (writes our solemn contemporary, The Press), however unlikely it may seem, is gaining credit. We have heard from persons entitled to belief that Mr. Gye intends to give a series of concerts in the Covent Garden Floral Hall, at which Mad. Otto Goldschmidt will sing. Since the Nightingale was first heard in England fourteen additional years have passed over her head; but her notes are said, by those who are privileged to hear them, to be as sweet and powerful as ever.—Press-Fudge.

Mr. F. T. V. Honeywell has been elected organist of St. Mary Woolnoth, Lombard Street.

Herr Formes.—This great German bass arrived in London yesterday. There is no longer any doubt about his engagement at the Royal Italian Opera. The probability expressed in the Covent Garden prospectus is changed into a certainty. Herr Formes will make his first appearance at the new theatre—his first at the Royal Italian Opera for five years—next week, or the week following, as Walter in Guillaume Tell.

Vocal Association.—M. Ole Bull, the great violinist, after an absence of twenty years, has arrived in this country, and will appear at the next concert of the Vocal Association, Wednesday, April 17th, St. James's Hall, under the direction of Mr. Benedict.

Festival of the Three Choirs.—The arrangements for the next festival of the three choirs of Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester (to be held at Hereford), are complete, so far as the engagement of the principals, band, and chorus, and the fixture of the programme is concerned. Mr. Townshend Smith, the conductor, and talented organist of Hereford Cathedral, has succeeded in securing the services of the following principal vocalists: Mlle. Titiens, Miss Louisa Pyne, and Mrs. Weiss, sopranos; Mad. Sainton-Dolby and Susan Pyne, contraltos; Mr. Sims Reeves, Signor Giuglini, and Mr. Montem Smith, tenors; and Mr. Weiss and Mr. Winn, bass. This is an unusually bright array of talent for Hereford, but the festival is to eclipse all that have gone before. The performance of sacred music will be as follows:—First morning, Mendelssohn's Elijah; second morning, The Last Judgment and part of Samson; third morning, "Spring" (Haydn), "Requiem" (Mozart), and Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise; fourth morning, Handel's Messiah. There will be morning prayers at the cathedral each morning, as at Worcester last year. At the evening concert Benedict's cantata Undine will be given, and among the instrumental pieces will be Beethoven's pastoral symphony, and Mendelssohn's Italian symphony, with the overtures to Euryanthe (Weber), and Anacreon (Cherubini). The stewards of the festival calculate upon the Worcester and Hereford line of railway being opened in time for the festival. This will be of great importance, as it will open Worcester, Birmingham, and the Midland district. Under any circumstances, the meeting is expected to be the best ever held here.

THE ENTERPRISING IMPRESARIO.

CHAPTER XII.

It was four P.M. when the party arrived in Cork; at half-past four they were all busily employed at dinner. Many lamented the macaroni and delicacies of the great basso-cook, who was not yet upon the free list of the Imperial Hotel kitchen, and therefore unable to exercise his remarkable talents in the culinary art; but they managed, nevertheless, almost without exception, to find consolation in the more simple fare provided for them.

The much-abused saddle of mutton and boiled fowls bore testimony to the philosophy with which the deprivation was endured. "Que je deteste la cuisine anglaise," muttered the Frenchman, as he passed his plate to the carver for the third time, thereby proving what complete self-control he had attained, and how he could appear to enjoy that which he said was so thoroughly distasteful to him. For my own part, judging from the manner in which he devoured the mutton, I should never have suspected that he had any objection to la cuisine anglaise. After a few hurried mouthfuls, the impresario of the party left the table, and hastened to the theatre to see what preparations had been made for the performance, which was to be given that evening. He was joined on the way by his partner, the Dublin manager. The preparations they found were not indeed very promising. Round a large heap of bricks and mortar, in the middle of the stage, lay scattered in terrible confusion, the huge boxes and the scenery which had been brought from Dublin. The double bass towered majestically in the background, over all, and seemed to contemplate the disorder of its compagnons de voyage with stoical indifference. From the top of the bricks and mortar, the proprietor of the theatre was to be seen in his shirt-sleeves, shouting to a solitary labourer, who was employed in hammering at something in the pit. The house itself, formerly, I believe, a handsome building, had been almost entirely destroyed by fire, and inconsequence for some time altogether abandoned. The ruins and four walls were rented by the present lessee, and by his own exertions, and the assistance of a few hard-working friends (represented by the labourer in the pit), the house was so far restored as to be just available for dramatic performances, that is to say, there was a stage, and there were divisions in the house before the curtain, which to a certain extent corresponded to boxes, galleries, and pit; but it required a great stretch of good nature on the part of the audience, as well as of the performers, to put up with the inconveniences of theatricals in such a place. The practical lessee, upon seeing our enterprising impresario, ceased haranguing his friend in the pit, and descended from his elevated position. He apologised for appearing in working costume, and offered to show the new comers over the building. They accordingly proceeded to make a survey.

"It's a moighty large theatre, and there'll be a power of people in it to-night," said the lessee, who had taken little heed to accommodate the "power of people." The arrangements for the artists on the stage were equally deficient. No dressing-rooms fit to be entered, no windows mended since the fire; in short, everything was in strict keeping with the heap of bricks and mortar upon the stage, which afforded a very good criterion of the preparations the lessee had made for the Italian Operas. At the instigation of the impresario, and remonstrance of the Dublin manager, several men were called in, who were set to clear the stage. By the aid of wheelbarrows and baskets the bricks and mortar were removed. A glazier was sent for to mend the windows in the dressing-room, intended for the prima donna, while all the loiterers about the theatre were pressed into service, either as impromptu carpenters, scene-shifters, or other useful capacity. In a short time the stage assumed a cleanly and more encouraging appearance. The scenery was certainly not of the most delusive character, but it promised to answer the purpose. Lucrezia Borgia, Don Pasquale and Norma were the operas to be given, and these did not require any great scenic display. Moreover, as the practical lessee argued, the music and the singers were the great attractions, and so long as Grisi and Mario sang in the operas announced, it did not signify what seats the public had to sit upon, or what scenery they had to look at,—they would be sure to come. And this argument proved correct; for our impresario and the Dublin manager had barely succeeded in getting the stage into something like order, when the theatre began to fill with the "power of people" he had predicted. Long before the hour of commencement every seat was occupied, and the dingy-looking house crowded to overflowing by the most brilliant and fashionable audience.

Digitized by Google

When the artists arrived from the hotel, they were not a little astonished at the nooks and corners in which they had to dress. There had been no rehearsal necessary, the band and chorus having been selected from those of the Dublin company, were already acquainted with the operas, none of the party, therefore, had had occasion to visit the theatre previously.

The dressing-room allotted to the tenor was a small recess on the first floor, the stairs to which had not been restored since the fire, but replaced by an ordinary ladder, to climb which gave Gennaro considerable trouble, and was also rather a dangerous matter, owing to the high heels it is his custom to wear. One of the proscenium private boxes had been covered in and appropriated to the use of the baritone and basso, Alphonso and Gubetta; and for Orsini a sort of loose box had been extemporised at the back of the stage by means of some deal boards and strips of calico. The prima donna had, of course, the best accommodation, a small room, with a sheet over the entrance, to do service for a door. The chorus, I believe, dressed under the stage. They came and went up and down a trap-door mysteriously. That subscenic region must have been remarkably chilly, for the conductor complained that, as he sat in his place in the orchestra, a bitterly cold wind bit his legs, while the heated atmosphere of the theatre made the upper part of his body uncomfortably warm. There were but few objections to the impromptu dressing-rooms, all the party knowing and making allowances for the difficulties there had been to overcome in giving Italian operas in a half burnt-down theatre.

The overture to Lucrezia Borgia at length commenced, and the moment came for the curtain to be raised. Before this could be done, Gennaro must be in his place upon the stage. But Gennaro when wanted was really in statu(e) quo. The ladder to his room had been inadvertently removed, and was nowhere to be found. There stood the handsome tenor in the opening in the wall of the stage, some ten or fifteen feet above the heads of his companions, looking like an animated Rembrandt, utterly helpless, until some means could be contrived to remove him from his niche. The ladder was at last brought forth from between two side scenes, where it had been misplaced, and Mario descended just in time to prevent the stage being kept waiting. He was received with acclamations by the audience, as also was Grisi, when she appeared. Her entrée was a little less dignified than that of Gennaro, the Duchess being drawn across the stage upon a hand-truck, by a scene-shifter. The truck was meant to represent a Venetian gondola, but there being no scenery to conceal the contrivance and the gondolier from public gaze, the effect was somewhat more ludicrous than illusive. The performance having been fairly commenced, in spite of all the many obstacles, it went on triumphantly. Grisi and Mario, at that time in the zenith of their power, excited the audience to the greatest enthusiasm. They were recalled incessantly after each act, and cheered vociferously. Thus the first Italian Opera of our touring party in Cork was most unquestionably successful.

During the week Norma and Don Pasquale were given. As Norina in the latter opera, the prima donna leggiera had her temper sorely tried by the obtuseness of her waiting-maid, who was profoundly ignorant of any foreign language. Norina being almost equally unacquainted with the English tongue, a sad difficulty arose between them. The prima donna, just before going on the stage, wanted her gloves, and made signs to the maid, intelligible enough, it would be supposed, to any one of the meanest intellectual ability. The maid, however, failed altogether to understand her mistress, who then attempted to explain herself in a little broken English. "Give me glass," she exclaimed, whereupon the maid handed her a tumbler. That being rejected, she proffered a looking-glass. "My glass," reiterated the little lady, frantically holding up her hands; but it was of no use: the wooden-headed maid would not or could not comprehend that "glass" in this particular instance meant gloves; and Norina, in a flood of angry tears, had to appear before the public with uncovered hands. She concealed her emotion admirably, and in fact evinced a talent for suddenly transforming her appearance from grave to gay, such as Miss P. Horton or John Parry might have envied. At the side scenes, when vainly demanding the "glass," her countenance was indicative of the most abject despair. The next moment she was bowing to the audience, radiant with the most fascinating smiles, and apparently in the enjoyment of a perfectly unruffled temper. At the termination of her aria the gloves were produced by the wooden-headed maid, and the applause of a delighted public quickly effaced all recollection of the misunderstanding.

Antreatre.

Royal Italian Opera.—The theatre opened on Tuesday with the Prophète, which our readers will remember was revived at the end of last season with so much éclât. The cast remains unaltered, Mad. Csillag, Mlle. Corbari, Signors Tamberlik and Tagliafico, resuming the parts of Fides, Bertha, Jean, and Oberthal, and Signors Neri-Baraldi, Polonini, and Zelger, those of the three Anabaptists. The production of Meyerbeer's grand opera is perhaps the most complete achievement of the Royal Italian Opera. The appointments, decorations, dresses, and scenery are truly magnificent, and have hardly been surpassed on the operatic stage in our recollection? Mad. Csillag was as grand and powerful as before in the part of Fides, which is eminently suited to her energetic and commanding style. She was particularly happy on Tuesday night, both in her acting and singing, and created a profound impression. Signor Tamberlik displayed his most admirable qualities, both histrionic and vocal, as the Prophet, and sang more splendidly than we have heard him for years. Mlle. Corbari was most interesting in Bertha, and Signor Tagliafico made Oberthal even more acceptable than was contemplated by Scribe. The band was transcendent, and the chorus almost irreproachable. The skating scene was as full of life and bustle as ever, and the ballet admirably managed. The performance was received with great applause throughout, and Signor Tamberlik obtained a special summons after the second act, the entire house cheering him tumultuously when he appeared. At the end of the opera the National Anthem was sung, Mad. Csillag taking the solos. Despite the court mourning and the Easter recess, which must have driven many of the subscribers from town, the theatre was crowded by a brilliant and fashionable audience.

Drury Lane.—An English opera season was commenced at "Old Drury" on Monday night, with the Amber Witch, transplanted from Her Majesty's Theatre to what may perhaps prove a more congenial locality. Mr. Wallace's admirable work, though unaided by the talent of Mr. Sims Reeves, was so enthusiastically received throughout, that its permanent success may safely be predicted. But the substitution of Mr. Swift for Mr. Reeves was not the only alteration in the cast, for Miss Parepa likewise appeared for the first time in the character performed by Mad. Sherrington, and made a decided "hit." Never did Miss Parepa distinguish herself more honourably upon the stage. Her rendering of the florid air, "My long hair is braided," elicited a rapturous redemand, as also her execution of the solo, "'Tis all, all gone," and the duet with Rudiger, "Till life, at last, be over;" and the beautiful ballad, "When the elves at dawn do pass." It is no small praise to Mr. Swift to state that he was favourably received in a character previously played by Mr. Sims Reeves. Mr. Swift was not deficient either in spirit or skill, and for the most part deserved the unanimous applause bestowed upon him. The cast of the opera was otherwise the same as at Her Majesty's Theatre. The band and chorus, too, though numerically weaker than formerly, included many of the artists who belonged to the Haymarket opera, and took part in the first representations of Mr. Wallace's work. Mr. Tully conducted, and so satisfactorily as to induce the belief, that when time shall have rendered him more familiar with the elaborate score, he will be enabled to do ample justice to the composer's conceptions. All the principal singers were called for at the termination of the first act, and again at the conclusion of the opera, when the enterprising manager, Mr. E. T. Smith, also came upon the stage in obedience to the unanimous demand of the audience. The entertainments concluded with a ballet divertissement, in which the fascinating Mlle. Rhona delighted the public by her graceful and spirituel performances.

Digitized by Google

Provincial.

We read in the Manchester Courier of March 30th, that on the previous day, Mr. W. T. Best, of St, George's Hall, Liverpool, re-opened the organ in the Long-Holme Wesleyan Chapel, Rawtenstall. The following is a list of the stops: —

	Great.—CC to F.	Ft.
*1	Bourdon	16
2	Open Diapason	8
3	Stopped Diapason	8
4	Principal	4
5	Twelfth	2⅔
6	Fifteenth	2
7	Sesquialtera, 3 ranks.
8	Trumpet	8
	Choir.—CC to .
*9	Dulciana	8
*10	Stopped Diapason	8
*11	Flute	4
*12	Piccolo	2
*13	Clarinet	8
	Swell.—Tenor C to F.
14	Double Diapason	16
15	Open Diapason	8
16	Stopped Diapason	8
	Swell—(continued).	Ft.
17	Principal	4
*18	Höhl Flöte	4
19	Fifteenth	2
20	Oboe	8
21	Cornopean	8
	Pedal—CCC to Tenor E.
22	Open Diapason	16
*23	Violin	16
*24	Violoncello	8
*25	Fifteenth	4
*26	Posaune	16
	Couplers and Accessory Stops.
27	Swell to Great.
28	Great to Pedals.
*29	Choir to Pedals.
*30	Tremulant.
*31	Engine for bellows.
	Five Combination Pedals.

The organ was built by the late Mr. Renn, of Manchester, in 1845, and has now been considerably enlarged by Messrs. Kirtland and Jardine, his successors. The great organ, choir, and pedal soundboards are new, also the manual and pedal movements throughout, and those stops marked with an asterisk. The case is constructed so as to permit the swell organ to be carried down to CC. In the afternoon Mr. Best played the following pieces: —

Organ Concertino (A major)	Handel.
Adagio	Lefebure-Wely
Allegro Marziale	W. T. Best.
Grand prelude and fugue (E major)	J. S. Bach.
Air and chorus	Glück.
Triumphal march	Meyerbeer.

The organ concerto was most effectively given by Mr. Best. The Allegro Marziale is a favourable specimen of its composer's powers as a writer, and thoroughly in character with its title. The air with chorus from Glück's opera, Elena é Paride, was admirably given; the manner in which the "tremulant" (a very good one) was introduced, producing the happiest effect. In the evening, after a sermon by Mr. Tyerman, of Manchester, Mr. Best played the following selection: —

Motet, "Deus tibi laus et honor sit"	Mozart.
Air, "Angels ever bright and fair"	Handel.
Prelude and fugue (G major)	J. S. Bach.
Grand march (Tannhäuser)	R. Wagner.

In addition to which Mr. Best, by particular desire, played his own air, with variations in A. This piece is not only very cleverly constructed, but one which few besides the composer could attack with any hope of successfully mastering its difficulties. The preludes and fugues, by Bach — we speak of both afternoon and evening performances — displayed that unerring certainty which characterises Mr. Best's playing; a certainty not confined to mere executive accuracy, but displayed in the most exact uniformity of time; not the slightest acceleration or retardation being observable, however complicated the music, a peculiarity as rare as it is difficult to attain.

The second concert for the season of the Philharmonic Society at Liverpool introduced Mesdames Rieder and Lemaire, Messrs. Henry Haigh and Alberto Lawrence, as vocalists, and Signor Andreoli as pianist. The singers do not appear to have produced any decided effect, and there is some difference of opinion about the pianist. In the Mercury Signor Andreoli is complimented as an "excellent performer," and as one who "has great command of the instrument," and whose "touch and execution are of a superior order." Mendelssohn's Italian symphony, the overture to Jessonda, and a quartet by Mozart, were the instrumental features. That the concert was not up to the usual Philharmonic standard may be gathered from the concluding remarks of the Daily Post, in its notice the day after the performance: —

"We cannot compliment the society on the concert as a whole. We have reason to believe difficulties arose to interrupt a better arrangement, and the committee found themselves obliged to give the programme of last night, or unable to announce any performance. Under all the circumstances, we think they would have better consulted the interests of the subscribers, and also their own credit as managers, had they adopted the latter course."

The omission of the Yorkshire Choral Union from the chorus selected for this year's festival at Leeds seems to have created no small amount of indignation in the different Ridings. The following letter (addressed to the editor of the Leeds Intelligencer), apropos of the subject, seems to represent things in a very fair light, and justly to convict the committee of incompetence: —

"Sir,—I was surprised to hear that the committee have decided that the chorus shall be selected from the Yorkshire Choral Union (Leeds Festival Choral Society), the Madrigal and Motet Society, and the Bradford Choral Society—by the chorus committee. I have been informed that the services of a chorus of 300 voices were offered to the committee by the Yorkshire Choral Union. When we take into consideration that this chorus has been brought to its high state of efficiency under the regular training of the gentleman whom the Festival Committee have appointed chorus-master, it must be obvious that the policy adopted in this case is not calculated to enhance the success of the Festival.

"If the individuals who passed this resolution think the chorus committee are more competent than the chorus-master to form an opinion of the qualifications of the chorus singers who may be brought before them, where, I ask, is the necessity for appointing a chorus-master at all? Those who are competent to make choice of the chorus ought also to be competent to train them.

"Surely such an inconsistent arrangement cannot have been made with the sanction of a majority of the general committee! A chorus, like the Yorkshire Choral Union, which has had the high honour of singing before Her Most Gracious Majesty and Court, by special command, and been pronounced by the most distinguished metropolitan artists and critics to be the finest choral body in the kingdom, ought not to be impaired by the introduction of inferior talent. It needs no argument to prove to any impartial person that in the short space of time which can now be allowed for the training of a fresh chorus, the same precision, accuracy, taste, and proficiency cannot be obtained which is already possessed by the Yorkshire Choral Union.

"I trust that the general committee will deem it prudent to engage that chorus which will perform the music allotted to it (especially part songs, choral glees, &c., which have now become so important a feature at all the great musical gatherings), and which can only be properly rendered by a regularly organised choral body, such as the Yorkshire Choral Union.

"I believe I am correct in stating that the Bradford Festival Committee almost entirely ignored our Leeds singers at their last Festival in 1859.

"Your obedient servant,

"A well-wisher to the Festival."

"Leeds, March 28th, 1861."

Mr. R. S. Burton's annual Easter Festival took place at the Town Hall, under the patronage of the president, vice-presidents, and honorary members of the Yorkshire Choral Union. Monday was devoted to a grand miscellaneous concert, and Tuesday to the Messiah. The artists included Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mrs. Sunderland, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Winn, &c. M. Lemmens presided at the organ, and there was a full and efficient band. The chorus was composed of the Yorkshire Choral Union, and Mr. Burton was conductor.

From Ipswich a correspondent writes as follows: —

"The fifth and last monthly series, for the present season of bi-weekly Popular Concerts by the Ipswich Musical Union, was brought to a close on Saturday se'nnight. Although, in consequence of the bad weather, the last Wednesday evening's attendance was not what was desired, the concert being for the benefit of the directors, Messrs. Bowles and Norman, yet, on the whole, the series has been as satisfactory as its predecessors. During the month vocal selections, with orchestral accompaniments from Il Trovatore and the Bohemian Girl, have been given, which were well received, many of the songs and choruses receiving vociferous encores. Miss Matt and Miss Bacon, as the leading lady vocalists, appeared to give great satisfaction, the 'Breese of the

Digitized by Google

Night,' from Trovatore, by the former lady, deserving especial mention. The leading parts for male voices were sustained by Messrs. Bowles, Matt, Dale, and Hayward, assisted in the choruses by the Misses Hayward, Messrs. Smy, Steel, Abbott, &c. The miscellaneous concerts have consisted of overtures, dance music, glees, ballads, &c. There have also been given during the month large selections from the oratorios, Judas Maccabæus and the Creation; well performed, the orchestra being led by Mr. Charles J. Cooke, and the baton being wielded by Mr. W. Norman. These concerts have indicated decided musical progress, and have laid the foundation for further advancement in the cause of harmony. The brass band (the people's concerts) are continued, at a loss to the subscribers, it is said, of 5*l.* per week, and in reference to your query, at foot of the last communication from Ipswich, as to who the Messrs. Bowmer were, the only answer it appears that can be given, 'ECHO' furnishes."

At BRIGHTON, English opera is at present the vogue, Mr. Nye Chart, the lessee of the theatre, having engaged Mad. Rudersdorff and a tolerable company, with Signor Randegger as conductor. The operas already given have been the Trovatore, Maritana, and La Traviata, Mad. Rudersdorff, of course, playing the heroine in each. The other singers are Miss Adela Alexander, contralto, Signor Tilo Palmieri, tenor, M. Morelle, barytone, and M. Durand, barytone. Of the prima donna the Brighton Gazette speaks in the highest terms. "We may observe," writes our contemporary, alluding to the performance of the Trovatore —

"That Mad. Rudersdorff sings à la Mad. Cruvelli, with amazingly rapid execution in her roulades, which she renders with great skill and accuracy. In one or two instances she ran the chromatic scale with remarkable precision, almost as distinct as a skilful pianist would perform it. The celebrated air at the commencement of the opera, in which Piccolomini made such a hit, was given with great expression; but the gem of the whole opera was the beautiful air preceding the 'Miserere,' which she sank in the most pathetic and expressive manner, the upper notes being exquisitely in tune, and whether in sotto voce, or in the more impassioned strains, she was equally effective. How this air escaped an encore was marvellous to us, but we suppose the 'Miserere' following so close upon it, the audience reserved their admiration."

The writer is not as correct as enthusiastic. Mlle. Piccolomini never made a hit in Leonora's first song — in fact, never sang in the opera in London more than once. A new tenor, Mr. Topham Reynolds, made his first essay on the stage on Tuesday evening, as Don Cæsar de Bazan, in Maritana. According to the various reports it was a perfect failure both in the acting and singing. No forbearance appears to have been shown towards a novice, who may after all turn up a trump.

The Birmingham Journal informs its readers that a meeting of the Festival Committee was recently held in the committee room of the Town Hall, to receive a report from the Orchestral Committee, and the resignation of Mr. J. F. Ledsam as chairman. The Mayor occupied the chair. Mr. Mason read the report, of which the following is an abridgment:—

"The Orchestral Committee concluded the engagements of the band and chorus. The chorus has been selected as follows:—180 from the Festival Choral Society; 60 volunteers from the Amateur Harmonic Association; 60 from the professional resources of the town (not belonging to either of the above societies); and 24 from the metropolis and cathedral towns. Total, 324. In the case of the societies, the efficiency of the members has been guaranteed by their respective committees, and in that of the supplementary choir each unknown member has been subjected to a trial. The rehearsals are to commence on separate evenings in each week up to the end of June, when the full choir will be united. Mr. Costa has signified his intention of personally drilling the choir after the closing of the Opera, the first week in August. The programme of the week is thus decided on:—Tuesday morning, Elijah; Thursday morning, Messiah; Friday morning, Beethoven's Grand Mass in D, and a selection from Israel in Egypt; Tuesday or Wednesday evening, the Creation; Friday evening, Judas Maccabæus. The expected new oratorio not being forthcoming at present, the subjoined selections were offered for choice, to take place on the Wednesday morning:—1st, the Mount of Olives, the Requiem, and the Dettingen Te Deum; 2nd, the Lobgesang and the Requiem; 3rd, Samson. As most likely to accord with popular taste, the Orchestral Committee advise the adoption of Samson (Mr. Mason's 'recommendation' is generally equivalent to law at the Birmingham Festival), which has not been given here since 1852. Mad. Sainton-Dolby and Mr. Sims Reeves are the only principal singers up to this time engaged. The other engagements will be filled up in April. The committee had ascertained, by direct communication with Mad. Clara Novello, that it was not that lady's intention to reappear in public. The ventilation and lighting of the Town Hall, the 'prices of admission,' 'the revision of the list of vice-presidents,' and the appointment of an Advertising, Ticket, and Book Committee, still remain to be considered. A letter from J. F. Ledsam, Esq., resigning the chairmanship of the committee, which he had held by triennial appointment for many years, formed the last item of the report, which having been received and adopted, the Mayor moved—'That this meeting receives with feelings of unfeigned regret the resignation by J. F. Ledsam, Esq., of the chairmanship of this committee, a position he has honourably held for many years, with great advantage to the interests of the General Hospital; and in recording its thanks for the courtesy, zeal, and assiduity with which at all times he has discharged the duties of chairman, this meeting further desires to express its sympathy at the cause which has led to Mr. Ledsam's retirement from the active discharge of official duties in connection with the Committee of Management of the Birmingham Triennial Musical Festival.' Mr. J. O. Mason expressed on his own behalf, and, he was sure, of the whole committee, the regret with which the resignation had been received.—Mr. J. W. Whateley then proposed, and Mr. W. J. Beale seconded, the appointment of Mr. Mason as chairman. The resolution was unanimously agreed to. Several others were adopted, and considerable discussion took place in reference to the lighting and ventilating of the Town Hall. The proposition to resort to the old expedient of brackets being universally condemned as ugly, inefficient, and out of harmony with the building, it was agreed to memorialise the Town Council on the subject."

Letter to the Editor.

SIR,—Will you be kind enough to say, in your impression of Saturday next, whether Mr. "Santley," the celebrated singer, is a barytone or a tenor?—I am, &c.

ALPHA.

[A barytone; and a barytone pur sang; a barytone, in short, de première source, or, in shorter, of the first water. ED.]

VOCAL ASSOCIATION.—The second subscription concert was given on Wednesday evening at St. James's Hall. The principal performances by the choir were Mendelssohn's psalm, "Hear my prayer," the solos by Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, Mozart's motet, "Ave Verum," Meyerbeer's "Pater Noster," several glees and part-songs. The choir were in great force, and sang excellently throughout, distinguishing themselves more particularly in Mendelssohn's psalm and the "Pater Noster" of Meyerbeer, which Mr. Benedict first introduced to an English audience. In addition to the solos in the psalm, Mad. Sherrington sang Mr. Benedict's beautiful and characteristic song "The Skylark," which was received with rapturous applause. The other singers were Miss Messent, Miss Augusta Thomson, Miss E. Boden, and Signor Gambogi. Miss Thomson introduced the air "Pouvoir du chant," from Auber's new opera, La Circassienne, and was encored; and Signor Gambogi exhibited some vocal power in the tenor air "Fra Poco" from Lucia. There were sundry instrumental performances more or less good. M. Sainton executed Beethoven's Romance in F for the violin, and a new Scotch fantasia—both superbly; M. Lemmens performed, in a masterly manner, a fugue of his own composition on the organ; and Miss Eleanor Ward played very brilliantly a fantasia by Fumagalli (La Danse des Sylphes) on the pianoforte. There was a large attendance. Mr. Benedict conducted—admirably, as usual.

BULL.—This extraordinary manipulator, who has not visited this extraordinary metropolis for an extraordinary number of years, has arrived in this extraordinary metropolis, with the intention of attracting an extraordinary audience to an extraordinary concert, at which he will perform some extraordinary feats upon an extraordinary fiddle, which, by an extraordinary coincidence, turns out to be one of the extraordinary specimens of that most extraordinary of extraordinary manufacturers of extraordinary violins, the extra-extraordinary Stradiverius. (Extraordinary.)

Digitized by Google

Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir.—Last night Mr. Leslie's cantata Holyrood was given for the second time, and decidedly improves on repetition. Just now we can merely chronicle its success. Next week we shall give particulars of the whole concert.

Gallery of Illustration.—On Monday evening, Mr. and Mrs. German Reed, and Mr. John Parry, appeared here in an entirely new entertainment, entitled Popular Illustrations from Real Life, before a crowded audience, and with complete success. The gallery has been entirely redecorated, and presents a very handsome appearance. Of the performance itself, it would be hardly fair to speak at length at present, as it was stated that in many essential particulars the arrangements were incomplete, and the indulgence of the audience was, in consequence, invoked. Mr. German Reed's song, descriptive of the hunting-field, though left unfinished for want of certain intended illustrations, promises to make a "hit." Mr. John Parry's account of the humour of a Christmas Pantomime, is one of the best "patter" songs we ever heard him deliver.

Leeds Musical Festival, 1861.—This festival has been fixed to be held on the 3rd, 4th, 5th, and 6th of September. Dr. Sterndale Bennett has been appointed conductor; Mr. R. S. Burton, of Leeds, chorus-master; and Mr. Spark, of Leeds, the organist. At a meeting of the committee, on Saturday, some alteration was made in the proposed arrangements for choosing the chorus. Besides Leeds, the towns from which the chorus will probably be selected include Bradford, Halifax, Huddersfield, and Sheffield. Nothing definite has yet been done as to the works to be performed or the principals to be engaged.

Mr. Alfred Hammond, of Lombard Street and Brixton, has resigned the organistship of St. Mary Woolnoth, City.

Between 700*l.* and 800*l.* have been collected in aid of the sufferers by the late fire at Cooke's circus, at Portsmouth.

The Late Scribe from the Point of View of the "London Review."—"In one of my last letters I had to chronicle a most successful lyrical effort on the part of Auber the composer, and his time-sanctioned acolyte, Scribe. Of these two veterans, the one least charged with years has suddenly laid down his load. Auber lives on, but the companion with whom all his best works were written has left his side. Scribe is probably the last, as he was the foremost, of a race. He was the arch-type of the French literary trader, who applies himself resolutely to the work of converting words into money. Of thought, in every shape, he was utterly innocent; and of words, he only knew so much as made him wonder they were not superseded by figures. The success of Scribe was the monument of the entire frivolity of the period at which he had most lived; it endured, but could not have arisen in the present time, and the young generation, more curious of the rectitude of speech, if not higher-minded than their grandfathers, turned with disdain from the extraordinary 'slip-slop' which poor Scribe naïvely conceived to be French. He was shocked at his want of influence over the 'society' of our day, and he pitied the public. His departure from life leaves vacant a fauteuil at the Académie he ought never to have filled, and the filling whereof will be the great event of the next year to the opposition parties in France."—London-Review Fudge!

RETROSPECTION.*

(Sequel to "A Mother's Forebodings.")

BY JOHN YOUNG.

I nestle with a fond emotion,
Closer to thy loving heart,
And feel a mother's deep devotion
From thy soul can ne'er depart.
The glitt'ring tear-drop gliding from me,
Down thy gentle bosom true,
Doth tell far more of fondness to thee,
Than our parting moments knew.

Ah! I could tell of bright lands painted,
Far away beyond the sea,
But that lov'd tales with sorrow tainted,
From its mem'ry I would flee.
Yet, mingling with each sad reflection,
Hours of rapture will come back,
Like all such hours, so near perfection,
Heaven closed their sunny track.

* These words are copyright.

EWER & CO.'S LIST OF NEW PUBLICATIONS.

				s.	d.
Benedict, J. Malcolm, Marche Triomphale	...	...	...	4	0
Berger, Francesco, Bon repos, chérie, Nocturne		...	...	2	0
,, Lena, Serenade		...	...	2	0
Gaude, Louis de la, Evelyn, Polka Mazurka			...	2	0
Garibaldi, Viva Italia, March and National Hymn (with Italian words)				2	0
Jungmann, A., Souvenance	...	...	...	2	6
Kruger, W., Les Cloches du Soir	...	...	...	4	0
Liszt, J., Grand Paraphrase sur Il Trovatore	...	...	...	6	0
,, Rigoletto	...	...	...	6	0
,, Ernani	...	...	...	6	0
Magnus, H., Carnaval Napolitain	...	...	...	4	0
Pacher, J. A., Op. 9, La Harpe	...	...	...	4	0
,, Op. 34, Le Ruisseau		...	...	3	0
,, Op. 50, Twelve Melodious Studies			...	7	6
,, Op. 53, Tendresse	...	...	..	3	0
Schultres, W., Op. 27, Stella Matutina, mélod. réllg.			...	2	6
Silas, E., Op. 49, Costanza Impromptu		...	...	3	0
Spindler, F., L'Oisillon	...	...	...	2	6
Wollenhaupt, H. A., Op. 19, Grande Marche de Concert			...	3	0
,, Op. 23, La Gazelle		...	...	3	0
,, Op. 24, Galop di Bravura			...	4	0
,, Op. 26, Helene. Grand Valse Brillante			...	4	0
,, Cordelia. Schottisch		...	...	3	0
,, La Violette. Polka de Concert			...	3	0

MOLIQUE'S ORATORIO—"ABRAHAM."

Soprano Airs.—I will extol Thee, my God	...	...	...	4	0
,, Hear my prayer, O Lord	...	...	...	3	0
,, Unto Thee lift I up mine eyes	...	...	...	4	6
Contralto Air.—They kept not the law		...	...	1	6
Tenor Airs.—Who walketh uprightly		...	...	2	6
,, Pour out thy heart before the Lord			...	2	6
Baritone Airs.—Lead me, O Lord, in Thy righteousness			...	3	0
,, Let there be no strife		...	...	2	6
,, The joy of my heart is ceased	...	...	...	4	0
,, Lord have mercy upon me	...	...	...	4	6
Duets.—Cast out this bondwoman. Alto and Baritone			...	4	6
,, It is of the Lord's great mercies. Soprano and Baritone				3	0
Trio.—Alto, Tenor, and Bass. Let all those rejoice			...	3	0
Quartet.—S. A. T. & B. Go in peace before the Lord			...	4	6
March.—Arranged for Pianoforte Solo		...	...	2	6
,, ,, Duet			...	4	0
,, ,, Organ (arranged by W. T. Best)			...	3	0

EWER & CO. 87 REGENT STREET,

Universal Circulating Musical Library.

AUBER'S NEW OPERA,

LA CIRCASSIENNE,

NOW PERFORMING WITH

IMMENSE SUCCESS

AT THE

OPÉRA COMIQUE, PARIS,

WILL SHORTLY BE PUBLISHED BY MESSRS.

ADDISON, HOLLIER, and LUCAS,

Who have Purchased the

COPYRIGHT.

London, 210 Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

BOOSEY'S ORCHESTRAL OVERTURES, arranged by LAMOTTE. Price 8s. each for full band; 5s. each for small band.

1. Crown Diamonds, Auber.
2. Zampa, Herold.
3. Zanetta, Auber.
4. Oberon, Weber.
5. Fra Diavolo, Auber.
6. Der Freischütz, Weber.
7. Domino Noir, Auber.
8. Gazza Ladra, Rossini.
9. Dame Blanche, Boieldieu.
10. Masaniello, Auber.
11. Part du Diable, Auber.
12. Guillaume Tell, Rossini.

KUHE'S NEW TRANSCRIPTION of SCHUBERT'S FAVOURITE MELODIES, as short and effective Pieces for the Pianoforte, price 2s. 6d. each.

1. Serenade.
2. Ave Maria.
3. Adieu.
4. The Wanderer.
5. The praise of Tears.
6. Thine is my heart.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

BRASS BAND, STRING BAND, DRUMS and FIFES, &c.—Boosey's Brass Band Journal, Quick Step Journal, Orchestral Journal of Dance Music, Orchestral Selections from the New Opera, Orchestral Overtures, Drum and Fife Journal, &c.

Full particulars of these unrivalled Publications may be had, post-free, from Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

MISS GODDARD'S New Solo, ALBION. Fantasia on English Airs, by J. BENEDICT; performed with the greatest success by Miss ARABELLA GODDARD. "The melodies upon which 'Albion' is constructed—'Pray Goody,' and 'Come if you dare'—are varied, ornamented, and otherwise elaborated with no less elegance than skill."—The Times. "Elaborate as the variations are, they never, as in similar compositions, obscure the melody, but rather enhance its beauty."—Daily Telegraph. Also the companion pieces, ERIN and CALEDONIA, by J. BENEDICT. Price 4s. each.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

GOLLMICK'S SIX NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE, being the third set of German Volkslieder, transcribed for the piano. Price 2s. 6d. each.

"My Own Love."
"Mourn not."
"The Heart's Desire."
"Lorely."
"The Maidens of Tyrol."
"Farewell to the Woods."

"Herr Gollmick has produced a set of pianoforte pieces which will be found highly attractive, not only from the beauty of the airs themselves, but from the taste and skill with which he has treated them."—Illustrated London News.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

THE GUINEA EDITION of BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS for the Pianoforte. Edited by W. DORRELL. With Life and Portrait, complete in two volumes, handsomely bound, 10s. 6d. each.

"There are many editions of Beethoven's sonatas, German, French, and English; but there is not one that we have seen, from which taking all things into account—correctness and clearness of the text, elegance of form, and moderation of price—we have derived so much satisfaction as from the edition now before us."—Daily News.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

RICHARD WAGNER'S TANNHAUSER.—BOOSEY and SONS beg to announce the publication of a complete edition of the celebrated Opera, "Tannhäuser," for Pianoforte Solo, with an introduction describing the plot and music. Price 7s. 6d., in cloth. "Tannhäuser" has been performed in every theatre in Germany, and has just been produced in Paris with unprecedented success. It is considered the best work of its author, whose compositions are now the subject of discussion throughout the musical world. Boosey and Sons believe therefore that the present publication will be acceptable to the English public as a specimen of the genius of one of the most remarkable men of the age.

28, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S NEW SINGING METHODS for LADIES' and GENTLEMEN'S VOICES, by J. L. HATTON. Price 1s. each.—BOOSEY and SONS have much pleasure in stating that these two Methods, which have been so long announced (and unavoidably postponed), will be ready for delivery in a few days. The publishers believe that amateurs and students will find these Methods of more practical use than any other similar publications. They are entirely original in form and contents, embodying in a small compass the result of the experience of their distinguished author. Each Method is distinct and complete in itself. Early orders should be given to musicsellers and booksellers to secure copies of the first edition. Price 1s. each, or post free, 1s. 2d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

NOTICE.—The SHILLING EDITION of IL TROVATORE, for Pianoforte Solo (being No. 40 of "Boosey's "Musical Cabinet") is now ready, and may be had of every bookseller and musicseller in the United Kingdom. Price 1s. 2d. post free.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

WALLWORTH'S ART OF SINGING. Second Edition, just out, full music size, price 7s. A new and modern method for cultivating the voice, and for gaining a perfect vocalisation—a practical work—contains 35 pages of music. With a true method of acquiring the Shake, now for the first time introduced in a Singing Tutor. By T. A. WALLWORTH, Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.

Published by A. W. Hammond (late Jullien), 214 Regent Street; and may also be had of the Author at his residence, 81 Park Street, Grosvenor Square, W., where Pupils are also received.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.

Their Catalogues, which contain a great variety of Music calculated for teaching purposes, may be had, post-free, on application.

London: 18 Hanover Square.

NEW PUBLICATIONS
OF
DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.,
244 REGENT STREET. (JUST OUT.)

"MAY."—New Duettino, by HENRY SMART, composed for equal Voices. Price 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Henry Smart, in this melodious and truly exquisite little duet, has, if possible, even surpassed in elegance and vocal finish, the pieces so warmly eulogised in our last impression."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE BANNER OF ST. GEORGE," by BALFE, a new National Song. The words by John Brougham, written for, and dedicated to, THE ST. GEORGE'S RIFLE CORPS, is published, beautifully illustrated, price 2s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," Rêvérie by W. Kuhé, on Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), and "I love YOU," Sims Reeves's popular ballad, transcribed for the Piano by Emile Berger, are published, price 2s. each, by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL," by W. H. WEISS, composed and sung by the composer, with the greatest success, as well as by Mr. WINN and other vocalists of celebrity, is published, handsomely illustrated, price 2s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

ANDANTE in E flat, by GEORGIANA HOLMES, from a Quintet by FELICIEN DAVID, arranged for the pianoforte, and dedicated to Lady Scott, is just published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, S. W., where "Les Etoiles et leur Langage," Nocturne and "Air with Variations" (both composed by Georgiana Holmes), may be obtained, price 3s. each.

NEW CONCERTINA MUSIC by GIULIO REGONDI.—Reichardt's popular song, "Thou art so near, and yet so far," transcribed for the CONCERTINA and PIANOFORTE by GIULIO REGONDI, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"NEW YEAR'S EVE," by W. H. HOLMES.—This agreeable "Pensée" by the above talented composer, is just published for the pianoforte, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

TYROLEAN MOUNTAIN SONG, by T. MAUSS (Der Jodelplatz), arranged for the pianoforte, and dedicated to Mr. W. E. Jarrett, of Cheltenham, is just published, price 3s.

Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, S. W.

AGUILAR'S TRANSCRIPTION of WEBER'S LAST WALTZ is just published for the pianoforte, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W., where Aguilar's Reverie, "Sunset Glow," may be obtained, price 3s., and his two latest songs, "Sympathy" (poetry by Mrs. BELL), 2s. "In a wood on a windy day" (poetry by ACTON BELL), 3s. and "Farewell" (poetry by Bishop HEBER), 2s., may be obtained.

DEUX BONBONS FROM THE DOMINO NOIR.

No. 1, "LA BELLE INÉS," Aragonaise. Price 1s.
No. 2, "AH, QUELLE NUIT," Bolero. Price 1s.

Transcribed for the Pianoforte, by

EMILE BERGER.

The above pieces are very easy transcriptions (without octaves) of the two celebrated songs in Auber's popular opera, sung by Miss LOUISA PYNE with such eminent success at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden, and are published by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW WORK FOR STUDENTS.

THE most important CADENCES and MODULATIONS through the MAJOR and MINOR keys, with HARMONISED SCALES composed for the pianoforte, harmonium, or organ, by IMMANUEL LIEBICH, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"FRESH AS A ROSE," sung by Sims Reeves, and enthusiastically encored at Mr. Howard Glover's concert, St. James's Hall, was composed expressly for the occasion by BALFE, and is just published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street. W.

"THAT HANDSOME VOLUNTEER," sung by Miss Lucette, and invariably encored, in Captain Morton Price's entertainment, as well as by Miss Emma Stanley in the "Seven Ages of Woman," composed by EMILE BERGER, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street. W.

SIMS REEVES' Popular Song, "WERT THOU MINE." Sung with immense applause at St. James's Hall, composed expressly for him by FRANK MORI. Poetry by CHARLES MACKAY. Price 2s. 6d. Published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street. W.

MEYERBEER'S setting of THE LORD'S PRAYER, (Paternoster), to be sung by the Vocal Association, at St. James's Hall, on WEDNESDAY NEXT, is published in Vocal Score (Organ or Piano accompaniments, ad. lib.) price 3s., and in separate Vocal parts, price 6d. each, only by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street. W.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 12 James Street, Buckingham Gate, in the Parish of St. Margaret, in the City of Westminster, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, April 6, 1861.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 39—No. 15 SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1861 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—MISS LOUISA PYNE and M. OLE BULL (the great Violinist), on WEDNESDAY EVENING next, April 17th, at the CONCERT of the VOCAL ASSOCIATION; also Madame LOUISA VINNING, Miss E. HORDER, Miss CHIPPERFIELD, and Miss LASCELLES. Fantasia, Pianoforte, Mr. W. G. CUSINS; Madrigals and Part-Songs by the Choir of 200 Voices; Accompanyist, Mr. FRANCESCO BERGER; Conductor, M. BENEDICT. Sofa Stalls, 5s.; Reserve Area and Balcony, 3s.; Unreserved, 1s. At the Ticket Office, 28 Piccadilly.

NEW PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.—ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Conductor, Dr. WYLDE. The SECOND CONCERT of the Tenth Season will take place on MONDAY EVENING, April 22nd. The PUBLIC REHEARSAL on SATURDAY AFTERNOON, April 20th, when will be performed Beethoven's GRAND CHORAL SYMPHONY, and other great instrumental works. Pianist, Mr. C. HALLÉ; violin, M. VIEUXTEMPS.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Directors respectfully announce that the THIRD CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms on MONDAY Evening next, the 15th of April. Programme:—Sinfonia in B flat, No. 4 (Haydn); Concerto in E flat, Pianoforte, M. OTTO GOLDSCHMIDT (Beethoven); Overture, Athalie (Mendelssohn); Sinfonia Pastorale (Beethoven); Overture, Oberon (Weber). Vocal Performer, Signor Gardoni (his first appearance in England this season). Conductor, Professor STERNDALE BENNETT, Mus. D. To commence at 8 o'clock.

Single Tickets, 15s. Subscriptions received and Tickets issued by Messrs. Addison, Hollier and Lucas, No. 210 Regent Street.

MR. WALTER MACFARREN'S THREE CONCERTS of Solo and Concerted Pianoforte Music, at the Hanover Square Rooms, on TUESDAY EVENINGS, April 23rd and June 11th, and on SATURDAY MORNING, May 18th. Programme of First Concert:—Duets (Op. 127), Piano and Violin (Spohr); Variations and Finale alla Fuga, Piano (Beethoven); Andante and Scherzo, Piano Duet (Walter Macfarren); Trio in B flat, Piano, Violin, and Violoncello (Mozart); Mazurka and Saltarella, Piano (Walter Macfarren); Duo in D, Piano and Violoncello (Mendelssohn). Violin, Mr. H. BLAGROVE; Violoncello, Signor PIATTI; Piano, Miss LINDLEY and Mr. WALTER MACFARREN. Vocalist, Miss PALMER; Accompanyist, Mr. FRANCESCO BERGER. Programme illustrated by Mr. G. A. MACFARREN. Subscription £1 1s.; Single Ticket, 10s. 6d. Of the principal Musicsellers, and Mr. Walter Macfarren, 58 Albert Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

MR. SAINTON begs to announce that his FIRST SOIREE MUSICALE will take place at his Residence, 5 Upper Wimpole Street, on WEDNESDAY, April 24th, to commence at Half-past Eight o'clock. Programme:—Quartet in E Minor, Op. 45 (Spohr); Aria, "The song of the Quail" (Beethoven); Sonata in D minor, Pianoforte and Violin, first time (Schumann); Quartet in C, No. 9, Opera 59 (Beethoven); Solos, Pianoforte (S. Heller); Song, "Name the glad day" (Dussek); Solo, violin, "Un souvenir" (Sainton). Executants: MM. CHAS. HALLÉ, SAINTON, BEZETH, WEBB, and PAQUE. Accompanyist, Mr. W. G. CUSINS; Vocalist, Miss BANKS. Tickets to be had of the principal Musicsellers, and of M. Sainton, at his Residence. Subscription for the series of Concerts, One Guinea and Half; Single Tickets, Half a Guinea each.

MISS ALICE MANGOLD begs to announce her first MATINEE MUSICALE, at the Hanover Square Rooms, April 17th. Artists: Pianoforte, Miss Alice MANGOLD; Violin, M. SAINTON; Violoncello, Signor PIATTI; Tenor and Contrabasso, Messrs. WEBB and HOWELL. Vocalists, Mlle. MARIA DE VILLAR and Mr. W. CUMMINGS; Pianiste Accompagnateur, Mr. FRANCESCO BERGER. Tickets 5s., and Stalls Half a Guinea; to be had of Messrs. Ashdown and Parry, 18 Hanover Square; Messrs. Keith and Prowse, Cheapside; and Miss Alice Mangold, 4 Queen Square, Bloomsbury.

SWISS FEMALE SINGERS.—SCHWEITZER SANGER GESELLSCHAFT.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—These pleasing and highly amusing CONCERTS will be repeated EVERY EVENING at Eight, and EVERY AFTERNOON at Three. Books of the words, with translation, 6d. each. Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. Tickets may be secured at Mr. Mitchell's, Royal Library, 33 Old Bond Street; and at the Ticket Office, St. James's Hall, 28 Piccadilly.

 "Third week, and decided success of this attractive novelty."

MR. J. THEODORE PETTERS (Blind Pianist), Pupil of Mr. W. C. Filby, has the honour of announcing his second GRAND EVENING CONCERT, to take place at Westbourne Hall, Bayswater, on MONDAY, April 15th. Artists: Madame GILBERT, Miss SUSANNA COLE, Madame ANDREA, Mr. SUCHET CHAMPION, Mr. FRANK ELMORE, and Mr. HORACE STUART (Pupil of Dr. Gilbert—his first appearance). Pianoforte: Mr. J. THEODORE PETTERS; Dr. BENNETT GILBERT. Flute: Mr. BENJAMIN WELLS. Violin and violoncello: the brothers OTTO and FERDINAND BOOTH. Harp: Mr. LAYLAND. Conductor: Mr. W. C. FILBY.

MISS LASCELLES has RETURNED to Town for the SEASON. 35 York Street, Portman Square.

MADAME CATHERINE HAYES has returned to Town for the Season. 13, Westbourne Park. W.

MR. JOHN THOMAS (HARPIST) begs to announce his RETURN to London for the Season.—Address, 109 Great Portland Street.

COLLARD and COLLARD'S NEW WEST-END ESTABLISHMENT, 16 Grosvenor Street, Bond Street, where all communications are to be addressed. Pianofortes of all classes for Sale and Hire.

AUGENER and Co., 86 NEWGATE STREET, London.—12,000 New Works have been added to the UNIVERSAL CIRCULATING MUSICAL LIBRARY, forming a Third Supplement, price 2s. 6d. The complete Catalogue, containing 62,000 Works, gives an unlimited power of selection.

Annual Subscription, Two Guineas, which also entitles Subscribers to One Guinea's worth of Music as their property.

London: Augener and Co., 86 Newgate Street, and 4A Tottenham Court Road. Prospectuses on application.

TO ORGAN BUILDERS.—WANTED, by a first-class Tuner and Finisher, a SITUATION. Unexceptionable references can be given.—Address, J. A. Barker, 20 Horse Market, Northampton.

FIRST-RATE TUNER WANTED.—An old established Firm, in the Country, has a VACANCY for a Tuner and Regulator of first-rate abilities. As a liberal Salary will be given, no one need apply unless perfectly qualified to give entire satisfaction. Applications, stating terms required, in the first instance, to be made to Oetzman and Plumb, 151 Regent Street.

CHOIR BOY.—There is a VACANCY, in a London Church Choir, for a BOY, having a good voice and some knowledge of music. He will receive a general education and a salary, but not board or lodging.—Apply to Mr. Pittman, 1 New Ormond Street, Foundling.

MADAME CATHERINE HAYES' NEW BALLADS, &c. Sung with immense success at the principal concerts. "The Forsaken," 3s.; "Maureen," 2s. 6d.; "The Fisher's Bride," 3s. The music expressly composed by Virginia Gabriel. "From Chindarah's Warbling Fount," 3s. The music expressly composed by Howard Glover.

C. Lonsdale, 26 Old Bond Street.

H. C. LUNN'S FAVOURITE PIANOFORTE COMPOSITIONS.

	s.	d.
"Le Papillon"	2	6
"La fête des fées"	2	6
"Adeline" (Reverie)	2	6
"Alicia" (Mazurka)	2	6

London: Leader and Cock, 63 New Bond Street.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.

Their Catalogues, which contain a great variety of Music calculated for teaching purposes, may be had, post-free, on application.

London: 18 Hanover Square.

TO BE PUBLISHED BY SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MUSIC, a new work; being Three Essays which appeared in the MUSICAL WORLD. By JOSEPH GODDARD. Readers of the MUSICAL WORLD and the Public, wishing to encourage the publication of the above, may do so by forwarding their names to Mr. J. GODDARD, 3 St. Paul's Crescent, Camden Square, N.W. Price 5s. For further particulars, see the MUSICAL WORLD of Dec. 15th, 1860.

Digitized by Google

BRILLIANT CONCERT PIECES

FOR THE

PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
MADAME OURY. GRANDE FANTAISIE, on "Il Barbiere di Sevigliа"	5	0
A. SCHLOESSER. GRAND FANTASIA—"Il Trovatore"	6	0
A. SCHLOESSER. GRAND FANTASIA — "Guillaume Tell"	5	0
A. SCHLOESSER. GRAND FANTASIA—"Martha" ...	5	0
A. SCHLOESSER. GRAND FANTASIA—"La Favorita"	5	0
WILHELM GANZ. GRAND FANTASIA—"La Traviata"	6	0
STEPHEN HELLER. IMPROVISATA on MENDELSSOHN'S Melody, "On song's bright pinions," played by Miss ARABELLA GODDARD	4	0
THEODORE MAUSS. "MAY BREEZES," FANTASIA on a Popular German Air	4	0
ROBERT GOLDBECK. GRAND FANTASIA on "Le Prophète"	5	0
A. FUMAGALLI. TAÏAUT. "Chœur de Chasse" ...	3	6
F. LISZT. The MARCH from WAGNER'S "Tannhäuser"	4	0
THEODORE KULLAK. LES ARPEGES. Etude de Concert	5	0
JULES BENEDICT. FANTAISIE MILITAIRE on HALEVY'S Opera, "Les Mousquetaires de la Reine" ...	5	0
POLYDORE DE VOS. FANTASIA—"Norma"	5	0

ASHDOWN AND PARRY,

18 HANOVER SQUARE.

EASY TEACHING MUSIC, by J. BAPTISTE CALKIN.

SIX SACRED PIECES:

	s.	d.
1 Most beautiful, appear. From Haydn's Creation	1	0
2 I waited for the Lord. Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise	1	0
3 Rousseau's Dream	1	0
4 But thou didst not leave. Handel's Messiah	1	0
5 Every valley. Ditto	1	0
6 The Spanish chant	1	0

SIX OPERATIC PIECES:

1 La ci darem. Don Giovanni	1	0
2 Batti, Batti. Ditto	1	0
3 Suoni la tromba. I Puritani	1	0
4 Va Pensiero. Nabuco	1	0
5 Libiamo, Brindisi. La Traviata	1	0
6 Parigi o cara. Ditto	1	0

SIX POPULAR PIECES:

1 Jock o' Hazeldean	1	0
2 The harp that once thro' Tara's halls	1	0
3 Yankee doodle	1	0
4 Where the bee sucks	1	0
5 The lass o' Gowrie	1	0
6 Cease your funning. Beggar's Opera	1	0

SIX CLASSICAL PIECES:

1 Andante, varied, from Septett, Op. 20 (Beethoven)	1	0
2 Andante, con moto, from Symphony in C minor (ditto)	1	0
3 Adagio, Cantabile, from Symphony in B flat (Haydn)	1	0
4 Finale, from Symphony in D (ditto)	1	0
5 Adagio, from Symphony No. 4, in C (Mozart)	1	0
6 Andante, from Sonata in B flat (ditto)	1	0

The above Pieces, intended for very young Pupils, are written in a musicianlike manner, and are carefully fingered.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN AND PARRY

(Successors to Wessel and Co.),

18 HANOVER SQUARE.

1861.

NEW ALEXANDRE HARMONIUMS.

Lower in price and superior to all other cheap Harmoniums.

THE

NEW FOUR-OCTAVE HARMONIUM,

In Oak Case. Size 2 ft. 8 in. by 1 ft.; height, 2 ft. 4 in.

Price Five Guineas.

THE

NEW FOUR-AND-A-HALF OCTAVE HARMONIUM,

Compass, C to F. Size, 2 ft. 11 in. by 1 ft. 2 in.; height, 2 ft. 6 in.

Price—Oak, Five and a-half Guineas; Mahogany, Six Guineas.

THE

ALEXANDRE COTTAGE HARMONIUM,

Five Octaves. In Oak Case, with Two Foot Boards. Size, 3 ft. 4 in. by 1 ft. 2 in.; height, 2 ft. 8 in.

Price Six Guineas.

ALSO,

THE NEW ALEXANDRE CHURCH HARMONIUMS

WITH

TWO ROWS OF KEYS.

NO. 1. EIGHT STOPS

(Three and a-half Rows of Vibrators), Rosewood Case. Size, 3 ft. 9 in. by 1 ft. 11 in.; height, 3 ft. 3 in.

Price Forty-five Guineas.

NO. 2. TWENTY-TWO STOPS

(Six Rows of Vibrators), Polished Oak or Rosewood Case. Size, 4 ft. 4 in. by 2 ft. 6 in.; height, 3 ft. 5 in.

Price Seventy Guineas.

NO. 3. TWENTY-TWO STOPS

(Eight Rows of Vibrators), Rosewood Case, 2½ Octaves of Pedals.

Price Eighty-five Guineas.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50 NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

MUSICAL WORLD

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"The Early History, Theory, and Practice of Vocal Music" — by JAMES J. GASKIN (Robertson, Dublin; Emery, and Simpkin and Marshall, London).

THE second title of this publication is "Sight and Part Singing made interesting." It is a work full of matter, and of interesting matter, in the bargain. Divided into two parts, Part I., after some introductory remarks on the early history of music, it touches on the Ambrosian and Gregorian chants; the Greek and Roman staves; the Guidonian invention and development of modern musical notation; clefs, &c.; remarks on the voice and its management; the origin of the harp, and its connection with Ireland; the analogy of sound and colour, music and painting; contains, moreover, an illustrated register of the human voice, with a tabulated arrangement of the vocal artists of European reputation; references to Wilhem's popular and scientific exercises on intervals illustrated by part songs; solfeggi and exercises on vocalisation. As if this were not enough for one short volume, the second part contains diagrams, illustrative of the chromatic and other scales; refers to fioriture, transposition, accidentals, modulation, and intervals; the moral obligation of learning to sing, as set forth by Byrd in 1558; solmisation; vocalisation; accentuation; reading in all measures; minor scales—their relation to major scales; ancient modes and psalm tones; includes part songs, &c., selected (or rather arranged) from Rossini, Sabbatini, Beethoven, Mozart, Handel, Durante, Mendelssohn, Wilhem; a summary of the lives and works of those composers; part songs, by T. T. Magrath, Vicar Choral of Christ's and St. Patrick's Cathedrals; R. P. Stewart, Mus. Doc. Conran, Harvey, and Guernsey; concluding with chapters on chanting, and its early practice in the Christian Church. The work is not only interesting and comprehensive, but of absolute utility; the musical illustrations are short, varied, and always to the purpose; and the whole put together so symmetrically, that any section can be immediately referred to—because (and here is a point too often overlooked), in such, like compilations (raisonnées or non-raisonnées, as the case may be), they invariably occur in the right place.

"Dyson's Songs for singing on the March" — (Dyson, Windsor) — is a little volume without pretension, but not without value. It includes the National Anthem, together with 16 songs, with chorus, more or less appropriate (as in the case of "Rule Britannia," and "See the conquering hero comes") and more or less popular (as in the instance of "Lucy Neal," &c.). As a publication in a great measure connected with the volunteer movement (we can't separate music from soldiering) it is welcome.

"Sacred Poetry for private and congregational use," set to music, composed and collected by JOHN HENRY MILLS — (Hughes and Butler) — is chiefly to be recommended for its poetical contents.

"Lucia di Lammermoor;" "Name the glad day;" for the pianoforte—BRINLEY RICHARDS (Chappell and Co.).

The first is one of the most elegant and effective (and at the same time, though brilliant and showy, accommodating) fantaisies that we have seen constructed on the hackneyed song of the moribund Edgardo. The second is a "transcription" (and one of the author's most highly finished and best) of the beautiful canzonet of Dussek, the revival of which we owe to the Monday Popular Concerts.

"Nay, do not turn away, Effie,"—words by CLARA LOUD, music by C. BORINI (Metzler and Co., London; Pigott, Dublin) — is pretty, and unaffected. "Forgive and forget," —words by * * *, music by C. BORINI (same publishers) is equally pretty, but not equally unaffected. What is gained by having the symphony in F minor, and the song in F major? "I cannot breathe 'farewell'" — words by CLARA LOUD, music by C. BORINI (same publishers) — is pretty and sentimental. We have seen much worse ballads for the drawing-room than these.

"Oh Lord, we beseech Thee" — by FREDERICK SMEE (T. Alfred Novello) — is a musical setting for four voices (soprano, alto, tenor, and bass) of the Collect for the Third Sunday after Trinity ("Oh Lord, we beseech Thee, mercifully hear us") remarkable, in an equal degree, for devotional melody and pure harmony.

"Scotland's Love," — words and music by WILLIAM BRIDGES (George Emery) — is a ballad, the words of which are superior to the music, though the music is quite as correct as the words. There is nothing very salient in either one or the other.

"Arise, shine, for thy light is come,"—words by ISAIAH, music by THOMAS LLOYD FOWLE (author)—is a very good Christmas anthem for four voices—treble, alto, tenor, and bass.

"The Spring of Life" — words by his son music by W. HUTCHINSON, Esq. (Charles Hallé and Son); "When the silv'ry Moonbeams sleep"— music by W. HUTCHINSON, words by an ITALIAN (same publishers).

The words of "The Spring of Life" (by Mr. Hutchinson, jun.) are so unobtrusive, and at the same time good, in a strictly poetical sense, that we cannot refrain from quoting them:—

"The spring of life glides quickly by,
When life is young, when life is new;
The days and years too swiftly fly,
When hopes are high and cares are few.
The summer dawns, but now, though bright,
Its sun is often clouded o'er,
And though around it sheds its light,
Imparts the warmth of youth no more.

As fading autumn next draws nigh,
And with it brings the yellow leaf,
Oh! swifter still the years steal by,
With less of joy and more of grief.
With locks of snow comes winter last,
With step infirm and brow of care,
His thoughts now live amid the past,
And memory loves to linger there."

We have no room to quote any of the music.

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY.

AGUILAR (EMANUEL) "Ophelia" (Pianoforte).
D'ALQUEN (FREDERIC) "Après l'orage" (ditto).
HELLER (STEPHEN) "Declaration" (ditto).
Ditto "Amour sans repos" (ditto).
Ditto "La chasse" (ditto).
WEISSECKER (CHARLES) "Sylvia" (ditto).

ADDISON, HOLLIER AND LUCAS.

GILBERT (W. B.) "St. John" (Oratorio).
HIME (B) "The Star of home" (Vocal).

LEADER AND COCK.

LUNN (H. C.) "Adeline" (Pianoforte).

OLIVIER.

EAYRES (W. H.) "Our sister Mary" (Vocal).

SCHOTT AND CO.

GOLDSBERRY (G. P.) "Viena la barca è pronta" (Vocal).
SIVRAI (JULES DE) "Consuelo" (Pianoforte).

Digitized by Google

SMITH AND WHINKUP (Leeds).]
STEELE (J.) "Cecilia polka" (Pianoforte).
Ditto. "Primrose polka" (ditto).
Ditto. "Lincoln polka" (ditto).

THE JUDGMENT OF PARIS ON TANNHAUSER.

[THE following lively account of Herr Wagner's attempt to win the suffrages of the Parisians for his Tannhäuser is from the pen of M. Oscar Commettant.—ED. M. W.]

After being under study for six months, and a considerable number of rehearsals, Tannhäuser has at last made its appearance on our first lyrical stage. Never in the memory of the oldest dilettante had public curiosity been excited to an equal pitch; and next to the recognition by the Italian parliament of a kingdom of Italy, and of Victor Emmanuel as the sovereign of the said kingdom, I know of no other great European event, save the first performance, at the Imperial Academy of Music, of Herr Wagner's work. For the last three months, nothing has been talked of but the solemn ordeal which was to decide the fate of the Music of the Future, and, consequently for the future. Foreign amateurs in large numbers flocked to Paris last week to judge for themselves of the effect of Tannhäuser on the French organisation. It has been asserted that pleasure trains were to be provided, which were to bring to Paris, on the most moderate terms, the crowd of Prussian, Austrian, and Belgian amateurs, who could not sleep for anxiety about the fate of Tannhäuser. In order to give a characteristic appearance to these trains, one of the railway officials had proposed as a delicate compliment, that the different locomotives should bear the names of the several distinctive features in Herr Wagner's music Thus, that there should be the Discord, the Tremulo, the Enharmonic, the Chromatic, the Endless Melody, &c. Considerations of the most serious concern to all the governments of Europe alone stood in the way of realising this happy scheme. The more is the pity. The merry pilgrims of Tannhäuser will have no other resource than to read the articles giving an account of the first performance of this work which took place, as did the second, in the midst of hisses, laughter, and a lively interchange of ironical remarks kept up by the spectators from every part of the house, who vied in noisiness and warmth of zeal with a formidable claque, diverting the orchestra from its task, and throwing the singers into confusion.

Undoubtedly, if Herr Wagner had not, by numerous writings, published in Germany and France, revealed his contempt for the great masters, past and present, and had he not, with incredible self-esteem, upheld his system of lyrical composition as the ne plus ultra of the beautiful, and set up his own operas as alone worthy to be listened to by persons of serious thought, the Parisian public, naturally kind and courteous, would have been content to receive with unbroken silence, the shapeless, lustreless, and defective work of the unfortunate composer. But boundless pretensions, with nothing to justify them, required an exemplary lesson, and by protesting against being invaded by this puffed-up Germanic Muse, the public has no doubt intended at the same time to make amends to our national composers, too frequently contemned in France, where the hospitality extended to certain foreigners reaches a point which is often ridiculous as well as unjust.

We shall not attempt an analysis of the several pieces of music—are they pieces of music?—which constitute this immense loud-sounding wind bag now too generally known under the name of Tannhäuser. Such a task would be hopeless. Enough to say that, setting aside the overture, the second part of which, it is true, seems expressive of a scene of revival-convulsionists—not the most pleasant thing to listen to—but the first part of which is a grand inspiration; setting aside the march broadly designed and pompously instrumented, but which has the defect of being written in imitation of the style of Weber and Rossini—there are the very triplets in it of the great master so much ridiculed by Herr Wagner and all his followers; setting aside a poetic romanza for a barytone; setting aside finally certain felicitous accents, certain good orchestral effects, and here and there a few fragments of melody scattered throughout the work with a hopeless parsimony, if it be not systematic, the whole of this score of the apostle of the new school is a confused mass of sonorous antitheses, pretentious and out-of-the-way combinations, dissonances, metaphysics, obscurity and chaos. No one endowed with the musical faculty composes in this way naturally; now Herr Wagner has proved by several rhymthically constructed, and sufficiently melodious pieces, that he could, were his mind unshackled, write good music after the common fashion of the world; but evidently Herr Wagner, carried away by a horror of the commonplace, and perhaps despairing ever to achieve celebrity by following the path triumphantly trodden by the masters of the art, has set up a system of his own, under favour of which he has composed his operas. Herr Wagner, I am well aware, pretends, on the contrary, to have determined the laws of his system after having written his scores; but I think he may make a mistake. However this may be, after the notorious failure of the music of Tannhäuser, the only part of Herr Wagner's work capable of inspiring any interest for the future, is precisely his system of lyrical drama, of which, however, Tannhäuser supplies but an imperfect idea, as the true type of a lyrical drama should, according to the initiator of its principles, endure three or six days, and be purged of all that constitutes melody, that is to say rhythm, equilibrium of design, rests of cadence and half cadence, accentuation of phrases logically balanced, &c. It is easy to see how mad the notion is, and therefore how incapable of realisation. But perhaps this may have been an additional reason for taking it up, and, most certainly, it was a good way of attracting universal attention towards the inventor of such a system, and stirring up a hubbub round his name.

We may next regard it as just possible that Herr Wagner is in reality convinced of the excellence of his method, and that he looks upon himself as a martyr through ignorance and bad taste. In man everything is possible, and the perversions of the human mind are without limit, when the mind is not kept within the bounds of truth by common sense, that supreme characteristic of genius and indispensable accompaniment of the creative faculty, without which imagination is but a hot fit of the brain. But to convey a notion of the system on which the operas of Herr Wagner are based is not an easy task, and on the part of the reader will require close and persevering attention. This degree of attention I make bold to request of the reader, observing that once and away does not constitute a practice.

From all I have heard, seen, read and sang of Herr Wagner, who, as all know, writes the libretti of his own operas, this is what I arrive at. According to this celebrated innovator, all melodies hitherto known, not excepting even the theme of the funeral march in the heroic symphony of Beethoven, are merely dance-airs, inasmuch as they are rhythmical, logically planned, accentuated according to the laws of cæsura in music, and divided into several members of phrases, whereof some are antecedent and the others consequent. In the marvellous developments of the symphonies of Beethoven, Herr Wagner sees merely an idealisation of dance-melody, and there are entire portions of these immortal symphonies which, to the sense of the author of Tannhäuser, are only dancing tunes in the primitive form of ballet-music. It is true that the music of Tannhäuser does not set one dancing or singing either. But we will quote Herr Wagner himself, as we shall have to do more than once, in order to render our explanations clear, and avoid all suspicion of malicious interpretation:—

"The symphony of Beethoven contains, morever, in that part which is designated by the name of scherzo or of minuetto, a true dance-music in the primitive form, and one could perfectly well dance to it. It is as if a powerful instinct had constrained the composer to touch, at least once in the course of his work, directly on the principle on which it rests, pretty much as one feels with the foot, the bath into which a plunge is about to be made."

As may be naturally concluded, it is quite another sort of bath into which Herr Wagner plunges when he takes his baths of harmony; he, who has not shrunk from writing that the operas of all known masters are to his own operas what the monkey is to man. Dancing! there, forsooth, is the root of all the evil; for if there had been no dancing, there would have been no composers, and if there were no composers, Herr Wagner would be the greatest of musicians. Oh, this dancing! this dancing! this it is which has been the death of religious music; this is what has given to the symphonies of Beethoven that skipping, playful character with which you are acquainted; this, again, it is which has held enchained in its rosy bonds the poems of operas, which are, to speak correctly, but a sort of spoken dance.

Digitized by Google

"The original and popular dance, which springs out of the most material relations, conceived in its most abundant development, and carried out to the manifestation of the inmost movements of the soul, is nothing else than dramatic action."

Diavolo! So then love, which is the great moving power of dramatic action, is merely a dance. The dance of sentiment, no doubt, in which two hearts, making vis-à-vis to each other, cut capers and perform chassez-croisez! But then, how account for the celebrated lines in Richard Cœur de Lion—

"Ce n'est pas la danse que j'aime, Mais c'est la fille à Nicolas."

Be it as it may, we have it from Herr Wagner, who expresses himself with the proud disdain of thorough conviction, and who has never given in to the weakness of dancing:—

"Ballet is the worthy brother of opera; it is of the same age, and it is born of the same defective principle. Thus do we see them, as though to conceal each the weak points of the other, walking together hand in hand and step for step."

"Step for step" is pretty. Herr Wagner likes a joke. Why does he not like singing in our fashion? "But," you will perhaps ask, "what, then, ought the poetry of a lyrical work to express in order to conform with the ideas of Herr Wagner?"—"Nothing at all." "How do you mean, nothing?"—"Why, nothing, I say again;" for, says Herr Wagner—

"The greatness of the poet is measured chiefly by what he abstains from saying, in order that we may have the opportunity of saying to ourselves in silence that which is inexpressible."

In England that which is inexpressible is a pair of pantaloons or a shirt; but this is not likely to be the meaning of our author. What, then, has he in his mind? Let me ask. Howsoever it be, and granted that poets, to show themselves great, should say nothing, there would be no lack of great poets; for the greater number, alas! speak more often than not only to say nothing. We have seen the part which is allotted to poetry in operas, according to the theory of Herr Wagner. Here now is what music ought to be:—

"It is music which causes to be clearly understood what is not said, and the inevitable form of its RESOUNDING SILENCE is infinite melody."

Nothing can be clearer than this, so perfectly true is it that clearness is one of the grand qualities of the music, no less than of the theories of the anti-saltatory school. Who can fail to understand this? Melody speaking for the poet, who is silent, and forming thus an infinite melody in the inevitable form of resounding silence. At all events, as it is just possible that you may not quite follow the thread of this marvellous precept, let us, borrowing one of the most luminous pages of Herr Wagner's book, learn to appreciate the cause by showing what is the effect. A man must be without a kreutzer's or a scudo's worth of ideality in his soul, and moreover, must be an unbridled dancer, not to be convinced that the music of Wagner is the only music possible, after having read the following:—

"Once more I resort to metaphor, in order to characterise, by way of conclusion, the grand form of melody, such as I conceive it, which embraces the entire dramatic work; and to answer for this, I refer to the impression which it must necessarily produce. The infinitely varied detail which it presents must be revealed not only to the connoisseur but to the profane, to the most primitive nature, so soon as it has attained to the required degree of collectedness. It should, therefore, in the first instance, beget in the soul a mood such as is produced by a beautiful forest at sunset, to the stroller who has just escaped from the hubbub of town. This impression, the analysis of which I leave the reader to effect according to his own experience, in all its psychological results, consists —and this is what is peculiar about it—in the perception of a silence growing more and more eloquent. It in general suffices to the object of art to have produced this fundamental impression, to govern by it the hearer unconsciously, and so to prepare him for a higher design; this impression spontaneously awakens within him these higher tendencies. He who is strolling in the province subdued by this general impression yields himself then to a more durable meditative condition; his faculties, disenthralled from the tumult and din of town, bend themselves up and acquire a new mode of perception; endowed, so to speak, with a new sense, his ear becomes more and more acute; he discriminates with an increasing distinctness the voices, infinite in their variety, which awaken to his sense in the forest; he hears some which it seems to him he has never before heard; as they become more numerous, they also in a strange fashion grow in intensity; the sounds become more resonant; by degrees, as he hears a greater number of separate voices, of different modes, he still recognises in these sounds, which disentangle themselves, swell, and subdue him, the same great, one melody which from the outset had inspired him with a religious feeling. It is as though on a lovely night the fathomless azure of the firmament riveted his gaze; the more unreservedly he yields himself to this spectacle, the more the starry hosts of the celestial dome shine in his eyes, distinct, clear, radiant, innumerable. This melody would leave an eternal echo within him, but to repeat it would be impossible. To hear it once more he must return to the forest; he must return thither at sunset. What madness would it be to endeavour to seize one of the graceful songsters of the forest, to take it home and seek to train it, and teach it a fragment of the great melody of nature! What could he hear then but some melody à l'Italienne?"

Poor Italian melody!—Herr Wagner spurns it! Yet it has never troubled itself about him, nor is it this which disfigures Tannhäuser, nor the Phantom Ship, nor Lohengrin, nor Tristan et Iseult. But this is not what I wished to speak about. Do you remember poor Jullien, of eccentric memory, the author of the waltz Rosita? He had that faith which moves mountains and big drums, and bestows that new sense mentioned by Herr Wagner. Jullien had often heard that great symphony of nature which the ear catches in the forest, and he succeeded in noting from memory the most mysterious of the notes in that Tannhäuser of the goddess. One day, after a concerted piece, by the side of which the second finale of the "Battle of Singers" at Wartburg was mere child's play for the commixture of the sounds and the infinitude of the melody, Jullien was struck with an extremely grave sound, like the eternal pedal note of that secular symphony. Jullien directed his whole attention to it; appealed to that new sense which is, in the moral organisation of the apostles of the music of the future, what the tail with an eye at the end is to the physical organisation of the man of the future foreseen by Fourrier, and the sometime chef d'orchestre of the Café Turc heard unmistakeably the sound which is emitted by this our globe as it rolls through space. The note was C, three octaves lower than the C written in the bass clef on the second line below the line. One may easily imagine how delighted Jullien was at this discovery. He communicated it to Humboldt, who congratulated him in the most flattering terms. It is possible, therefore, notwithstanding the opinion expressed by Herr Wagner, to note down the sounds of the universal concert, when, as in the case of Jullien, one has the power of concentrating the faculties, and thus acquiring a new sense.

Pardon this episode. I now return to the system of Herr Wagner. According to Herr Wagner, music is only the ideal form of uttered poetry, and in lyrical drama words and music interfuse to such a degree as to form but one and the same thing. But in order to arrive at this result, which rather appertains to chemistry than to art, the expressive ideal must predominate alone in the speech and in the action of the personages, who are to have nothing of humanity but the form, and are to be regarded by the spectators as merely abstractions. The object of the personages of the drama is, as may be seen, far less to represent an action in which an interest is taken, as in all other pieces for the stage, than to furnish to an attentive and thought-collected audience, as in a forest, the fitting explanations by which to follow the various stages of the musical legend, unrolling itself in the orchestra like a sound tone-picture. Hence those interminable ritornellas claiming to awaken in the mind of the hearers those sentiments poetry would be powerless to express, and which only lengthen out the performance, attacking the nervous system, and filling the house with an atmosphere of boredom which no Frenchman is capable of standing. Herr Wagner calls this infinite melody; he had done better to call it indefinite. That a man alone in a forest should give way to a dreamy mood, listen to the rustling of the leaves, the sighing of the breeze, and allow himself to be gently swayed by the zephyr in a semi-extatic condition, I can perfectly understand; but it is not in a playhouse, where so many different objects are vieing to engage the attention, that one is led to withdraw within one's self, in order to frame the soul for the reception of the confused and fugitive impressions of music which is without any determinate form, full, it is true, of good intentions, but rarely attaining their fulfilment. Everything has its right place; and so long as men are men, they will not hurry over their dinners, put on a white neckcloth, and don a dress-coat, in order to go into the boxes of a theatre, and dream, with their heads propped upon their hands, over the subtleties of a musical poesy propounded to the sagacity of the audience in the manner of a sonorous rebus. What is wanted at a theatre is a drama of absorbing interest, clearly expounded, skilfully conducted, developed and brought to a close with power, and which shall allow the musician free scope, not for his sentimental dreams, in their nature likely to interest no one but himself, but for the well-defined emotions of the heart; and as variety is one of the chief elements of theatrical music, there must be, side by side with the great manifestations of passion, graceful pieces, various in character, charming the ear and sustaining the attention. To seek to reduce lyrical personages to the condition of abstractions, as regards the sentiment they express poetically, and to that of walking and talking clarinets, flutes, or bassoons, as regards the musical parts they are to play in the general whole of the musical conception, is simply to annihilate opera instead of regenerating it, and converting artists into so many machines, so many living programmes.

Digitized by Google

Now the invention of Herr Wagner consists in turning opera into an instrumental symphony, with an obbligato accompaniment by the singers. But will not a singer on the stage always prove more interesting than an instrument in the orchestra? And if, in virtue of being a living, intelligent being, he interests the spectators in a higher degree than a bassoon or a clarionet in the orchestra, ought he not to have a special part chalked out for him? and is it reasonable to doom him to the office of the old telegraphic machine's gesticulation, without uttering a word, while the instruments speak for him? In plain truth, it is hard to conceive how such a system as this could have found favour with any public in its senses, even for a single day. But I will go further. I say that, if opera such as Herr Wagner conceives it is impossible in practice, in a merely musical point of view it presents no resources in a serious acceptation. What is it, in sooth, that Herr Wagner desires? To extend the scope of melody, by imparting to dramatic music the fulness and interest of the symphony. The symphonist, says Herr Wagner, still timidly clings to the primitive dancing form; he never ventured to lose sight, even for the sake of expression, of the paths which kept up his relations with that form; and here now is the poet crying out to him—

"Launch without fear upon the unlimited waves, upon the broad sea of music! Grapple me by the hand, and you will never wander away from that which is most of all intelligible to every man; for with me you still continue on the terra firma of dramatic action, and that action represented on the stage is the clearest and most easily understood of all poems. Open wide, then, the channels of your melody; let it pour forth like a torrent continuously athwart the entire work; express thereby what I do not say, because you alone can say it; and my silence will say all, because I am leading you by the hand."

How can a musician of the worth of Herr Wagner (for, after all, Herr Wagner is a man of infinite talent) talk in this way? Has Herr Wagner forgotten that the great, so to speak, the sole interest of the symphony consists in the development of a given theme which serves, as it were, as a thesis on which the composer comments. Can any one imagine a symphony without unity of thought, and without that ingenious play between the several parts which establishes a sort of pleasant, and often witty, conversation between the several instruments, upon the topic of conservation, upon the theme? Certainly no; and no one can seriously doubt it. Well, these ingenious developments of a principal subject are simply impossible, directly it is laid down that the music is to follow a dramatic and scenic action. For effectively, as step by step the action advances, the personages involved necessarily express different sentiments, and the music which has to express these, must, perforce, change in character; consequently, there is an end to unity of sentiment, an end to the development of a musical parent-idea. The system of lyrical drama imagined by Herr Wagner is, therefore, to be condemned from both points of view, the dramatic and the musical, and as a bad cause is always followed by a bad effect, the music of Herr Wagner is deplorable, notwithstanding the talent of the artist, which, as I have said, is very great. Tried by logic, as by the ear, Herr Wagner is condemned. He can never find any advocates but among a few fanatics, such as every cause can boast of, and among impotent musicians, who, not having the capacity to write a restricted melody, find it convenient to produce one that is infinite, that is to say, to write no melody at all, while they claim to be considered profound thinkers and sublime composers.

Herr Wagner thought to win a triumph at the opera; he only raised a riot. What shall I say of the artists? What Napoleon I. said to his vanquished foes. "All honour to ill-fated courage!" They did their best; and possibly Herr Niemann may have a fine voice, and sing well. No one can tell. As to the orchestra, it proved that alongside of military courage and civic courage, there is a third kind—musical courage.

Oscar Commettant.

MUSIC AT PESTH.*

We would fain inscribe Joachim's name in letters of fire in the leaven of art, for all those who have sought only passing comets and meteors—where a vivifying sun sends forth its warm beams. Let us allow the most glorious phenomena of a single day, with their satellites and attendant moons, to pass by; they never loved art, and were never penetrated with its sunny rays, for the light with which they shone played on the surface only, while all within is cold and dark. What is Hecuba to them? If, by means of the hollow Trojan horse of their vanity and desire to please, they can subdue the multitude, the Troy of art itself may afterwards be ruined, and the high queen perish, for what they care. Among the very few apostles of music who preach the pure unsophisticated doctrine of the divinity, and whose soul is filled with faith and enthusiasm, we must reckon, without question—Joseph Joachim. Look at him yonder, with his quiet, unpretending demeanour, externally resembling a bronze statue, though he is inwardly a flaming volcano, which speaks electrically, through his finger-tips, to your heart! Not producing momentary heat, but permanent warmth; not dazzling but illuminating, not merely extensive, but much rather intensive—such is Joachim's play. That he is the greatest violinist of the day is a fact attested by all who by greatness, understand—greatness of soul. What coyness, incomparable purity and neatness, there is in his execution! It seems as though Mozart, Haydn, and Beethoven, whose quartets he plays in such an unrivalled manner, could all be heard at once, in his feeling and ravishing tones. In the most difficult passages, or in the simple sustained tone, it is the same—in every instance we find song; in every instance the deeply penetrating determination to produce music, and music alone; nowhere is there the slightest ostentation displayed in difficult and rapid passages, which the unprofessional hearer does not remark—nay, the existence of which he does not even suspect—and which sweep by us with the same placid repose as a fleet upon the wide ocean. Of all living violinists, Joachim is the most perfect representative of the classical style; nay, his whole being is classicality and sterling merit itself. With the greatest outward calm he executes the most elevating, feeling, and powerful productions that musical art can produce. Not only do the great composers live again in him, but also the old Italian violinists, such as Tartini, Pugni, &c., telling us how, in times gone by, they played and trilled before the devil himself,—Trille du Diable.

It is vain we listen for the most distant approach to a false note; it is in vain we wait for the slightest trick, such as those now practised by modern virtuosos, who, by false sentimentality, by distorting the notes, or by inordinately raising or lowering them, parody the feelings; it is in vain we seek to read on his features how difficult this or that passage is; it is not thus that he announces what he is going to play; he expresses it in eloquent, true, and warm words. It is not, however, only as an instrumentalist that he occupies the highest position; he does so also as a composer, as he has proved by his "Concerto in Ungarischer Weise." Thus artistically and, above all, nobly connected, Hungarian music has a truly great future in store for it. Joachim has taught us how great and elevating a work of art may be created out of the pregnant materials of Hungarian music, rendered on the violin. This is the means by which the type of Hungarian national music will ripen into artistically historical and universal significance; and we have a double reason for being delighted that Hungary possesses in its patriotic countryman a great instrumental artist, who bears

* From the Pesth Lloyd-Zeitung.

Digitized by Google

the spirit of Hungarian music upon eagle's pinions through the wide world.

The concerto consists of three parts: "Allegro maestoso," "Romance," and "Finale à la Zingara." We might fancy we were enjoying the effect produced by a symphony of Schumann's, in so correct and searching a mode has Joachim treated his Hungarian theme. The solo violin is the Speaker of the House, who descends from his official chair to commence with the other members—the orchestral parts—the debate, the members often obtaining, with their objections, the best of the argument. But the logic of reason, respect for the laws, and perseverance achieve a victory. The sparklingly free fancy of the first movement is succeeded by a wonderfully beautiful romance, while in the last movement the ennobled shades of Lavata, Csermák, Bihari, and Rózsavölgi flit up and down, in inspiriting staccatos and runs, before us. The difficulties to be overcome in playing this concerto can be appreciated only by violinists. The success achieved by its performance was truly something extraordinary; we trust it may induce the "composer," Joachim, to continue his labours in this branch of his art, to the greater glory of his fatherland and of Hungarian music. Bach's Chaconne and Tartini's Teufelssonate were the other pieces selected by the concert-giver. Did we not fear having already afforded the artist's extraordinary modesty grounds for recrimination by the above true, though weak, expression of our feelings, we would speak only in dithyrambic verse; but we forbear, and on this occasion will praise the audience, who knew how to honour not only patriotic sentiments but art in the artist—art which, it is true, by the way, streamed forth with most overwhelming power. Bach's Chaconne, notwithstanding the fact that Schumann and Mendelssohn wrote pianoforte accompaniments for it, is certainly more characteristic without any accompaniment at all, as it originally stood, and as Joachim played it. The combination of the conflicting parts, the strong and truly antique conception, and the sublime earnestness of the old master, can be grasped only after such an interpretation of them. Who can have played this difficult piece in Bach's lifetime, we wonder? We fancy that the Chaconne could, in those days, have been performed as a trio or quartet at the utmost. A no less sterling composition is Tartini's Trille du Diable. The inspiration and poetry exhibited in the execution of the first andante movement, which is so unaffectedly simple, weigh down a whole legion of virtuoso-tricks. The last movement with the double trill which the devil played to Tartini in the latter's dream, and whence the sonata afterwards sprang, enjoyed, in truth, a demoniacal success. The audience, even when the piece had been repeated, would hardly leave the rooms. But who likes to part with such an artist, who keeps in his magic bow a host of spirits, all obeying the soul of their master, Mlle. Mérty kindly assisted the concert-giver by singing several songs.

Berlin.—The Singakademie gave, at their last concert, Rudolph Schachner's oratorio, Israel's Return, a work preceded by so favourable a report as to excite great expectations in musical circles. Emanuel Geibel has arranged the text from Moore's "Sacred Songs," with connecting passages from Holy Scripture. The oratorio describes in four cantos, named respectively "Captivity," "Deliverance," "Reconciliation," and "Promise;" Israel's fall into sin and subjugation, its release from the Babylonish captivity, the returning favour of God, and His call to His chosen people. The idea of the oratorio has, in the oldest times of church-music, found the most various interpretations; and in the freedom which the composer has permitted himself with regard to the old-established style of church-music, we cannot therefore see any authorised subversion of its principles, nor can we in any way represent the work as faulty in its own peculiar department. With regard to the strictness and form of the music, the composer as a rule adheres to the main conditions of the oratorio; he oversteps, however, in many respects, the customary uniformity of the biblical-elegiac mode of composition, and gives to his work the general lyric form, which produces more warmth, and excites more deeply the sensibilities of the hearer. In but one instance have we to criticise the composer for having overstepped the usual limits in this respect; it is in the quartet and chorus at the end of the second part, "So when the dread clouds of anger." Here he has exceeded the general boundaries of sacred music, and has fallen into the operatic style. The general impression of the work is, however, that the composer has been perfectly equal to his difficult task, and that he has gained for himself a good name among the first composers of sacred music of the past and present. We think more highly of the work, as it moves in a certain freedom of invention, without in any way transgressing the main principles of its allotted sphere. A most imposing effect is produced by the choruses of male voices in unisons, with orchestral accompaniment, quasi-recitative, a style we meet sometimes in Glück's and Weber's works. In its lyrical element, the work is remarkably rich and exciting; it is likewise so in the language of sound, whether in expressing the deepest feelings, or in describing the situation. The effect of Herr Schachner's being perfect master of the most modern instrumental effects assists not a little in giving this work an advantage over many solid older compositions. Schachner's inventive genius and his thorough musical accomplishments are most fully seen in the chorus, No. 12, "Go forth to the mount," with the (as fugato treated) "Since the time." We hope soon again to have the pleasure of hearing this well-deserving work. As to its performance by the Akademie, we may say that it was performed in such a manner as to procure the best introduction to the composer's work. The solos, in the hands of Mad. Harriers Wippern, Fraulein Boer, Herren Geyer and Krause, left nothing to desire.—Berliner Blatt.

Letter to the Editor.

THE MINOR SCALE.

Sir,—Several weeks ago you published a letter on the minor scale by Mr. W. C. Filby, containing some very startling theories.

I felt much opposed to the principles he endeavoured to inculcate, although he argued them very cleverly. The letter, however, caused me to study the matter somewhat minutely; and, against my own previous convictions, I am compelled to confess that Mr. Filby's ideas are correct.

I found that by using this scale the harmonies became essentially different. Several fine combinations result from a permanent use of this mode; and these would never have come under my notice but for the letter referred to.

Now I am anxious to know if Mr. Filby would favour me, and musicians generally, with a detailed statement of his ideas of the harmonies generated from this scale both as a melody and as a bass. I am sure that this would be deeply interesting to all who are anxious to test this scale.

I have found numerous instances where French and German classics have adhered to this mode in their compositions, and I am only glad that the principle has been mooted.

Believe me, sir, yours, obediently,

Augmented Tone.

Mr. Ransford's Annual Concert.—This entertainment, for the last few years invariably one of the longest and most exciting of the spring season, was given on Tuesday evening, the 2nd instant, at St. James's Hall, and attracted an overflowing attendance. The bill of fare was rich enough to submit to an imperial gourmand. As for the singers, they were Misses Augusta Thompson, Poole, Eyles, Ransford, Marian, Moss, C. Williams, Rebecca Isaacs, Eliza Hughes, Mr. Wells, Mrs. Hamilton Lee, Mad. Sainton-Dolby, Messrs. Geo. Perren, John Morgan, Allan Irving, Wm. Merrick, and Ransford; while the instrumentalists, less numerous but still more remarkable, comprised Miss Arabella Goddard, M. Vieuxtemps, and Mr. Lazarus—an incomparable trio. To note all the achievements of the singers would be to levy a small tax on the readers' patience, which we are loth to do even when urged. Let us say that Mr. Ransford sang his own most characteristic maritime effusion, "The King of the Sea" and Dibdin's "True courage" with a force and pithiness worthy the most musical tar in the British Navy; that Miss Ransford introduced a new song by Mr. Hatton, called "The Future Flower;" that Mad. Sainton-Dolby sang another new ballad by Stephen Glover, entitled, "I love the morn;" that Miss Arabella Goddard and M. Vieuxtemps played Dussek's sonata in B flat (so frequently introduced at the Monday Popular Concerts), Miss Goddard, moreover, performing Mr. Benedict's admirable new fantasia of "Albion" (composed expressly for her) with prodigious success and a unanimous encore (to which, Sims Reeves-like, she refused assent); and the gentleman his own solo on "Patrick's Day;" and that the band of the Coldstream Guards performed various selections from popular operas. We have said enough to show of what materials the entertainment was made, and how easy it was to account for the crowded state of the hall. The accompanyists were Herren Wilhelm Ganz and Emile Berger.

Digitized by Google

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE SEVENTEENTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON

(58TH CONCERT IN ST. JAMES'S HALL)

WILL TAKE PLACE

ON MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 15, 1861,

The Programme to be selected from the Works of

VARIOUS COMPOSERS.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Grand Ottet, in E flat, Op. 20, for four Violins, two Violas, and two Violoncellos (for the last time this season), MM. VIEUXTEMPS, RIES, CARRODUS, WATSON, SCHREURS, WEBB, PAQUE, and PIATTI (Mendelssohn); Song, "O cara imagine," Mr. Tennant (Mozart); Sonata in A flat, Op. 26, containing the Funeral March (No. 12 of Hallé's Edition), for Pianoforte Solo (first time at the Monday Popular Concerts), Mr. CHARLES HALLE (Beethoven).

PART II.—Sonata in B flat, for Pianoforte and Viola, Mr. Charles HALLE and M. VIEUXTEMPS (Vieuxtemps); Song, "The Garland," Mr. Tennant (Mendelssohn); Double Quartet, in E Minor, Op. 87, No. 3—1st Quartet, MM. VIEUXTEMPS, CARRODUS, SCHREURS, and PIATTI; 2nd Quartet, MM. RIES, WATSON, WEBB, and PAQUE (Spohr).

Conductor — MR. BENEDICT.

To commence at Eight o'clock precisely.

Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Unreserved Seats, 1s.

Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at St. James's Hall, 28 Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Chappell, 201 Regent Street; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48 Cheapside; Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street; and of the principal musicsellers.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—MR. CHARLES HALLE'S BEETHOVEN RECITALS.—Mr. Charles Hallé begs to announce that he intends giving EIGHT PERFORMANCES of CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC, in the large Room of St. James's Hall, on the afternoons of the subjoined dates:—Friday, May 17th; Friday, May 24th; Friday, May 31st; Friday, June 7th; Friday, June 14th; Friday, June 21st; Friday, June 28th; and Friday, July 5th.—To commence each day at Three o'clock precisely.

The Programmes will be exclusively devoted to the Sonatas composed by Beethoven, for Pianoforte without accompaniments—the whole to be introduced in regular succession, according to the original order of their publication, for which the numbered "Operas" respectively assigned to them are warrants. The universal popularity of these works in England, as elsewhere, and their admitted superiority to all other compositions of the class to which they belong, support Mr. Hallé in the belief that such an uninterrupted presentation of the entire series may elicit the attention both of students and of connoisseurs. Many of the Sonatas never having been publicly performed, though familiar to professors, are unknown to the majority of amateurs; and some of these are quite as worthy admiration as others which, owing to their frequent appearance in concert programmes, have obtained unanimous acceptance.

As exemplifications of the gradual advance of their composer's talent, from its early stages to its ripe maturity, the Pianoforte Sonatas of Beethoven may be consulted as advantageously as the Quartets or the Orchestral Symphonies. They begin at the commencement of his "First" manner, play a very conspicuous part in his "Second," and extend far into the meridian of his "Third." No less than Thirty-two in number, there are enough of them to illustrate, more or less pointedly, every phase of the great musician's artistic progress; and, if merely regarded as a series of compositions for a single instrument, in variety, beauty, and originality, they stand wholly unparalleled.

At each of the Eight Performances two Vocal Pieces will be introduced. The Programmes will contain descriptions, historical and analytical, of the Sonatas as they occur. The object aimed at in these descriptions—from which criticism will, as a matter of course, be excluded—is not to guide the taste, but to assist the appreciation of the audience.

Prices of Admission:—Sofa Stalls (numbered and reserved), for the series, 2*l.* 2*s.*; single ticket, 10*s.* 6*d.* Reserved Seats (Balcony and Area) for the series, 1*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*; single ticket, 5*s.* Unreserved Seats, for the series, 1*l.*; single ticket, 3*s.*

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—In resigning the future Direction of Italian Opera at Her Majesty's Theatre, Mr. E. T. Smith feels bound to explain to his Subscribers, and the Public generally, who have honoured him with their patronage in all his various transactions as a Manager, the reasons that induce him to abandon a speculation upon which he originally entered with a thorough conviction of the most satisfactory results. The enormous outlay which unforeseen circumstances, superfluous to enumerate, compelled him to incur, placed Mr. E. T. Smith, with respect to Her Majesty's Theatre, in a position affording him little or no hope of a successful pecuniary issue. Amid outwardly seeming prosperity, his losses were unprecedentedly severe, which led to the inevitable conclusion that, even with crowded houses night after night, the likelihood of a balance ever being struck to his advantage was far too remote to be taken into account. Yielding to the advice of many influential friends, Mr. E. T. Smith has therefore relinquished an undertaking which, while presenting imminent chances of a reverse, offered, on the other hand, such slender probabilities of an ultimately favourable turn. In adopting this resolution, he confidently appeals to the generous sympathy of those kind patrons to whom he is already so deeply indebted, believing that his motives in thus honourably retiring from an enterprise which must, in the end, have involved liabilities difficult, if not impossible, to meet, will be unanimously appreciated. Tendering his heartfelt thanks for the liberal support he has received, and entertaining a hope that it may continue to be accorded him in other undertakings, the success of which mainly depends upon the countenance and encouragement of the public, Mr. E. T. Smith takes leave to announce that there will be no performance of Italian Opera at Her Majesty's Theatre, under his Direction, in the course of the present Season.

Her Majesty's Theatre, April 6, 1861.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

GNAT.—His letter shall appear in our next number.

OETZMANN AND CO.—Next week.

B. ALTHAUS.—The songs have not come to hand.

HENRY SMART.—"Smudge."

SHOULDER.—Seventy-three.

NOTICES.

To ADVERTISERS.—Advertisers are informed, that for the future the Advertising Agency of the THE MUSICAL WORLD is established at the Magazine of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements can be received as late as Three o'Clock P.M., on Fridays—but not later. Payment on delivery.

Terms { Three lines and under ... ... 2*s.* 6*d.* / Every additional 10 words ... ... 6*d.*

To PUBLISHERS AND COMPOSERS.—All Music for Review in THE MUSICAL WORLD must henceforward be forwarded to the Editor, care of MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244 Regent Street. A List of every Piece sent for Review will appear on the Saturday following in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

To CONCERT GIVERS.—No Benefit-Concert, or Musical Performance, except of general interest, unless previously Advertised, can be reported in THE MUSICAL WORLD.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1861.

SOME of the most enthusiastic of English musicians have asked the question, "Why there should not be a competition for Music, as well as Painting and Sculpture, in the approaching Exhibition of the Fine Arts!" and a letter, we believe, has been addressed to head-quarters, calling upon the Royal Commissioners to give the subject their most earnest consideration, and directing attention to the error that has been committed and the injury likely to be inflicted. At the first blush, indeed, it would appear that there is no small cause for complaint. The works of the painter and sculptor are to be submitted to examination before competent judges, and prizes and medals to be awarded to those adjudged most excellent in their craft. Galleries are to be set aside for both arts, and the utmost publicity will be given to every accomplishment of pencil and chisel. As far as regards the new Exhibition of Arts in the distribution of "prizes and rewards," it is well to be able to use a brush or know how to cut stone; but altogether useless to know how to compose Music. Music is a myth to the Royal Commissioners; its professors unrecognised—its influence, its very existence, ignored. Music, Painting, and Sculpture have, from time immemorial, been denominated "Sisters," yet the authorities of the Exposition not only deny the consanguinity, but displace the eldest-born altogether. Why should not musicians be irate at this seeming paradox? Why should they remain placid under a slight which amounts to a denouncement? Why rest satisfied until their wrongs be redressed? It is very natural that the followers of Music—all save the most cautious and logical—should feel the offence and cry out. In their quickness and sensitiveness, nevertheless, they may have overlooked one or two facts, which may throw an entirely new colour over the whole subject.

It is true that Music is the sister art of Painting and Sculpture. True, also, that Music was the eldest born, since birds warbled, rivulets murmured, and winds sang psalms, long ere the hand of man was practised on canvas or marble.

Digitized by Google

True, too—we, be assured, shall not deny—that Music has a deeper sounding in the human heart, and exercises a far more powerful influence on mankind in general, than Painting or Sculpture. How, then, comes it to pass that, in the competition of the Fine Arts at the Exhibition of 1862, Music should have been altogether forgotten or disclaimed by the committee of gentlemen constituting the Royal Commissioners, all of whom, we may suppose, were selected for the liberality of their views and their practical knowledge in matters connected with art? Was Music purposely rejected—was it carelessly overlooked? Neither one nor the other. The Commissioners did not take Music into their consideration for the same reason that they did not take Poetry—another of the Fine-Art sisters. Music and Poetry address themselves to the understanding through the ears, although both may be perused in the closet. In the Exhibition of the Arts, all the competing works appeal to the eye, except in the case of musical instruments and bells, which, nevertheless, must, in the first instance, be adjudged by the sense of sight, and are sent indeed to be appraised in accordance with their good looks. Thus Music was not included in the Fine Arts Exhibition, because it was addressed to another sense than that for which the Exhibition was founded and constituted.

That musical compositions could be critically examined, like pictures and statues, is simply impossible, unless, indeed, money and time were of no account. A few glances—some taste and no great amount of knowledge—will suffice to pass a general opinion upon the achievements of painter and sculptor, and sundry general opinions will be found good enough to constitute a tolerably true estimate of the performance. A hundred paintings, and as many efforts of the chisel, may be inspected and reviewed in a single day. How long would it take merely to hear through one hundred pieces of music — operas, cantatas, oratorios, symphonies and concertos included—and, when heard, in what manner could an idea of their individual merits be obtained? We can easily comprehend the rationale of offering prizes for songs, ballads, glees, &c., and can believe that the best composition is most likely to attain the first award, since the work is simple, and easily appreciated at a hearing; but we cannot understand how several operas could be performed, or by what steam process of the mind the judges could come to a sound conclusion on the same day. Could any man trust his judgment under the circumstances? We think not. Besides, Music has many homes, and is not restricted to gallery or exhibition. The statue and the picture are fixtures, and can only be viewed in one place. The "Ecce Homo" or "Laocoon" may be represented by feeble copies far from the National Gallery or the Vatican; but the identical Don Giovanni, Guillaume Tell, Messiah, or Elijah may be performed in every city in the world at the same moment, and the composer "moult no feather" of his glory. The world, then, is the true Exhibition of Music, where, in innumerable art-palaces and humble cells, it is heard and prized by day and night in unceasing round, and where, far better than in some fixed locality, at some appointed time and in the presence of constituted jurists, with judgments precipitated and opinions blunted, it may meet its absolute merits and rewards. Let musicians, therefore, look beyond the Exhibition of the Fine Arts, and not grudge the poor brushman or stoneman his little perquisites and circumscribed area; and, in case of any difficulty being found with the removal of their fancied grievances, let them console themselves with remunerative anticipations of their well-to-do and most obliging publishers. R.

A LEARNED Doctor (in Medicine), delivered a lecture, a short time since, upon "the best means for restoring the voice when affected." He divided affections of the voice into three classes; the first, to be recognised by a chronic hoarseness of tone; the second, by trembling and uncertain intonation, and the third, by a difficulty in producing the sound. Whether a voice was altogether unhealthy, from violent inflammation of the mucous membranes, or from some defect in the larynx, could be easily known by means of the larynx-speculum — many cases of this description having been successfully treated by aid of this mechanical contrivance. If the hoarseness was merely the result of a slight cold, benefit might be derived from inhaling warm vapour, as recommended for the cure of stammering, by the ingenious Dr. Wolf. Singing must, meanwhile, be discontinued. The course recommended for attacks of the second class was not that usually adopted — namely, a cessation from singing and prolonged repose, but daily vocal practice, care being taken, however, not to force out the air, but to let it flow gently. If, in the midst of the scale, some of the tones should prove inconvenient to sustain, and sound only like howling, as was frequently the case with mezzo-sopranos, the reason was to be sought in the too great extension of the chest-notes upwards, and the best remedy, therefore, was the use of the falsetto voice, in lower passages than usual. Finally, the third class owed its existence entirely to the practice of singing with a palatial tone. By the execution of high and impassioned music in this false voice, either the entire larynx was pushed on one side out of its position under the hyoid bone, or the natural pressure in the throat degenerated into a choking, and at last into a cramp of the muscles of the larynx themselves. To remedy a case of this kind, great care was necessary, though repose alone was not sufficient. What, also, was indispensable, was a proper system of employing the vocal muscles; in which case the use of eggs and lozenges was totally worthless.

Whether these speculations of the Berlin Medicus are of any value or not, they have a certain interest in the present day, when, from some cause or other, almost every singer's voice is as often "out of order" as the contrary. We do not believe that nature has given up producing fine voices, or that the vocal art is absolutely redescending the ladder of excellence. Tempora mutantur; that's half the truth: nos mutamur; that's the rest of it. The slang about "decay, &c.," is as old as art itself, and the croakers are mere narrow-minded pessimists, who have as little confidence in the inexhaustible resources of nature, as in the creed that man and his mental capabilities are susceptible of unbounded development. To no department of art is the croaking system more obstinately applied than to the vocal, whoever has had anything to do with which, during the last thirty or forty years, must have been almost worried to death by the complaint, that good voices were no longer to be found. But on what is it all based? If we examine the subject impartially, we shall find it rests on two facts: the first, that, as a general rule, those among our singers who possess good voices study less than their predecessors; and the second, that, in consequence of the heavy demands made upon them by "grand" operas, as now composed, their powers must be worn out sooner than formerly. We deny, emphatically, that nature, at the present day, is unable to furnish as many good voices as of old. It is not nature who is at fault, but singers, who more or less neglect the proper study of their art, and the means of keeping the vocal functions strong and healthy. First-class voices, vigorous, extended in register agreeable in quality, even, flexible and lasting, have always been uncommon, just as they are now, and always will be; but, in the flourishing days of the vocal art, when thorough musicians and not amateur physiologists still taught singing, greater results were obtained from moderate resources than, at present, from the richest.

Digitized by Google

Q.

THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

Sir,—History is written sometimes after a strange fashion. Macaulay gravely prints a sermon which he contends ought to have been preached by some bishop, but which certainly was not taken down in short-hand. Macaulay drew upon his imagination for his theology. More recently we have a professed history of the United Netherlands, by Motley, during the sublime struggle of Protestantism against Papacy by the Dutch; but the students of that famed war of eighty years, who have derived their impressions from the writers of Holland, are astounded at the fanciful sketches of paltry personal traits, whilst the grand, noble, and magnanimous attributes of the Dutchmen themselves are quite secondary in Motley's estimation. Pardon me for entering a protest against a leading article in the Musical World of last week. If in 1861, musical history of events, which date only from 1846, is to be penned as the writer with the initial "R" has treated them, then must we look for the future for monstrosities more marked than even Burney and Hawkins have bequeathed to us, and we may anticipate associations more absurd than even those the living Fétis is conceiving. Is, then, the foundation of the Royal Italian Opera so remote, that the essential principle on which it was based can be soon forgotten? Was not the formation of that great lyric establishment entirely grounded on the universality of art? If it is pretended now that the Covent Garden Theatre in 1847 was opened for Italian opera "pur et simple" then was the opposition to Her Majesty's Theatre, one of the greatest musical frauds ever perpetrated, and a gross act of injustice was committed as regards its lessee, Mr. Lumley. Now, sir, whatever may be said of private vengeance, of personal pique, and of artistic antipathy, I claim for the originators of the Royal Italian Opera of 1847, higher aspirations and more elevated sentiments. The second Italian Opera House became a real want, an absolute necessity. Had it not been started, the lyric drama, instead of progressing, would have been thrown back for an indefinite period. The repertory would have been restricted to the wishy-washy Italian masters, and the executants would have been confined to the most inferior order of artists—vocal and orchestral. What the Royal Italian Opera has done for art in this country, has not been confined to the establishment itself—its influence has extended throughout the country by improved execution of works, sacred and secular, in truth, in the Cathedral, the Hall, and the Theatre. "R" does not propose then, I presume, that Covent Garden is to go back to Italian opera alone? Are Weber, Spohr, Glück, Beethoven, Auber, Hérold, Halévy, and Meyerbeer to be abandoned, and is the writer really serious in recommending us to go back to Paesiello and "Piccinni"?

"R" is of opinion that had Covent Garden possessed a Rubini, "French opera would not have been dreamt of." If this were true, then would Rossini's immortal Guillaume Tell have been shelved. "R" then makes the annexed astounding announcement:—

"Unfortunately for the perpetuation of pure Italian opera, Signor Mario had a larger intellect, a more plastic mind, and a more susceptible organisation than even his illustrious predecessor; and with Signor Mario, we need hardly hint to our readers, originated, in a great measure, the foundation of French opera at Covent Garden."

The italics are our own, for "R" must have been mesmerised when he wrote the last paragraph, and his medium must have been a Macaulay or a Motley. Guizot was walking one day in the garden of the Foreign Office in Paris, as it existed when he was Prime Minister, and was deeply engaged in reading. "What book interests you so much?" said a friend to him. "I am reading a romance," replied Guizot, showing Thiers' Révolution Française. No fiction ever surpassed in fancy that of "R," in assigning to Mario the notion of founding French Opera at Covent Garden. Let me remind "R" of its antecedents. Neither the late Lenari, who was the first to contemplate a second Italian Opera House in London, nor Persiani and Galetti, ever had any scheme beyond that of having an opera buffa in opposition to Her Majesty's Theatre. The "idea" of an Opera House, using the Italian, the best language for singing, for the purpose of executing the works of all masters, without distinction of country, was my suggestion, as the only system calculated to spread the universality of art. It was the "idea" which Persiani adopted, and Costa endorsed; but as regards the carrying out of my original plan, the first opportunity of testing the sincerity of the Italian artists presented itself when the Huguenots was put in rehearsal, and from the Italians, one and all, the opposition to the first performance of that great work was most strenuous. The fame of Viardot's Valentina had reached the ears of the head of the Italian family, and Grisi, the permanency of whose hold on the public was so much secured subsequently by this very part, was not willing to afford her gifted rival the chance of distinction. Sir, I will not occupy your valuable space by details of the cabals, intrigues, and even conspiracies, set afloat to prevent the representation of Meyerbeer's masterpiece. Fortunately for art, and for the Italian artists themselves, for the Huguenots saved the Royal Italian Opera, the Queen "commanded" the first night, and the result is of course well known. The "musique Chinoise" of Meyerbeer has been more than once the salvation of the Royal Italian Opera. As for Mario, his Raoul, in the earlier performances, was that of the walking gentleman; but his "larger intellect," "plastic mind," and "susceptible organisation," which "Re" refers to, were only developed, when accident afforded Roger, the French tenor, the opportunity of appearing in Raoul for the first time, and after that brilliant example Mario was Raoul, and Raoul was Mario.

C. L. Gruneisen.

16 Surrey Street, Strand, April 10, 1861.

Hanover Square Rooms.—Herr Sigismund Blumner's matinée, on Wednesday last, attracted a very large audience. Herr Blumner is a pianist of decided merit. He possesses considerable power, and plays with equal correctness and fluency. His choice of Beethoven's trio in B flat, for piano, clarionet, and violoncello, in which he was assisted by Mr. Lazarus and Herr Wolhers, was a happy one, and the appreciation of his performance by the audience must have been highly gratifying to him. Herr Blumner showed his talent for composition in two agreeable solos, a notturno and a mazurka, which pleased very much. Herr Blumner also played another concerted piece with Messrs. Deichmann, Webb, Boileau, Wohlers, and Neuwirth, in the shape of an allegro de concert (by Charles Mayer), and concluded with a spirited performance of the march from Tannhäuser, arranged by Liszt, which highly taxed his executive powers. The vocalists were Miss Helen McLeod, a young and rising singer, and Mlle. Marie de Villar, whose "Non piu di fiore" (clarionet obbligato, Mr. Lazarus) deserves a word of praise. Herr Wilhelm Ganz accompanied the vocal music on the pianoforte.

Digitized by Google

Monday Popular Concerts.—The high repute in which Mr. Charles Hallé is held by the public was never more strongly manifested that at his benefit on Monday night in St. James's Hall. The long string of carriages in Regent Street, and the elegant tenants of the stalls, testified to the favour which Mr Hallé enjoys with the aristocratic patrons of art, while the crowded state of the area, orchestra, and galleries indicated no less clearly the estimation of the music-loving masses,—the latter term, as applied to the frequenters of the Monday Popular Concerts, meaning a body of thoroughly enthusiastic connoisseurs, always ready to do homage to good chamber-music, and more fully alive to its merits than perhaps any other audience in Europe. Mr. Charles Hallé's reputation as a pianist has been firmly established for many years in London no less than in Manchester, so long his head-quarters. Those who had the good fortune to visit the famous Art-Treasure Exhibition at the latter place in 1857 will not have forgotten how in the midst of the choicest paintings and the rarest objects of vertu, the sister art of music was not neglected (as it appears likely to be in the forthcoming show of '62); the compact band over which Mr. Charles Hallé presided, and the generally excellent material of which his programmes were composed, being not less creditable to his good taste, than his ability as a conductor. But still it is with the pianoforte that Mr. Charles Hallé's name will be most intimately associated, and on Monday night the reception accorded to the great pianist was of the warmest kind. If the selection was not altogether of the newest, it had, at any rate, the merit of being unexceptionally good; and the sonata in F minor, Op. 57 of Beethoven ("appassionata"), played without book, exhibited in an equal degree a wonderful command of the key-board, and his rare powers of memory. Mr. Hallé was recalled with enthusiasm at the end of this performance. Schubert's Impromptu in B flat, and Chopin's valse in A flat, were but trifles—and infringing the systematic order of the regular Monday scheme, to the minds of many — out of place. In better keeping was the melodious sonata duet in F major (Op. 24) for violin and pianoforte, in which the pianist divided the laurels with the violinist (M. Henri Vieuxtemps). The quaint scherzo afforded unqualified satisfaction, and was repeated by general desire. There was only one stringed quartet — that by Haydn, E major (Op. 59), given (for the second time this season) to perfection by M. Vieuxtemps, Ries, Schreurs and Paque—the last-named gentleman was a useful substitute for Signor Piatti. Mozart's quartet in G minor, for piano and strings, was the last instrumental piece. Nothing could have gone better. Miss Banks being prevented from appearing by indisposition, the weight of the vocal music fell upon Mr. Sims Reeves, who was in admirable voice, and gave "Dalla sua pace" with the utmost grace and delicacy, his finished style and artistic phrasing being beyond praise. Mendelssohn's "Hunter's song" (first introduced here by Mr. Reeves) was delivered with such characteristic spirit, that there was no alternative left but to repeat it, in accordance with the unanimous wish of the delighted audience. On Monday, at the 58th concert, Mendelssohn's Ottet will be given for the last time this season, and as a fit pendant Spohr's double quartet in E minor, which pleased so much on two occasions last season.

Musical Society of London.—The second concert, on Wednesday evening last, was a perfect triumph. The first part consisted of Mendelssohn's First Walpurgis Night, and Mozart's "Posthumous" Concerto in C, for pianoforte. The imaginative and poetical work of Mendelssohn, originally written when the composer was in his 21st year, was almost entirely reconstructed, after an interval of fourteen years, and introduced to the public in 1843. Since that time it has been repeatedly given in London, and at all the great musical festivals of England and Germany, and has invariably created the most profound sensation. The legend upon which Goethe's poem is based is simplicity itself, and for the edification of those of our readers who are unacquainted with it, we cannot do better than subjoin the following explanation:—

"The German legend that witches and evil spirits assembled on the night of the first of May (Walpurgis-night) on the summit of the Harts mountains, is said to have originated in the heathen time, when the Christians tried by force to prevent the Druids from observing their accustomed rites of sacrificing in the open air and on the hills. The Druids are said to have placed watches round their mountains, who, with their dreadful appearance hovering round the fires, and clashing their weapons, frightened the enemy, and the ceremonies were proceeded with. On this tradition Goethe founded the poem."

The principal solos of the Druid priest were powerfully declaimed by Mr. Weiss, Mad. Laura Baxter giving the short but difficult bit for the "aged woman of the people" most effectively, and Mr. George Perren, in the tenor music, atoning for any shortcoming of power by careful and conscientious singing. A professional chorus of eighty voices lent their aid to the orchestra; and, taken altogether, the performance was perhaps the best that has ever been heard in England. Of Mr. John Francis Barnett, the readers of the Musical World are not ignorant, nor of our opinions as to his talent as pianist, which indeed are remarkable. He played the concerto of Mozart most admirably, and introduced a cadenza at the end of the first allegro in excellent taste, and in perfect keeping with the subject. Mr. Barnett, we believe, is earnestly devoting himself to composition, and is about to submit some new works to public approval. The sooner the better.

The second part opened with Beethoven's Symphony (No. 4) in B flat, the performance of which would have been irreproachable but that the second adagio was a little accelerated. The scena "Si lo sento," from Spohr's Faust, was charmingly sung by Miss Louisa Pyne, who also joined Messrs. Perren and Weiss in the graceful trio from Mr. John Barnett's Fair Rosamond. Macfarren's characteristic and highly dramatic overture to Chevy Chase brought to a conclusion one of the best concerts we ever attended. That this result is in a very great measure attributable to the indefatigable zeal and energy of the conductor, Mr. Alfred Mellon, every one must admit. Fine as was the band during the first two seasons, it is this year even better. The society numbers among its members most of the musical celebrities of the day, and as a sine quâ non to admission in its ranks is a knowledge of music, the audience is at once the most critical and appreciative to be found in (or out of) the metropolis. The genuine and hearty applause of such hearers is something more than a mere ordinary compliment.

Miss Steele gave a concert of sacred music (the first of a series of two) at Messrs. Collard's Rooms, on Saturday last, which was well attended by the patrons and admirers of this esteemed professor. Miss Steele sang with her accustomed taste and expression an aria from Handel's Saul ("O Lord, whose mercies"); a clever duet by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew, with Mad. Ferrari ("A song of Spring"); with Mr. Benson a duet from Spohr's Last Judgment ("Forsake me not"); a song by Herr Preyer; and again a duet with Mad. Ferrari, "O lovely peace" (Handel); as well as Mendelssohn's unaccompanied quartet, "When the west," and a trio by Curschman. The fair vocalist therefore did not spare herself, and the well-merited applause she received must have repaid her for her exertions. Mad. Ferrari deserves a word of praise, apart from her beautiful singing in an "Ave Maria" by Cherubini, in which she enjoyed the invaluable co-operation of Signor Piatti, the violoncello obbligato. Mr Benson and Mr. Lewis Thomas both acquitted themselves satisfactorily, Mr. Thomas's fine bass voice telling well in the "Pro peccatis," from Rossini's Stabat Mater. Besides Signor Piatti, who, by the by, played a quaint sonata for violoncello by Boccherini, Miss Steele had secured the services of Mr. Charles Hallé, who played, with Signor Piatti, Mendelssohn's Sonata (in D) for piano and violoncello, as well as some of the Lieder ohne Worte, in his usual admirable manner. The accompanyist at the pianoforte was Mr. Harold Thomas, an excellent pianist and thorough musician.

Vocal Association.—At the next concert (Wednesday), which, as usual, will be under the direction of Mr. Benedict, besides the first appearance of M. Ole Büll, the celebrated violinist, Miss Louisa Pyne will make her first appearance at the concerts of the Vocal Association this season. The choir, which consists of 200 voices, will repeat, by particular desire, Meyerbeer's setting of the "Lord's Prayer" (Pater-Noster), and Webb's descriptive glee, "When winds breathe soft.' The programme thus presents more than ordinary attractions.

Digitized by Google

The Operas.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.—Rigoletto, besides being Verdi's best opera, must always exercise a strong attraction while Signor Ronconi is at hand to play the court-buffoon. A more striking and original impersonation has rarely been witnessed on the lyric boards; and so wonderful is the force with which the various situations are portrayed, that the spectator, lost in the dramatic interest of the scene, is at times almost tempted to forget he is witnessing a musical performance at all. Not that Signor Ronconi lacks the vocal skill to impart significance to the everywhere characteristic melody which Verdi has put into the mouth of Rigoletto: on the contrary — as all frequenters of the Italian Opera are aware — although he now and then sings out of tune, especially at the commencement of the evening (like Persiani and others who could be named); and although his voice was never remarkable either for strength or richness of quality, his manner of phrasing is derived from the most honoured traditions of the Italian school, his execution is fluent and unlaboured, his modulation of tone invariably natural, and his cadence rounded and balanced to perfection; in fact, that, with physical shortcomings which might have succumbed before anything short of genius, he is still a genuine singer, a thorough master of expression, and as successful in the play of tender emotion as in those outbursts of passion of which his Chevreuse, in Maria di Rohan affords so frequent and signal examples. In the delineation of the fate-struck jester Signor Ronconi's peculiar talent has full scope. The forced merriment of the earlier scenes, where Rigoletto, whose nature and intellect are of a far more elevated order than his master's, is compelled to put on the obsequiousness of a parasite and the frivolity of a mountebank for that master's recreation and caprice; the sudden shock — as of mental paralysis — that follows the curse of the old nobleman at whom he has scoffed in the moment of misfortune; the first interview with Gilda, in which his affectionate anxiety for the only being on earth with whom he sympathises, is so exquisitely conveyed through the injunction to Giovanna:—

"Veglia, o donna, questro fiore Che a te puro confidai;"

the despair at finding he has been entrapped by the Duke's retainers into unwittingly aiding and abetting in the abduction of his own danghter; the sequel, where the miserable dupe, awakened to the infamy that has been enacted, once more assumes his legitimate functions as Court buffoon, while his heart is overwhelmed with solicitude about the fate of his child; the after-scene, in which that child is restored to him, under the suspicion of dishonour, from which she can never again be freed; and the terrible catastrophe, when, a second time duped, he is baulked of revenge by the escape of his intended victim, and the murder of the luckless Gilda, who, unknown to Rigoletto, has sacrificed herself to save her faithless lover; these, one and all, present opportunities for the exercise of that dramatic talent which Signor Ronconi possesses in so eminent a degree, and which he never employed with more consummate effect than on Tuesday night, when Rigoletto was represented for the first time this season. As an exhibition of vocal power, his performance was more than usually unequal; but as a display of histrionic art it was throughout irreproachable. Mad. Miolan Carvalho (who, like Signor Ronconi, made her first appearance) sang the music allotted to Gilda—than which Verdi has written nothing more genial and expressive—with the finish, grace, and brilliancy of execution which last season elicited such hearty and unanimous approval. She "looked" the part, moreover, to admiration, and in her acting there was an unobtrusive gentleness that could not fail to excite interest. Mad. Nantier Didiée was Maddalena, and Signor Tagliafico Sparafucile — both (how often have we had to say as much) in an equal degree lifelike and effective, natural and picturesque. It was no enviable task for Signor Neri Baraldi to come after Signor Mario as the Duke of Mantua—with "La donna e mobile," &c. He did his utmost, however, and sang the music correctly and well. The only "encore" during the opera was the admirable quartet in the last scene ("Un di, se ben rammentomi"); but after the duet between Gilda and Rigoletto, at the end of the second (third) act, Mad. Miolan Carvalho and Signor Ronconi were summoned before the curtain and applauded with enthusiasm.

The opera was followed by the divertissement of Les Amours de Diane, in which a new dancer—Mademoiselle Salvioni—exhibited considerable strength, agility, and grace as Diana, and was loudly applauded.

On Thursday night the new tenor, Signor Tiberini, made his first appearance, as Ferdinando, in La Favorita, and met with unqualified success. He was greatly applauded in the opening romance; still more so in the scene where Ferdinando defies the King and rejects the honours which have been the price of his disgrace (Act III.); and most of all in the last scene, the well-known "Spirto gentil" (or "Angiol d'amore," as it is indifferently styled) being encored with enthusiasm. We must defer our remarks upon the voice of Signor Tiberini, together with his general capabilities as singer and actor, until after the second performance, which is announced to take place this evening. This will, moreover, enable us either to verify or correct first impressions, and thus to offer our musical readers a fairer and more dispassionate opinion. It is enough at present to chronicle the unanimously favourable verdict of the audience. In the actual dearth of good tenor singers the appearance of one of more than average pretensions is not to be dismissed summarily as a commonplace event.

Mad. Caillag undertook the character of Leonora for the first time in England, and M. Faure—whose engagement proved so satisfactory last season—reassumed that of the King. Both were eminently successful. The subordinate parts of Baldassare, Inez, and Gasparo were sustained by M. Zelger, Mad. Tagliafico, and Signor Rossi; and Mlle. Salvioni was chief dancer in the divertissement. The opera went off with spirit from beginning to end, and after each successive act the principal singers were recalled before the curtain.

COLOGNE.—After playing at Düsseldorf and Bonn, Ole Bull gave two concerts in the theatre here.

KÖNIGSBERG.—Genovefa von Brabant, Das Glöckchen des Eremiten, Wintermärchen, and Santa Chiara, are among the novelties, and bear testimony to the energy displayed by the management.

SONDERHAUSEN.—Herr Dorn's Niebelungen was produced for the first time on the occasion of the Princess Elizabeth's birthday, and repeated two days subsequently, when the operatic season terminated. It was highly successful. A telegraphic message was forwarded to the composer, inviting him to conduct the second performance himself, but, to the great regret of every one, he was unable to do so.

Provincial.

THE letter signed "Well-wisher to the Festival," which we copied in our provincial news last week from the Leeds Intelligencer, has brought us the following reply from one of the Festival Committee:—

To the Editor of the MUSICAL WORLD.

"SIR,—An injudicious letter, copied into your columns last week from the Leeds Intelligencer, has caused considerable surprise amongst those gentlemen whom the misstatements therein made more immediately concern—I mean the Leeds Festival Committee. Unhappily, in this town anonymous assertions, far removed from actual truth, are so common amongst a certain class of musical people, that refutation in the local papers is considered of no avail; therefore it is that the letter alluded to has not been answered in the Intelligencer. But as it has been transferred to a journal which circulates largely amongst musicians, I deem it right to ask your leave to reply to some of the statements therein contained. The writer of the letter is at great pains to laud the 'Yorkshire Choral Union' as 'the finest choral body in the kingdom;' but those who understand what part-singing really is, very justly question this position, and ask, Where is the proof that they are so? Sir, the members of this union, self-lauded to a sickening degree, as it is, have sung in Leeds several times during the season, and on every occasion they have performed one set of glees (!) and part-songs only. Beyond simple, easily-learned pieces, they have not gone, and the Festival Committee very properly say — At our festival we want something beyond this, and even supposing that there are other advantages in engaging this choir, we are not at all sure that it is competent for the work. Leaving this point, I ask you, sir, if it would be judicious, fair, or creditable for the committee to exclude from the Leeds Festival about 100 first-rate Leeds chorus-singers, for that they would do, if the mis-named 'Well-wisher to the Festival' could have his way. Are there better singers in Sheffield and Halifax than in Leeds and Bradford? I unhesitatingly say—No. Then upon what principle of fair play and justice and economy would the committee act if they listened to the counsels of interested persons, and engaged the Yorkshire Choral Union, per se?

Digitized by Google

"In a financial point of view, the engagement of as many Leeds singers as can be procured would be highly advantageous, and I very much doubt the bone fides of 'A Well-wisher to the Festival' when he urges the engagement of more than 200 chorus-singers from Sheffield, Halifax, and Huddersfield.

"The concluding paragraph in the letter is totally unfounded, for the Bradford Festival in 1859 more singers were engaged from Leeds than any other town out of Bradford and the immediate district.

"I sincerely hope that for the Leeds Festival a Leeds chorus will be engaged—for that will bring honour to the town, and increase the funds which I trust will be raised for the various charitable institutions who seek to be benefited by the Triennial Festival of 1861.

"Your obedient servant,

"One of the Festival Committee."

This is, perhaps, the place to refer to another letter which was addressed to another Leeds paper more than two months ago, but which is worth attention even now:—

LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL—BREAKERS AHEAD!

(To the Editor of the Leeds and West Riding Express.)

"Sir,—In the Bradford Observer of yesterday (Thursday) I find the following paragraph:—'Leeds Musical Festival.—Mr. R. S. Burton was appointed Festival Chorus Master on Saturday last. Out of a large committee, six only voted for him—two against him, the remainder (the majority) abstained from voting. A resolution was proposed that the Bradford Festival Choral Society should be applied to for extra singers; but Mr. Burton's friends, headed by Mr. Walker Joy, opposed it might and main, and it was lost by the casting vote of the chairman.'

"Surely this must be a mis-statement of the actual facts; for no one can believe that the Leeds Festival Committee could be so short-sighted to their own interest to allow such an illiberal decision to be arrived at, as that of shutting out Bradford singers from our Festival! I am given to understand that the Halifax and Huddersfield Choral Societies are to be invited to sing in the chorus; but most sincerely do I hope that vocalists will not be brought from any neighbouring town before every available singer in our borough is engaged. Let us not have a repetition of the singular conduct practised at our first festival, when many most excellent Leeds chorus singers were refused engagements, to make room for singers from a distance, at about three times the cost. If the paragraph quoted above be untrue, it behoves the Leeds Festival Committee at once to contradict it. If correct, I fear we shall lose a considerable amount of that support from Bradford which, as a music-loving town, it would be sure to give us.

"Leeds, Jan. 25, 1861. "Yours, &c., A Leeds Singer."

We shall have something to say very shortly on this subject, which, however, will find its proper place in our leading columns.

A grand performance of the Messiah was given at the Town Hall of Leeds, on Tuesday evening, the 2nd. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Sunderland, Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Freeman, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Winn. The chorus was the Yorkshire Choral Union. M. Lemmens presided at the organ. On the previous night, in the same locality, Mr. Burton gave his fourth dress concert, when the same singers assisted. The Leeds Intelligencer has a long account of both performances, but offers nothing to quote. Mrs. Sunderland and Mad. Sherrington have no preference for the writer, and both are highly eulogised. Mr. Sims Reeves of course is praised, and congratulated for the passion and pathos of his singing in "Hatton's" (query, "Balfe's") "Come into the garden, Maud." Of M. Lemmen's performance on the organ, the Intelligencer thus writes:—

"Next came an organ solo by M. Lemmens, who is styled 'the great continental organist,' a title which, we have no doubt, he well deserves; for in this and another solo, both his own compositions, he showed some fine manipulation and good taste. Unfortunately, from some cause unknown to us, the stops of the organ appeared out of order, or he required assistance in cyphering them, when he performed the first solo; but in despite of that annoying circumstance, he played with great feeling and power, and his second solo, when the difficulties just adverted to had been removed, was a very brilliant and arduous performance. It was very warmly re-demanded—a compliment he gracefully acknowledged, but did not comply with."

This evening Mlle. Titiens and Signor Giuglini are announced to sing at the Town Hall, under the auspices of the Town Hall Concert Society; and on Monday Mad. Alboni and Miss Arabella Goddard, and other artists (the Willert-Beale "tourists") will appear.

Mr. Willert Beale's provincial tour-party would appear to have made a brilliant "hit" at Cheltenham, if we may judge from the following account of the morning and evening concerts, given by Messrs. Hale and Sons, at the Assembly Rooms on the 9th inst., and which we borrow from the Cheltenham Times:—

"The programme of the morning's entertainment was most excellent, containing some choice morceaux of both the Italian and English schools. Miss Arabella Goddard did not play Mozart's Concerto in C, as expected (the concerto requiring full orchestral accompaniments), but she did play, in her own exquisite manner, some of Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne Worte, 'Where the bee sucks,' by Benedict, 'The last rose of Summer,' by Thalberg, and a Duo Concertante, with Regondi, on airs from the Huguenots. If it were possible, we should almost be inclined to say that Miss Goddard plays better than ever. Mad. Alboni was in charming voice, and her rich contralto notes, came out to advantage in the aria from Semiramide, 'Ah! quel giorno.' Her execution of 'Non piu mesta' is just as wonderful as ever, and—as an encore to this—she gave the ever-welcome Brindisi from Lucrezia Borgia. Signor Regondi, without exception one of the most pleasing solo players of the day, played with great taste and finish, on his two instruments, the concertina and the guitar; indeed, on neither of which has he ever been equalled. Mlle. Sedlatzek and Signor Cosselli, were great aids in the success of the concert, the former in Schubert's song, 'Dein ist mein herz,' the latter in Rossini's buffo song, 'A Maometto,' being most effective.

"In the evening the Assembly Rooms were again the resort of the élite and fashion of Cheltenham and the neighbourhood, and again the principal artists shone out brightly, as 'stars' of the first magnitude. Miss Arabella Goddard was loudly applauded after the performance of Benedict's new and brilliant fantasia (composed expressly for her), 'Albion' (on 'Pray Goody,' and 'Come if you dare'), and an 'encore' being unanimously called for, she played Thalberg's 'Home sweet home.' In the second pianoforte solo, the magnificent Mosè of Thalberg, was really a marvellous performance. Added to these three solos, Miss Goddard played a Duo Concertante with Regondi, on airs from Oberon, one of the gems of the evening. Mad. Alboni treated her audience in the first place to Rode's air, when, notwithstanding the extreme difficulty of this performance and the wondrous exertion she displayed, an 'encore' was demanded. The lady bowed twice and retired, but, finding the demand continued so urgently, she came back, and again introduced the Brindisi, to the delight of the audience. She also sang the Tyrolienne from Betly, 'In questo semplice,' in so charming a manner, that once more the listeners were anxious to hear more. Again the applause continued loud and long. Again Alboni appeared to bow her acknowledgments, but this time she respectfully, though firmly, declined to comply. Signor Regondi performed a fantasia (concertina) on airs from the Traviata, and a 'Reverie,' of his own composition, on the guitar. Mlle. Sedlatzek, and Mad. Alboni, gave an exceedingly pretty duet, by Goldberg (the conductor); while the quintet from Marie Stuart, in which 'Auld lang syne' is introduced, was effective in the hands of all the performers. Signor Cosselli brought forward an air from Mathilde di Shabran; Mr. Land sang very humourously and ver sweetly, a pretty ballad, by Hatton, having, reference to the visit of a lover to his sweetheart. Herr Goldberg performed his duties as accompanyist most satisfactorily, and we may safely assert that both morning and evening concerts were by far the most successful of the season."

The first appearance this season of Mlle. Titiens and Signor Giuglini in England took place at the third subscription concert of the Liverpool Philharmonic on Tuesday evening, and constitutes, we need hardly say, our most important intelligence from the country. The magnificent prima donna and the "golden-voiced" tenor were received with all the usual honours by (vide the Daily Post) "a brilliant and fashionable assemblage." The programme was made up of the old tit-bits of the London concert-room, grateful no doubt to Liverpudlian auriculars. Signor Giuglini, in Balfe's "Tu m'ami" ("When other lips"), produced the greatest effect of the evening. Mlle. Titiens sang the air of Alice —Jenny Lind's air—"Vanne disse" ("Va, dit-elle"), from Robert le Diable—"a bird-like aria" (vide Post) from Signor Verdi's Sicilian Vespers (query the bolero?), besides singing duets and trios with Signor Giuglini and M. Gassier, who filled the place of Signor Vialetti, detained at Paris by indisposition. The Gallic barytone is evidently a great favourite with the Post, who thus apostrophises him:—

Digitized by Google

"M. Gassier began flat, as he too frequently does, but soon gave play to his magnificent voice, which was again, we may now say, very conspicuous in 'Deh vieni' from Don Giovanni, in 'La ci darem' from the same opera, remarkably so in the trio 'Qual volutta,' from I Lombardi, and again in 'Non piu andrai,' which, with everything connected with the ubiquitous Figaro, falls within this artist's peculiar province."

From Hereford we learn that Mr. Townsend Smith's preparations for the forthcoming meeting of the three choirs are completed. The subjoined is abridged from the Hereford Times of April 6th:—

"The festival will, as usual, be held in the Cathedral and Shire Hall, and take place on September 10th and three following days. Full choral service by the members of the choirs of Hereford, Gloucester, and Worcester daily at half-past eight. The sermon on Tuesday by the Rev. Canon Musgrave. First morning Elijah; second morning the Last Judgment and the principal part of Sampson; third morning 'Spring' from Haydn's Seasons, Mozart's 'Requiem,' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of praise;' fourth morning the Messiah, without the omissions generally made. First evening concert, overture Euryanthe, Pastoral Symphony, flute solo; second concert, overture Anacreon, Cherubini, Italian Symphony, violin solo; third concert, overtures Wood Nymphs (Sterndale Bennett), Guillaume Tell, Benedict's Undine. A concert of chamber music will be given at the College Hall on Friday evening, commencing at about seven and terminating before nine, thus preventing any interference with the grand ball at the Shire Hall. The ball, after the concert on the second evening, will be abandoned, it being impossible to prepare the room for dancing until nearly midnight; added to which the immense attractions procured, at a much greater outlay than on former occasions, necessarily causes the wish to gratify the public by giving as many opportunities as possible for hearing Mlle. Titiens, Miss Louisa Pyne, Mad. Weiss, Mad. Sainton-Dolby, Miss Susan Pyne, Mr. Sims Reeves, Signor Giuglini, Mr. Montem Smith, Mr. Winn, and Mr. Weiss. The instrumental band has been increased, not only in numbers but in talent, Mr. Blagrove principal violin. The utmost care has been used in the selection of the chorus, so as to preserve the high character of the musical performances in 1858. A programme composed of finer works has never yet been issued."

A correspondent writes from Richmond-on-the-Thames, as follows:—

"An amateur concert was given on Monday evening in the National School Room for the benefit of the poor of Richmond, which we trust answered the expectations, in a pecuniary point of view, of the charitable promoters, who, with the assistance of four of the choristers from the Temple, got through an excellent programme in a highly creditable manner. There were so many pieces given that we can only name a few that elicited more than usual approval. The vocal pieces were Pearsall's 'O, who will o'er the downs?' and Miss Stirling's 'All among the barley,' sung by all the company, both of which were deservedly encored; an unaccompanied duet "Could a man be secure," sung by the Messrs. Robinson; a trio bouffe by M. Offenbach (solo by Mr. Robinson), also encored; and Benedict's popular romanza, 'Ange Adoré,' sung with great expression by Mr. Robinson, who does infinite credit to his instructor, Signor Ferrari. Two of the Temple choristers sung Mendelssohn's 'Greeting,' and deserved a word of praise. The instrumental part of the concert devolved on two amateurs, Mr. Straton (pianist), who played with considerable ability a scherzo by Chopin; and Mr. Hudson (violinist), who displayed his talent in a solo by De Beriot. The performance of a pianoforte quartet by Mozart (in G minor) must not pass without eulogy. The slow momement, remarkably well played, was warmly applauded."

The Principality seems to be commencing its harmonious season, if we may judge by the following notice of a concert recently given at Brecon, and which we have abridged from the Brecon Journal:—

"An amateur concert in aid of the Band fund of the 1st Company of the Breconshire Volunteer Rifles took place at the Town Hall, Brecon, on the evening of Wednesday last. A spacious gallery extending the full length of the hall was erected on one side, and this and every other part of the room, which was very tastefully decorated with banners, &c., was densely crowded. The first and second parts opened with a performance by the band of the Brecon Rifles, who acquitted themselves creditably. 'The Hardy Norseman,' first in the selection of vocal pieces, was followed by a song from Major Rolls, who with a good tenor voice, gave an air from Marta. Mr. Brinley Richards then performed a Grand Fantasia on Lucia di Lammermoor, with great brilliancy and precision. Next came a vocal trio of his composition, 'Up, quit thy bower,' sung by the church choir of Llangasty Talyllyn, and accompanied by the composer, which elicited a unanimous encore. The Volunteer Glee Club sung 'Roderick Vich Alpine,' the solos being assigned to Masters W. Thomas and J. Grant of the Talyllyn Choir, and Messrs. Griffiths and Bell of the Rifles. Hood's 'Young Ben,' sung by Mr. Bell with characteristic humour, was also encored. Bishop's Glee, 'Foresters,' followed by selections from Il Trovatore, concluded the first part. In the second part, the 'Chough and crow,' sung with much spirit, received as it deserved an encore. In the bass solo Serjeant Lilly showed himself possessed of an excellent voice and considerable taste. Mr. Richards reappeared with selections from Mendelssohn, than which better music could not have been heard. Major Rolls acquitted himself admirably in a little ballad, by Miss Hay, 'The Summer Bloom,' which was unanimously re-demanded. Willis's Glee, 'Merrily goes the bark,' was well sung, but too fast. Mr. Richards' 'Rule Britannia,' was one of the gems of the evening, artistic and popular in its style, calculated alike to display his talent as a composer, and his brilliant execution as a pianist. It was enthusiastically encored; but in place of repeating it, Mr. Richards gave a piece on Welsh airs, which was received as a compliment to the principality (Mr. Richards is a Welshman), and honoured with great applause. Mr. Bell, being encored in 'Ben Battle' (words by Tom Hood), gave the comic song of the 'Flying Dutchman.' The second part ended with an adaptation from Martin Henry's 'God preserve our Queen,' which served as an introduction to the National Anthem, 'God save the Queen.' The concert, on the whole, was eminently successful. Mr. Bell, bandmaster, conducted, the Rev. T. B. Hosken accompanied the glees and solos. At the end of the concert, Mr. John Lloyd proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Richards, Mr. Hosken, and the others who had taken part, which was responded to by three cheers. The proceeds of the concert amount to 50*l*."

Vocal Association.—The second Subscription Concert came off on the evening of Wednesday, the 3rd inst. Mendelssohn's setting of the Psalm, "Hear my prayer," Mozart's motett, "Ave verum," Meyerbeer's "Lord's Prayer," Bach's corale, "Oh, let us praise the Lord," together with Morley's madrigal, "Say, gentle nymph," Webb's glee, "When winds breathe soft," and Mr. Benedict's hunting-song, "Rise, sleep no more," afforded the choir ample opportunity of exhibiting their skill. In general, the pieces went exceedingly well, Mendelssohn's Psalm being perhaps entitled to first honours, something of which, however, was due to the solos being taken by Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington. The other singers were Miss Messent, Miss Augusta Thomson, and Sig. Gambogi. The gentleman, we presume, from his name, is an Italian. His singing of "Fra poco" did not absolutely declare to what country he belonged. M. Lemmens played a fugue of his own composition on the organ, proving himself an excellent composer and a first-rate executant at the same time. M. Sainton played one of Beethoven's two romances for the violin—that in F, and decidedly the best—and a new Scotch fantasia of his own composition, introducing the airs "Auld Robin Gray" and "Duncan Gray cam' here to woo," in the most masterly and brilliant manner, winning enthusiastic applause in each. Miss Eleanor Ward, the young pianist, executed Fumagalli's Danse des Sylphes with the utmost grace and neatness, and was unanimously recalled. The Hall was exceedingly full.

Liegnitz.—A series of soirées for classical music has been established here, under the direction of Herr Bilse. At the fifth concert the first three pieces were by our greatest composers, viz. Haydn's G major Symphony (No. 7), Mozart's overture, to the Zauberflöte, and Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony. The last composition selected for the evening's entertainment was a "Fest-Ouverture" by Herr Hugo Ulrich.

Digitized by Google

EVANS'S

COTTAGE HARMONIUM

At SIX GUINEAS,

Has Five Octaves and Two Foot-boards, is in a French-polished Case, and has a soft, subdued, agreeable quality of tone, designed expressly to suit a Cottage or Small Sitting-room.—Boosey and Ching, Manufacturers, 24 Holles Street, Oxford Street, W.

Evans's Ten-Guinea

HARMONIUM

Is in a solid, handsome French-polished Case, and possesses that rich and organ-like quality of tone which particularly distinguishes these Instruments from the French.—Boosey and Ching, Manufacturers, 24 Holles Street, Oxford Street, W.

Evans's English

HARMONIUMS;

WITH TWO ROWS OF KEYS,

At 45 and 63 Guineas, without Pedals, and 47 and 130 Guineas, with Pedals,

Although particularly adapted for Churches, are equally effective in the Drawing-room. Not only have the leading members of the profession, including Messrs. Sterndale Bennett, Balfe, Potter, Henry Smart, Best, &c., but the Clergy and the Press have also testified to the very great superiority of EVANS'S HARMONIUMS. These Testimonials may be seen upon reference to Boosey and Ching's Illustrated Catalogue of Harmoniums.

The whole of EVANS'S INSTRUMENTS possess that organ-like quality of tone which has been hitherto unattained by any other manufacturer, and are made throughout in the strongest and most substantial manner by the best "ENGLISH WORKMEN." They are neither affected by heat nor damp.

BOOSEY AND SONS,

MANUFACTURERS, 24 HOLLES STREET, OXFORD STREET, W.

ROBERT COCKS AND CO.'S

LIST OF NEW MUSIC.

REV. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY'S, Bart., SERIES of ANTHEMS, by the most eminent living composers, classified to suit the Church Seasons and Saints' Days. In score and separate parts. Antiquarian Music Folio, upwards of 300 pages. Score copy, £2 12s. 6d. Now ready.

GLEES, &c.—ONE HUNDRED and SEVENTY-EIGHT GLEES, MADRIGALS, PART-SONGS, &c., in Numbers 2d. and 4d. each; or three vols., each 8s. Contents gratis and postage free. This collection (with piano accompaniments, ad lib.) is the most practically useful extant, including many copyright works of great popularity.

THE COLLEEN BAWN QUADRILLES (by Forde), as nightly performed at the New Adelphi Theatre, arranged for Orchestra by C. Hall, Conductor of the Band, 3s., postage free; for Piano, finely Illustrated, 4s.

THE MOST RECENT MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.—Just issued, gratis and postage free, a LIST of MUSICAL NOVELTIES for the present Season. Apply to ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, London, W., Music Publisher to the Queen; and of all Musicsellers.

EWER & CO.'S LIST OF NEW PUBLICATIONS.

	s.	d.
Benedict, J. Malcolm, Marche Triomphale	4	0
Berger, Francesco, Bon repos, chérie, Nocturne	2	0
,, Lena, Serenade	2	0
Gaude, Louis de la, Evelyn, Polka Mazurka	2	0
Garibaldi, Viva Italia, March and National Hymn (with Italian words)	2	0
Jungmann, A., Souvenance	3	6
Kruger, W., Les Cloches du Soir	4	0
Liszt, J., Grand Paraphrase sur Il Trovatore	6	0
,, Rigoletto	6	0
,, Ernani	6	0
Magnus, H., Carnaval Napolitain	4	0
Pacher, J. A., Op. 9, La Harpe	4	0
,, Op. 34, Le Ruisseau	3	0
,, Op. 50, Twelve Melodious Studies	7	6
,, Op. 53, Tendresse	3	0
Schulthes, W., Op. 27, Stella Matutina, mélod. rélig.	2	6
Silas, E., Op. 49, Costanza Impromptu	3	0
Spindler, F., L'Oisillon	2	6
Wollenhaupt, H. A., Op. 19, Grande Marche de Concert ...	3	0
,, Op. 23, La Gazelle	3	0
,, Op. 24, Galop di Bravura	4	0
,, Op. 36, Helene. Grand Valse Brillante ...	4	0
,, Cordelia. Schottisch	3	0
,, La Violette. Polka de Concert	3	0

MOLIQUE'S ORATORIO—"ABRAHAM."

Soprano Airs.—I will extol Thee, my God	4	0
,, Hear my prayer, O Lord	3	0
,, Unto Thee lift I up mine eyes	4	6
Contralto Air.—They kept not the law	1	6
Tenor Airs.—Who walketh uprightly	2	6
,, Pour out thy heart before the Lord	2	6
Baritone Airs.—Lead me, O Lord, in Thy righteousness	3	0
,, Let there be no strife	2	6
,, The joy of my heart is ceased	4	0
,, Lord have mercy upon me	4	6
Duets.—Cast out this bondwoman. Alto and Baritone	4	6
,, It is of the Lord's great mercies. Soprano and Baritone ...	3	0
Trio.—Alto, Tenor, and Bass. Let all those rejoice	3	0
Quartet.—S. A. T. & B. Go in peace before the Lord	4	6
March.—Arranged for Pianoforte Solo	2	6
,, ,, ,, Duet	4	0
,, ,, Organ (arranged by W. T. Best) ...	3	0

EWER & CO. 87 REGENT STREET,

Universal Circulating Musical Library.

AUBER'S NEW OPERA,

LA CIRCASSIENNE,

NOW PERFORMING WITH

IMMENSE SUCCESS

AT THE

OPÉRA COMIQUE, PARIS,

WILL SHORTLY BE PUBLISED BY MESSRS.

ADDISON, HOLLIER, and LUCAS,

Who have Purchased the

COPYRIGHT.

London, 210 Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

NEW PUBLICATIONS

OF

DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.,

244 REGENT STREET. (JUST OUT.)

"NEW YEAR'S EVE," by W. H. HOLMES.—This agreeable "Pensée" by the above talented composer, is just published for the pianoforte, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

DEUX BONBONS FROM THE DOMINO NOIR.

No. 1, "LA BELLE INÈS," Aragonaise. Price 1s.
No. 2, "AH, QUELLE NUIT," Bolero. Price 1s.

Transcribed for the Pianoforte, by

EMILE BERGER.

The above pieces are very easy transcriptions (without octaves) of the two celebrated songs in Auber's popular opera, sung by Miss LOUISA PYNE with such eminent success at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden, and are published by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL," by W. H. WEISS, composed and sung by the composer, with the greatest success, as well as by Mr. WINN and other vocalists of celebrity, is published, handsomely illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW CONCERTINA MUSIC by GIULIO REGONDI.—Reichardt's popular song, "Thou art so near, and yet so far," transcribed for the CONCERTINA and PIANOFORTE by GIULIO REGONDI, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

Just Published, price 3s.,

FUGUE in E Minor, from "HANDEL'S LESSONS." ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN

By HENRY SMART.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

In the Press.

SIX ROMANCES FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By HOWARD GLOVER.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

BACH'S PRELUDE and FUGUE, ALLA TARANTELLA,

As played by Miss ARABELLA GODDARD,

Is published, for the Pianoforte, price 5s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

SIMS REEVES' SONGS.

"Fresh as rose," composed by M. W. BALFE	...	3s. 0d.
"I love you," ditto	...	3s. 0d.
"Wert thou mine," " FRANK MORI	...	2s. 6d.
"The harp of Wales," " BRINLEY RICHARDS	...	2s. 6d.

In the Press.

"Mary," Poetry by G. P. MORRIS, composed by M. W. BALFE.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

In the Press.

MADAME OURY'S TRANSCRIPTION, for the Pianoforte, of the SACRED MELODIES—

"With verdure clad," and "The Heavens are telling,"

Will shortly be Published by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street.

EMANUEL AGUILAR'S COMPOSITIONS.

PIANOFORTE:

Weber's last Waltz (transcribed)	3s.
"Sunset glow" (reverie)	3s.

VOCAL:

"In a wood on a windy day"	3s.
"Sympathy"	2s.
"Farewell"	2s.

In the Press.

VOCAL:

"The fairies' farewell to the flowers."

PIANOFORTE SOLO:

"Dream-dance" (Op. 27, No. 1).

PIANOFORTE DUET:

"War March."

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street.

In the Press.

NEW SONG by HENRY SMART, "THE LADY OF THE LEA."

Poetry by W. H. BELLAMY, Esq.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW WORK FOR STUDENTS.

THE most important CADENCES and MODULATIONS through the MAJOR and MINOR keys, with HARMONISED SCALES, composed for the pianoforte, harmonium, or organ, by IMMANUEL LIEBICH, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"MAY."—New Duettino, by HENRY SMART, composed for equal Voices. Price 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Henry Smart, in this melodious and truly exquisite little duet, has, if possible, even surpassed in elegance and vocal finish, the pieces so warmly eulogised in our last impression."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

BOOSEY'S ORCHESTRAL OVERTURES, arranged by LAMOTTE. Price 8s. each for full band; 5s. each for small band.

1. Crown Diamonds, Auber.
2. Zampa, Herold.
3. Zanetta, Auber.
4. Oberon, Weber.
5. Fra Diavolo, Auber.
6. Der Freischütz, Weber.
7. Domino Noir, Auber.
8. Gazza Ladra, Rossini.
9. Dame Blanche, Boieldieu.
10. Masaniello, Auber.
11. Part du Diable, Auber.
12. Guillaume Tell, Rossini.

KUHE'S NEW TRANSCRIPTION of SCHUBERT'S FAVOURITE MELODIES, as short and effective Pieces for the Pianoforte, price 2s. 6d. each.

1. Serenade.
2. Ave Maria.
3. Adieu.
4. The Wanderer.
5. The praise of Tears.
6. Thine is my heart.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

BRASS BAND, STRING BAND, DRUMS and FIFES, &c.—Booseys' Brass Band Journal, Quick Step Journal, Orchestral Journal of Dance Music, Orchestral Selections from the New Opera, Orchestral Overtures, Drum and Fife Journal, &c.

Full particulars of these unrivalled Publications may be had, post-free, from Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

MISS GODDARD'S New Solo, ALBION. Fantasia on English Airs, by J. BENEDICT; performed with the greatest success by Miss ARABELLA GODDARD, "The melodies upon which 'Albion' is constructed—'Pray Goody,' and 'Come if you dare'—are varied, ornamented, and otherwise elaborated with no less elegance than skill."—The Times. "Elaborate as the variations are, they never, as in similar compositions, obscure the melody, but rather enhance its beauty."—Daily Telegraph. Also the companion pieces, ERIN and CALEDONIA, by J. BENEDICT. Price 4s. each.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

GOLLMICK'S SIX NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE, being the third set of German Volksalieder, transcribed for the piano. Price 2s. 6d. each.

"My Own Love."
"Mourn not."
"The Heart's Desire."
"Lorely."
"The Maidens of Tyrol."
"Farewell to the Woods."

"Herr Gollmick has produced a set of pianoforte pieces which will be found highly attractive, not only from the beauty of the airs themselves, but from the taste and skill with which he has treated them."—Illustrated London News.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

THE GUINEA EDITION of BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS for the Pianoforte. Edited by W. DORRELL. With Life and Portrait, complete in two volumes, handsomely bound, 10s. 6d. each.

"There are many editions of Beethoven's sonatas, German, French, and English; but there is not one that we have seen, from which taking all things into account—correctness and clearness of the text, elegance of form, and moderation of price—we have derived so much satisfaction as from the edition now before us."—Daily News.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

RICHARD WAGNER'S TANNHAUSER.—BOOSEY and SONS beg to announce the publication of a complete edition of the celebrated Opera, "Tannhäuser," for Pianoforte Solo, with an introduction describing the plot and music. Price 7s. 6d., in cloth. "Tannhäuser" has been performed in every theatre in Germany, and has just been produced in Paris with unprecedented success. It is considered the best work of its author, whose compositions are now the subject of discussion throughout the musical world. Boosey and Sons believe therefore that the present publication will be acceptable to the English public as a specimen of the genius of one of the most remarkable men of the age.

28, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S NEW SINGING METHODS for LADIES' and GENTLEMEN'S VOICES, by J. L. HATTON. Price 1s. each.—BOOSEY and SONS have much pleasure in stating that these two Methods, which have been so long announced (and unavoidably postponed), will be ready for delivery in a few days. The publishers believe that amateurs and students will find these Methods of more practical use than any other similar publications. They are entirely original in form and contents, embodying in a small compass the result of the experience of their distinguished author. Each Method is distinct and complete in itself. Early orders should be given to musicsellers and booksellers to secure copies of the first edition. Price 1s. each, or post free, 1s. 2d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

NOTICE.—The SHILLING EDITION of IL TROVATORE, for Pianoforte Solo (being No. 40 of "Boosey's "Musical Cabinet") is now ready, and may be had of every bookseller and musicseller in the United Kingdom. Price 1s. 2d. post free.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 13 James Street, Buckingham Gate, in the Parish of St. Margaret, in the City of Westminster, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, April 13, 1861.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 39—No. 16 SATURDAY, APRIL 20, 1861 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

NEW PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.—ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Conductor, Dr. WYLDE.—The SECOND CONCERT of the Tenth Season will take place on MONDAY EVENING, April 22nd. The PUBLIC REHEARSAL, TO-DAY (Saturday), when will be performed Beethoven's Grand Choral Symphony, Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto, &c. Pianoforte, Mr. HALLÉ; violin, M. OLE BULL. Vocalists: Mlle. PAREPA, Miss LASCELLES, Mr. WILBYE COOPER, and Signor BELLETTI.

Tickets for the Concert: Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Balcony, 7s. and 5s.; Unreserved, 3s. and 1s. Tickets for the Public Rehearsal: Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s. and 1s. To be had at Cramer and Co.'s, 201 Regent Street; Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48 Cheapside; and at Mr. Austin's ticket office, St. James's Hall.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—M. OLE BULL.—The great Violinist will appear for the second time at the CONCERT of the VOCAL ASSOCIATION, on THURSDAY EVENING, May 2nd. Also, SIGNOR GARDONI (from the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden). Mlle. BILLING, Mlle. GEORGI, Miss FANNY HOWLAND, Miss SAUNDERS, Mrs. R. F. ABBOT, and HERR HERMANNS. Madrigals and Part-Songs by the Choir of 200 Voices. Accompanyist, HERR WILHELM GANZ. Conductor, Mr. Benedict.

Tickets, 5s., 3s., and 1s. each, at St. James's Hall.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Mr. HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR, THURSDAY, April 25th. Mr. CHAS. HALLÉ and HERR STRAUSS will perform Beethoven's "Kreutzer Sonata." Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," and Meyerbeer's "Pater Noster" will be included in the programme.

Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s.

MR. WALTER MACFARREN'S THREE CONCERTS of Solo and Concerted Pianoforte Music, at the Hanover Square Rooms, on TUESDAY EVENINGS, April 23rd and June 11th, and on SATURDAY MORNING, May 18th. Programme of First Concert:—Duets (Op. 127), Piano and Violin (Spohr); Variations and Finale alla Fuga, Piano (Beethoven); Andante and Scherzo, Piano Duet (Walter Macfarren); Trio in B flat, Piano, Violin, and Violoncello (Mozart); Mazurka and Saltarella, Piano (Walter Macfarren); Duo in D, Piano and Violoncello (Mendelssohn). Violin, Mr. H. BLAGROVE; Violoncello, Signor PIATTI; Piano, Miss LINDLEY and Mr. WALTER MACFARREN. Vocalist, Miss PALMER; Accompanyist, Mr. FRANCESCO BERGER. Programme illustrated by Mr. G. A. MACFARREN. Subscription £1 1s.; Single Ticket, 10s. 6d. Of the principal Musicsellers, and Mr. Walter Macfarren, 56 Albert Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

MONSIEUR EDOUARD de PARIS begs to announce that his MARTINEE MUSICALE will take place at 13 Portman Street, Portman Square (by kind permission of J. G. Armstrong, Esq.), on WEDNESDAY, April 24th, at Three o'clock. Madame LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, Mlle. BRAZILIANI, Miss RACHEL GRAY, and Signor BURDINI. Violoncello, M. PAQUE; Pianoforte, M. ED. de PARIS; Conductor, HERR W. GANZ.

Tickets, 10s. 6d. each, at Messrs. Addison and Co., and of M. de Paris, 17 Charlotte Street, Brighton.

MISS STABBACH has the honour to announce that her ANNUAL CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms on WEDNESDAY Evening, May 1st, at 8 o'clock. Vocalists: Miss STABBACH, Miss THERESA JEFFERYS, Mr. LEWIS THOMAS and Signor GARDONI. Instrumentalists: Mr. M. LAZARE (his first appearance in England), M. SAINTON, M. PAQUE and Herr OBERTHUR. Conductors: Mr. FRANCESCO BERGER and Mr. HAROLD THOMAS.

Tickets: Numbered Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Reserved Seats, 5s.; to be had of the principal Musicsellers, and of Miss Stabbach, 42 Upper Seymour Street, Hyde Park.

MISS ELEANOR ARMSTRONG begs to announce that her GRAND CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms, on TUESDAY EVENING, May 7th, to commence at Eight o'clock. Vocalists: Miss ELEANOR ARMSTRONG, Madame LAURA BAXTER, Mr. GEORGE PERREN, and Mr. RHODES. Instrumentalists: Miss M. BAXTER, HERR ADOLPH RIES, HERR LOUIS RIES, HERR LIDEL, and HERR OBERTHUR. Conductor: Mr. FRANK MORI.

Tickets, 7s.; Stalls, 10s. 6d. To be had of Miss Eleanor Armstrong, 36 Osnaburgh Street, Regent's Park; and of the principal Musicsellers.

MR. MELCHOR WINTER begs to announce that his GRAND VOCAL AND INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT will take place at the MYDDLETON HALL, Islington, on the 30th instant, commencing at 8 o'clock. Artists: Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, Miss ROSE HERSEE, the Misses ELTON, Mr. WINN and Mr. MELCHOR WINTER. Violin, Mr. H. SCHALLEHN; Piano, HERR PAUL SEMLER and Mad. MELCHOR WINTER. Conductor, Mr. FRANK MORI.

Reserved Seats, 3s.; Unreserved, 2s.; and Area, 1s.

SWISS FEMALE SINGERS.—SCHWEITZER SANGER GESELLSCHAFT.

ST. JAMES'S HALL, Piccadilly.—These pleasing and highly amusing CONCERTS will be repeated EVERY AFTERNOON at Three, and EVERY EVENING at Eight, FOR A SHORT PERIOD ONLY. Books of the Words with Translation.

Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. Tickets may be secured at Mr. Mitchell's, Royal Library, 33 Old Bond Street; and at the Ticket Office, St. James's Hall, 28 Piccadilly.

 "Fourth week, and decided success of this attractive novelty."

MLLE. PAREPA.—This favourite Vocalist may be ENGAGED for Concerts and Oratorios, &c.—For Terms, Dates Vacant, &c., apply to Messrs. Mapleson, Musical Agents, 12 Haymarket.

HERR ENGEL has RETURNED to TOWN for the SEASON.

All letters to be directed, 73 Baker Street, Portman Square, W.

MONS. JULES LEFORT having signed an Engagement with the Théâtre Lyrique in Paris for three years, will arrive for his LAST Season in London early in May.

All letters to be directed to the care of Herr Engel, 73 Baker Street, Portman Square, W.

MADAME CATHERINE HAYES' NEW BALLADS, &c. Sung with immense success at the principal concerts. "The Forsaken," 3s.; "Maureen," 2s. 6d.; "The Fisher's Bride," 3s. The music expressly composed by Virginia Gabriel. "From Chindarah's Warbling Fount," 3s. The music expressly composed by Howard Glover.

C. Lonsdale, 26 Old Bond Street.

SIGNOR BADIA'S New and highly successful VOCAL COMPOSITIONS—Teresa, Biondina, and La Farfalla, 2s. each. C. Lonsdale's Musical Circulating Library, 26 Old Bond Street, where may be had the newest Compositions of Signori Schira, Garcia, Marras, Campana, Perugini, Fiori, Gordigiani, Vianesi, and Verdi.

COLLARD and COLLARD'S NEW WEST-END ESTABLISHMENT, 16 Grosvenor Street, Bond Street, where all communications are to be addressed. Pianofortes of all classes for Sale and Hire.

CHOIR BOY.—There is a VACANCY, in a London Church Choir, for a BOY, having a good voice and some knowledge of music. He will receive a general education and a salary, but not board or lodging.—Apply to Mr. Pittman, 1 New Ormond Street, Foundling.

WANTED, by a talented Musician, an ENGAGEMENT at a Concert Room or Music Shop, where the knowledge of four languages would be useful. He is blind, but fully qualified for either situations, his acute sense of hearing enabling him to tune any instrument, and to follow the voice, with the greatest exactitude, and his performance on the Harmonium being marvellous.—Apply "H. V.," No. 1 Thomas Street, Archway Road, Highgate Hill.

THE EXTENSIVE AND VALUABLE STOCK OF IMPORTED FOREIGN MUSIC OF MESSRS. BOOSEY AND SONS.

MESSRS. PUTTICK and SIMPSON, Auctioneers of Music and Literary Property, will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, 47 Leicester Square, W.C. (west side), on FRIDAY, April 26th, SATURDAY, April 27th, and Monday, April 29th, the extensive and valuable STOCK of imported FOREIGN MUSIC of Messrs. Boosey and Sons, of Holles Street, comprising Works in every class by the best Foreign Writers, Vocal and Instrumental, full scores of Operas, Oratorios, Symphonies, &c.; Sacred Music, Organ Music, Pianoforte Music, Solos, Duet, and with various Instrumental Accompaniments; valuable Concerted Music; Solo for various Instruments, with full Orchestral Accompaniments; Military Music; History and Theory, &c. Catalogues on receipt of two stamps.

EXTRAORDINARY ASSEMBLAGE OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS; VIOLINS, VIOLONCELLOS, PIANOFORTES, &c.

MESSRS. PUTTICK and SIMPSON, will SELL by AUCTION, on TUESDAY, April 30, a Collection of VIOLINS, principally the property of a Gentleman, with Selections from the Collections of various Amateurs, comprising some very celebrated and well-known Instruments by

Stradiuarius,	Carlo Bergonzi,	Vuillaume,
Guarnerius,	Maggini,	Montagnani,
Amati,	Gagliano,	Forster,
Ruggerius,	Sancto Seraphin,	Banks,

and other eminent makers. Among them are the celebrated Guarnerius, known as the Giant—Amatis of the grand modèle, &c.; a splendid Violoncello by Guarnerius, with Bows and Cases, together with several Pianofortes by eminent modern makers, in new condition, &c.

 Sales of Musical Property are held Monthly during the Season, for which occasion large or small Consignments can be received at any time.

JUST PUBLISHED, PRICE 2s.

"TURN THEE, O LORD," an Anthem arranged from the "Et incarnatus est" in Cherubini's beautiful Mass in F, by J. E. RICHARDSON, Assistant Organist of Salisbury Cathedral.

Salisbury: Aylward. London: J. A. Novello.

Digitized by Google

MESSRS. CHAPPELL & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

THE AMBER WITCH. Now ready, all the favourite Airs from this charming Opera, arranged for the Violin. Price 1s. 6d., post free.
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

KUHE'S FAUST. Fantaisie de Salon, pour le Piano. From Gounod's favourite Opera. Price 4s.
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

KUHE'S LA JOYEUSE. Morceau de Salon, pour le Piano. Price 3s.
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

KUHE'S LES CAUSERIES DES VAGUES. Etude de Salon pour le Piano. Price 3s. 6d.
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

KUHE'S QUEEN TOPAZE.—A Brilliant Fantasia on Victor Massé's popular Opera. Price 4s.
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

KUHE'S VALSE, QUEEN TOPAZE.—The last new piece by this popular Composer. Just published, 3s.
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

KUHE'S CARNIVAL DE VENISE, with the Variations, as sung in "Queen Topaze," arranged for the Pianoforte. Price 4s.
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

SCHLOESSER'S RONDE DES PECHEURS. Just published. Scène Caractéristique pour la Piano. Price 3s.
Chappel and Co., 50, New Bond Street.

SCHLOESSER'S VALESCA. Mazurka de Salon pour Piano. Price 3s.
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

SCHLOESSER'S BUONA NOTTE. Nocturne pour le Piano. Price 2s. 6d.
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' WANDERER. Just published, No. 1 of Schubert's Melodies, arranged for the Pianoforte by this popular Composer. Price 3s.
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' SOLDIERS' CHORUS, from Gounod's Opera of "Faust," beautifully arranged for the Pianoforte. Price 3s.
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' BEE SONG. This beautiful song, from "Queen Topaze," is now arranged for the Pianoforte. Price 3s.
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' LIGHT AS FALLING SNOW. A beautiful arrangement of this charming song from "Queen Topaze." Price 3s.
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' FLORENCE. The last original piece by that popular Composer. Just published. Price 3s.
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' BELLRINGER. W. V. Wallace's popular song, arranged as a brilliant Pianoforte Solo. Price 3s.
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' COMPLETE TUTOR for the PIANOFORTE. The best, the newest, and cheapest of all Instruction Books, containing elementary instructions, scales, exercises, and a great variety of the most popular themes as progressive lessons. Sixty pages, full music size, price 4s., post-free. N.B. A List of Brinley Richards' Popular Pieces will be sent on application to
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

GANZ'S NEW PIANOFORTE DUET, from DON GIOVANNI. Just published, price 5s.
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

GANZ'S LE BONHEUR SUPREME. Nocturne Mélodique pour Piano. Price 3s.
"One of the most effective drawing-room pieces published."
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

GANZ'S PAROLES D'AMOUR. Romance pour Piano. Price 3s. A charming composition.
Chappell and Co., 50 New Bond Street.

BRILLIANT CONCERT PIECES
FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
MADAME OURY. GRANDE FANTAISIE, on "Il Barbiere di Seviglia"	5	0
A. SCHLOESSER. GRAND FANTASIA—"Il Trovatore"	6	0
A. SCHLOESSER. GRAND FANTASIA — "Guillaume Tell"	5	0
A. SCHLOESSER. GRAND FANTASIA—"Martha" ...	5	0
A. SCHLOESSER. GRAND FANTASIA—"La Favorita"	5	0
WILHELM GANZ. GRAND FANTASIA—"La Traviata"	6	0
STEPHEN HELLER. IMPROVISATA on MENDELSSOHN'S Melody, "On song's bright pinions," played by Miss ARABELLA GODDARD	4	0
THEODORE MAUSS. "MAY BREEZES," FANTASIA on a Popular German Air	4	0
ROBERT GOLDBECK. GRAND FANTASIA on "Le Prophète"	5	0
A. FUMAGALLI. TAÏAUT. "Chœur de Chasse" ...	3	6
F. LISZT. The MARCH from WAGNER'S "Tannhäuser"	4	0
THEODORE KULLAK. LES ARPEGES. Etude de Concert	5	0
JULES BENEDICT. FANTAISIE MILITAIRE on HALEVY'S Opera, "Les Mousquetaires de la Reine" ...	5	0
POLYDORE DE VOS. FANTASIA—"Norma"	5	0

ASHDOWN AND PARRY,
18 HANOVER SQUARE.

EASY TEACHING MUSIC, by J. BAPTISTE CALKIN.

SIX SACRED PIECES:

	s.	d.
1 Most beautiful, appear. From Haydn's Creation	1	0
2 I waited for the Lord. Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise	1	0
3 Rousseau's Dream	1	0
4 But thou didst not leave. Handel's Messiah	1	0
5 Every valley. Ditto	1	0
6 The Spanish chant	1	0

SIX OPERATIC PIECES:

1 La ci darem. Don Giovanni	1	0
2 Batti, Batti. Ditto	1	0
3 Suoni la tromba. I Puritani	1	0
4 Va Pensiero. Nabuco	1	0
5 Libiamo, Brindisi. La Traviata	1	0
6 Parigi o cara. Ditto	1	0

SIX POPULAR PIECES:

1 Jock o' Hazeldean	1	0
2 The harp that once thro' Tara's halls	1	0
3 Yankee doodle	1	0
4 Where the bee sucks	1	0
5 The lass o' Gowrie	1	0
6 Cease your funning. Beggar's Opera	1	0

SIX CLASSICAL PIECES:

1 Andante, varied, from Septett, Op. 20 (Beethoven)	1	0
2 Andante, con moto, from Symphony in C minor (ditto)	1	0
3 Adagio, Cantabile, from Symphony in B flat (Haydn)	1	0
4 Finale, from Symphony in D (ditto)	1	0
5 Adagio, from Symphony No. 4, in C (Mozart)	1	0
6 Andante, from Sonata in B flat (ditto)	1	0

The above Pieces, intended for very young Pupils, are written in a musicianlike manner, and are carefully fingered.

LONDON:
ASHDOWN AND PARRY
(Successors to Wessel and Co.),
18 HANOVER SQUARE.

MUSICAL WORLD

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"The Lone old Tree"—words by Desmond Ryan, music by Clement White (Metzler and Co.).

This ballad is—in the fullest acceptation of the terms—melodious and expressive. The words, too, written with unaccustomed neatness, embody a genuine sentiment with unaffected grace. Let the reader judge:—

"'Twas eve when I crossed, o'er the old stile that led,
To the scenes of my youth, once so dear;
But the green waving fields of my fathers had fled,
And no home of my childhood was near.
A ruin appeared, where my dwelling once rose,
And weeds o'er the garden grew rankling and free;
No memorial remained the fond past to disclose—
All were gone—save the lone, old tree.

Round that tree sported those whom I ne'er shall behold,
Nor those smiles with sad years that depart;
The light laugh and sweet happy faces of old
All came back to my desolate heart.
Ah! vainly I sought for some treasure of yore,
Nor voice nor no watch-dog bade welcome to me,
Not an object familiar its joy did restore—
All were gone—save the lone, old tree."

Mr. White's music reflects the sentiment of the above just as unaffectedly as it is conveyed through the lines of the poet; and thus we have, in every sense, a "model-ballad."

"Turn Thee, O Lord," anthem—J. B. Richardson (J. A. Novello).

This is a setting of the 4th and 9th verses of the 6th Psalm. Mr. Richardson (who is assistant-organist of Salisbury Cathedral, and a professor of recognised ability) has derived his materials from Cherubini's admirable and unjustly neglected Mass in F major, out of the many strikingly beautiful passages in which he has certainly selected one of the most beautiful. The anthem is for three voices—treble, tenor (or 1st and 2nd treble), and bass. Nothing could be better—nothing more acceptable. We may observe, in conclusion, that Mr. Richardson acknowledges his obligation to Cherubini on the title-page of the anthem, wherein he sets an example that should be invariably, and under all circumstances, followed.

"The Rainbow"—words by the Rev. J. Keeble, music by Mrs. John Holman Andrews (Cramer, Beale, and Chappell).

Mrs. Holman Andrews has here produced a canzonet remarkable in equal degrees for flowing tune, a refined taste for harmony, and a thorough knowledge of vocal expression. Her accompaniment is as ingenious as her melody is genuine; and there is even a point (page 3, line 3, bars 1—2) where the chord of E flat (reckoning upwards from the bass), B flat, C sharp, and G natural, is resolved upon the chord of A natural, C natural, E flat and F natural—which, (if not strictly "canonical"), is at least as bold as it is new. Mrs. Andrews should compose as often in this strain as convenient; she will always find admirers, provided she succeeds as entirely as in "The Rainbow"—the words of which, by the way, do infinite credit to the poetical feeling of their author, the Rev. J. Keeble.

"La Prière exaucée, morceau brillante pour le piano"—par Thecla Badarzewska (Oetzmann and Co.).

The only objection to be made to this graceful (if not very original) little piece—a sort of "Lied ohne Worte" with variations—is that its title is absurd. "La Prière exaucée" ("The Prayer granted) purports to be a reply to "La Prière d'une Vierge" ("The Prayer of a Virgin")—a previous composition, we suppose, from the pen of Thecla Badarzewska. Any other title, however, would suit it just as well. Nor, by the way, whatever qualities it may really possess, can it be credited with that of "brilliancy"—unless, in a very slight measure, this may be claimed by the last variation. To conclude—"morceau brillante is bad French. Morceau is masculine. All this, however, does not rob La Prière exaucée of a certain amount of incontestible merit; besides which it is written with undeviating correctness.

"A loving Heart—words and music by Mrs. Blanchard Jerrold (Boosey and Sons).

It begins to rain good ballads. Here is a ballad fitted, if sung with real expression, to enchant any drawing-room, however refined the taste and sensible the ears of the company. It is not only pretty; it is unobtrusive, and devoid of all that maudlin (mock) sentiment, by which so many drawing-room ballads are distinguished. The words, moreover, are in no whit inferior to the music. Here is the first verse:—

"My heart was thine in happier days,
In days when youth and love are one;
Each thought my love its colour gave,
Like rain-drops tinged by sun.
In golden dreams thy image came,
To cheat the weary night,
With visions of the happy day
That gave thee to my sight."

The rest is to match. Mrs. Jerrold has only now to illustrate the title-pages of her songs to complete her artistic triumph, and provide an illustration of the comprehensive theory of Richard Wagner.

"Minnie Clyde;" "I'd choose to be a Daisy," for the pianoforte, by Henry W. Goodban (Metzler and Co.).

These are neat, brilliant, and showily effective "transcriptions" of decidedly pretty songs. We hardly know which is the better of the two, and so recommend both.

"Lunella," ballad for the pianoforte, by Henry W. Goodban (Addison, Hollier and Lucas).

Another "transcription," and of a song, too, the graceful character of which has already been dwelt on in the Musical World.

"Summer Morning," descriptive song, words and music by E. Fagan (Cramer, Beale and Chappell).

Mr. Fagan is Organist to the Spanish Embassy. "Summer Morning" is a kind of scena, in three regular movements, the best of which is an andante in D, three-eight measure. The whole would be appropriate and effective in an opera, although it contains no new points for comment.

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY.

Berens (Hermann) "Sweetly sounds the harp" (Vocal).
Schumann (Robert) "Oh! sunny beam" (ditto).
Oury (Mad.) "Il Barbier di Sevigia" (Pianoforte).

ROBERT COCKS AND CO.

Staton (William) "A thought of the rose" (Vocal).

JOSEPH WILLIAMS.

Reynolds (Edmund) "Meet me in the evening hour" (Vocal).
Turo (Maurizio) "The Rifle Volunteers" (ditto).

B. WILLIAMS.

Harvey (R. F.) "Beautiful morning" (Vocal).

SCHOLEFIELD (Huddersfield)

Ainley (W. C.) "The two lands" (Vocal).

E. WOYCKE.

Woycke (Eugene) "Alice" (Pianoforte).

Digitized by Google

MRS. MEREST (late Miss Maria B. Hawes).—All Letters concerning Engagements for the Musical Festivals, the Nobility's Concerts, and Public and Private Concerts, &c., to be addressed to 7 Adelphi Terrace, Strand, W. C.

SIGNOR ALBERTO RANDEGGER has RETURNED to TOWN for the SEASON.
Communications respecting Lessons in Singing, &c., to be addressed to him, at 32 Orchard Street, Portman Square.

HERR FORMES begs to announce that he is Free, during the present Season, to Accept Engagements for Concerts, Oratorios, and Private Soirées.
All communications to be addressed to Mr. Jarrett, at Duncan Davison and Co.'s, Foreign Music Warehouse, 244 Regent Street, W.

HERR HERMANNS begs to announce that he is Free, during the present Season, to Accept Engagements for Concerts and Private Soirées, &c.
All communications to be addressed to Mr. Jarrett, at Duncan Davison and Co.'s Foreign Music Warehouse, 244 Regent Street, W.

MR. VENUA, Senior (from Reading), respectfully informs the Nobility, Gentry, and his Friends in general, that he has REMOVED from his late Residence, No. 6 Norfolk Square, Sussex Gardens, Hyde Park, W., London, to No. 54 in the same Square.

MISS HELEN McLEOD begs to announce that she will give her Second ANNUAL CONCERT, at the Hanover Square Rooms, on the Evening of TUESDAY, the 4th of June, when she will be assisted by eminent artists.
23 Alfred Place, W. Thurloe Square.

MLLE. TITIENS, SIGNOR GIUGLINI, and HERR FORMES will Sing at the next New Philharmonic Concert, Monday Evening, May 20th, and Public Rehearsal, May 18. Conductor, Dr. WYLDE.

MR. MELCHOR WINTER will Sing Flotow's "M'apari tutt' amor," and Wallace's "Let me like a soldier fall," at Myddelton Hall, Islington, on Monday, the 13th inst.; St. James's Hall, 15th; Westbourne Hall, 17th; and Stourbridge on the 28th.
Address, care of Messrs. Boosey and Sons, Holles Street, Cavendish Square, W.

MADAME MELCHOR WINTER will play Dohler's Tarantelle and Ascher's Fantasia on Airs from Traviata, on Monday, the 13th inst., at the Misses ELTON'S CONCERT, Myddelton Hall, Islington.
Address, concerning Pupils and Engagements, care of Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, W.

MRS. EDWARD DAVIES (late Miss Julia Warman) begs to inform her Friends and the Public that she continues to give LESSONS on the PIANO.
Terms, £3 3s. a Quarter, twice a week, or by the Lesson.
38 Hans Place, Belgrave Square, S.W.

MUSICAL ART UNION.—Organised for the advancement of Music.
The Members beg to announce THREE ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS, at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Friday Evening, May 31st; Thursday Morning, June 20th; and Friday Evening, July 5th (the latter with Choir).
1st Concert—Symphony, Ocean (Rubinstein); Overtures, Beethoven, Op. 124, and Rossini's Siege of Corinth; Concerto, violin, HERR STRAUS (Spohr). Orchestra of Sixty performers. Principals—Messrs. H. BLAGROVE, DEICHMANN, PAYTON, R. BLAGROVE, DAUBERT, WHITE, SVENDSEN, CROZIER, POLLARD, WOOTTON, HANDLEY, R. J. WARD, and C. THOMPSON. Conductor, Mr. KLINDWORTH; Choir-Master, Mr. J. C. WARD. Illustrative remarks by Mr. G. A. MACFARREN.
Tickets at Messrs. Cramer's (where a plan of Stalls may be seen), Ewer's, Addison's, Schott's, Lonsdale's, Chappell's, Ollivier's, Leader's, and Betts's Music Warehouses.

MR. ARTHUR S. SULLIVAN begs to inform his Friends that he has RETURNED from Germany.
All communications respecting Pupils, &c., to be addressed to his Residence, 3 Ponsonby Street, Pimlico, S.W.

SWISS FEMALE SINGERS.—SCHWEITZER SANGER GESELLSCHAFT.

ST. JAMES'S HALL, Piccadilly.—These pleasing and highly amusing CONCERTS will be repeated EVERY AFTERNOON at Three, and EVERY EVENING at Eight, FOR A SHORT PERIOD ONLY. Books of the Words with Translation.
Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. Tickets may be secured at Mr. Mitchell's, Royal Library, 33 Old Bond Street; and at the Ticket Office, St. James's Hall, 28 Piccadilly, W.
 Seventh week, and decided success of "The Captain."

MR. FRED. PENNA.—EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly.—SECOND WEEK. "THE HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS OF SONG." Mr. Fred. Penna begs to announce that he will give his New and Popular Entertainment, at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, at Eight o'clock. A Morning Performance every Saturday at Three. Pianoforte, Mad. Penna.
Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. Box office at the Hall, open daily from Eleven till Five.

WANTED, by an efficient Tuner, Regulator, and Repairer, an ENGAGEMENT.
Address R. S., 111 Great College Street, Camden Town, N.W.

THE MUSICAL BEE-HIVE.—POPULAR FOUR-PART SONGS:—Bon Soir, Garulli, 6d.; Oh, waste not, pining lovers, Handel, 6d.; Ave Maria, Arcadelt, 3d.; Non sdegnarè, O bella Venere, 3d.; Iuvano sicumdesir, 3d.; Alla Trinita, H. R. Bishop, 3d.; The three kings of Cologne, 3d.
"This is indeed a boon to the musical public—the four separate vocal parts being in a large note, 'that they who run may read.'"
C. Lonsdale, 26 Old Bond Street.

CONCERT SEASON, 1861.—Mr. C. M. SHEE respectfully intimates to Musical Artists that he continues to undertake the Management of Concerts (public or private) at moderate charges.
Address J. Miles and Co., 105 Wardour Street, Soho.

WALLWORTH'S ART OF SINGING.—Second Edition, just out, full music size, price 7s.
A new and modern method for cultivating the Voice, and for gaining a perfect Vocalisation. A practical work, contains 35 pages of Music, with a true method of acquiring the Shake, now for the first time introduced in a Singing Tutor, by T. A. WALLWORTH, Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.
Published by A. W. Hammond (late Jullien), 214 Regent Street; and may also be had of the Author, at his residence, 81 Park Street, Grosvenor Square, W., where Pupils are also received.

ROBERT COCKS & CO.'S NEW MUSIC.

MR. SIMS REEVES will sing, at his Benefit Concert, on Monday next, from ROBERT COCKS and Co.'s EDITION OF BEETHOVEN'S ADELAIDE, with new words by WILLIAM HILLS, 3s.; also "Twilight is Darkening," music by KUCKEN, 2s. 6d.
WEEP NOT, FOND HEART: Song by KUCKEN. Sung by SIMS REEVES, 2s. 6d. This new song of the popular German composer is a real gem. Every one who recalls the deeply touching strains of his "Tear," or the calm beauty of his "Twilight is Darkening," will know what he has to expect; also the Young Recruit Solo, 2s. 6d.; for four voices, 2s. 6d.; ditto three voices, on a card, 2d.
THE YOUNG RECRUIT SCHOTTISCHE, for piano, by C. C. AMOS, 2s. 6d.; as a March, by BRINLEY RICHARDS, 2s. 6d.; Quadrille, by STEPHEN GLOVER, 3s.; Quadrille by JULLIEN, 4s.; March by STEPHEN GLOVER, 2s. 6d.; March, by VOSS, 3s.; Polka, by ADAM WRIGHT, 2s. 6d. THE YOUNG RECRUIT Song, solo, 2s. 6d.; for four voices, 2s. 6d.; for three voices, on a card, 2d.

W. VINCENT WALLACE.—New and favourite PIANOFORTE MUSIC:—La Luvisella, Neapolitan melody, transcribed, 3s.; Chorus of Dervishes, from Beethoven's Ruins of Athens, 3s.; Good News from Home, varied, 3s.; Come where my love lies dreaming, 3s.; the Volunteer Rifles March, 3s.; Fantasia on the Ruins of Athens, 4s.; Twilight, romance, 2s.; Spohr's Rose softly blooming, 2s.; Star of the Evening and Willie we have missed you, 3s.; Those Evening Bells, 3s.; Robin Adair, impromptu-de-concert, played by ARABELLA GODDARD, 4s.; the Shepherd's Roundelay, pastoral sketch, 4s.; Croyez-moi, romance, 2s. 6d.; La Plainte du Berger, idylle, 3s.; Home, sweet home, 3s.

NEW PIANO MUSIC, by BRINLEY RICHARDS.—The Young Recruit, for piano, solo, 2s. 6d.; duet, 3s.; as a march, 2s. 6d.; Première Tarantelle, pour piano, par Brinley Richards, dédiée à M. Charles Hallé, 5s.; La Czarina, mazurka de salon, 3s.; Cherry ripe! melody by C. E. Horn, transcribed, 3s.; La Carolina, souvenir de Naples, 3s.; Hurrah! for the bonnets o' blue, transcribed, 3s.; the Gipsy's life is a joyous life, melody by E. Flood, transcribed, 3s.; Why do summer roses fade? melody by Barker, transcribed, 3s.; the Plough Boy, English melody, transcribed, 3s.; Louise, nocturne, 3s.; Le Carnaval de Venise, arrangé pour piano, 3s.; Cader Idris (Jenny Jones), Welsh melody, transcribed, 2s.
London: Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, W.; and of all musicsellers.

SELECT LIST OF NEW SONGS, &c. by POPULAR COMPOSERS.

CLARIBEL.

Blind Alice	price 3d.
Marion's Song	3d.
The Trefoil Leaf	3d.

VIRGINIA GABRIEL.

One passed by	3s.
Ave Verum	3d.
Ave Maria	3s.
Agnus Dei (a tre voce)	3s.

W. HUTCHINSON, Esq.

The Spring of Life	3s.
When the Silv'ry Moonbeams Sleep	3s.

SARAH GILBERT.

Summer Flowers	3s.

WELLINGTON GUERNSEY.

Courting Days	3s.

NEW HARP MUSIC.

